

ATTACHMENT 1

Dashboard Cover Sheet, Introduction, Model Rule Comparison Table, Comparison to Public Comment Draft, Comparison to Current California Rule, Clean Rule Draft, Public Comment Synopsis Table and State Variation Excerpts

Proposed Rule 1.0 [RPC 1-100]

“Purpose and Scope of the Rules”

(XDraft #9, 6/28/10)

Summary: Proposed Rule 1.0 provides a description of the purposes and scope of the Rules Of Professional Conduct in place of the Preamble and Scope to the ABA Model Rules. The purposes of the Rules are to protect the public and the interests of client, to protect and promote the legal system and the administration of justice and to promote respect for and confidence in the legal profession. The Rules apply to members of the State Bar practicing in and outside of California and to other lawyers practicing law in this state. A willful violation of the Rules is a basis for discipline. The Rules are not intended to enlarge or restrict the law regarding the liability of lawyers to others.

Comparison with ABA Counterpart
Rule	Comment
☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
☐ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule	☐ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule	☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
☒ No ABA Model Rule counterpart	☒ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

Primary Factors Considered

☒ Existing California Law

Rules

RPC 1-100

Statute

Case law

☐ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

☐ Other Primary Factor(s)

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(13 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 13 due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Less than Six Members Opposing Public Comment Distribution ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 9

Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 1

Abstain 1

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by consensus ☐

Minority/Position Included on Model Rule Comparison Chart: ☐ Yes ☒ No

Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

☐ No Known Stakeholders

☒ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

State Bar of California Committee on Professional Liability Insurance

☐ Very Controversial – Explanation:

☒ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

The Commission recommends that the Model Rule Preamble and Scope not be adopted and that the purpose and scope of the Rules be included in a separate rule of professional conduct. In addition, the Commission recommends including the concept in the Model Rule Scope, paragraph 20, that a violation of a rule will not itself give rise to a civil cause of action; however, a violation of a rule may be evidence of breach of a fiduciary or other substantive duty in a non-disciplinary context.

☐ Not Controversial

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.0* Purpose and Scope of the Rules of Professional Conduct

July 2010

(Draft rule following consideration of final round of public comment)

INTRODUCTION:

Proposed Rule 1.0 provides a description of the intended purpose and scope of the Rules Of Professional Conduct. The Rule does not have a counterpart in the ABA Model Rules. The Model Rules, instead, are preceded by a Preamble describing a lawyer's responsibilities in 13 comments and a Scope that describes how the Rules are to be applied in 8 additional comments. The Preamble and Scope to the Model Rules follows a tradition that began with the preamble to the original ABA Canons of Professional Conduct and continued with the ABA Model Code of Professional Responsibility. California has traditionally described the purpose and scope of its Rules in a separate rule, and the Commission recommends that this tradition be continued in proposed Rule 1.0.

Rule 1.0(a) enumerates four purposes of the Rules: (1) to protect the public; (2) to protect the interests of clients; (3) to protect the integrity of the legal system and promote the administration of justice and (4) to promote respect for, and confidence in, the legal professional. These four purposes are derived from the Rules themselves and from court decisions and ethics opinions that have discussed and applied the Rules. Paragraph (a) is consistent with the Model Rules and provides a more concise statement of the purpose of the Rules than the general orientation contained in the Preamble and Scope to the Model Rules.

Rule 1.0(b) describes the scope of the Rules and is derived in part from current California Rule 1-100 and provisions of the State Bar Act and from comments under the Scope section to the Model Rules. Paragraph (c) tracks Scope paragraph 21 in explaining the purpose of the comments accompanying the Rules. Paragraph (d) explains how the Rules should be cited.

Variation in other jurisdictions. Although most states include a preamble and scope section similar to the Model Rules, several states, including Michigan and Nevada, replace the preamble and scope with a rule which incorporates some of the paragraphs of the preface to the Model Rule.

* Proposed Rule 1.0, XDraft 9 (6/28/10).

Current California Rule Rule 1-100 Rules of Professional Conduct, in General	Commission's Proposed Rule[*] Rule 1.0 Purpose and Scope of the Rules of Professional Conduct, ~~in General~~	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(A) Purpose and Function. The following rules are intended to regulate professional conduct of members of the State Bar through discipline. They have been adopted by the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California and approved by the Supreme Court of California pursuant to Business and Professions Code sections 6076 and 6077 to protect the public and to promote respect and confidence in the legal profession. These rules together with any standards adopted by the Board of Governors pursuant to these rules shall be binding upon all members of the State Bar.	(Aa) ~~Purpose and Function.~~ The purposes of the following Rules are: ~~The following rules are intended to regulate professional conduct of members of the State Bar through discipline. They have been adopted by the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California and approved by the Supreme Court of California pursuant to Business and Professions Code sections 6076 and 6077 to protect the public and to promote respect and confidence in the legal profession. These rules together with any standards adopted by the Board of Governors pursuant to these rules shall be binding upon all members of the State Bar.~~	Paragraph (a) provides a succinct statement of the purposes of the Rules in place of the more general orientation contained in the Preamble and Scope to the Model Rules. Paragraph (a) continues the approach in current California Rule 1-100(A) of describing the policies underlying the Rules. The paragraph expands on the purposes stated in current Rule 1-100 and is intended to provide greater guidance to lawyers in applying the Rules. The four purposes are derived from the Rules themselves and from relevant case law and ethics opinions on the purposes of the Rules. Each of the four stated purposes in paragraph (a) is consistent with the ABA Preamble on A Lawyer's Responsibilities and the Scope section to the Model Rules. See Model Rule, Preamble and Scope, below, particularly paragraphs 1 through 9, 11, 12, and 17.
	(1) To protect the public;
	(2) To protect the interests of clients;
	(3) To protect the integrity of the legal system and to promote the administration of justice; and

^{*} Proposed Rule 1.0, XDraft 9 (6/28/10). Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule

Current California Rule Rule 1-100 Rules of Professional Conduct, in General	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.0 Purpose and Scope of the Rules of Professional Conduct, ~~in General~~	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	(4) To promote respect for, and confidence in, the legal profession.
For a willful breach of any of these rules, the Board of Governors has the power to discipline members as provided by law.	~~For a willful breach of any of these rules, the Board of Governors has the power to discipline members as provided by law.~~	See Explanation of Changes for paragraph (b) and Comments [1], [2] and [4].
The prohibition of certain conduct in these rules is not exclusive. Members are also bound by applicable law including the State Bar Act (Bus. & Prof.Code, § 6000 et seq.) and opinions of California courts. Although not binding, opinions of ethics committees in California should be consulted by members for guidance on proper professional conduct. Ethics opinions and rules and standards promulgated by other jurisdictions and bar associations may also be considered.	~~The prohibition of certain conduct in these rules is not exclusive. Members are also bound by applicable law including the State Bar Act (Bus. & Prof.Code, § 6000 et seq.) and opinions of California courts. Although not binding, opinions of ethics committees in California should be consulted by members for guidance on proper professional conduct. Ethics opinions and rules and standards promulgated by other jurisdictions and bar associations may also be considered.~~	See Explanation of Changes for Comment [3].
	(b) Scope of the Rules: (1) These Rules, together with any standards adopted by the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California pursuant to these Rules, regulate the conduct of lawyers and are binding upon all members of the State Bar and all other lawyers practicing law in this state.	Paragraph (b) provides a separate statement of the intended scope of the Rules. Paragraph (b)(1) is derived from the last sentence in current California Rule 1-100(A). The sentence has been modified to clarify that the Rules also apply to lawyers who are not members of the State Bar and who practice law in this state pursuant to California Rules of Court and other law. See Comment [5] and proposed Rules 5.5 and 8.5. A separate statement on the scope of the Rules is consistent with the Model Rules, which have a separate Scope section as an introduction to

Current California Rule Rule 1-100 Rules of Professional Conduct, in General	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.0 Purpose and Scope of the Rules of Professional Conduct, ~~in General~~	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
		the Model Rules. See Model Rule, Scope, below.
	(2) A willful violation of these Rules is a basis for discipline.	Paragraph (b)(2) is based on Model Rule Scope, paragraph 19, and conforms to the second paragraph in current California Rule 1-100(A).
These rules are not intended to create new civil causes of action. Nothing in these rules shall be deemed to create, augment, diminish, or eliminate any substantive legal duty of lawyers or the non-disciplinary consequences of violating such a duty.	~~These rules are not intended to create new civil causes of action. Nothing in these rules shall be deemed to create, augment, diminish, or eliminate any substantive legal duty of lawyers or the non-disciplinary consequences of violating such a duty.~~	See Explanation of Changes for paragraph (b)(3) and Comment [2].
	(3) Nothing in these Rules or the comments to the Rules is intended to enlarge or to restrict the law regarding the liability of lawyers to others.	Paragraph (b)(3) is based on Model Rule Scope, paragraph 20, and replaces the fourth paragraph in current California Rule 1-100(A). Paragraph (b)(3), as amplified by Comment [2] below, embodies the concept stated in Model Rule Scope, paragraph 20, and existing case law, that a violation of a rule does not itself give rise to a civil cause of action; however, a violation of a rule may be evidence of breach of a lawyer's fiduciary or other legal duty in a non-disciplinary context.
(B) Definitions. (1) "Law Firm" means: (a) two or more lawyers whose activities constitute the practice of law, and who	~~(B) Definitions.~~ ~~(1) "Law Firm" means:~~ ~~(a) two or more lawyers whose activities constitute the practice of law, and who~~	The definitions in current California Rule 1-100(B) have been moved to a separate terminology rule (proposed Rule 1.0.1) to conform to Model Rule 1.0 on "Terminology."

Current California Rule Rule 1-100 Rules of Professional Conduct, in General	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.0 Purpose and Scope of the Rules of Professional Conduct, ~~in General~~	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
share its profits, expenses, and liabilities; or (b) a law corporation which employs more than one lawyer; or (c) a division, department, office, or group within a business entity, which includes more than one lawyer who performs legal services for the business entity; or (d) a publicly funded entity which employs more than one lawyer to perform legal services.	~~share its profits, expenses, and liabilities; or~~ ~~(b) a law corporation which employs more than one lawyer; or~~ ~~(c) a division, department, office, or group within a business entity, which includes more than one lawyer who performs legal services for the business entity; or~~ ~~(d) a publicly funded entity which employs more than one lawyer to perform legal services.~~
(2) "Member" means a member of the State Bar of California.	~~(2) "Member" means a member of the State Bar of California.~~
(3) "Lawyer" means a member of the State Bar of California or a person who is admitted in good standing of and eligible to practice before the bar of any United States court or the highest court of the District of Columbia or any state, territory, or insular possession of the United States, or is licensed to practice law in, or is admitted in good standing and eligible to practice before the bar of the highest court of, a foreign country or any political subdivision thereof.	~~(3) "Lawyer" means a member of the State Bar of California or a person who is admitted in good standing of and eligible to practice before the bar of any United States court or the highest court of the District of Columbia or any state, territory, or insular possession of the United States, or is licensed to practice law in, or is admitted in good standing and eligible to practice before the bar of the highest court of, a foreign country or any political subdivision thereof.~~

Current California Rule Rule 1-100 Rules of Professional Conduct, in General	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.0 Purpose and Scope of the Rules of Professional Conduct, ~~in General~~	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(4) "Associate" means an employee or fellow employee who is employed as a lawyer.	~~(4) "Associate" means an employee or fellow employee who is employed as a lawyer.~~
(5) "Shareholder" means a shareholder in a professional corporation pursuant to Business and Professions Code section 6160 et seq.	~~(5) "Shareholder" means a shareholder in a professional corporation pursuant to Business and Professions Code section 6160 et seq.~~
(C) Purpose of Discussions. Because it is a practical impossibility to convey in black letter form all of the nuances of these disciplinary rules, the comments contained in the Discussions of the rules, while they do not add independent basis for imposing discipline, are intended to provide guidance for interpreting the rules and practicing in compliance with them.	~~(C) Purpose of Discussions.~~ ~~Because it is a practical impossibility to convey in black letter form all of the nuances of these disciplinary rules, the comments contained in the Discussions of the rules, while they do not add independent basis for imposing discipline, are intended to provide guidance for interpreting the rules and practicing in compliance with them.~~	See Explanation of Changes for paragraph (c).
	(c) Comments: The comments following the Rules do not add obligations to the Rules but provide guidance for their interpretation and for acting in compliance with the Rules.	Paragraph (c) is derived from the last sentence in Model Rule, Scope, paragraph 14, and the first sentence in ¶ 21. See Model Rule, Preamble and Scope, below. The paragraph is intended to replace current California Rule 1-100(C).

Current California Rule Rule 1-100 Rules of Professional Conduct, in General	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.0 Purpose and Scope of the Rules of Professional Conduct, ~~in General~~	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(D) Geographic Scope of Rules. (1) As to members: These rules shall govern the activities of members in and outside this state, except as members lawfully practicing outside this state may be specifically required by a jurisdiction in which they are practicing to follow rules of professional conduct different from these rules. (2) As to lawyers from other jurisdictions who are not members: These rules shall also govern the activities of lawyers while engaged in the performance of lawyer functions in this state; but nothing contained in these rules shall be deemed to authorize the performance of such functions by such persons in this state except as otherwise permitted by law.	~~(D) Geographic Scope of Rules.~~ ~~(1) As to members:~~ ~~These rules shall govern the activities of members in and outside this state, except as members lawfully practicing outside this state may be specifically required by a jurisdiction in which they are practicing to follow rules of professional conduct different from these rules.~~ ~~(2) As to lawyers from other jurisdictions who are not members:~~ ~~These rules shall also govern the activities of lawyers while engaged in the performance of lawyer functions in this state; but nothing contained in these rules shall be deemed to authorize the performance of such functions by such persons in this state except as otherwise permitted by law.~~	The provision on the disciplinary authority over lawyers who are members of the State Bar practicing in and outside of this state and other lawyers practicing in this state has been moved to proposed Rule 8.5 to be consistent with the Model Rules. As a result, a statement regarding the geographic scope of the Rules is provided in Comment [5] with a cross reference to proposed Rule 8.5.
(E) These rules may be cited and referred to as "Rules of Professional Conduct of the State Bar of California."	~~(E)~~ Title: These ~~rules may be cited and referred to as~~ Rules are the "California Rules of Professional Conduct ~~of the State Bar of California.~~"	Paragraph (d) is based on current California Rule 1-100(E) and identifies how the Rules should be referred to and cited.

Current California Rule Rule 1-100 Rules of Professional Conduct, in General Discussion	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.0 Purpose and Scope of the Rules of Professional Conduct, ~~in General~~ Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Discussion	~~Discussion~~Comment [1] The Rules of Professional Conduct are Rules of the Supreme Court of California regulating lawyer conduct in this state. See In re Attorney Discipline System (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 582, 593-597 [79 Cal Rptr.2d 836]; Howard v. Babcock (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 409, 418 [25 Cal Rptr.2d 80]. The Rules have been adopted by the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California and approved by the Supreme Court pursuant to Business and Professions Code sections 6076 and 6077. The Supreme Court of California has inherent power to regulate the practice of law in California, including the power to admit and discipline lawyers practicing in this jurisdiction. Hustedt v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1981) 30 Cal.3d 329, 336 [178 Cal.Rptr. 801]; Santa Clara County Counsel Attorneys Association v. Woodside (1994) 7 Cal.4th 525, 542-543 [28 Cal.Rptr.2d 617] and see Business and Professions Code section 6100.	Comment [1] confirms that the Rules, when approved, are the Rules of the Supreme Court and that the Supreme Court has inherent power to regulate the practice of law in California and ultimate authority over lawyer conduct in this state. The comment is based on case decisions and provisions of the State Bar Act and is derived in part from current California Rule 1-100(A). The comment does not have a direct counterpart in the Model Rules, although it is consistent with provisions in the Preamble to the Model Rules, particularly paragraphs 10–11. See Model Rules, Preamble and Scope, below.
The Rules of Professional Conduct are intended to establish the standards for members for purposes of discipline (See Ames v. State Bar (1973) 8 Cal.3d 910 [106 Cal.Rptr. 489].) The fact that a member has engaged in conduct that may be contrary to these rules does not automatically give rise to a civil cause of action. (See Noble v. Sears Roebuck &	[2] The Rules ~~of Professional Conduct~~ are ~~intended~~designed to ~~establish the standards~~provide guidance to lawyers and to provide a structure for ~~members for purposes of~~regulating conduct through discipline. See Ames v. State Bar (1973) 8 Cal.3d 910 [106 Cal.Rptr. 489]. ~~The fact that a member has engaged in conduct that may be contrary~~Therefore,	Comment [2] is based on provisions in the Preamble and Scope to the Model Rules, particularly paragraphs 16, 19 and 20, and also on case law in California. The comment reinforces the principle in paragraph (b)(2) that the Rules are not intended to expand civil liability for lawyers. At the same time, the comment recognizes, as does Scope, paragraph 20 of the Model Rules and California case law, that a violation of a rule may be evidence of

Current California Rule Rule 1-100 Rules of Professional Conduct, in General Discussion	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.0 Purpose and Scope of the Rules of Professional Conduct, ~~in General~~ Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Co. (1973) 33 Cal.App.3d 654 [109 Cal.Rptr. 269]; Wilhelm v. Pray, Price, Williams & Russell (1986) 186 Cal.App.3d 1324 [231 Cal.Rptr. 355].) These rules are not intended to supercede existing law relating to members in non-disciplinary contexts. (See, e.g., Klemm v. Superior Court (1977) 75 Cal.App.3d 893 [142 Cal.Rptr. 509] (motion for disqualification of counsel due to a conflict of interest); Academy of California Optometrists, Inc. v. Superior Court (1975) 51 Cal.App.3d 999 [124 Cal.Rptr. 668] (duty to return client files); Chronometrics, Inc. v. Sysgen, Inc. (1980) 110 Cal.App.3d 597 [168 Cal.Rptr. 196] (disqualification of member appropriate remedy for improper communication with adverse party).	~~failure to these rules comply with an obligation or prohibition imposed by a rule is a basis for invoking the disciplinary process. Because the Rules are not designed to be a basis for civil liability, a violation of a rule does not automatically itself give rise to a civil cause of action for enforcement of a rule or for damages caused by failure to comply with the rule. See Stanley v. Richmond (1995) 35 Cal.App.4th 1070, 1097 [41 Cal.Rptr.2d 768]; Noble v. Sears Roebuck & Co. (1973) 33 Cal.App.3d 654, 658 [109 Cal.Rptr. 269]; Wilhelm v. Pray, Price, Williams & Russell (1986) 186 Cal.App.3d 1324, 1333 [231 Cal.Rptr. 355]. These rules are not intended to supercede existing law relating to members~~ Nevertheless, a lawyer's violation of a rule may be evidence of breach of a lawyer's fiduciary or other substantive legal duty in a non-disciplinary context. See, Stanley v. Richmond, supra, 35 Cal.App.4th at p. 1086; Mirabito v. Liccardo (1992) 4 Cal.App.4th 41, 44 [5 Cal.Rptr.2d 571]. A violation of the rule may have other non-disciplinary consequences. See e.g., Klemm v. Superior Court (1977) 75 Cal.App.3d 893 [142 Cal.Rptr. 509] (motion for disqualification of counsel due to a conflict of interest); Academy of California Optometrists, Inc. v. Superior Court (1975) 51 Cal.App.3d 999 [124 Cal.Rptr. 668] (duty to return client files); Fletcher v. Davis (2004) 33 Cal.4th 61 [14 Cal.Rptr.3d 58] (enforcement of attorney's lien); Chambers v. Kay (2002) 29 Cal.4th 142 [126 Cal.Rptr.2d 536] (enforcement of fee sharing agreement); Chronometrics, Inc. v. Sysgen, Inc.	breach of a lawyer's fiduciary or other substantive duty in a non-disciplinary context. Relevant cases are included to provide guidance for lawyers in understanding the scope of the Rules. Comment [2] is intended to replace the first paragraph of the Discussion to current California rule 1-100, which is believed to be outdated and would mislead lawyers if retained in the Rules.

Current California Rule Rule 1-100 Rules of Professional Conduct, in General Discussion	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.0 Purpose and Scope of the Rules of Professional Conduct, ~~in General~~ Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	(1980) 110 Cal.App.3d 597 [168 Cal.Rptr. 196] (~~disqualification of member appropriate remedy for improper~~ communication with ~~adverse~~represented party).
	[3] These Rules are not the sole basis of lawyer regulation. Lawyers authorized to practice law in California are also bound by applicable law including the State Bar Act (Business and Professions Code section 6000 et. seq.), other statutes, rules of court, and the opinions of California courts. Although not binding, issued opinions of ethics committees in California should be consulted for guidance on proper professional conduct. Ethics opinions of other bar associations may also be considered to the extent they relate to rules and laws that are consistent with the rules and laws of California.	Comment [3] is based on the third paragraph in current California Rule 1-100(A). It is intended to remind lawyers that the Rules are not the exclusive source of lawyer regulation in California and that lawyers are also bound by the State Bar Act and other law. The comment is consistent with provisions in the Preamble and Scope to the Model Rules, particularly the first sentence in paragraph 7, and paragraphs 15 and 17. See Model Rules, Preamble and Scope, below.
	[4] Under paragraph (b)(2), a willful violation of a rule does not require that the lawyer intend to violate the rule. Phillips v. State Bar (1989) 49 Cal.3d 944, 952 [264 Cal.Rptr. 346]; and see Business and Professions Code section 6077.	Comment [4] is intended to amplify paragraph (b)(2) by providing guidance on what constitutes a willful violation of the Rules.
	[5] For the disciplinary authority of this state and choice of law, see Rule 8.5.	Comment [5] cross-references proposed Rule 8.5, which addresses the disciplinary authority and choice of law in applying these Rules. The cross-reference is intended to direct lawyers to Rule 8.5 on these issues, which currently are addressed in part by California Rule 1-100(D).

Current California Rule Rule 1-100 Rules of Professional Conduct, in General Discussion	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.0 Purpose and Scope of the Rules of Professional Conduct, ~~in General~~ Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Law firm, as defined by subparagraph (B)(1), is not intended to include an association of lawyers who do not share profits, expenses, and liabilities. The subparagraph is not intended to imply that a law firm may include a person who is not a member in violation of the law governing the unauthorized practice of law.	~~Law firm, as defined by subparagraph (B)(1), is not intended to include an association of lawyers who do not share profits, expenses, and liabilities. The subparagraph is not intended to imply that a law firm may include a person who is not a member in violation of the law governing the unauthorized practice of law.~~	The definitions in current California Rule 1-100(B) have been moved to a separate terminology rule (proposed Rule 1.0.1) to conform to Model Rule 1.0 on "Terminology." Accordingly, the Discussion paragraph concerning the definition of "law firm" has been stricken.

Rule 1.0 Purpose and Scope of the Rules of Professional Conduct
(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to the Public Comment Draft)

(a) Purpose: The purposes of the following Rules are:

- (1) To protect the public;
- (2) To protect the interests of clients;
- (3) To protect the integrity of the legal system and to promote the administration of justice; and
- (4) To promote respect for, and confidence in, the legal profession.

(b) Scope of the Rules:

- (1) These Rules, together with any standards adopted by the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California pursuant to these Rules, regulate the conduct of lawyers and are binding upon all members of the State Bar and all other lawyers practicing law in this state.
- (2) A willful violation of these Rules is a basis for discipline.
- (3) Nothing in these Rules or the comments to the Rules is intended to enlarge or to restrict the law regarding the liability of lawyers to others.

(c) Comments: The comments following the Rules do not add obligations to the Rules but provide guidance for their interpretation and for acting in compliance with the Rules.

(d) Title: These Rules are the “California Rules of Professional Conduct.”

COMMENT

[1] The Rules of Professional Conduct are Rules of the Supreme Court of California regulating lawyer conduct in this state. ~~(See In re Attorney Discipline System (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 582, 593-597 [79 Cal Rptr.2d 836]; Howard v. Babcock (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 409, 418 [25 Cal Rptr.2d 80].)~~ The Rules have been adopted by the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California and approved by the Supreme Court pursuant to Business and Professions Code sections 6076 and 6077. The Supreme Court of California has inherent power to regulate the practice of law in California, including the power to admit and discipline lawyers practicing in this jurisdiction. ~~(Hustedt v. Workers’ Comp. Appeals Bd. (1981) 30 Cal.3d 329, 336 [178 Cal.Rptr. 801]; Santa Clara County Counsel Attorneys Association v. Woodside (1994) 7 Cal.4th 525, 542-543 [28 Cal.Rptr.2d 617];~~ and see Business and Professions Code section 6100.)

[2] The Rules are designed to provide guidance to lawyers and to provide a structure for regulating conduct through discipline. ~~(See Ames v. State Bar (1973) 8 Cal.3d 910 [106 Cal.Rptr. 489].)~~ Therefore, failure to comply with an obligation or prohibition imposed by a rule is a basis for invoking the disciplinary process. Because the Rules are not designed to be a basis for civil liability, a violation of a rule does not itself give rise to a cause of action for enforcement of a rule or for damages caused by failure to comply with the rule. ~~(Stanley v. Richmond (1995) 35 Cal.App.4th 1070, 1097 [41 Cal.Rptr.2d 768]; Noble v. Sears Roebuck & Co. (1973) 33 Cal.App.3d 654, 658 [109~~

Cal.Rptr. 269]; Wilhelm v. Pray, Price, Williams & Russell (1986) 186 Cal.App.3d 1324, 1333 [231 Cal.Rptr. 355].³ Nevertheless, a lawyer's violation of a rule may be evidence of breach of a lawyer's fiduciary or other substantive legal duty in a non-disciplinary context. ⁴See, Stanley v. Richmond, supra, 35 Cal.App.4th 1070, 1086 [41 Cal.Rptr.2d 768]; Mirabito v. Liccardo (1992) 4 Cal.App.4th 41, 44 [5 Cal.Rptr.2d 571].⁵ A violation of the rule may have other non-disciplinary consequences. ⁶See e.g., Klemm v. Superior Court (1977) 75 Cal.App.3d 893 [142 Cal.Rptr. 509] (disqualification); Academy of California Optometrists, Inc. v. Superior Court (1975) 51 Cal.App.3d 999 [124 Cal.Rptr. 668] (duty to return client files); Fletcher v. Davis (2004) 33 Cal.4th 61 [14 Cal.Rptr.3d 58] (enforcement of attorney's lien); Chambers v. Kay (2002) 29 Cal.4th 142 [126 Cal.Rptr.2d 536] (enforcement of fee sharing agreement); Chronometrics, Inc. v. Sysgen, Inc. (1980) 110 Cal.App.3d 597 [168 Cal.Rptr. 196] (communication with represented party).⁷

[5] For the disciplinary authority of this state and choice of law, see Rule 8.5.

[3] These Rules are not the sole basis of lawyer regulation. Lawyers authorized to practice law in California are also bound by applicable law including the State Bar Act (Business and Professions Code section 6000 et. seq.), other statutes, rules of court, and the opinions of California courts. Although not binding, issued opinions of ethics committees in California should be consulted for guidance on proper professional conduct. Ethics opinions of other bar associations may also be considered to the extent they relate to rules and laws that are consistent with the rules and laws of ~~this state~~California.

[4] Under paragraph (b)(2), a willful violation of a rule does not require that the lawyer intend to violate the rule. ⁸*Phillips v. State Bar* (1989) 49 Cal.3d 944, 952 [264 Cal.Rptr. 346]; and see Business and Professions Code section 6077.⁹

Rule 1.0 Purpose and Scope of the Rules of Professional Conduct
(Commission's Proposed Rule – Clean Version)

(a) Purpose: The purposes of the following Rules are:

- (1) To protect the public;
- (2) To protect the interests of clients;
- (3) To protect the integrity of the legal system and to promote the administration of justice; and
- (4) To promote respect for, and confidence in, the legal profession.

(b) Scope of the Rules:

- (1) These Rules, together with any standards adopted by the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California pursuant to these Rules, regulate the conduct of lawyers and are binding upon all members of the State Bar and all other lawyers practicing law in this state.
- (2) A willful violation of these Rules is a basis for discipline.
- (3) Nothing in these Rules or the comments to the Rules is intended to enlarge or to restrict the law regarding the liability of lawyers to others.

(c) Comments: The comments following the Rules do not add obligations to the Rules but provide guidance for their interpretation and for acting in compliance with the Rules.

(d) Title: These Rules are the “California Rules of Professional Conduct.”

COMMENT

[1] The Rules of Professional Conduct are Rules of the Supreme Court of California regulating lawyer conduct in this state. See In re Attorney Discipline System (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 582, 593-597 [79 Cal Rptr.2d 836]; Howard v. Babcock (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 409, 418 [25 Cal Rptr.2d 80]. The Rules have been adopted by the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California and approved by the Supreme Court pursuant to Business and Professions Code sections 6076 and 6077. The Supreme Court of California has inherent power to regulate the practice of law in California, including the power to admit and discipline lawyers practicing in this jurisdiction. Hustedt v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1981) 30 Cal.3d 329, 336 [178 Cal.Rptr. 801]; Santa Clara County Counsel Attorneys Association v. Woodside (1994) 7 Cal.4th 525, 542-543 [28 Cal.Rptr.2d 617]; and see Business and Professions Code section 6100.

[2] The Rules are designed to provide guidance to lawyers and to provide a structure for regulating conduct through discipline. See Ames v. State Bar (1973) 8 Cal.3d 910 [106 Cal.Rptr. 489]. Therefore, failure to comply with an obligation or prohibition imposed by a rule is a basis for invoking the disciplinary process. Because the Rules are not designed to be a basis for civil liability, a violation of a rule does not itself give rise to a cause of action for enforcement of a rule or for damages caused by failure to comply with the rule. Stanley v. Richmond (1995) 35 Cal.App.4th 1070, 1097 [41 Cal.Rptr.2d 768]; Noble v. Sears Roebuck & Co. (1973) 33 Cal.App.3d 654, 658 [109

Cal.Rptr. 269]; Wilhelm v. Pray, Price, Williams & Russell (1986) 186 Cal.App.3d 1324, 1333 [231 Cal.Rptr. 355]. Nevertheless, a lawyer's violation of a rule may be evidence of breach of a lawyer's fiduciary or other substantive legal duty in a non-disciplinary context. See, Stanley v. Richmond, supra, 35 Cal.App.4th 1070, 1086 [41 Cal.Rptr.2d 768]; Mirabito v. Liccardo (1992) 4 Cal.App.4th 41, 44 [5 Cal.Rptr.2d 571]. A violation of the rule may have other non-disciplinary consequences. See e.g., Klemm v. Superior Court (1977) 75 Cal.App.3d 893 [142 Cal.Rptr. 509] (disqualification); Academy of California Optometrists, Inc. v. Superior Court (1975) 51 Cal.App.3d 999 [124 Cal.Rptr. 668] (duty to return client files); Fletcher v. Davis (2004) 33 Cal.4th 61 [14 Cal.Rptr.3d 58] (enforcement of attorney's lien); Chambers v. Kay (2002) 29 Cal.4th 142 [126 Cal.Rptr.2d 536] (enforcement of fee sharing agreement); Chronometrics, Inc. v. Sysgen, Inc. (1980) 110 Cal.App.3d 597 [168 Cal.Rptr. 196] (communication with represented party).

[5] For the disciplinary authority of this state and choice of law, see Rule 8.5.

[3] These Rules are not the sole basis of lawyer regulation. Lawyers authorized to practice law in California are also bound by applicable law including the State Bar Act (Business and Professions Code section 6000 et. seq.), other statutes, rules of court, and the opinions of California courts. Although not binding, issued opinions of ethics committees in California should be consulted for guidance on proper professional conduct. Ethics opinions of other bar associations may also be considered to the extent they relate to rules and laws that are consistent with the rules and laws of California.

[4] Under paragraph (b)(2), a willful violation of a rule does not require that the lawyer intend to violate the rule. Phillips v. State Bar (1989) 49 Cal.3d 944, 952 [264 Cal.Rptr. 346]; and see Business and Professions Code section 6077.

Rule 1.0 Purpose and Scope of the Rules of Professional Conduct.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 6 Agree = 1
Disagree = 2
Modify = 3
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
1	COPRAC	A	Yes		COPRAC supports the adoption of Proposed Rule 1.0 and the Comments to the Rule.	No response required.
2	Office of Chief Trial Counsel	M	Yes		Proposed Rule 1.0 sets forth four purposes of the rules. However, it appears that there is one more purpose to the rules not explicitly mentioned in Proposed Rule 1.0: maintaining high professional standards. OCTC believes that maintaining high professional standards should be stated as an explicit purpose of the rules. The Supreme Court has held that the primary purpose of imposing discipline includes maintaining the highest possible professional standards for attorneys. (See e.g. Berry v. State Bar; Jackson v. State Bar.) The Supreme Court has also stated that “[t]he rules are designed to establish ethical standards for the bar and to prohibit unprofessional conduct.” (Zitny v. State Bar.)	The Commission disagrees that establishing professional standards should be listed as one of the purposes of the Rules. The Rules are normative standards; the concept of professional standards resides in the four purposes that are listed in the Rule.
3	Paulson, Bradley	D	No		Commenter, in general, is concerned with attorney conduct in regard to soliciting clients in the area of Homeowner’s Notice of Claim of Violation of Functionality Standards, per Civil Code section 910 and Senate Bill 800.	The Commission has considered the commenter’s submission and determined that his concerns lie not with the substance of the Rules, but rather with their enforcement, which is beyond the purview of the Commission’s charge.

¹ A = AGREE with proposed Rule D = DISAGREE with proposed Rule M = AGREE ONLY IF MODIFIED NI = NOT INDICATED

Rule 1.0 Purpose and Scope of the Rules of Professional Conduct.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 6 Agree = 1
Disagree = 2
Modify = 3
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				1.0(a)(1) & (2)	Soliciting Attorney Groups, working in this area of law, are not disclosing issues that will affect the public, but rather adversely affect the client. Note that the California State Contractor's License Board posts quarterly the names of contractors that are disciplined or have had their license revoked or suspended. There should be a public listing for attorney conduct and discipline matters. The public needs to stay involved with the State Bar process and proceedings, etc.
				1.0(a)(4)	Soliciting Attorney Groups do not promote respect, but set the stage for their monetary gain by enticing the homeowner with a check of unknown amount. Since the homeowner's homes are warranted and builders honor their warranties, the Soliciting Attorney Groups use the homeowner and their home with the upfront propaganda and unproven solicited flyers/statements as a pawn to confuse and add the homeowner to the Claimant lists.
				1.0(b)(2)	See the attached flyers that are distributed by Soliciting Attorney Groups and note the extrapolation tactic utilized to draw in litigants/clients. Many pictures are not from the owners' communities. Senate Bill 800 gives the builder the right to repair, but the

Rule 1.0 Purpose and Scope of the Rules of Professional Conduct.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 6 Agree = 1
Disagree = 2
Modify = 3
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					homeowner needs to let the builder know if they have a problem. The builders do respond when given the chance or opportunity. The general public very rarely reads or hears of discipline issues for attorneys. From what I see, all attorney groups refrain from notifying the California State Bar when they see violations taking place, as to not draw the Bars' attention to them. This is used to the benefit of the Soliciting Attorney Groups.
4	Rozner, Maurice	D	No		Why would a sole practitioner bother? The rules are made for and by the large firms. The sole practitioner is ignored and at his detriment.	To the extent that the commenter implies that the Commission's statement of the purpose and scope of the rules includes a large firm bias, the Commission disagrees. The Commission's proposed rule states expressly that the rules "are binding upon all members of the State Bar and all other lawyers practicing law in this state." Because of this, the Commission has been mindful of - and has received public comment reflecting - the wide variety of situations in which rules of professional conduct must be appropriate. These include application to private and to governmental lawyers, to lawyers who work in for profit and in not for profit organizations, and to lawyers who work in large and in small law firms and as sole practitioners. The Commission is unable to see any way in which the proposed rules ignore the circumstances of sole practitioners. In addition, when the issue of bias in the discipline

Rule 1.0 Purpose and Scope of the Rules of Professional Conduct.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 6 Agree = 1
Disagree = 2
Modify = 3
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response system was last studied in response to a legislative mandate, the study concluded that although there may be evidence of more frequent investigations of small-firm lawyers, the frequency of those investigations were commensurate with the larger number of complaints lodged against them compared to large-firm attorneys, and therefore there was no institutional bias. (See State Bar Senate Bill No. 143 Report posted at: http://www.calbar.ca.gov/calbar/pdfs/reports/2001_SB143-Report.pdf)
5	San Diego County Bar Association	M	Yes		Delete Rule 1.0(b) Add new subsections (a)(5) and (a)(6) as follows: “(5) To provide guidance to lawyers; and (6) To provide a basis for the discipline of lawyers “	Commission disagreed and did not make the requested revisions. First, client protection is a core principle in California. Second, providing guidance to lawyers is a means to achieve the four listed purposes. Third, paragraph (b)(2) provides that a willful violation of the Rules is a basis for discipline which accurately states current law.
6	Sillas, Manuel	M	No		By way of example, Commenter explains an unpleasant encounter with three attorneys against whom he is planning to file criminal charges. Commenter may be trying to convey that the scope and purpose of the Rules are not achieving the desired result.	No response required.

Rule 1.0: Terminology

STATE VARIATIONS

(The following is an excerpt from Regulation of Lawyers: Statutes and Standards (2010 Ed.)
by Steven Gillers, Roy D. Simon and Andrew M. Perlman.)

Alaska: In the rules effective April 15, 2009, Rule 9.1 (Alaska's terminology rule) adds an unusually detailed definition of "substantially related matters" to help guide lawyers in their assessment of conflicts of interest. The definition draws, in part, on Comment 3 to Model Rule 1.9.

Connecticut adds: "'Client' or 'person' as used in these Rules includes an authorized representative unless otherwise stated."

District of Columbia defines "matter" as "any litigation, administrative proceeding, lobbying activity, application, claim, investigation, arrest, charge or accusation, the drafting of a contract, a negotiation, estate or family relationship practice issue, or any other representation, except as expressly limited in a particular Rule."

Massachusetts: Rule 9.1 retains the 1983 version of the ABA Terminology and adds a definition of "Qualified legal assistance organization." Amended Comment 3 to Rule 9.1 provides as follows: "The final category of qualified legal assistance organization requires that the organization 'receives no profit from the rendition of legal services.' That condition refers to the entire legal services operation of the organization; it does not prohibit the receipt of a court-awarded fee that would result in a 'profit' from that particular lawsuit."

New York: In the rules effective April 1, 2009, New York adds definitions for the terms "advertisement," "computer-accessed communication," "differing interests," "domestic relations matters," "matter," "person," "reasonable lawyers," and "sexual relations." New York also includes a more detailed definition of "fraud," providing as follows:

"Fraud" or "fraudulent" denotes conduct that is fraudulent under the substantive or procedural law of the applicable jurisdiction or has a purpose to deceive, provided that it does not include conduct that, although characterized as fraudulent by statute or administrative rule, lacks an element of scienter, deceit, intent to mislead, or knowing failure to correct misrepresentations that can be reasonably expected to induce detrimental reliance by another.

In addition, the definition of "confirmed in writing" includes "a statement by the person made on the record of any proceeding before a tribunal."

Ohio: Rule 1.0 defines "fraud" and "fraudulent" as denoting "conduct that has an intent to deceive and is either of the following:"

(1) an actual or implied misrepresentation of a material fact that is made either with knowledge of its falsity or with such utter disregard and recklessness about its falsity that knowledge may be inferred; (2) a knowing concealment of a material fact where there is a duty to disclose the material fact.

Oregon adds or alters the meaning of a number of phrases, including “electronic communication,” “informed consent,” “law firm,” “knowingly,” and “matter.”

Texas generally retains the 1983 version of the ABA Terminology, but modifies some of the 1983 definitions and adds others that are neither in the 1983 nor current versions of the ABA Terminology. Specifically, Texas includes the following definitions:

“Adjudicatory Official” denotes a person who serves on a Tribunal.

“Adjudicatory Proceeding” denotes the consideration of a matter by a Tribunal. “Competent” or “Competence” denotes possession or the ability to timely acquire the legal knowledge, skill, and training reasonably necessary for the representation of the client.

“Firm” or “Law firm” denotes a lawyer or lawyers in a private firm; or a lawyer or lawyers employed in the legal department of a corporation, legal services organization, or other organization, or in a unit of government.

“Fitness” denotes those qualities of physical, mental and psychological health that enable a person to discharge a lawyer’s responsibilities to clients in conformity with the Texas Disciplinary Rules of Professional Conduct. Normally a lack of fitness is indicated most clearly by a persistent inability to discharge, or unreliability in carrying out, significant obligations.

“Should know” when used in reference to a lawyer denotes that a reasonable lawyer under the same or similar circumstances would know the matter in question.

“Substantial” when used in reference to degree or extent denotes a matter of meaningful significance or involvement.

“Tribunal” denotes any governmental body or official or any other person engaged in a process of resolving a particular dispute or controversy. “Tribunal” includes such institutions as courts and administrative agencies when engaging in adjudicatory or licensing activities as defined by applicable law or rules of practice or procedure, as well as judges, magistrates, special masters, referees, arbitrators, mediators, hearing officers and comparable persons empowered to resolve or to recommend a resolution of a particular matter; but it does not include jurors, prospective jurors, legislative bodies or their committees, members or staffs, nor does it include other governmental bodies when acting in a legislative or rule-making capacity.

Virginia retains the 1983 version of the Terminology section and adds: “‘Should’ when used in reference to a lawyer’s action denotes an aspirational rather than a mandatory standard.”

Wisconsin: Wisconsin adds or alters the meaning of a number of phrases, including “consultation,” “firm,” “misrepresentation,” and “prosecutor.”

Proposed Rule 1.0.1 [1-100]
“Terminology”
(XDraft #7, 06/27/10)

Summary: Proposed Rule 1.0.1, which is based on Model Rule 1.0 (“Terminology”), defines 15 terms used in other Rules in order to place these definitions in a single location for ease of reference (it also cross-references one definition that is located in another Rule and one definition defined in California by statute). Eleven of these definitions exactly track or closely track the corresponding Model Rule definition; the remaining definitions differ from the Model Rule counterpart, as explained in the Comparison Chart.

Comparison with ABA Counterpart

Rule	Comment
☒ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted	☒ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule	☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
☒ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule	☒ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart	☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

Primary Factors Considered

☒ Existing California Law

Rule

RPC 3-310(A)

Statute

Evid. Code section 250

Case law

☒ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

Michigan Rule 1.0.1(b) (definition of “person”).

☐ Other Primary Factor(s)

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(13 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 13 due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Less than Six Members Opposing Adoption ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 10

Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 2

Abstain 0

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by Consensus ☐

Commission Minority Position, Known Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

Minority Position Included. (See minority position re definition of “tribunal.”): ☒ Yes ☐ No

☒ No Known Stakeholders

☐ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

☐ Very Controversial – Explanation:

☒ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

The Commission's definitions of certain terms (i.e., “fraud,” “informed consent,” “screened,” and “tribunal”) depart from the Model Rule counterpart definitions and the rules which use those terms will, as a result, be subject to different interpretations and may effectively constitute different standards of conduct notwithstanding the fact that the same terms are used in the respective California and ABA rules.

☐ Not Controversial

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.0.1* Terminology

July 2010

(Proposed rule following June 15, 2010 public comment deadline.)

INTRODUCTION:

Proposed Rule 1.0.1 is based on Model Rule 1.0. For convenience of reference, this Rule is the repository for most of the defined terms used in other rules. It contains 15 separate definitions, including the incorporation of the Evidence Code definition of “writing”. It also contains a cross-reference to the definition found in another rule of the term “information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)”. The Commission recommends including this cross-reference because the term is particularly important since it is used in several other rules. The Commission believes this cross-reference will make it more easily available.

Minority. A minority of the Commission dissents from the Commission’s recommended departure from the Model Rule’s definition of tribunal. The minority takes the position that the Commission’s proposed definition is substantially narrower than in any other jurisdiction and will be a source of confusion for lawyers practicing in California. See full Minority Dissent, below.

Variations in other jurisdictions. There is a wide range of variation among the jurisdictions in their adoption of Model Rule 1.0. Although nearly every jurisdiction has adopted the Model Rule number (Alaska is an exception), many have revised, added, or deleted terms within the Rule. See “Selected State Variations,” below.

A Note on the Rule Number. Because the Commission has recommended and the Board of Governors has adopted Rule 1.0, which sets forth the purpose and scope of the Rules of Professional Conduct, the Commission recommends re-numbering the Terminology section as “Rule 1.0.1”.

* Proposed Rule 1.0.1, XDraft #7 (6/27/10).

Dissent to Proposed Rule 1.0.1(m) – Definition of “Tribunal”

A minority dissents from the proposed definition of “tribunal” in paragraph (m). The definition proposed by the Commission is substantially narrower than the definition of “tribunal” in Model Rule 1.0(m) and the rules in most jurisdictions. If approved, various governmental agencies and boards acting in an adjudicative capacity and deciding contested matters will not have the protection of rules governing lawyers appearing as advocates in such proceedings. Under the definition proposed by the Commission, “tribunal” would be limited to a court, an arbitrator, an ALJ or a special master or other person to whom a court refers an issue for recommendation or decision. The definition would exclude numerous administrative agencies and boards at the federal, state and local level acting in an adjudicative capacity and rendering legally binding decisions directly affecting a party’s interests following the presentation of evidence or legal arguments (e.g., the PUC, Worker’s Compensation Appeals Board, SEC and FTB). The result will be that a host of administrative and legislative boards and agencies that adjudicate disputes will be left without the protection of rules aimed at assuring candor, impartiality and decorum by lawyers who represent clients as advocates in such matters. This includes Rule 3.3 (candor toward the tribunal) and Rule 3.5 (impartiality and decorum of the tribunal). For example, there would be no rule prohibiting ex parte communications and other forms of improper influence in adjudicative proceedings before various boards and administrative agencies that would otherwise come within the definition of “tribunal” under the Model Rule but which are excluded under the Commission’s definition.

The Commission’s restricted definition of “tribunal” is without precedent and will be a source of confusion as evidenced by the comments received from OCTC and the San Diego County Bar Association. No other jurisdiction employs such an overly restrictive definition of tribunal in the rules. There is no First Amendment or other reason for excluding from the definition of “tribunal” a legislative or administrative board or agency acting in an adjudicative capacity and rendering binding decisions directly affecting a person’s rights based on the presentation of evidence or legal argument by counsel. One of the stated objectives of the rules is promoting the fair administration of justice. This objective is not limited to courts but includes governmental agencies and bodies acting in an adjudicative capacity as defined in Model Rule 1.0(m). The explanation that a narrow definition is needed to distinguish proceedings governed by Rule 3.9 (advocate in non-adjudicative proceedings) is incorrect. The definition of “tribunal” in the Model Rules does not apply in situations governed by Rule 3.9. California should conform to the Model Rule definition and explain, if necessary, in a comment that the definition of tribunal does not apply in situations governed by proposed rule 3.9.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.0 Terminology	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.0.1 Terminology	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(a) "Belief" or "believes" denotes that the person involved actually supposed the fact in question to be true. A person's belief may be inferred from circumstances.	(a) "Belief" or "believes" ~~denotes~~means that the person involved actually ~~supposed~~supposes the fact in question to be true. A person's belief may be inferred from circumstances.	The Commission recommends changing "denotes" to "means" throughout the definitions in order to be more specific and definite. At least Maine has also made the same change in its Rules. The verb "supposes" has been substituted for "supposed" to conform its tense with "believes".
(b) "Confirmed in writing," when used in reference to the informed consent of a person, denotes informed consent that is given in writing by the person or a writing that a lawyer promptly transmits to the person confirming an oral informed consent. See paragraph (e) for the definition of "informed consent." If it is not feasible to obtain or transmit the writing at the time the person gives informed consent, then the lawyer must obtain or transmit it within a reasonable time thereafter.	~~(b)- "Confirmed in writing," when used in reference to the informed consent of a person, denotes informed consent that is given in writing by the person or a writing that a lawyer promptly transmits to the person confirming an oral informed consent. See paragraph (e) for the definition of "informed consent." If it is not feasible to obtain or transmit the writing at the time the person gives informed consent, then the lawyer must obtain or transmit it within a reasonable time thereafter.~~	The phrase "confirmed in writing" is not used in the proposed Rules and therefore has been removed. The proposed Rules use either the Model Rule term "informed consent" [see paragraph (e), below] or California's higher standard of "informed written consent" [see paragraph (e-1), below].
	(b) [Reserved]	The Commission has decided to leave paragraph (b) as "[Reserved]" in an attempt to keep the Commission's proposed definitions as close as possible to the Model Rule numbering.

* Proposed Rule 1.0.1, XDraft 7 (06/27/10).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.0 Terminology	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.0.1 Terminology	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(c) "Firm" or "law firm" denotes a lawyer or lawyers in a law partnership, professional corporation, sole proprietorship or other association authorized to practice law; or lawyers employed in a legal services organization or the legal department of a corporation or other organization.	(c) "Firm" or "law firm" ~~denotes a lawyer or lawyers in means~~ a law partnership; ~~a~~ a professional law corporation; ~~a~~ a sole proprietorship or ~~other an~~ association ~~authorized to engaged in the~~ practice of law; or lawyers employed in a legal services organization or in the legal department division or office of a corporation, of a government organization, or ~~other of~~ another organization.	Paragraph (c) modifies the Model Rule definition in several non-substantive ways, including referring to governmental law offices (this is not stated in the Model Rule but is intended, as is shown by the Model Rule Comment). This change emphasizes the need to comply with the California principle that all lawyers are bound by the Rules of Professional Conduct, specifically including government lawyers. See People ex rel. Deumkejian v. Brown (1981) 29 Cal.3d 150). The substitution of "engage in" for "authorized to" is to assure that the requirements of the Rules apply to everyone acting as a law firm even if not authorized to do so [at least Maryland, Michigan, and South Carolina similarly have removed "authorized to"]. The remaining changes are for clarity.
(d) "Fraud" or "fraudulent" denotes conduct that is fraudulent under the substantive or procedural law of the applicable jurisdiction and has a purpose to deceive.	(d) "Fraud" or "fraudulent" ~~denotes means~~ conduct that is fraudulent under the ~~substantive or procedural~~ law of the applicable jurisdiction and has a purpose to deceive.	Paragraph (d) is nearly identical to the Model Rule definition but removes "substantive or procedural" because of difficulty with the concept that a procedural requirement can define fraud. These three words also have been removed in Alaska, Florida, North Dakota, Ohio and Tennessee, often with substantial additional changes. There are other substantive changes to the definition in the versions adopted in New York, North Carolina, South Carolina, Washington, and Wyoming.
(e) "Informed consent" denotes the agreement by a person to a proposed course of conduct after the lawyer has communicated adequate information and explanation about the material risks of and reasonably available alternatives to the proposed course of conduct.	(e) "Informed consent" ~~denotes the agreement by means~~ a ~~person person's agreement~~ to a proposed course of conduct after the lawyer has communicated ~~adequate information and explanation about explained (i) the relevant~~ circumstances and (ii) the actual and	The re-ordering of the first portion of this definition is for clarity. The same change has been made at least in Maine. The addition of "relevant circumstances" (following public comment from several commenters) and "actual and reasonably foreseeable" conforms the definition to California case law. See, e.g., Sharp v. Next Entertainment, Inc. (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 410, 429-31.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.0 Terminology	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.0.1 Terminology	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	reasonably foreseeable material risks of the proposed conduct and, where appropriate, the reasonably available alternatives to the proposed ~~course of~~ conduct.	There are substantive changes to the definition in Alaska, Maine Rule, Michigan Missouri; New York, North Carolina, Oregon, Penn., South Carolina, and Wyoming.
	(e-1) "Informed written consent" means that both the communication and consent required by paragraph (e) must be in writing.	Paragraph (e-1) has no counterpart in Model Rule 1.0. The Commission has added this definition of California's higher standard of written disclosure and written consent, a concept that is not found in the Model Rules. The use of Model Rule language is not intended to substantively change California's current rule 3-310(A) definition.
	(e-2) "Information protected by Business & Professions Code section 6068(e)" is defined in Rule 1.6, Comments [3] - [6].	Paragraph (e-2) has no counterpart in Model Rule 1.0. The threshold use of the term "information protected by Business & Professions Code section 6068(e)" is in the confidentiality rule, Rule 1.6, and the Commission proposes to keep the definition in that Rule. It has added this cross-reference merely to simplify locating the definition. New York and North Carolina similarly cross-reference their Rule 1.6 definitions. Oregon has changed its term to "information relating to the representation of a client", and Wyoming uses the Model Rule term, but both have placed their definitions in Rule 1.0.
(f) "Knowingly," "known," or "knows" denotes actual knowledge of the fact in question. A person's knowledge may be inferred from circumstances.	(f) "Knowingly," "known," or "knows" ~~denotes~~means actual knowledge of the fact in question. A person's knowledge may be inferred from circumstances.	Paragraph (f) is identical to the Model Rule definition except for the substitution of "means" for "denotes". See Explanation for paragraph (a).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.0 Terminology	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.0.1 Terminology	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(g) "Partner" denotes a member of a partnership, a shareholder in a law firm organized as a professional corporation, or a member of an association authorized to practice law.	(g) "Partner" ~~denotes~~means a member of a partnership, a shareholder in a law firm organized as a professional corporation, or a member of an association authorized to practice law.	Paragraph (g) is identical to the Model Rule definition except for the substitution of "means" for "denotes". See Explanation for paragraph (a).
	(g-1) "Person" means a natural person or an organization.	Paragraph (g-1) has no counterpart in Model Rule 1.0. The Commission added the paragraph (g-1) definition in order to avoid any possibility that "person" might be read as referring only to natural persons. There are six other jurisdictions that have adopted definitions of "person"; the Commission's definition is based on the definition adopted in Michigan.
(h) "Reasonable" or "reasonably" when used in relation to conduct by a lawyer denotes the conduct of a reasonably prudent and competent lawyer.	(h) "Reasonable" or "reasonably" when used in relation to conduct by a lawyer ~~denotes~~means the conduct of a reasonably prudent and competent lawyer.	Paragraph (h) is identical to the Model Rule definition except for the substitution of "means" for "denotes". See Explanation for paragraph (a).
(i) "Reasonable belief" or "reasonably believes" when used in reference to a lawyer denotes that the lawyer believes the matter in question and that the circumstances are such that the belief is reasonable.	(i) "Reasonable belief" or "reasonably believes" when used in reference to a lawyer ~~denotes~~means that the lawyer believes the matter in question and that the circumstances are such that the belief is reasonable.	Paragraph (i) is identical to the Model Rule definition except for the substitution of "means" for "denotes". See Explanation for paragraph (a).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.0 Terminology	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.0.1 Terminology	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(j) “Reasonably should know” when used in reference to a lawyer denotes that a lawyer of reasonable prudence and competence would ascertain the matter in question.	(j) “Reasonably should know” when used in reference to a lawyer ~~denotes~~means that a lawyer of reasonable prudence and competence would ascertain the matter in question.	Paragraph (j) is identical to the Model Rule definition except for the substitution of “means” for “denotes”. See Explanation for paragraph (a).
(k) “Screened” denotes the isolation of a lawyer from any participation in a matter through the timely imposition of procedures within a firm that are reasonably adequate under the circumstances to protect information that the isolated lawyer is obligated to protect under these Rules or other law.	(k) “Screened” ~~denotes~~means the isolation of a lawyer from any participation in a matter ~~through, including~~ the timely imposition of procedures within a law firm that are ~~reasonably~~ adequate under the circumstances (i) to protect information that the isolated lawyer is obligated to protect under these Rules or other law; and (ii) to protect against other law firm lawyers and non-lawyer personnel communicating with the lawyer with respect to the matter.	Paragraph (k) is identical to the Model Rule definition but makes three changes. First, the substitution of “including” for “through” reflects the variability of what is needed to impose an effective screen, as is discussed in Comment [10], below. Second, the removal of “reasonably” is intended to avoid the suggestion that half-way measures will suffice. The imposition of a non-consensual screen by a law firm is an extremely serious matter. Finally, the Commission recommends added the concept in subpart (ii), which fills a gap in the Model Rule definition.
(l) “Substantial” when used in reference to degree or extent denotes a material matter of clear and weighty importance.	(l) “Substantial” when used in reference to degree or extent ~~denotes~~means a material matter of clear and weighty importance.	Paragraph (l) is identical to the Model Rule definition except for the substitution of “means” for “denotes”. See Explanation for paragraph (a).
(m) “Tribunal” denotes a court, an arbitrator in a binding arbitration proceeding or a legislative body, administrative agency or other body acting in an adjudicative capacity. A legislative body, administrative agency or other body acts in an adjudicative capacity when a neutral	(m) “Tribunal” ~~denotes~~means: (i) a court, an arbitrator ~~in a binding arbitration proceeding, or a legislative body, an~~ administrative ~~agency or other body~~law judge acting in an adjudicative capacity. ~~A legislative body, administrative agency~~ and authorized to make a decision that	Paragraph (m) is a material change from the Model Rule definition. The purpose of the changes is to distinguish the extremely high standards that apply to a lawyer’s conduct as a client representative in a court of law or its equivalent, which is labeled as a “tribunal” by this definition (see Rule 3.3), from the more limited but still important duty of honesty that applies when a official, after the presentation of evidence or legal argument by a party or parties, will render a binding legal judgment directly affecting a party's interests in a particular matter.	can be binding on the parties involved; or (ii) a special master or other body acts in an adjudicative capacity when person to whom a neutral official, after the presentation of evidence, court refers one or legal argument by a party more issues and whose decision or parties, will render a recommendation can be binding legal judgment directly affecting a party's interests in a particular matter on the parties if approved by the court.	lawyer appears in a representative capacity before a legislative or administrative body (see Rule 3.9). The Commission concluded that this distinction is important because First Amendment protections apply in dealing with legislative and administrative bodies, involved in such things as writing statutes and administrative regulations and granting and denying governmental licenses and permits. First Amendment considerations do not similarly apply to court proceedings. Also, a lawyer's representative work with legislative and administrative bodies involves elements of contractual and other negotiations that are not present in courts, and that role is more akin to a lawyer serving as an advocate in non-governmental negotiations.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.0 Terminology	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.0.1 Terminology	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(n) "Writing" or "written" denotes a tangible or electronic record of a communication or representation, including handwriting, typewriting, printing, photostating, photography, audio or videorecording and e-mail. A "signed" writing includes an electronic sound, symbol or process attached to or logically associated with a writing and executed or adopted by a person with the intent to sign the writing.	~~(n) "Writing" or "written" denotes a tangible or electronic record of a communication or representation, including handwriting, typewriting, printing, photostating, photography, audio or videorecording and e-mail. A "signed" writing includes an electronic sound, symbol or process attached to or logically associated with a writing and executed or adopted by a person with the intent to sign the writing.~~ "Writing" or "written" has the meaning stated in Evidence Code section 250. A "signed" writing includes an electronic sound, symbol, or process attached to or logically associated with a writing and executed, inserted, or adopted by or at the direction of a person with the intent to sign the writing.	Because California has a statutory definition of "writing", the Commission recommends substituting a reference to it in place of the Model Rule definition. Although the statutory definition and the Model Rule definition are substantially the same, the Commission concluded that substituting a cross-reference to the statute would avoid confusion by California lawyers who are familiar with the statutory definition. The definition of "signed," added following public comment, is necessary to give effect to several rules that refer to a signed writing.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.0 Terminology Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.0.1 Terminology Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Confirmed in Writing [1] If it is not feasible to obtain or transmit a written confirmation at the time the client gives informed consent, then the lawyer must obtain or transmit it within a reasonable time thereafter. If a lawyer has obtained a client's informed consent, the lawyer may act in reliance on that consent so long as it is confirmed in writing within a reasonable time thereafter.	Confirmed in Writing ~~[1] If it is not feasible to obtain or transmit a written confirmation at the time the client gives informed consent, then the lawyer must obtain or transmit it within a reasonable time thereafter. If a lawyer has obtained a client's informed consent, the lawyer may act in reliance on that consent so long as it is confirmed in writing within a reasonable time thereafter.~~	The Commission removed Model Rule 1.0, cmt. [1] because the term explained in the Comment is not used in the proposed Rules.
Firm [2] Whether two or more lawyers constitute a firm within paragraph (c) can depend on the specific facts. For example, two practitioners who share office space and occasionally consult or assist each other ordinarily would not be regarded as constituting a firm. However, if they present themselves to the public in a way that suggests that they are a firm or conduct themselves as a firm, they should be regarded as a firm for purposes of the Rules. The terms of any formal agreement between associated lawyers are relevant in determining whether they are a firm, as is the fact that they have mutual access to information concerning the clients they serve. Furthermore, it is relevant in doubtful cases to consider the underlying purpose of the Rule	Firm or Law Firm ~~[2]~~ Whether two or more lawyers constitute a law firm ~~within paragraph (c)~~ can depend on the specific facts. For example, two practitioners who share office space and occasionally consult or assist each other ordinarily would not be regarded as constituting a law firm. However, if they present themselves to the public in a way that suggests that they are a law firm or conduct themselves as a law firm, they ~~should~~may be regarded as a law firm for purposes of ~~the~~these Rules. The terms of any formal agreement between associated lawyers are relevant in determining whether they are a firm, as is the fact that they have mutual access to information concerning the clients they serve. Furthermore, it is relevant in doubtful cases to consider the underlying	Comment [1] is nearly the same as Model Rule 1.0, cmt. [2], but the Commission recommends removal of the last Model Rule sentence because it does not serve to explain the defined term but instead muses about other legal issues.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.0 Terminology Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.0.1 Terminology Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
that is involved. A group of lawyers could be regarded as a firm for purposes of the Rule that the same lawyer should not represent opposing parties in litigation, while it might not be so regarded for purposes of the Rule that information acquired by one lawyer is attributed to another.	purpose of the ~~Rule~~rule that is involved. ~~A group of lawyers could be regarded as a firm for purposes of the Rule that the same lawyer should not represent opposing parties in litigation, while it might not be so regarded for purposes of the Rule that information acquired by one lawyer is attributed to another.~~
[3] With respect to the law department of an organization, including the government, there is ordinarily no question that the members of the department constitute a firm within the meaning of the Rules of Professional Conduct. There can be uncertainty, however, as to the identity of the client. For example, it may not be clear whether the law department of a corporation represents a subsidiary or an affiliated corporation, as well as the corporation by which the members of the department are directly employed. A similar question can arise concerning an unincorporated association and its local affiliates.	~~[3] With respect to the law department of an organization, including the government, there is ordinarily no question that the members of the department constitute a firm within the meaning of the Rules of Professional Conduct. There can be uncertainty, however, as to the identity of the client. For example, it may not be clear whether the law department of a corporation represents a subsidiary or an affiliated corporation, as well as the corporation by which the members of the department are directly employed. A similar question can arise concerning an unincorporated association and its local affiliates.~~	The Commission recommends deleting Model Rule 1.0, cmt. [3]. The first sentence contradicts the plain language of paragraph (c). The second sentence does not help explain the rule but instead muses to no effect on the question of who a lawyer's client is.
	[2] Whether a lawyer who is denominated as "of counsel" should be deemed a member of a law firm will also depend on the specific facts. The term "of counsel" implies that the lawyer so designated has a relationship with the law firm, other than as a partner or associate, or officer or shareholder, that is close, personal, continuous, and regular. Thus, to the extent the relationship between a law firm and a lawyer is sufficiently "close, personal, regular and	Comment [2] has no counterpart in Model Rule 1.0. The Commission recommends its addition in order to express a pertinent rule of California law.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.0 Terminology Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.0.1 Terminology Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	continuous, such that the lawyer is held out to the public as “of counsel” for the law firm, the relationship of the law firm and “of counsel” lawyer will be considered a single firm for purposes of disqualification. See, e.g., People ex rel. Department of Corporations v. Speedee Oil Change Systems, Inc. (1999) 20 Cal.4th 1135 [86 Cal.Rptr.2d 816]. On the other hand, even when a lawyer has associated as “of counsel” with another lawyer and is providing extensive legal services on a matter, they will not necessarily be considered the same law firm for purposes of dividing fees under Rule 1.5.1 where, for example, they both continue to maintain independent law practices with separate identities, separate addresses of record with the State Bar, and separate clients, expenses, and liabilities. See, e.g., Chambers v. Kay (2002) 29 Cal.4th 142 [126 Cal.Rptr.2d 536]. Whether a lawyer should be deemed a member of a law firm when denominated as “special counsel”, or by another term having no commonly understood definition, also will depend on the specific facts.
[4] Similar questions can also arise with respect to lawyers in legal aid and legal services organizations. Depending upon the structure of the organization, the entire organization or different components of it may constitute a firm or firms for purposes of these Rules.	[43] Similar questions can also arise with respect to lawyers in legal aid and legal services organizations. Depending upon the structure of the organization, the entire organization or different components of it may constitute a firm or firms for purposes of these Rules.	Comment [3] is identical to Model Rule 1.0, cmt. [4].

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.0 Terminology Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.0.1 Terminology Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	[4] This Rule does not authorize any person or entity to engage in the practice of law in this state except as otherwise permitted by law.	Comment [4] has no counterpart in Model Rule 1.0. The Commission recommends its addition in order to prevent the definition of "law firm" from being misread as an authorization to practice law. The consequence is that anyone acting as a law firm has all the duties of law firms even if not authorized to practice law.
Fraud [5] When used in these Rules, the terms "fraud" or "fraudulent" refer to conduct that is characterized as such under the substantive or procedural law of the applicable jurisdiction and has a purpose to deceive. This does not include merely negligent misrepresentation or negligent failure to apprise another of relevant information. For purposes of these Rules, it is not necessary that anyone has suffered damages or relied on the misrepresentation or failure to inform.	Fraud [5] When used in these Rules, the terms "fraud" or "fraudulent" refer to conduct that is characterized as such under the ~~substantive or procedural~~ law of the applicable jurisdiction and has a purpose to deceive. This does not include merely negligent misrepresentation or negligent failure to apprise another of relevant information. For purposes of these Rules, it is not necessary that anyone has suffered damages or relied on the misrepresentation or failure to inform.	Comment [5] is identical to Model Rule 1.0, cmt. [5], changed only to track the revision to paragraph (d).
Informed Consent [6] Many of the Rules of Professional Conduct require the lawyer to obtain the informed consent of a client or other person (e.g., a former client or, under certain circumstances, a prospective client) before accepting or continuing representation or pursuing a course of conduct. See, e.g., Rules 1.2(c), 1.6(a) and 1.7(b). The communication	Informed Consent and Informed Written Consent [6] Many of the rules ~~of Professional Conduct~~ require ~~the~~ lawyer to obtain the informed consent of a client or other person (e.g., a former client or, under certain circumstances, a prospective client) before accepting or continuing representation or pursuing a course of conduct. Other rules require a lawyer to obtain informed written consent. Compare,	Comment [6] is based on Model Rule 1.0, cmt. [6]. It has been modified to cover the paragraph (e) and (e-1) definitions of "informed consent" and "informed written consent". The removal of "ordinarily" clarifies that the obligation to disclose exists invariably. The addition of "reasonably available" tracks the change in paragraph (e), explained above. The removal of the two sentences beginning "In some circumstances ..." sentence

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.0 Terminology Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.0.1 Terminology Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
necessary to obtain such consent will vary according to the Rule involved and the circumstances giving rise to the need to obtain informed consent. The lawyer must make reasonable efforts to ensure that the client or other person possesses information reasonably adequate to make an informed decision. Ordinarily, this will require communication that includes a disclosure of the facts and circumstances giving rise to the situation, any explanation reasonably necessary to inform the client or other person of the material advantages and disadvantages of the proposed course of conduct and a discussion of the client's or other person's options and alternatives. In some circumstances it may be appropriate for a lawyer to advise a client or other person to seek the advice of other counsel. A lawyer need not inform a client or other person of facts or implications already known to the client or other person; nevertheless, a lawyer who does not personally inform the client or other person assumes the risk that the client or other person is inadequately informed and the consent is invalid. In determining whether the information and explanation provided are reasonably adequate, relevant factors include whether the client or other person is experienced in legal matters generally and in making decisions of the type involved, and whether the client or other person is independently represented by other counsel in giving the consent. Normally, such persons need less information and explanation than others, and generally a client or other person who is independently represented by other counsel in giving	for example, Rules 1.2(c), and 1.6(a) and (informed consent) with Rules 1.7, 1.8.1 and 1.9 (informed written consent). The communication necessary to obtain such consent will vary according to the rule involved and the circumstances giving rise to the need to obtain informed consent. The lawyer must make reasonable efforts to ensure that the client or other person possesses information reasonably adequate to make an informed decision. Ordinarily In any event, this will require communication that includes a disclosure of the facts and circumstances giving rise to the situation, any explanation reasonably necessary to inform the client or other person of the material advantages and disadvantages of the proposed course of conduct, and a discussion of the client's or other person's reasonably available options and alternatives. In some circumstances it may be appropriate for a lawyer to advise a client or other person to seek the advice of other counsel. A lawyer need not inform a client or other person of facts or implications already known to the client or other person; nevertheless, a lawyer who does not personally inform the client or other person assumes the risk that the client or other person is inadequately informed and the consent is invalid. In determining whether the information and explanation provided are reasonably adequate, relevant factors include whether the client or other person is experienced in legal matters generally and in making decisions of the type involved, and whether the client or other person is independently represented by other counsel in giving the consent.	removes practice tips that do not explain the Rule. The removal of the last sentence is to avoid its suggestion that a lawyer has no disclosure obligation to a client that is independently represented.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.0 Terminology Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.0.1 Terminology Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
the consent should be assumed to have given informed consent	~~Normally, such persons need less information and explanation than others, and generally a client or other person who is independently represented by other counsel in giving the consent should be assumed to have given informed consent.~~
[7] Obtaining informed consent will usually require an affirmative response by the client or other person. In general, a lawyer may not assume consent from a client's or other person's silence. Consent may be inferred, however, from the conduct of a client or other person who has reasonably adequate information about the matter. A number of Rules require that a person's consent be confirmed in writing. See Rules 1.7(b) and 1.9(a). For a definition of "writing" and "confirmed in writing," see paragraphs (n) and (b). Other Rules require that a client's consent be obtained in a writing signed by the client. See, e.g., Rules 1.8(a) and (g). For a definition of "signed," see paragraph (n).	[7] Obtaining informed consent will usually require an affirmative response by the client or other person. In general, a lawyer may not assume consent from a client's or other person's silence. ~~Consent~~ However, except where the standard is one of informed written consent, consent may be inferred, ~~however,~~ from the conduct of a client or other person who has reasonably adequate information about the matter. ~~A number of Rules require that a person's consent be confirmed in writing. See Rules 1.7 paragraph (b) and 1.9(a). For a~~ for the definition of "writing" and ~~"confirmed in writing, written" see paragraphs (n) and (b). Other Rules require that a client's consent be obtained in a writing signed by the client. See, e.g., Rules 1.8(a) and (g). For a definition of "signed," see paragraph (n).~~	Comment [7] is based on Model Rule 1.0, cmt. [7]. Changes conform the Comment to the paragraph (e) definition.
Screened [8] This definition applies to situations where screening of a personally disqualified lawyer is permitted to remove imputation of a conflict of interest under Rules 1.10, 1.11, 1.12 or 1.18.	Screened [8] This definition applies to situations where screening of a personally ~~disqualified~~ prohibited lawyer is permitted to remove imputation of a conflict of interest under Rules ~~1.10, 1.11, or 1.12 or 1.18.~~	Comment [8] is identical to Model Rule 1.0, cmt. [8], except that the reference to Rule 1.10 has been deleted because the Board has declined to adopt Model Rule 1.10, and the reference to Rule 1.18 has been deleted because the Commission has recommended that Model Rule 1.18 not be adopted.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.0 Terminology Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.0.1 Terminology Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[9] The purpose of screening is to assure the affected parties that confidential information known by the personally disqualified lawyer remains protected. The personally disqualified lawyer should acknowledge the obligation not to communicate with any of the other lawyers in the firm with respect to the matter. Similarly, other lawyers in the firm who are working on the matter should be informed that the screening is in place and that they may not communicate with the personally disqualified lawyer with respect to the matter. Additional screening measures that are appropriate for the particular matter will depend on the circumstances. To implement, reinforce and remind all affected lawyers of the presence of the screening, it may be appropriate for the firm to undertake such procedures as a written undertaking by the screened lawyer to avoid any communication with other firm personnel and any contact with any firm files or other materials relating to the matter, written notice and instructions to all other firm personnel forbidding any communication with the screened lawyer relating to the matter, denial of access by the screened lawyer to firm files or other materials relating to the matter and periodic reminders of the screen to the screened lawyer and all other firm personnel.	[9] The purpose of screening is to assure the affected ~~parties~~client, former client, or prospective client that confidential information known by the personally ~~disqualified~~prohibited lawyer ~~remains protected~~is neither disclosed to other law firm lawyers or non-lawyer personnel nor used to the detriment of the person to whom the duty of confidentiality is owed. The personally ~~disqualified~~prohibited lawyer ~~should~~shall acknowledge the obligation not to communicate with any of the other lawyers and non-lawyer personnel in the law firm with respect to the matter. Similarly, other lawyers and non-lawyer personnel in the law firm who are working on the matter ~~should~~promptly shall be informed that the screening is in place and that they may not communicate with the personally ~~disqualified~~prohibited lawyer with respect to the matter. Additional screening measures that are appropriate for the particular matter will depend on the circumstances. To implement, reinforce and remind all affected ~~lawyers~~law firm personnel of the presence of the screening, it may be appropriate for the law firm to undertake such procedures as a written undertaking by the ~~screened~~personally prohibited lawyer to avoid any communication with other law firm personnel and any contact with any law firm files or other materials relating to the matter, written notice and instructions to all other law firm personnel forbidding any communication with the ~~screened~~personally prohibited lawyer relating to the matter, denial of access by ~~the screened~~that lawyer	Comment [9] is based on Model Rule 1.0, cmt. [9], but makes several changes: First, “parties” in the first sentence is replaced because a lawyer’s duty of confidentiality is owed only to clients, former clients, and prospective clients and not to anyone else that might be called a “party”. Second, to conform to proposed language in the applicable conflicts rules, “disqualified” has been replaced throughout the comment with “prohibited”. Similarly, the one appearance of the phrase “screened lawyer” has been replaced with “personally prohibited lawyer.” Third, a gap in the Model Rule Comment has been eliminated by stating on each occasion that screening involves both all other law firm lawyers and all non-lawyer personnel. The same change has been made to paragraph (k). Fourth, the obligation of the screened lawyer to acknowledge the existence of the screen is stated in mandatory (“shall”) rather than permissive (“should”) terms. Fifth, the obligation to inform other law firm personnel of the screen is made mandatory and, to conform to the paragraph (k) requirement of timeliness, the requirement is to do so “promptly”. This mandatory statement also appears in the Connecticut Comment, and the mandatory language also appears in the New York Comment.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.0 Terminology Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.0.1 Terminology Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	to law firm files or other materials relating to the matter, and periodic reminders of the screen to the ~~screened~~personally prohibited lawyer and all other law firm personnel.
[10] In order to be effective, screening measures must be implemented as soon as practical after a lawyer or law firm knows or reasonably should know that there is a need for screening.	[10] In order to be effective, screening measures must be implemented as soon as practical after a lawyer or law firm knows or reasonably should know that there is a need for screening.	Comment [10] is identical to Model Rule 1.0, cmt. [10].
	Tribunal [11] This definition is limited to courts and their equivalent in order to distinguish the special and heightened duties that lawyers owe to courts from the important but more limited duties of honesty and integrity that a lawyer owes when acting as an advocate before a legislative body or administrative agency. Compare Rule 3.3 to Rule 3.9.	Comment [11] has no counterpart in Model Rule 1.0. It has been added as a brief explanation of the narrow definition of “tribunal” that the Commission recommends. See the paragraph (m) explanation, above.
	Writing and Written [12]These Rules utilize California's statutory definition to avoid confusion by California lawyers familiar with it. It is substantially the same as the definitions in the ABA Model Rules and most other jurisdictions.	See the Explanation for paragraph (n), above.

Rule 1.0.1: Terminology

(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to the Public Comment Draft)

- (a) “Belief” or “believes” means that the person involved actually supposes the fact in question to be true. A person's belief may be inferred from circumstances.
- (b) [reserved]
- (c) “Firm” or “law firm” means a law partnership; a professional law corporation; a sole proprietorship or an association engaged in the practice of law; or lawyers employed in a legal services organization or in the legal department, division or office of a corporation, of a government organization, or of another organization.
- (d) “Fraud” or “fraudulent” means conduct that is fraudulent under the law of the applicable jurisdiction and has a purpose to deceive.
- (e) “Informed consent” means a person's agreement to a proposed course of conduct after the lawyer has communicated ~~adequate information~~ and ~~explanation about~~explained (i) the relevant circumstances and (ii) the actual and reasonably foreseeable material risks of ~~the proposed conduct~~ and where appropriate, the reasonably available alternatives to ~~the proposed~~ ~~course of~~ conduct.
- (e-1) “Informed written consent” means that both the communication and consent required by paragraph (e) must be in writing.
- (e-2) “Information protected by Business & Professions Code section 6068(e)” is defined in Rule 1.6, Comments [3] - [6].
- (f) “Knowingly,” “known,” or “knows” means actual knowledge of the fact in question. A person's knowledge may be inferred from circumstances.
- (g) “Partner” means a member of a partnership, a shareholder in a law firm organized as a professional corporation, or a member of an association authorized to practice law.
- (g-1) “Person” means a natural person or an organization.
- (h) “Reasonable” or “reasonably” when used in relation to conduct by a lawyer means the conduct of a reasonably prudent and competent lawyer.
- (i) “Reasonable belief” or “reasonably believes” when used in reference to a lawyer means that the lawyer believes the matter in question and that the circumstances are such that the belief is reasonable.
- (j) “Reasonably should know” when used in reference to a lawyer means that a lawyer of reasonable prudence and competence would ascertain the matter in question.
- (k) “Screened” means the isolation of a lawyer from any participation in a matter, including the timely imposition of procedures within a law firm that are adequate under the circumstances (i) to protect information that the isolated lawyer is obligated to protect under these Rules or other law; and (ii) to protect against other law firm lawyers and non-lawyer personnel communicating with the lawyer with respect to the matter.

- (l) “Substantial” when used in reference to degree or extent means a material matter of clear and weighty importance.
- (m) “Tribunal” means: (i) a court, an arbitrator, or an administrative law judge acting in an adjudicative capacity and authorized to make a decision that can be binding on the parties involved; or (ii) a special master or other person to whom a court refers one or more issues and whose decision or recommendation can be binding on the parties if approved by the court.
- (n) “Writing” or “written” has the meaning stated in Evidence Code section 250. A “signed” writing includes an electronic sound, symbol, or process attached to or logically associated with a writing and executed, inserted, or adopted by or at the direction of a person with the intent to sign the writing.

COMMENT

Firm or Law Firm

- [1] Whether two or more lawyers constitute a law firm can depend on the specific facts. For example, two practitioners who share office space and occasionally consult or assist each other ordinarily would not be regarded as constituting a law firm. However, if they present themselves to the public in a way that suggests that they are a law firm or conduct themselves as a law firm, they may be regarded as a law firm for purposes of these Rules. The terms of any formal agreement between associated lawyers are relevant in determining whether they are a firm, as is the fact that they have mutual access to information concerning the clients they serve. Furthermore, it is relevant in doubtful cases to consider the underlying purpose of the rule that is involved.

- [2] Whether a lawyer who is denominated as “of counsel” should be deemed a member of a law firm will also depend on the specific facts. The term “of counsel” implies that the lawyer so designated has a relationship with the law firm, other than as a partner or associate, or officer or shareholder, that is close, personal, continuous, and regular. Thus, to the extent the relationship between a law firm and a lawyer is sufficiently “close, personal, regular and continuous,” such that the lawyer is held out to the public as “of counsel” for the law firm, the relationship of the law firm and “of counsel” lawyer will be considered a single firm for purposes of disqualification. See, e.g., People ex rel. Department of Corporations v. Speedee Oil Change Systems, Inc. (1999) 20 Cal.4th 1135 [86 Cal.Rptr.2d 816]. On the other hand, even when a lawyer has associated as “of counsel” with another lawyer and is providing extensive legal services on a matter, they will not necessarily be considered the same law firm for purposes of dividing fees under Rule 1.5.1 where, for example, they both continue to maintain independent law practices with separate identities, separate addresses of record with the State Bar, and separate clients, expenses, and liabilities. See, e.g., Chambers v. Kay (2002) 29 Cal.4th 142 [126 Cal.Rptr.2d 536]. Whether a lawyer should be deemed a member of a law firm when denominated as “special counsel”, or by another term having no commonly understood definition, also will depend on the specific facts.

- [3] Similar questions can also arise with respect to lawyers in legal aid and legal services organizations. Depending upon the structure of the organization, the entire organization or different components of it may constitute a firm or firms for purposes of these Rules.

- [4] This Rule does not authorize any person or entity to engage in the practice of law in this state except as otherwise permitted by law.

Fraud

- [5] When used in these Rules, the terms “fraud” or “fraudulent” refer to conduct that is characterized as such under the law of the applicable jurisdiction and has a purpose to deceive. This does not include merely negligent misrepresentation or negligent failure to apprise another of relevant information. For purposes of these Rules, it is not necessary that anyone has suffered damages or relied on the misrepresentation or failure to inform.

Informed Consent and Informed Written Consent

- [6] Many of the rules require a lawyer to obtain the informed consent of a client or other person (e.g., a former client or, under certain circumstances, a prospective client) before accepting or continuing representation or pursuing a course of conduct. Other rules require a lawyer to obtain informed written consent. See Compare, e.g. for example, Rules 1.2\(c\), and 1.6\(a\), and \(informed consent\) with Rules 1.7, 1.8.1 and 1.9 \(informed written consent\). The communication necessary to obtain such consent will vary according to the rule involved and the circumstances giving rise to the need to obtain consent. The lawyer must make reasonable efforts to ensure that the client or other person possesses information reasonably adequate to make an informed decision. In any event, this will require communication that includes a disclosure of the facts and circumstances giving rise to the situation, any explanation reasonably necessary to inform the client or other person of the material advantages and disadvantages of the proposed course of conduct, and a discussion of the client's or other person's reasonably available options and alternatives. In determining whether the information and explanation provided are reasonably adequate, relevant factors include whether the client or other person is experienced in legal matters generally and in making decisions of the type involved, and whether the client or other person is independently represented by other counsel in giving the consent.

- [7] Obtaining informed consent will usually require an affirmative response by the client or other person. In general, a lawyer may not assume consent from a client's or other person's silence. However, except where the standard is one of informed written consent, consent may be inferred from the conduct of a client or other person who has reasonably adequate information about the matter. See paragraph (n) for the definition of “writing” and “written”.

Screened

- [8] This definition applies to situations where screening of a personally prohibited lawyer is permitted to remove imputation of a conflict of interest under Rules 1.11 or 1.12.
- [9] The purpose of screening is to assure the affected client, former client, or prospective client that confidential information known by the personally prohibited lawyer is neither disclosed to other law firm lawyers or non-lawyer personnel nor used to the detriment of the person to whom the duty of confidentiality is owed. The personally prohibited lawyer shall acknowledge the obligation not to communicate with any of the other lawyers and non-lawyer personnel in the law firm with respect to the matter. Similarly, other lawyers and non-lawyer personnel in the law firm who are working on the matter promptly shall be informed that the screening is in place and that they may not communicate with the personally prohibited lawyer with respect to the matter. Additional screening measures that are appropriate for the particular matter will depend on the circumstances. To implement, reinforce and remind all affected law firm personnel of the presence of the screening, it may be appropriate for the law firm to undertake such procedures as a written undertaking by the personally prohibited lawyer to avoid any communication with other law firm personnel and any contact with any law firm files or other materials relating to the matter, written notice and instructions to all other law firm personnel forbidding any communication with the personally prohibited lawyer relating to the matter, denial of access by that lawyer to law firm files or other materials relating to the matter, and periodic reminders of the screen to the personally prohibited lawyer and all other law firm personnel.

- [10] In order to be effective, screening measures must be implemented as soon as practical after a lawyer or law firm knows or reasonably should know that there is a need for screening.

Tribunal

- [11] This definition is limited to courts and their equivalent in order to distinguish the special and heightened duties that lawyers owe to courts from the important but more limited duties of honesty and integrity that a lawyer owes when acting as an advocate before a legislative body or administrative agency. Compare Rule 3.3 to Rule 3.9.

Writing and Written

- [12] These Rules utilize California's statutory definition to avoid confusion by California lawyers familiar with it. It is substantially the same as the definitions in the ABA Model Rules and most other jurisdictions.

Rule 1.0.1: Terminology
(Commission's Proposed Rule – Clean Version)

- (a) "Belief" or "believes" means that the person involved actually supposes the fact in question to be true. A person's belief may be inferred from circumstances.
- (b) [Reserved]
- (c) "Firm" or "law firm" means a law partnership; a professional law corporation; a sole proprietorship or an association engaged in the practice of law; or lawyers employed in a legal services organization or in the legal department, division or office of a corporation, of a government organization, or of another organization.
- (d) "Fraud" or "fraudulent" means conduct that is fraudulent under the law of the applicable jurisdiction and has a purpose to deceive.
- (e) "Informed consent" means a person's agreement to a proposed course of conduct after the lawyer has communicated and explained (i) the relevant circumstances and (ii) the actual and reasonably foreseeable material risks of the proposed conduct and, where appropriate, the reasonably available alternatives to the proposed conduct.
- (e-1) "Informed written consent" means that both the communication and consent required by paragraph (e) must be in writing.
- (e-2) "Information protected by Business & Professions Code section 6068(e)" is defined in Rule 1.6, Comments [3] – [6].
- (f) "Knowingly," "known," or "knows" means actual knowledge of the fact in question. A person's knowledge may be inferred from circumstances.
- (g) "Partner" means a member of a partnership, a shareholder in a law firm organized as a professional corporation, or a member of an association authorized to practice law.
- (g-1) "Person" means a natural person or an organization.
- (h) "Reasonable" or "reasonably" when used in relation to conduct by a lawyer means the conduct of a reasonably prudent and competent lawyer.
- (i) "Reasonable belief" or "reasonably believes" when used in reference to a lawyer means that the lawyer believes the matter in question and that the circumstances are such that the belief is reasonable.
- (j) "Reasonably should know" when used in reference to a lawyer means that a lawyer of reasonable prudence and competence would ascertain the matter in question.
- (k) "Screened" means the isolation of a lawyer from any participation in a matter, including the timely imposition of procedures within a law firm that are adequate under the circumstances (i) to protect information that the isolated lawyer is obligated to protect under these Rules or other law; and (ii) to protect against other law firm lawyers and non-lawyer personnel communicating with the lawyer with respect to the matter.

- (l) “Substantial” when used in reference to degree or extent means a material matter of clear and weighty importance.
- (m) “Tribunal” means: (i) a court, an arbitrator, or an administrative law judge acting in an adjudicative capacity and authorized to make a decision that can be binding on the parties involved; or (ii) a special master or other person to whom a court refers one or more issues and whose decision or recommendation can be binding on the parties if approved by the court.
- (n) “Writing” or “written” has the meaning stated in Evidence Code section 250. A “signed” writing includes an electronic sound, symbol, or process attached to or logically associated with a writing and executed, inserted, or adopted by or at the direction of a person with the intent to sign the writing.

COMMENT

Firm or Law Firm

- [1] Whether two or more lawyers constitute a law firm can depend on the specific facts. For example, two practitioners who share office space and occasionally consult or assist each other ordinarily would not be regarded as constituting a law firm. However, if they present themselves to the public in a way that suggests that they are a law firm or conduct themselves as a law firm, they may be regarded as a law firm for purposes of these Rules. The terms of any formal agreement between associated lawyers are relevant in determining whether they are a firm, as is the fact that they have mutual access to information concerning the clients they serve. Furthermore, it is relevant in doubtful cases to consider the underlying purpose of the rule that is involved.

- [2] Whether a lawyer who is denominated as “of counsel” should be deemed a member of a law firm will also depend on the specific facts. The term “of counsel” implies that the lawyer so designated has a relationship with the law firm, other than as a partner or associate, or officer or shareholder, that is close, personal, continuous, and regular. Thus, to the extent the relationship between a law firm and a lawyer is sufficiently “close, personal, regular and continuous,” such that the lawyer is held out to the public as “of counsel” for the law firm, the relationship of the law firm and “of counsel” lawyer will be considered a single firm for purposes of disqualification. See, e.g., People ex rel. Department of Corporations v. Speedee Oil Change Systems, Inc. (1999) 20 Cal.4th 1135 [86 Cal.Rptr.2d 816]. On the other hand, even when a lawyer has associated as “of counsel” with another lawyer and is providing extensive legal services on a matter, they will not necessarily be considered the same law firm for purposes of dividing fees under Rule 1.5.1 where, for example, they both continue to maintain independent law practices with separate identities, separate addresses of record with the State Bar, and separate clients, expenses, and liabilities. See, e.g., Chambers v. Kay (2002) 29 Cal.4th 142 [126 Cal.Rptr.2d 536]. Whether a lawyer should be deemed a member of a law firm when denominated as “special counsel”, or by another term having no commonly understood definition, also will depend on the specific facts.

- [3] Similar questions can also arise with respect to lawyers in legal aid and legal services organizations. Depending upon the structure of the organization, the entire organization or different components of it may constitute a firm or firms for purposes of these Rules.

- [4] This Rule does not authorize any person or entity to engage in the practice of law in this state except as otherwise permitted by law.

Fraud

- [5] When used in these Rules, the terms “fraud” or “fraudulent” refer to conduct that is characterized as such under the law of the applicable jurisdiction and has a purpose to deceive. This does not include merely negligent misrepresentation or negligent failure to apprise another of relevant information. For purposes of these Rules, it is not necessary that anyone has suffered damages or relied on the misrepresentation or failure to inform.

Informed Consent and Informed Written Consent

- [6] Many of the rules require a lawyer to obtain the informed consent of a client or other person (e.g., a former client or, under certain circumstances, a prospective client) before accepting or continuing representation or pursuing a course of conduct. Other rules require a lawyer to obtain informed written consent. Compare, for example, Rules 1.2(c) and 1.6(a) (informed consent) with Rules 1.7, 1.8.1 and 1.9 (informed written consent). The communication necessary to obtain such consent will vary according to the rule involved and the circumstances giving rise to the need to obtain consent. The lawyer must make reasonable efforts to ensure that the client or other person possesses information reasonably adequate to make an informed decision. In any event, this will require communication that includes a disclosure of the facts and circumstances giving rise to the situation, any explanation reasonably necessary to inform the client or other person of the material advantages and disadvantages of the proposed course of conduct, and a discussion of the client’s or other person’s reasonably available options and alternatives. In determining whether the information and explanation provided are reasonably adequate, relevant factors include whether the client or other person is experienced in legal matters generally and in making decisions of the type involved, and whether the client or other person is independently represented by other counsel in giving the consent.

- [7] Obtaining informed consent will usually require an affirmative response by the client or other person. In general, a lawyer may not assume consent from a client’s or other person’s silence. However, except where the standard is one of informed written consent, consent may be inferred from the conduct of a client or other person who has reasonably adequate information about the matter. See paragraph (n) for the definition of “writing” and “written”.

Screened

- [8] This definition applies to situations where screening of a personally prohibited lawyer is permitted to remove imputation of a conflict of interest under Rules 1.11 or 1.12.
- [9] The purpose of screening is to assure the affected client, former client, or prospective client that confidential information known by the personally prohibited lawyer is neither disclosed to other law firm lawyers or non-lawyer personnel nor used to the detriment of the person to whom the duty of confidentiality is owed. The personally prohibited lawyer shall acknowledge the obligation not to communicate with any of the other lawyers and non-lawyer personnel in the law firm with respect to the matter. Similarly, other lawyers and non-lawyer personnel in the law firm who are working on the matter promptly shall be informed that the screening is in place and that they may not communicate with the personally prohibited lawyer with respect to the matter. Additional screening measures that are appropriate for the particular matter will depend on the circumstances. To implement, reinforce and remind all affected law firm personnel of the presence of the screening, it may be appropriate for the law firm to undertake such procedures as a written undertaking by the personally prohibited lawyer to avoid any communication with other law firm personnel and any contact with any law firm files or other materials relating to the matter, written notice and instructions to all other law firm personnel forbidding any communication with the personally prohibited lawyer relating to the matter, denial of access by that lawyer to law firm files or other materials relating to the matter, and periodic reminders of the screen to the personally prohibited lawyer and all other law firm personnel.

- [10] In order to be effective, screening measures must be implemented as soon as practical after a lawyer or law firm knows or reasonably should know that there is a need for screening.

Tribunal

- [11] This definition is limited to courts and their equivalent in order to distinguish the special and heightened duties that lawyers owe to courts from the important but more limited duties of honesty and integrity that a lawyer owes when acting as an advocate before a legislative body or administrative agency. Compare Rule 3.3 to Rule 3.9.

Writing and Written

- [12] These Rules utilize California's statutory definition to avoid confusion by California lawyers familiar with it. It is substantially the same as the definitions in the ABA Model Rules and most other jurisdictions.

Rule 1.0.1 Terminology
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 5
Agree = 2
Disagree = 1
Modify = 2
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
1	Balin, William and Andrew Dilworth	M	No	(m)	There are important administrative decisions that would be outside the scope of the definition, citing Clare v. State Board of Accountancy , 10 Cal. App.4th 294 (1992) [upholding suspension of accountant's license] and arguing that a lawyer should not be permitted to lie in such a proceeding. The Model Rule definition applies to all proceedings that are adjudicative of a party's legal rights or interests regardless of the specific body that is entrusted with carrying out the adjudicative proceeding. The Commission's materials do not articulate any reason why an adjudicative proceeding that is not carried out by a court, arbitrator, administrative law judge or special master, but that nonetheless adjudicates a party's legal rights or interests, should not be included within the definition of "tribunal." We understand certain concerns have been raised about defining the term "tribunal" in a manner that would apply to adjudicative bodies before which both lawyers and non-lawyers appear, thus ostensibly placing lawyers at a disadvantage, since the non-lawyers would not be subject to the same limitations. This does not persuade us that the	See the Commission's Response to the SDCBA comment, and in particular the reference to California's unique disciplinary standard under B&P Code § 6106, which will have the effect of permitting discipline when a lawyer lies to an administrative body without the risks created by an over-inclusive definition of "tribunal". In addition, the Commission notes that the suspension in the Clare case was based on finding by an administrative law judge, which explicitly is within the proposed definition of "tribunal".

¹ A = AGREE with proposed Rule

D = DISAGREE with proposed Rule

M = AGREE ONLY IF MODIFIED

NI = NOT INDICATED

Rule 1.0.1 Terminology
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 5 Agree = 2
Disagree = 1
Modify = 2
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					ABA definition should be so limited. First, the fundamental principles at issue here should not be displaced simply by the fact that a lawyer's opponent may not be limited by the ethical constraints that bind attorneys. Simply because non-lawyers may feel free to act unscrupulously does not mean that lawyers should also be free to do so. Second, if the concern is that lawyers are therefore at a disadvantage when opposing lay people representing themselves, then we should not promulgate any rule at all. regarding candor to a tribunal. Third, we are not convinced that a non-lawyer would get away with dishonesty before a tribunal where the lawyer opposing that person must conform to the rule. The lawyer can still question and challenge the non-lawyer's conduct and attempt to discredit it. The bottom line is that lawyers are held to higher standards than other individuals. These standards apply even to acts that do not strictly constitute the practice of law. (See, e.g., Crawford v. State Bar (1960) 54 Ca1.2d 659) Being a lawyer carries both special privileges and special responsibilities. That an adversary may not be held to the same high standard does not mean that our ethical obligations must therefore be diminished. An attorney must be truthful even when his or her opponent is not.

Rule 1.0.1 Terminology [Sorted by Commenter]							TOTAL = 5 Agree = 2 Disagree = 1 Modify = 2 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
2	Hazard, Geoffrey, Deborah Rhode & Richard Zitrin (law professors group)	m	Yes	(e)	The proposed Commission definition says nothing about "relevant circumstances" and thus narrows the information provided. This can be easily remedied. We suggest the following relatively simple changes to Rule 1.0.1 (e), in the redlined language below: The proposed Commission definition says nothing about "relevant circumstances" and thus narrows the information provided. This can be easily remedied. We suggest the following relatively simple changes to Rule 1.0.1 (e), in the redlined language below: 'Informed consent' means a person's agreement to a proposed course of conduct after the lawyer has communicated and explained adequate information and explanation about the relevant circumstances and the reasonably foreseeable material risks of, and reasonably available alternatives to, the proposed course of conduct The Commenter recommends the use of the Model Rule's expansive definition of "tribunal" so that a lawyer's duties to a court also apply in other adjudicative situations.	The Commission agrees and has revised paragraph (e) along the lines recommended. See response to SDCBA and to Balin and Dilworth.

Rule 1.0.1 Terminology [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 5 Agree = 2 Disagree = 1 Modify = 2 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
3	Los Angeles County Public Defender	A	Yes	1.0.1(n)	Comment [10] of Proposed Rule 1.5 refers to Rule 1.0.1(n) for a definition of “signed,” however, “signed” is not defined in 1.0.1(n) or Evidence Code 250.	The Commission agrees and has added a definition of “signed” to Rule 1.0.1(n).
4	Office of Chief Trial Counsel (“OCTC”)	D	Yes	1.0.1(e)(2)	OCTC is concerned with the definition in Proposed Rule 1.0.1(e)(2). We recognize that this rule was changed in response to various comments. However, we believe the change has not solved the problem. Proposed Rule 1.0.1(e)(2) states that information protected by B&P Code section 6068(e) is defined in Rule 1.6, Comments [3] – [6]. OCTC does not believe the Rules of Professional Conduct can define provisions in the B&P Code. That would be interfering with the Legislature’s authority to impose some regulation on the legal profession. (See Obrien v. Jones .) Further, this definition is confusing and ambiguous. Instead of a specific definition, it refers to several Comments in Rule 1.6, contrary to the purpose of this section, which is to have an unambiguous definition in one location. Moreover, the Comments are not intended to be binding (see Proposed Rule 1.0(c)) and, therefore, it is confusing to use them for a binding definition.	The Commission disagrees and has not made the requested change. The Commission believes that terms can be defined in Comments, as they sometimes are in the current California rules and in the Model Rules, and that doing so has had and will have no impact on the ability to impose discipline. Placing a definition in a Comment merely explains a term in the related Rule, as is true of other Comment explanations. The absence of a definition effectively tells the reader to look in a dictionary, and do so also does not affect the ability to impose discipline. The Commission also does not believe that it has defined a statute as opposed to merely explaining it.
				1.0.1(m)	OCTC remains concerned that Proposed Rule 1.0.1(m) significantly deviates from the ABA rule defining tribunal by eliminating legislative	See the Commission responses to SDCBA and to Balin and Dilworth

Rule 1.0.1 Terminology [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 5 Agree = 2 Disagree = 1 Modify = 2 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comments [1], [3], [4], [5], [11], [12] Comments [6] – [10]	bodies acting in an adjudicative capacity from the definition. Like the ABA, OCTC believes the legislative bodies acting in an adjudicative capacity should be included in the definition of tribunal. Comments [1], [3], [4], [5], [11] and [12] are more appropriate for treatises, law review articles, and ethics opinions. Comment [6] – [10] belong in the rules involving conflicts, not this rule.	The Commission has reexamined each of these Comments and believes that each one serves a useful purpose and should be retained.
5	San Diego County Bar Association Legal Ethics Committee	A	Yes		SDCBA expressed concern with the definition of a “tribunal,” which is limited to adjudicative bodies and excludes legislative or administrative bodies or mediators. SDCBA suggests a broader definition of “tribunal” so that a lawyer’s duty of candor would extend beyond adjudicative bodies.	The Commission believes that an expansive definition of “tribunal” might be appropriate if used only as a reminder of best practices, but it believes that an expansive definition would not function properly as a disciplinary standard. If the Rule 3.3 duty of candor were extended to legislative and administrative bodies, it would intrude on First Amendment requirements. In addition, there are concepts that are problematic outside of the court context. These include, e.g.: (i) the meaning of “legal authority in the controlling jurisdiction” in Rule 3.3(a)(2); and (ii) the application of the ex parte requirements of Rule 3.3(d). Moreover, California uniquely has a statutory duty of honesty under B&P C § 6106 that will supplement Rule 3.3 in egregious situations. The Commission sees no benefit to extending Rule 3.3 to mediation because of California's strict statutory mediation confidentiality under Evid. C. § 1115, et seq. The Commission believes it is important to retain the distinction between the special responsibilities that lawyers have under Rule 3.3 in courts of law and in an arbitration that is equivalent to a court of law, and the different but still important duties that lawyers have under Rule 3.9.

Rule 1.0.1 Terminology [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 5 Agree = 2 Disagree = 1 Modify = 2 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response

Rule 1.0: Terminology

STATE VARIATIONS

(The following is an excerpt from Regulation of Lawyers: Statutes and Standards (2010 Ed.)
by Steven Gillers, Roy D. Simon and Andrew M. Perlman.)

Alaska: In the rules effective April 15, 2009, Rule 9.1 (Alaska's terminology rule) adds an unusually detailed definition of "substantially related matters" to help guide lawyers in their assessment of conflicts of interest. The definition draws, in part, on Comment 3 to Model Rule 1.9.

Connecticut adds: "'Client' or 'person' as used in these Rules includes an authorized representative unless otherwise stated."

District of Columbia defines "matter" as "any litigation, administrative proceeding, lobbying activity, application, claim, investigation, arrest, charge or accusation, the drafting of a contract, a negotiation, estate or family relationship practice issue, or any other representation, except as expressly limited in a particular Rule."

Massachusetts: Rule 9.1 retains the 1983 version of the ABA Terminology and adds a definition of "Qualified legal assistance organization." Amended Comment 3 to Rule 9.1 provides as follows: "The final category of qualified legal assistance organization requires that the organization 'receives no profit from the rendition of legal services.' That condition refers to the entire legal services operation of the organization; it does not prohibit the receipt of a court-awarded fee that would result in a 'profit' from that particular lawsuit."

New York: In the rules effective April 1, 2009, New York adds definitions for the terms "advertisement," "computer-accessed communication," "differing interests," "domestic relations matters," "matter," "person," "reasonable lawyers," and "sexual relations." New York also includes a more detailed definition of "fraud," providing as follows:

"Fraud" or "fraudulent" denotes conduct that is fraudulent under the substantive or procedural law of the applicable jurisdiction or has a purpose to deceive, provided that it does not include conduct that, although characterized as fraudulent by statute or administrative rule, lacks an element of scienter, deceit, intent to mislead, or knowing failure to correct misrepresentations that can be reasonably expected to induce detrimental reliance by another.

In addition, the definition of "confirmed in writing" includes "a statement by the person made on the record of any proceeding before a tribunal."

Ohio: Rule 1.0 defines "fraud" and "fraudulent" as denoting "conduct that has an intent to deceive and is either of the following:"

(1) an actual or implied misrepresentation of a material fact that is made either with knowledge of its falsity or with such utter disregard and recklessness about its falsity that knowledge may be inferred; (2) a knowing concealment of a material fact where there is a duty to disclose the material fact.

Oregon adds or alters the meaning of a number of phrases, including “electronic communication,” “informed consent,” “law firm,” “knowingly,” and “matter.”

Texas generally retains the 1983 version of the ABA Terminology, but modifies some of the 1983 definitions and adds others that are neither in the 1983 nor current versions of the ABA Terminology. Specifically, Texas includes the following definitions:

“Adjudicatory Official” denotes a person who serves on a Tribunal.

“Adjudicatory Proceeding” denotes the consideration of a matter by a Tribunal. “Competent” or “Competence” denotes possession or the ability to timely acquire the legal knowledge, skill, and training reasonably necessary for the representation of the client.

“Firm” or “Law firm” denotes a lawyer or lawyers in a private firm; or a lawyer or lawyers employed in the legal department of a corporation, legal services organization, or other organization, or in a unit of government.

“Fitness” denotes those qualities of physical, mental and psychological health that enable a person to discharge a lawyer’s responsibilities to clients in conformity with the Texas Disciplinary Rules of Professional Conduct. Normally a lack of fitness is indicated most clearly by a persistent inability to discharge, or unreliability in carrying out, significant obligations.

“Should know” when used in reference to a lawyer denotes that a reasonable lawyer under the same or similar circumstances would know the matter in question.

“Substantial” when used in reference to degree or extent denotes a matter of meaningful significance or involvement.

“Tribunal” denotes any governmental body or official or any other person engaged in a process of resolving a particular dispute or controversy. “Tribunal” includes such institutions as courts and administrative agencies when engaging in adjudicatory or licensing activities as defined by applicable law or rules of practice or procedure, as well as judges, magistrates, special masters, referees, arbitrators, mediators, hearing officers and comparable persons empowered to resolve or to recommend a resolution of a particular matter; but it does not include jurors, prospective jurors, legislative bodies or their committees, members or staffs, nor does it include other governmental bodies when acting in a legislative or rule-making capacity.

Virginia retains the 1983 version of the Terminology section and adds: “‘Should’ when used in reference to a lawyer’s action denotes an aspirational rather than a mandatory standard.”

Wisconsin: Wisconsin adds or alters the meaning of a number of phrases, including “consultation,” “firm,” “misrepresentation,” and “prosecutor.”

Proposed Rule 1.1 [RPC 3-110] Competence

(XDraft 8, 6/28/10)

Summary: Proposed Rule 1.1 is a departure from the ABA Model Rule's approach to regulating competence. The Commission decided to retain California's disciplinary standard from current Rule 3-110. The current rule offers more public protection because the focus is on applying a lawyer's legal knowledge, skill, and thoroughness as opposed to merely possessing those components. Also, the Model Rule could be interpreted to impose discipline for a single negligent act, contrary to existing California law.

Comparison with ABA Counterpart

Rule

Comment

- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
- ☒ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
- ☐ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
- ☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
- ☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
- ☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
- ☒ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
- ☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

Primary Factors Considered

- ☒ Existing California Law

Rule

RPC 3-110

Statute

Case law

Lewis v. State Bar (1981) 23 Cal.3d 683

- ☐ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

- ☐ Other Primary Factor(s)

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(14 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 14 due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Less than Six Members Opposing Adoption ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 7
Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 4
Abstain 0

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by Consensus ☐

Minority/Dissenting Position Included on Model Rule Comparison Chart ☒ Yes ☐ No

Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

☒ No Known Stakeholders

☐ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

☐ Very Controversial – Explanation:

☒ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

See Introduction and Public Comment Chart for the statement of the minority position and members of the public.

☐ Not Controversial

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.1* Competence

June 2010

(Proposed rule following June 15, 2010 public comment deadline.)

INTRODUCTION:

Proposed Rule 1.1 is a departure from the ABA Model Rule's approach to regulating competence. The Commission decided to retain the California disciplinary standard in current rule 3-110 and not to adopt ABA Model Rule 1.1 for two reasons:

The Model Rule by its terms permits the professional discipline of a lawyer for an isolated act of simple negligence. The Commission believes the correct policy is as stated the Supreme Court in Lewis v. State Bar (1981) 23 Cal.3d 683, where the Court reaffirmed that a lawyer's single act of ordinary negligence does not suggest that the lawyer is unfit to practice law, and that the discipline system should not be burdened with conduct that is best addressed as a civil issue: "This court has long recognized the problems inherent in using disciplinary proceedings to punish attorneys for negligence."

In addition, states that have adopted the substance of Model Rule 1.1 ordinarily do not impose discipline for a single act of negligence. Instead, the practice in most jurisdictions is closer to California's, resulting in an application of the rule to acts of gross or repeated negligence but not individual acts of simple negligence. That fact is hidden in Model Rule 1.1 and makes the rule misleading to lawyers and the public. Accordingly, the Commission determined that rather than hide that fact in a Comment or in disciplinary rulings that often remain confidential, the standard of the existing California rule should be retained.

* Proposed Rule 1.1, XDraft 8 (6/28/10).

INTRODUCTION (Continued):

Minority. A minority of the Commission disagrees with the Commission's decision to continue the current California approach to competence. The minority points out that the core provision of Model Rule 1.1 requiring a lawyer to provide competent legal services is the rule in 47 states and sets an appropriate public protection standard in providing for an unqualified duty of lawyer competence. Only California tolerates lawyer incompetence if it is not intentional, repeated, or reckless. The minority also notes that some jurisdictions include a comment that discipline cannot be imposed for single act of negligence and that the Commission's proposed comment [6] makes this point by stating that the rule is not intended to apply to "a single act of negligent conduct or a single mistake in a particular matter." The minority argues that by including proposed comment [6], the Commission majority should not be hesitant to adopt the language of Model Rule 1.1. The minority also argues that the current rule suggests to the California public that the legal profession in California tolerates incompetent legal services that do not involve intentional, reckless, or repeated acts. The minority also does not believe resort to a legal malpractice lawsuit is the appropriate default for what should be disciplinable incompetence. Lastly, the minority emphasizes the Commission's charge to foster a national standard and observes that lawyer competence is a foundational standard of professional responsibility that should not change when a lawyer crosses the California border.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.1 Competence	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.1 Competence	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
A lawyer shall provide competent representation to a client. Competent representation requires the legal knowledge, skill, thoroughness and preparation reasonably necessary for the representation	~~A lawyer shall provide competent representation to a client. Competent representation requires the legal knowledge, skill, thoroughness and preparation reasonably necessary for the representation~~ (a) A lawyer shall not intentionally, recklessly, or repeatedly fail to perform legal services with competence.	The proposed language of paragraph (a) is taken directly from current rule 3-110. Please see the Introduction for a discussion of the Commission's recommendation to retain current rule 3-110's approach and the position of a minority of the Commission to adopt the Model Rule.
	(b) For purposes of this Rule, "competence" in any legal service shall mean to apply the 1) diligence, 2) learning and skill, and 3) mental, emotional, and physical ability reasonably necessary for the performance of such service.	This language is taken verbatim from current rule 3-110(B) and is similar to the language of Model Rule 1.1, but adds the further public protections of requiring mental, emotional, and physical ability reasonably necessary for the performance of such service. The experience of members of the Commission, many of whom have represented other lawyers in legal malpractice and disciplinary actions in California, demonstrates that such further components are necessary to protect the public from incompetence resulting from alcohol and substance abuse, mental illness and physical infirmities. The language is also similar to the explanation of competence in Comment [1] of the proposed Rule.

* Proposed Rule 1.1, XDraft 8 (6/28/10). Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.1 Competence	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.1 Competence	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	(c) If a lawyer does not have sufficient learning and skill when the legal services are undertaken, the lawyer may nonetheless provide competent representation by 1) associating with or, where appropriate, professionally consulting another lawyer whom the lawyer reasonably believes to be competent, 2) acquiring sufficient learning and skill before performance is required, or 3) referring the matter to another lawyer whom the lawyer reasonably believes to be competent.	Most of the language in paragraph (c) is taken directly from current rule 3-110(C), with some minor changes. As further client protection, the Commission has added the third alternative of referral to a competent lawyer. This language is similar to language in Comment [2] of Model Rule 1.1.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.1 Competence Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.1 Competence Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Legal Knowledge and Skill [1] In determining whether a lawyer employs the requisite knowledge and skill in a particular matter, relevant factors include the relative complexity and specialized nature of the matter, the lawyer's general experience, the lawyer's training and experience in the field in question, the preparation and study the lawyer is able to give the matter and whether it is feasible to refer the matter to, or associate or consult with, a lawyer of established competence in the field in question. In many instances, the required proficiency is that of a general practitioner. Expertise in a particular field of law may be required in some circumstances.	~~Legal Knowledge and Skill~~ ~~[1] In determining whether a lawyer employs the requisite knowledge and skill in a particular matter, relevant factors include the relative complexity and specialized nature of the matter, the lawyer's general experience, the lawyer's training and experience in the field in question, the preparation and study the lawyer is able to give the matter and whether it is feasible to refer the matter to, or associate or consult with, a lawyer of established competence in the field in question. In many instances, the required proficiency is that of a general practitioner. Expertise in a particular field of law may be required in some circumstances.~~ [1] It is the duty of every lawyer to provide competent legal services to the client.	The Commission's proposed Comment [1] deviates from Model Rule 1.1 Comment [1] for two reasons. First, the Model Rule comment addresses the standard used in the Model Rule that focuses on a lawyer's possession of legal knowledge and skill. Thus, the Model Rule's emphasis is substantively different from the Commission's proposed Rule that focuses on a lawyer's use and application of that knowledge and skill in actually providing competent performance of legal services. See Introduction. Second, Model Rule 1.1 Comment [1] unnecessarily lengthens the rule by addressing generalized points that are more appropriate in a treatise than in a rule comment.

* Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.1 Competence Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.1 Competence Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[2] A lawyer need not necessarily have special training or prior experience to handle legal problems of a type with which the lawyer is unfamiliar. A newly admitted lawyer can be as competent as a practitioner with long experience. Some important legal skills, such as the analysis of precedent, the evaluation of evidence and legal drafting, are required in all legal problems. Perhaps the most fundamental legal skill consists of determining what kind of legal problems a situation may involve, a skill that necessarily transcends any particular specialized knowledge. A lawyer can provide adequate representation in a wholly novel field through necessary study. Competent representation can also be provided through the association of a lawyer of established competence in the field in question.	~~[2] A lawyer need not necessarily have special training or prior experience to handle legal problems of a type with which the lawyer is unfamiliar. A newly admitted lawyer can be as competent as a practitioner with long experience. Some important legal skills, such as the analysis of precedent, the evaluation of evidence and legal drafting, are required in all legal problems. Perhaps the most fundamental legal skill consists of determining what kind of legal problems a situation may involve, a skill that necessarily transcends any particular specialized knowledge. A lawyer can provide adequate representation in a wholly novel field through necessary study. Competent representation can also be provided through the association of a lawyer of established competence in the field in question.~~	The substance of Model Rule 1.1, cmt. [2], is already contained in current rule 3-311(C) and the Commission recommends retaining the concept in the black letter of the proposed Rule. Paragraph (c) of proposed Rule 1.1 is a slightly revised version of current rule 3-110(C) and provides: (c) If a lawyer does not have sufficient learning and skill when the legal services are undertaken, the lawyer may nonetheless provide competent representation by 1) associating with or, where appropriate, professionally consulting another lawyer whom the lawyer reasonably believes to be competent, 2) acquiring sufficient learning and skill before performance is required, or 3) referring the matter to another lawyer whom the lawyer reasonably believes to be competent. The Commission believes the above language effectively conveys the relevant guidance and that the inclusion of Model Rule 1.1, cmt. [2] would unnecessarily lengthen the proposed Rule without any significant additional benefit.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.1 Competence Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.1 Competence Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
NOTE: Below is comment [1] of Model Rule 1.3 Diligence. [1] A lawyer should pursue a matter on behalf of a client despite opposition, obstruction or personal inconvenience to the lawyer, and take whatever lawful and ethical measures are required to vindicate a client's cause or endeavor. A lawyer must also act with commitment and dedication to the interests of the client and with zeal in advocacy upon the client's behalf. A lawyer is not bound, however, to press for every advantage that might be realized for a client. For example, a lawyer may have authority to exercise professional discretion in determining the means by which a matter should be pursued. See Rule 1.2. The lawyer's duty to act with reasonable diligence does not require the use of offensive tactics or preclude the treating of all persons involved in the legal process with courtesy and respect.	NOTE: The Comparison for proposed comment [2] is to comment [1] of Model Rule 1.3 Diligence. [2] Competence under paragraph (b) includes the obligation to act with reasonable diligence on behalf of a client. A lawyer should pursue This includes pursuing a matter on behalf of a client despite opposition, obstruction or personal inconvenience to the lawyer, and may take whatever by taking lawful and ethical measures required to vindicate a advance the client's cause or endeavor objectives. A lawyer must also act with commitment and dedication to the interests of the client and with zeal in advocacy on the client's behalf. A lawyer is not bound, however, to press for every advantage that might be realized for a client. For example, a lawyer may ~~have authority to~~ exercise professional discretion in determining the means by which a matter should be pursued. See Rules [1.2] and 1.4. The lawyer's duty to act with reasonable diligence does not require the use of offensive tactics or preclude the treating of all persons involved in the legal process with courtesy and respect.	This Comment includes language relating to diligence, a subject that is found in Model Rule 1.3 that the Commission has voted not to adopt since its subject is already contained in current rule 3-110 as an important component of competence. See rule 3-110(B). The Commission therefore recommends its retention in proposed Rule 1.1(b) instead of creating a separate rule on diligence. Finally, because the Commission is including the concept of diligence in its proposed Rule 1.1, the relevant language from Comment [1] of Model Rule 1.3, which the Commission believes provides valuable guidance, is adapted and added here.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.1 Competence Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.1 Competence Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	[3] It is a violation of this Rule if a lawyer accepts employment or continues representation in a matter as to which the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the lawyer does not have, or will not acquire before performance is required, sufficient time, resources, and ability to perform the legal services with competence. It is also a violation of this Rule if a lawyer repeatedly accepts employment or continues representation in a matter when the lawyer does not have, or will not acquire before performance is required, sufficient time, resources, and ability to perform the legal services with competence.	This Comment makes it clear that a lawyer who accepts employment knowing he or she is not competent for the matter, and who does not expect to become competent is subject to discipline. The substance of this comment is not found in the comments to Model Rule 1.1. It adds further public protection by putting the lawyer on notice of the standard for accepting or continuing a matter regarding competence.
[3] In an emergency a lawyer may give advice or assistance in a matter in which the lawyer does not have the skill ordinarily required where referral to or consultation or association with another lawyer would be impractical. Even in an emergency, however, assistance should be limited to that reasonably necessary in the circumstances, for ill-considered action under emergency conditions can jeopardize the client's interest.	~~[354]~~ In an emergency a lawyer may give advice or assistance in a matter in which the lawyer does not have the skill ordinarily required where referral to or consultation or association with another lawyer would be impractical. Even in an emergency, however, assistance should be limited to that reasonably necessary in the circumstances, ~~for ill-considered action under emergency conditions can jeopardize the client's interest.~~	This Comment is substantially similar to Comment [3] of the ABA rule. The last clause was deleted as surplusage.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.1 Competence Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.1 Competence Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[4] A lawyer may accept representation where the requisite level of competence can be achieved by reasonable preparation. This applies as well to a lawyer who is appointed as counsel for an unrepresented person. See also Rule 6.2.	~~[4]~~[5] A lawyer may accept representation where the requisite level of competence can be achieved by reasonable preparation. This provision applies ~~as well to~~ lawyers generally, including a lawyer who is appointed as counsel for an unrepresented person. [See also Rule 6.2]	Comment [5] of the proposed Rule is a slight variation of Comment [4] to Model Rule 1.1. The slight change is to clarify that the concept of acquiring competence through reasonable preparation applies generally to all lawyers and not just lawyers appointed as counsel for a unrepresented person. The reference to Rule 6.2 has been placed in brackets pending the Commission's final recommendation concerning that Rule.
Thoroughness and Preparation [5] Competent handling of a particular matter includes inquiry into and analysis of the factual and legal elements of the problem, and use of methods and procedures meeting the standards of competent practitioners. It also includes adequate preparation. The required attention and preparation are determined in part by what is at stake; major litigation and complex transactions ordinarily require more extensive treatment than matters of lesser complexity and consequence. An agreement between the lawyer and the client regarding the scope of the representation may limit the matters for which the lawyer is responsible. See Rule 1.2(c).	~~Thoroughness and Preparation~~ ~~[5] Competent handling of a particular matter includes inquiry into and analysis of the factual and legal elements of the problem, and use of methods and procedures meeting the standards of competent practitioners. It also includes adequate preparation. The required attention and preparation are determined in part by what is at stake; major litigation and complex transactions ordinarily require more extensive treatment than matters of lesser complexity and consequence. An agreement between the lawyer and the client regarding the scope of the representation may limit the matters for which the lawyer is responsible. See Rule 1.2(c).~~	The Commission did not include this comment for the same reasons that the Commission did not include Model Rule 1.1, cmt. [1]. See Explanation of Changes for Comment [1], above.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.1 Competence Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.1 Competence Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Maintaining Competence [6] To maintain the requisite knowledge and skill, a lawyer should keep abreast of changes in the law and its practice, engage in continuing study and education and comply with all continuing legal education requirements to which the lawyer is subject.	Maintaining Competence ~~[6] To maintain the requisite knowledge and skill, a lawyer should keep abreast of changes in the law and its practice, engage in continuing study and education and comply with all continuing legal education requirements to which the lawyer is subject.~~	The Commission did not include Model Rule, cmt. [6], because California requires all of its actively-licensed lawyers to comply with Mandatory Continuing Legal Education requirements. See also Explanation of Changes for Comment [1], above.
	[6] This Rule does not apply to a single act of negligent conduct or a single mistake in a particular matter.	This Comment succinctly reaffirms current California law, that is, current Rule 3-110 is not intended to subject a lawyer to discipline for a single negligent act. See Introduction, at ¶. 2. Conduct constituting gross negligence would be prohibited either as “reckless” or “intentional” acts under this Rule or as acts constituting moral turpitude under Rule 8.4(b) or Business and Professions Code §6106.
	[7] This Rule addresses only a lawyer's responsibility for his or her own professional competence. See Rules 5.1(b) and 5.3 (b) with respect to a lawyer's disciplinary responsibility for supervising subordinate lawyers and nonlawyers.	This Comment is designed to point lawyers to related rules. The responsibilities of supervising lawyers are covered in current California rule 3-110, Discussion ¶. 1. Given the Commission's contemporaneous recommendation that California adopt Model Rules 5.1 to 5.3, which collectively address the respective responsibilities of supervising lawyers and subordinate lawyers and employees, the duty to supervise is more appropriately discussed in those Rules. Thus, it is necessary to cross-reference specific new rules on the responsibilities of supervisory lawyers.

Rule 1.1 Competence

(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to the Public Comment Draft)

- (a) A lawyer shall not intentionally, recklessly, or repeatedly fail to perform legal services with competence
- (b) For purposes of this Rule, “competence” in any legal service shall mean to apply the 1) diligence, 2) learning and skill, and 3) mental, emotional, and physical ability reasonably necessary for the performance of such service.
- (c) If a lawyer does not have sufficient learning and skill when the legal services are undertaken, the lawyer may nonetheless provide competent representation by 1) associating with or, where appropriate, professionally consulting another lawyer whom the lawyer reasonably believes to be competent, 2) acquiring sufficient learning and skill before performance is required, or 3) referring the matter to another lawyer whom the lawyer reasonably believes to be competent.

COMMENT

- [1] It is the duty of every lawyer to provide competent legal services to the client.
- [2] Competence under paragraph (b) includes the obligation to act with reasonable diligence on behalf of a client. This includes pursuing a matter on behalf of a client by taking lawful and ethical measures required to advance the client’s cause or objectives. A lawyer must also act with commitment and dedication to the interests of the client and with zeal in advocacy on the client’s behalf. A lawyer is not bound, however, to press for every advantage that might be realized for a client. For example, a lawyer may exercise professional discretion in determining the means by which a matter should be pursued. See Rules 1.2 and 1.4. The lawyer’s duty to act with reasonable diligence does not require the use of offensive tactics or preclude the treating of all persons involved in the legal process with courtesy and respect.

- [3] It is a violation of this Rule if a lawyer accepts employment or continues representation in a matter as to which the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the lawyer does not have, or will not acquire before performance is required, sufficient time, resources, and ability to perform the legal services with competence. It is also a violation of this Rule if a lawyer repeatedly accepts employment or continues representation in a matter when the lawyer does not have, or will not acquire before performance is required, sufficient time, resources, and ability to perform the legal services with competence.
- [4] In an emergency a lawyer may give advice or assistance in a matter in which the lawyer does not have the skill ordinarily required where referral to or consultation or association with another lawyer would be impractical. Even in an emergency, however, assistance should be limited to that reasonably necessary in the circumstances.
- [5] A lawyer may accept representation where the requisite level of competence can be achieved by reasonable preparation. This provision applies to lawyers generally, including a lawyer who is appointed as counsel for an unrepresented person. See also Rule 6.2
- [6] This Rule ~~does not is not intended to~~ apply to a single act of negligent conduct or a single mistake in a particular matter.

- [7] This Rule addresses only a lawyer's responsibility for his or her own professional competence. See Rules 5.1(b) and 5.3(b) with respect to a lawyer's disciplinary responsibility for supervising subordinate lawyers and nonlawyers.

Rule ~~3-110~~ Failing to Act Competently 1.1 Competence

(Comparison of the Current Proposed Rule to Current California Rule)

~~(A)~~ (a) A ~~member~~ lawyer shall not intentionally, recklessly, or repeatedly fail to perform legal services with competence.

~~(B)~~ (b) For purposes of this ~~rule~~ Rule, "competence" in any legal service shall mean to apply the 1) diligence, 2) learning and skill, and 3) mental, emotional, and physical ability reasonably necessary for the performance of such service.

~~(C)~~ (c) If a ~~member~~ lawyer does not have sufficient learning and skill when the legal ~~service is~~ services are undertaken, the ~~member~~ lawyer may nonetheless ~~perform such services competently~~ provide competent representation by 1) associating with or, where appropriate, professionally consulting another lawyer whom the lawyer reasonably ~~believed~~ believes to be competent, ~~or~~ 2) ~~by~~ acquiring sufficient learning and skill before performance is required, ~~or~~ 3) ~~referring the matter to another lawyer whom the lawyer reasonably believes to be competent.~~

Discussion: COMMENT

~~The duties set forth in rule 3-110 include the duty to supervise the work of subordinate attorney and non-attorney employees or agents. (See, e.g., Waysman v. State Bar (1986) 41 Cal.3d 452; Trousil v. State Bar (1985) 38 Cal.3d 337, 342 [211 Cal.Rptr. 525]; Palomo v. State Bar (1984) 36 Cal.3d 785 [205 Cal.Rptr. 834]; Crane v. State Bar (1981) 30 Cal.3d 117, 122; Black v. State Bar (1972) 7 Cal.3d 676, 692 [103 Cal.Rptr. 288; 499 P.2d 968]; Vaughn v. State Bar (1972) 6 Cal.3d 847, 857-858 [100 Cal.Rptr. 713; 494 P.2d 1257]; Moore v. State Bar (1964) 62 Cal.2d 74, 81 [41 Cal.Rptr. 161; 396 P.2d 577].)~~

[1] It is the duty of every lawyer to provide competent legal services to the client.

[2] Competence under paragraph (b) includes the obligation to act with reasonable diligence on behalf of a client. This includes pursuing a matter on behalf of a client by taking lawful and ethical measures required to advance the client's cause or objectives. A lawyer must also act with commitment and dedication to the interests of the client and with zeal in advocacy on the client's behalf. A lawyer is not bound, however, to press for every advantage that might be realized for a client. For example, a lawyer may exercise professional discretion in determining the means by which a matter should be pursued. See Rules [1.2] and 1.4. The lawyer's duty to act with reasonable diligence does not require the use of offensive tactics or preclude the treating of all persons involved in the legal process with courtesy and respect.

[3] It is a violation of this Rule if a lawyer accepts employment or continues representation in a matter as to which the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the lawyer does not have, or will not acquire before performance is required, sufficient time, resources, and ability to perform the legal services with competence. It is also a violation of this Rule if a lawyer repeatedly accepts employment or continues representation in a matter when the lawyer does not have, or will not acquire before performance is required, sufficient time, resources, and ability to perform the legal services with competence.

[4] In an emergency a lawyer may give advice or assistance in a matter in which the lawyer does not have the skill ordinarily required where referral to or consultation or association with another lawyer would be impractical. Even in an emergency, however, assistance should be limited to that reasonably necessary in the circumstances. ~~(Amended by order of Supreme Court, operative September 14, 1992.)~~

- [5] A lawyer may accept representation where the requisite level of competence can be achieved by reasonable preparation. This provision applies to lawyers generally, including a lawyer who is appointed as counsel for an unrepresented person. [See also Rule 6.2]
- [6] This Rule is not intended to apply to a single act of negligent conduct or a single mistake in a particular matter.
- [7] This Rule addresses only a lawyer's responsibility for his or her own professional competence. See Rules 5.1(b) and 5.3 (b) with respect to a lawyer's disciplinary responsibility for supervising subordinate lawyers and nonlawyers.

Rule 1.1 Competence
(Commission's Proposed Rule – Clean Version)

- (a) A lawyer shall not intentionally, recklessly, or repeatedly fail to perform legal services with competence
- (b) For purposes of this Rule, "competence" in any legal service shall mean to apply the 1) diligence, 2) learning and skill, and 3) mental, emotional, and physical ability reasonably necessary for the performance of such service.
- (c) If a lawyer does not have sufficient learning and skill when the legal services are undertaken, the lawyer may nonetheless provide competent representation by 1) associating with or, where appropriate, professionally consulting another lawyer whom the lawyer reasonably believes to be competent, 2) acquiring sufficient learning and skill before performance is required, or 3) referring the matter to another lawyer whom the lawyer reasonably believes to be competent.

COMMENT

- [1] It is the duty of every lawyer to provide competent legal services to the client.
- [2] Competence under paragraph (b) includes the obligation to act with reasonable diligence on behalf of a client. This includes pursuing a matter on behalf of a client by taking lawful and ethical measures required to advance the client's cause or objectives. A lawyer must also act with commitment and dedication to the interests of the client and with zeal in advocacy on the client's behalf. A lawyer is not bound, however, to press for every advantage that might be realized for a client. For example, a lawyer may exercise professional discretion in determining the means by which a matter should be pursued. See Rules 1.2 and 1.4. The lawyer's duty to act with reasonable diligence does not require the use of offensive tactics or preclude the treating of all persons involved in the legal process with courtesy and respect.

- [3] It is a violation of this Rule if a lawyer accepts employment or continues representation in a matter as to which the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the lawyer does not have, or will not acquire before performance is required, sufficient time, resources, and ability to perform the legal services with competence. It is also a violation of this Rule if a lawyer repeatedly accepts employment or continues representation in a matter when the lawyer does not have, or will not acquire before performance is required, sufficient time, resources, and ability to perform the legal services with competence.
- [4] In an emergency a lawyer may give advice or assistance in a matter in which the lawyer does not have the skill ordinarily required where referral to or consultation or association with another lawyer would be impractical. Even in an emergency, however, assistance should be limited to that reasonably necessary in the circumstances.
- [5] A lawyer may accept representation where the requisite level of competence can be achieved by reasonable preparation. This provision applies to lawyers generally, including a lawyer who is appointed as counsel for an unrepresented person. See also Rule 6.2
- [6] This Rule does not apply to a single act of negligent conduct or a single mistake in a particular matter.

- [7] This Rule addresses only a lawyer's responsibility for his or her own professional competence. See Rules 5.1(b) and 5.3(b) with respect to a lawyer's disciplinary responsibility for supervising subordinate lawyers and nonlawyers.

Rule 1.1 Competence.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 7_ Agree = 2_
Disagree = 3_
Modify = 2_
NI = __

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
1	San Diego County Bar Association	A	Yes		Majority = support as drafted. Dissent = paragraph (a) should be deleted; and paragraph (b) should be modified to include the concept of "loyalty."	Majority – no action needed. Minority– Commission disagreed with the dissenting views and did not make the requested revisions because the changes would depart from the Commission's proposed affirmation of California's longstanding approach to regulating competence (see the Model Rule comparison chart).
2	William Balin & Andrew Dilworth	D	No		Competence is one of the fundamental duties owed by a lawyer to client and is integral to preserving public confidence and trust in the administration of justice. The proposed rule, as drafted, tends to undermine this confidence. Whereas the ABA Model Rule articulates an affirmative duty of competence in the handling of all legal matters, the proposed rule speaks only to a prohibition against a "subset" of incompetent conduct. The directive of the rule is not an affirmative obligation to act competently in all matters but rather a prohibition against acting incompetently if the incompetence is intentional, reckless or repeated.	The Commission disagrees with this assessment; it proposes to reaffirm California's longstanding approach to the regulation of competence. The Commission believes that the Model Rule formulation would be misleading to clients to the extent that it would suggest that discipline is available for a single negligent act. California policy is clear in providing that a single act of incompetence should not be the subject of discipline. See In the Matter of Torres (Rev. Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 138, 149 where the State Bar Court states: "We have repeatedly held that negligent legal representation, even that amounting to legal malpractice, does not establish a

¹ A = AGREE with proposed Rule

D = DISAGREE with proposed Rule

M = AGREE ONLY IF MODIFIED

NI = NOT INDICATED

Rule 1.1 Competence.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 7 Agree = 2
Disagree = 3
Modify = 2
NI =

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comment [1]	Comment [1] states without qualification" "[i]t is the duty of every lawyer to provide competent legal services to the client." If this is the position of the RRC, it is unclear why this affirmative duty is not stated in the rule. At a minimum, putting the general duty in the Comment, and having the rule speak to only a subset of such conduct, is confusing. We suggest that the substance of the rule should set forth the affirmative obligation of the attorney, and if there are exceptions or nuances to be provided with respect to the application of the rule they should be in the Comments.	rule 3-110(A) violation." See also In the Matter of Riley (Rev. Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 91, 113 and cases cited therein. Comment [1] sets out the general rule that lawyers should provide competent legal services. The Commission does not agree that this is confusing.
				Comment [6]	The dichotomy between the language of the rule and Comment [1] is heightened by the language of Comment [6] which provides: "[t]his rule is not intended to apply to a single act of negligent conduct or a single mistake in a particular matter." This is problematic for several reasons. First, the rules are rules of	See comments above. The Commission disagrees. The proposed rule is substantially the approach of the current rule and its predecessors. It reaffirms California's longstanding approach to regulation of competence which distinguishes a single act of negligence from misconduct warranting discipline. The Commission is informed that conduct constituting gross

TOTAL = 7 Agree = 2
Disagree = 3
Modify = 2
NI =

Rule 1.1 Competence.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					discipline, not a basis for civil liability. Linking the application of the rule to the civil concept of "negligence" is unnecessary and likely to create confusion. Second, the substance of the rule suggests that a single act of negligent conduct that is "intentional" or "reckless" can constitute a violation of the rule. The Comment's generalized statement that the rule is "not intended to apply to a single act of negligent conduct" is at odds with this language. Third, the language of the Comment does not articulate the full scope of conduct that could fall within the rule and is likely to create confusion. We appreciate the RRC's thought behind the proposed rule and the desire to reconcile the rule with CA Supreme Court's holding in Lewis v. State Bar . But, we suggest that the rule and its comments do not fully reflect the body of law surrounding the issues raised in Lewis , and may not provide the guidance to practitioners intended by the RRC. Many of the concerns could be resolved by adopting an affirmative rule on competence that mirrors ABA Model Rule 1.1, and leaves out Comment [6] which furthers the RRC's charge to try and heighten uniformity with the ABA Model Rules. Alternatively, if Comment [6] remains, we suggest modifying the Comment to acknowledge that, while a single act of	negligence would be prohibited either as "reckless" or "intentional" acts under this Rule or as acts constituting moral turpitude under Rule 8.4(b) or Business and Professions Code §6106. Accordingly, California's approach to regulating competence affords sound public protection.

TOTAL = 7 Agree = 2
 Disagree = 3
 Modify = 2
 NI =

Rule 1.1 Competence.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					"ordinary negligence" or a single mistake in a particular mater is not "generally" intended to constitute a violation of the rule, such conduct could violate the rule if it is intentional, reckless, repeated or rises to the level of gross negligence.
3	Bradley Paulson	D	No		Commenter, in general, is concerned with attorney conduct in regard to soliciting clients in the area of Homeowner's Notice of Claim of Violation of Functionality Standards, per Civil Code section 910 and Senate Bill 800. Soliciting Attorney Groups repeatedly and knowingly fail to follow the Civil Code section 910 and other areas as outlined in this public comment. They are reckless in their actions, since they have not been disciplined and only intend on driving up the costs for builders to settle, in lieu of, going to court. Some mediators and arbitrators do not take into account the attorneys willful failure to follow the Civil Code and Legal Ethics. The State Bar is not involved.	These comments are concerned with issues of enforcement of the rules that is a subject beyond the purview of the Commission.

TOTAL = 7 Agree = 2
Disagree = 3
Modify = 2
NI =

Rule 1.1 Competence.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
4	CA State Bar Law Practice Management & Technology Section (LPMT)	M	Yes	(b)	LPMT believes that the definition of "competence" in Proposed Rule 1.1(b) should expressly recognize that differences in legal resources, skills and expectations may exist between different communities. LPMT recommends that the RRC revise ¶(b)(1) to clarify that "competence" is to be assessed by reference to the particular locality in which a lawyer is practicing by adding the following language to the of the single sentence of this subparagraph: "...in the locality in which the legal services are provided."	The Commission disagrees with the proposed approach. The rule applies to all lawyers in California. If there are differences in the level of competence in different localities in California as suggested by these comments, the Commission has never been presented evidence of such differences.
5	Zitrin, Richard (law professors group)	D	Yes	Comment [6]	The competence rule, as modified, gives an unfortunate and overly broad "free pass" to a lawyer committing any first act of negligence, or any first "mistake," no matter how egregious that mistake may be. Section (a) of the rule remains unchanged: "A lawyer shall not intentionally, recklessly, or repeatedly fail to perform legal services with competence." (Emphasis added.) However, Comment ¶6 has been added, explicitly stating that the rule is "not intended to apply to a single act of negligent conduct or a single mistake .. ." (Emphasis added.) "...seriously misguided." Moreover, Comment ¶6 would forbid discipline even if the "single act" would meet a "gross	See response to William Balin & Andrew Dilworth. The Commission disagrees with the suggestions in this comment. The proposed rule reaffirms California's longstanding approach to regulation of competence. The Commission is informed that conduct constituting gross negligence would be prohibited either as "reckless" or "intentional" acts under this Rule or as acts constituting moral turpitude under Rule 8.4(b) or Business and Professions Code §6106. Accordingly, California's approach to regulating competence affords sound public protection.

TOTAL = 7 Agree = 2
 Disagree = 3
 Modify = 2
 NI =

Rule 1.1 Competence.
 [Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					negligence" standard. Use of the common non-legal word "mistake," muddies the scope of 1.1 (a) and creates the possibility that any single mistake, however great, would fall outside the rule. . Fixing this rule is not difficult. First, we strongly recommend that this Board eliminate ¶6 of the Comment. At the very least, the Board should strike the words "or a single mistake" and add the word "simple" before "negligent conduct," so that the comment would only excuse a first act of simple negligence. Second, we recommend that the Board add the words "gross negligence" to 1.1 (a): "A lawyer shall not intentionally, recklessly, repeatedly, or with gross negligence "
6	Office of Chief Trial Counsel	M	Yes		OCTC supports this rule so long as diligence is included either in this rule or elsewhere as in the Model Rules. OCTC does not find the Comments to this rule necessary.	The Commission has declined to recommend a separate rule on diligence. The Commission determined that diligence under California law is a professional responsibility standard that is subsumed within a lawyer's duty of competence. Both current California Rule 3-110 and the Commission's proposed Rule 1.1 define competence as inclusive of diligence as a key factor in assessing a lawyer's performance of legal services.
7	COPRAC	A	Yes		Support as drafted.	No response required.

Rule 1.1: Competence

STATE VARIATIONS

(The following is an excerpt from Regulation of Lawyers: Statutes and Standards (2010 Ed.)
by Steven Gillers, Roy D. Simon and Andrew M. Perlman.)

California: Rule 3-110 (Failing to Act Competently) provides as follows:

(A) A member shall not intentionally, recklessly, or repeatedly fail to perform legal services with competence.

(B) For purposes of this rule, “competence” in any legal service shall mean to apply the 1) diligence, 2) learning and skill, and 3) mental, emotional, and physical ability reasonably necessary for the performance of such service.

(C) If a member does not have sufficient learning and skill when the legal service is undertaken, the member may nonetheless perform such services competently by 1) associating with or, where appropriate, professionally consulting another lawyer reasonably believed to be competent, or 2) by acquiring sufficient learning and skill before performance is required.

District of Columbia: Rule 1.1(a) is identical to ABA Model Rule 1.1, but D.C. adds Rule 1.1(b), which states: “A lawyer shall serve a client with skill and care commensurate with that generally afforded to clients by other lawyers in similar matters.”

Michigan: Rule 1.1 retains some language from DR 6-101 of the ABA Model Code of Professional Responsibility.

New Hampshire: New Hampshire defines competence in detail, providing a long list of requirements that a lawyer must satisfy in order to achieve “legal competence.”

New Jersey: Rule 1.1 provides that a lawyer shall not:

(a) Handle or neglect a matter entrusted to the lawyer in such manner that the lawyer's conduct constitutes gross negligence.

(b) Exhibit a pattern of negligence or neglect in the lawyer's handling of legal matters generally.

New York: In the rules effective April 1, 2009, New York substitutes the word "should" for "shall" and adds Rule 1.1(b) and (c), which is based on DR 6-101 and DR 7-101 of the old ABA Model Code.

Texas: Rule 1.01 provides as follows:

(a) A lawyer shall not accept or continue employment in a legal matter which the lawyer knows or should know is beyond the lawyer's competence, unless:

(1) another lawyer who is competent to handle the matter is, with the prior informed consent of the client, associated in the matter; or

(2) the advice or assistance of the lawyer is reasonably required in an emergency and the lawyer limits the advice and assistance to that which is reasonably necessary in the circumstances.

(b) In representing a client, a lawyer shall not:

(1) neglect a legal matter entrusted to the lawyer; or

(2) frequently fail to carry out completely the obligations that the lawyer owes to a client or clients.

(c) As used in this Rule, "neglect" signifies inattentiveness involving a conscious disregard for the responsibilities owed to a client or clients.

Proposed Rule 1.2 [n/a]

“Scope of Representation and Allocation Of Authority Between Client and Lawyer”

(XDraft #6.1, 6/29/10)

Summary: This rule states a requirement that a lawyer abide by a client's decisions concerning the objective of the representation and that a lawyer obtain informed client consent to any limited scope representation. It also provides that a lawyer's representation does not constitute an endorsement of the client's views or activities and prohibits a lawyer from counseling or assisting a client's criminal or fraudulent conduct.

Comparison with ABA Counterpart

Rule	Comment
☒ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
☐ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule	☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule	☒ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart	☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

Primary Factors Considered

- ☒ Existing California Law

Rule

Rules 3.36 – 3.37 and 5.70 – 5.71 of the California Rules of Court

Statute

Bus. & Prof. Code § 6104; Penal Code § 1018

Case law

Blanton v. Womancare Inc. (1985) 38 Cal.App.3d 396

- ☐ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

- ☐ Other Primary Factor(s)

Cal. Constitution, Art. I, Sec. 16

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(13 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 13 due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Less than Six Members Opposing Adoption ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 10
Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 2
Abstain 0

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by Consensus ☐

Commission Minority Position, Known Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

Minority Position Included on Model Rule Comparison Chart: ☒ Yes ☐ No

(See Introduction and Explanation of Changes for paragraph (a) in the Model Rule comparison chart.)

☒ No Known Stakeholders

☐ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

☐ Very Controversial – Explanation:

☒ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

See the Introduction and Explanation of Changes for paragraph (a) of the proposed Rule in the Model Rule comparison chart.

☐ Not Controversial

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.2* Scope Of Representation And Allocation Of Authority Between Client And Lawyer

July 2010

(Draft rule following consideration of final round of public comment)

INTRODUCTION:

Proposed Rule 1.2 largely tracks Model Rule 1.2. There are only two differences between the black letter of the Model Rule and the proposed Rule. First, a clause has been added to paragraph (a) in recognition that in certain situations under California law, a lawyer's consent to a guilty plea is required. Second, paragraph (d) has been divided into two subparagraphs for clarity, with subparagraph (d)(1) stating the general prohibition and subparagraph (d)(2) clarifying what a lawyer is permitted to do in providing counsel to the client.

The comments for paragraphs (a) through (c) (Comments [1]-[8]) closely follow the Model Rule comments, with citations to seminal California authority added. In particular, a reference has been added in Comment [8] to California Rules of Court, Rules 3.35-3.37 (limited scope representation rules applicable in civil matters generally), and 5.70-5.71 (limited scope representation rules applicable in family law matters), implemented to promote access to justice. The comments accompanying paragraph (d) (Comments [9]-[12]), which were prepared in conjunction with the Commission's consideration of proposed Rule 1.13 ("Organization as Client") have been substantially revised to provide better guidance to lawyers in providing counsel to clients.

Minority. A minority of the Commission objects on the ground that the Rule is not suitable as a disciplinary rule. See Explanation of Changes for paragraph (a).

Variation in Other Jurisdictions. Most jurisdictions have made minor changes to Model Rule 1.2. At least four states (Maine, Missouri, New Hampshire, and Wyoming) have enhanced MR 1.2(c), limiting the scope of representation, to encourage lawyers to provide such services, thereby promoting the access to justice. See "Selected State Variations," Model Rule 1.2, from Gillers, Simon & Perlman, REGULATION OF LAWYERS: STATUTES AND STANDARDS (2009), attached.

* Proposed Rule 1.2, Draft 6.1 (6/29/10). Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(a) Subject to paragraphs (c) and (d), a lawyer shall abide by a client's decisions concerning the objectives of representation and, as required by Rule 1.4, shall consult with the client as to the means by which they are to be pursued. A lawyer may take such action on behalf of the client as is impliedly authorized to carry out the representation. A lawyer shall abide by a client's decision whether to settle a matter. In a criminal case, the lawyer shall abide by the client's decision, after consultation with the lawyer, as to a plea to be entered, whether to waive jury trial and whether the client will testify.	(a) Subject to paragraphs (c) and (d), a lawyer shall abide by a client's decisions concerning the objectives of representation and, as required by Rule 1.4, shall consult with the client as to the means by which they are to be pursued. A lawyer may take such action on behalf of the client as is impliedly authorized to carry out the representation. A lawyer shall abide by a client's decision whether to settle a matter. ~~It~~ Except as otherwise provided by law in a criminal case, the lawyer shall abide by the client's decision, after consultation with the lawyer, as to a plea to be entered, whether to waive jury trial and whether the client will testify.	Paragraph (a) is substantially similar to Model Rule 1.2(a), except the last sentence has been revised to recognize that, at least in California, there are certain situations under which a lawyer's consent to a guilty plea is required. See Penal Code § 1018. See also Comment [1]. Minority. A minority of the Commission objects to the Rule on the ground that, although it might be appropriate as a statement of hortatory principles, it is wrong as a disciplinary rule and will conflict with lawyers' duties to their clients, both constitutional and statutory. The minority identifies a fundamental problem in that there is no clear distinction between the "objectives" and the "means" of representation. For example, in a criminal case, the accused has a constitutional right to have the complaining witness cross-examined. If we characterize the decision about whether to cross-examine that witness as "means" and therefore within the dominion of the lawyer, we deprive the accused of a fundamental Constitutional right. Denial of cross-examination of a witness without a waiver by the client is ". . . a constitutional error of the first magnitude and no amount of showing of want of prejudice would cure it." Brookhart v. Janis, 384 U.S. 1, 3 (1966). A rule of professional conduct should not deprive a client of a Constitutional right. The majority notes that the rule does not countenance such conduct by the lawyer. As explained in Comment [1], decisions concerning a client's "substantial rights" are within the province of the client. The rule does not require a lawyer to ignore the client's interests in making decisions about how to conduct a case; rather, it emphasizes that the lawyer must be sensitive to the client's rights and interests.

* Proposed Rule 1.2, XDraft 6.1 (6/29/10). Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
		The minority also suggests that, even if there were a valid distinction between “objectives” and “means,” as to many “means,” the client should be able to instruct the lawyer. Again, the rule provides for exactly that outcome. See Comment [1]. Finally, the minority observes that, in some cases, a lawyer must be able to disagree with a client's decisions concerning the objectives of the representation and to refuse to “abide by” the client's decision as to a plea in a criminal case. The minority notes that if a lawyer believes there is a valid defense in a death penalty case, the lawyer is required to exercise independent judgment about whether to oppose the client's plea and to advocate against conviction or the death penalty. Penal Code section 1018, which states in part: “No plea of guilty of a felony for which the maximum punishment is death, or life imprisonment without the possibility of parole, shall be received from a defendant who does not appear with counsel, nor shall that plea be received without the consent of the defendant's counsel.” See, e.g., People v. Massie, 40 Cal. 3d 620 (1985); People v. Alfaro (2007) 41 Cal.4th 1277, cert. denied 128 S.Ct. 1476, 170 L.Ed.2d 300. The minority concludes that, if the Supreme Court approves Rule 1.2, so a lawyer who does not comply with a client's decision regarding a plea in a criminal case faces discipline, then the validity of Penal Code section 1018 is jeopardized.
(b) A lawyer's representation of a client, including representation by appointment, does not constitute an endorsement of the client's political, economic, social or moral views or activities.	(b) A lawyer's representation of a client, including representation by appointment, does not constitute an endorsement of the client's political, economic, social or moral views or activities.	Paragraph (b) is identical to Model Rule 1.2(b).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(c) A lawyer may limit the scope of the representation if the limitation is reasonable under the circumstances and the client gives informed consent.	(c) A lawyer may limit the scope of the representation if the limitation is reasonable under the circumstances and the client gives informed consent.	Paragraph (c) is identical to Model Rule 1.2(c).
(d) A lawyer shall not counsel a client to engage, or assist a client, in conduct that the lawyer knows is criminal or fraudulent, but a lawyer may discuss the legal consequences of any proposed course of conduct with a client and may counsel or assist a client to make a good faith effort to determine the validity, scope, meaning or application of the law.	(d) (1) A lawyer shall not counsel a client to engage, or assist a client in conduct that the lawyer knows is criminal, ~~or~~ fraudulent, or a violation of any law, rule, or ruling of a tribunal. (2) Notwithstanding paragraph (d)(1), but a lawyer may discuss the legal consequences of any proposed course of conduct with a client and may counsel or assist a client to make a good faith effort to determine the validity, scope, meaning or application of ~~the~~ a law, rule, or ruling of a tribunal.	Paragraph (d) is based on Model Rule 1.2(d), retaining both its substance and language. The single Model Rule paragraph has been split into two subparagraphs for clarity: subparagraph (d)(1) sets forth the general prohibition and subparagraph (d)(2) clarifies what the lawyer is permitted to do. In addition, the phrase “violation of any law, rule or ruling of a tribunal” is added to the scope of the rule for greater protection of the public and the fair administration of justice.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Allocation of Authority between Client and Lawyer [1] Paragraph (a) confers upon the client the ultimate authority to determine the purposes to be served by legal representation, within the limits imposed by law and the lawyer's professional obligations. The decisions specified in paragraph (a), such as whether to settle a civil matter, must also be made by the client. See Rule 1.4(a)(1) for the lawyer's duty to communicate with the client about such decisions. With respect to the means by which the client's objectives are to be pursued, the lawyer shall consult with the client as required by Rule 1.4(a)(2) and may take such action as is impliedly authorized to carry out the representation.	Allocation of Authority between Client and Lawyer [1] Paragraph (a) confers upon the client the ultimate authority to determine the purposes to be served by legal representation, within the limits imposed by law and the lawyer's professional obligations. See e.g., Cal. Constitution Article I, section 16; Penal Code section 1018. A lawyer is not authorized merely by virtue of the lawyer's retention by a client, to impair the client's substantial rights or the client's claim itself. Blanton v. Womancare, Inc. (1985) 38 Cal.3d 396, 404 [212 Cal.Rptr. 151, 156].) Accordingly, ~~the~~ decisions specified in paragraph (a), such as whether to settle a civil matter or waive a jury trial in a civil matter, must also be made by the client. See Rule 1.4(a)(1)(c) for the lawyer's duty to communicate with the client about such decisions. With respect to the means by which the client's objectives are to be pursued, the lawyer shall consult with the client as required by Rule 1.4(a)(2) and may take such action as is impliedly authorized to carry out the representation. See Rule 1.14 and Comment [4] of this Rule.	Comment [1] is based on Model Rule 1.2, cmt. [1] but makes five changes to conform the comment to California law. First, as a specific example of "limits imposed by law and the lawyer's professional obligations," the comment includes a reference to Penal Code § 1018, which provides: "No plea of guilty of a felony for which the maximum punishment is death, or life imprisonment without the possibility of parole, shall be received from a defendant who does not appear with counsel, nor shall that plea be received without the consent of the defendant's counsel." The citation to Cal. Constitution Article I, section 16, added following public comment, is to the same effect. Second, it adds language and a citation to well-settled California authority, Blanton v. Womancare, Inc., concerning the allocation of authority between lawyer and client. Third, it recognizes that in California, the authority under the California Constitution to waive a jury trial in a civil matter resides in the client. Fourth, it substitutes a cross-reference to proposed Rule 1.4(c), which expressly sets forth a lawyer's communication duties concerning settlement offers. Rule 1.4(c) carries forward current rule 3-510, which itself conforms to legislative policy in Bus. & Prof. Code § 6103.5. Finally, Comment [1] provides a cross-reference to proposed Rule 1.14 and Comment [4] of this Rule as an example of when a lawyer is impliedly authorized to act in the interests of the client.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[2] On occasion, however, a lawyer and a client may disagree about the means to be used to accomplish the client's objectives. Clients normally defer to the special knowledge and skill of their lawyer with respect to the means to be used to accomplish their objectives, particularly with respect to technical, legal and tactical matters. Conversely, lawyers usually defer to the client regarding such questions as the expense to be incurred and concern for third persons who might be adversely affected. Because of the varied nature of the matters about which a lawyer and client might disagree and because the actions in question may implicate the interests of a tribunal or other persons, this Rule does not prescribe how such disagreements are to be resolved. Other law, however, may be applicable and should be consulted by the lawyer. The lawyer should also consult with the client and seek a mutually acceptable resolution of the disagreement. If such efforts are unavailing and the lawyer has a fundamental disagreement with the client, the lawyer may withdraw from the representation. See Rule 1.16(b)(4). Conversely, the client may resolve the disagreement by discharging the lawyer. See Rule 1.16(a)(3).	[2] On occasion, however, a lawyer and a client may disagree about the means to be used to accomplish the client's objectives. Clients normally defer to the special knowledge and skill of their lawyer with respect to the means to be used to accomplish their objectives, particularly with respect to technical, legal and tactical matters. Conversely, lawyers usually defer to the client regarding such questions as the expense to be incurred and concern for third persons who might be adversely affected. Because of the varied nature of the matters about which a lawyer and client might disagree and because the actions in question may implicate the interests of a tribunal or other persons, this Rule does not prescribe how such disagreements are to be resolved. Other law, however, may be applicable and should be consulted by the lawyer. The lawyer should also consult with the client and seek a mutually acceptable resolution of the disagreement. If such efforts are unavailing and the lawyer has a fundamental disagreement with the client, the lawyer may withdraw from the representation. See Rule 1.16(b)(4). Conversely, the client may resolve the disagreement by discharging the lawyer. See Rule 1.16(a)(3).	Comment [2] is identical to Model Rule 1.2, cmt. [2], except that the specific reference to Model Rule 1.16(b)(4) has been deleted because the Commission recommends not adopting that subparagraph. Model Rule 1.16(b)(4) permits a lawyer to withdraw from representing a client if: "(4) the client by other conduct renders it unreasonably difficult for the lawyer to carry out the employment effectively." The Commission's recommended drafting of Rule 1.16 increases client protection by narrowing a lawyer's right to withdraw from a representation. Consequently, the Comment now generally points the lawyer to proposed Rule 1.16(b), which governs permissive withdrawal from the representation.
[3] At the outset of a representation, the client may authorize the lawyer to take specific action on the client's behalf without further consultation. Absent a	[3] At the outset of or during a representation, the client may authorize the lawyer to take specific action on the client's behalf without further	Comment [3] is identical to MR 1.2, cmt. [3], except that it clarifies that a client may authorize the lawyer to take specific action at any time during the representation.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
material change in circumstances and subject to Rule 1.4, a lawyer may rely on such an advance authorization. The client may, however, revoke such authority at any time.	consultation. Absent a material change in circumstances and subject to Rule 1.4, a lawyer may rely on such an advance authorization. The client may, however, revoke such authority at any time.
[4] In a case in which the client appears to be suffering diminished capacity, the lawyer's duty to abide by the client's decisions is to be guided by reference to Rule 1.14.	[4] In a case in which the client appears to be suffering diminished capacity, the lawyer's duty to abide by the client's decisions is to be guided by reference to Rule 1.14.	Comment [4] is identical to MR 1.2, cmt. [3].
Independence from Client's Views or Activities [5] Legal representation should not be denied to people who are unable to afford legal services, or whose cause is controversial or the subject of popular disapproval. By the same token, representing a client does not constitute approval of the client's views or activities.	Independence from Client's Views or Activities [5] Legal representation should not be denied to people who are unable to afford legal services, or whose cause is controversial or the subject of popular disapproval. By the same token, representing a client does not constitute approval of the client's views or activities.	Comment [5] is identical to MR 1.2, cmt. [5]. It is consistent with legislative policy in Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(h), which provides it is the duty of a lawyer: "(h) Never to reject, for any consideration personal to himself or herself, the cause of the defenseless or the oppressed."
Agreements Limiting Scope of Representation [6] The scope of services to be provided by a lawyer may be limited by agreement with the client or by the terms under which the lawyer's services are made available to the client. When a lawyer has been retained by an insurer to represent an insured, for example, the representation may be limited to matters related to the insurance coverage. A limited representation may be appropriate because the	Agreements Limiting Scope of Representation [6] The scope of services to be provided by a lawyer may be limited by agreement with the client or by the terms under which the lawyer's services are made available to the client. When a lawyer has been retained by an insurer to represent an insured, for example, the representation may be limited to matters related to the insurance coverage. A limited representation may be appropriate because the	Comment [6] is nearly identical to Model Rule 1.2, cmt. [6], the only change being the deletion of "repugnant," a term found in Model Rule 1.16(b)(4), a provision the Commission recommends not adopting. See Explanation of Changes, Comment [2], above.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
client has limited objectives for the representation. In addition, the terms upon which representation is undertaken may exclude specific means that might otherwise be used to accomplish the client's objectives. Such limitations may exclude actions that the client thinks are too costly or that the lawyer regards as repugnant or imprudent.	client has limited objectives for the representation. In addition, the terms upon which representation is undertaken may exclude specific means that might otherwise be used to accomplish the client's objectives. Such limitations may exclude actions that the client thinks are too costly or that the lawyer regards as ~~repugnant or~~ imprudent.
[7] Although this Rule affords the lawyer and client substantial latitude to limit the representation, the limitation must be reasonable under the circumstances. If, for example, a client's objective is limited to securing general information about the law the client needs in order to handle a common and typically uncomplicated legal problem, the lawyer and client may agree that the lawyer's services will be limited to a brief telephone consultation. Such a limitation, however, would not be reasonable if the time allotted was not sufficient to yield advice upon which the client could rely. Although an agreement for a limited representation does not exempt a lawyer from the duty to provide competent representation, the limitation is a factor to be considered when determining the legal knowledge, skill, thoroughness and preparation reasonably necessary for the representation. See Rule 1.1.	[7] Although this Rule affords the lawyer and client substantial latitude to limit the representation, the limitation must be reasonable under the circumstances. If, for example, a client's objective is limited to securing general information about the law the client needs in order to handle a common and typically uncomplicated legal problem, the lawyer and client may agree that the lawyer's services will be limited to a brief telephone consultation. Such a limitation, however, would not be reasonable if the time allotted was not sufficient to yield advice upon which the client could rely. Although an agreement for a limited representation does not exempt a lawyer from the duty to provide competent representation, the limitation is a factor to be considered when determining the legal knowledge, skill, thoroughness and preparation reasonably necessary for the representation. See Rule 1.1. Even where the scope of representation is expressly limited, the lawyer may still have a duty to alert the client to reasonably apparent legal problems outside the scope of representation.	Comment [7] is nearly identical to Model Rule 1.2, cmt. [7]. However, a sentence has been added at the end of the comment to alert lawyers that they may be obligated to inform clients of legal problems that fall outside the scope of representation. See, e.g., Nichols v. Keller (1993) 19 Cal.Rptr.2d 601.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[8] All agreements concerning a lawyer's representation of a client must accord with the Rules of Professional Conduct and other law. See, e.g., Rules 1.1, 1.8 and 5.6.	[8] All agreements concerning a lawyer's representation of a client must accord with the Rules of Professional Conduct and other law. See, e.g., Rules 1.1, 1.8 and 5.6. See also California Rules of Court, Rules 3.35 -3.37 (limited scope rules applicable in civil matters generally), and 5.70-5.71 (limited scope rules applicable in family law matters).	Comment [8] is based on Model Rule 1.2, cmt. [8] and is identical, except that references to the California Rules of Court on limited scope representation have been added to apprise lawyers of these important provisions for access to justice.
Criminal, Fraudulent and Prohibited Transactions [9] Paragraph (d) prohibits a lawyer from knowingly counseling or assisting a client to commit a crime or fraud. This prohibition, however, does not preclude the lawyer from giving an honest opinion about the actual consequences that appear likely to result from a client's conduct. Nor does the fact that a client uses advice in a course of action that is criminal or fraudulent of itself make a lawyer a party to the course of action. There is a critical distinction between presenting an analysis of legal aspects of questionable conduct and recommending the means by which a crime or fraud might be committed with impunity.	Criminal, Fraudulent and Prohibited Transactions [9] Paragraph (d) prohibits a lawyer from knowingly counseling or assisting a client to commit a crime or fraud. ~~This prohibition or to violate any rule, however law, or ruling of a tribunal. However, this Rule does not preclude the prohibit a~~ lawyer from giving ~~an honest a good faith~~ opinion about the ~~actual foreseeable~~ consequences ~~that appear likely to result from of~~ a client's ~~proposed~~ conduct. Nor does the fact that a client uses advice in a course of action that is criminal or fraudulent of itself make a lawyer a party to the course of action. There is a critical distinction between presenting an analysis of legal aspects of questionable conduct and recommending the means by which a crime or fraud might be committed with impunity.	Comment [9] is based on Model Rule 1.2, cmt. [9], but adds language primarily to conform to and explain the added scope of proposed paragraph (d). Sentence 1 adds the language of the expanded scope of proposed paragraph (d) by adding "or to violate any rule, law or ruling of a tribunal." Sentence 2 substitutes "prohibit" for "preclude" to clarify that the prohibition is mandatory. It substitutes "good faith" for "honest" to change from the subjective standard to an objective standard. The words "forseeable consequences of a client's proposed conduct" have been substituted for "actual consequences that appear likely to result from a client's conduct" for the sake of clarification, brevity and to create an objective rather than subjective standard.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[10]When the client's course of action has already begun and is continuing, the lawyer's responsibility is especially delicate. The lawyer is required to avoid assisting the client, for example, by drafting or delivering documents that the lawyer knows are fraudulent or by suggesting how the wrongdoing might be concealed. A lawyer may not continue assisting a client in conduct that the lawyer originally supposed was legally proper but then discovers is criminal or fraudulent. The lawyer must, therefore, withdraw from the representation of the client in the matter. See Rule 1.16(a). In some cases, withdrawal alone might be insufficient. It may be necessary for the lawyer to give notice of the fact of withdrawal and to disaffirm any opinion, document, affirmation or the like. See Rule 4.1.	[10]~~When the client's course of action has already begun and is continuing, the lawyer's responsibility is especially delicate. The prohibition in paragraph (d)(1) applies whether or not the client's conduct has already begun and is continuing. The lawyer is required to avoid assisting the client, for~~ For example, ~~by drafting a lawyer may not draft or delivering/deliver~~ documents that the lawyer knows are fraudulent ~~or by suggesting; nor may the lawyer counsel~~ how the wrongdoing might be concealed. ~~A~~ The lawyer may not continue assisting a client in conduct that the lawyer originally ~~supposed~~believed was legally proper but ~~then~~later discovers is criminal ~~or, fraudulent. The lawyer must, therefore, withdraw from~~or the ~~representation~~violation of any rule, law, or ruling of a tribunal. In any event, the lawyer shall not violate his or her duty of protecting all confidential information as provided in Business & Professions Code section 6068(e)(1). When a lawyer has been retained with respect to client conduct described in paragraph (d)(1), the lawyer shall limit his or her actions to those that appear to the lawyer to be in the best lawful interest of the client~~in, including counseling the matter. See Rule 1.16(a)~~client about possible corrective or remedial action. In some cases, ~~withdrawal alone might be insufficient. It may be necessary for the lawyer~~lawyer's response is limited to ~~give notice of the fact of withdrawal~~lawyer's right and, ~~where appropriate, duty to disaffirm any opinion, document, affirmation~~resign or the like. ~~See~~withdraw in accordance with Rule ~~4.1~~1.16.	Although the concepts contained in Model Rule 1.2, cmt. [10] have been retained, the comment has been redrafted to remove ambiguity and to create a brighter line for lawyer guidance and public protection. Sentence 1 of the Model Rule comment has been stricken because it provides no guidance (i.e., telling a lawyer that a situation is delicate provides no guidance concerning conduct). Substituted sentence 1 provides guidance by clarifying that a lawyer must comply with subparagraph (d)(1) regardless of the temporal status of the client's conduct. Sentence 2 strikes language creating ambiguity and clarifies that a lawyer may not engage in the conduct described. Sentence 3 substitutes "believed" for "supposed" and "later" for "then" to removed ambiguity and to conform with the proposed black letter rule. Sentence 4 has been added to conform the Comment to statutory duties of confidentiality. Sentence 5 has been added to clarify that the lawyer's duties are consistent with California law. Sentence 6 retains the Model Rule Comment concept of withdrawal but clarifies that the option may be mandatory or permissive, depending upon the circumstances. The last sentence of the Model Rule Comment concerning disaffirmation of "any opinion, document, affirmation or the like,"

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
		has been deleted to conform to California policies of confidentiality, which do not permit “noisy” withdrawals.
[11] Where the client is a fiduciary, the lawyer may be charged with special obligations in dealings with a beneficiary.	~~[11] Where the client is a fiduciary, the lawyer may be charged with special obligations in dealings with a beneficiary.~~	Model Rule 1.2, cmt. [11] has been stricken because it is ambiguous and may imply a relationship with beneficiaries that is not consistent with California law. For example, a lawyer representing a trustee generally has no duties or special obligations to the beneficiaries of a trust.
[12] Paragraph (d) applies whether or not the defrauded party is a party to the transaction. Hence, a lawyer must not participate in a transaction to effectuate criminal or fraudulent avoidance of tax liability. Paragraph (d) does not preclude undertaking a criminal defense incident to a general retainer for legal services to a lawful enterprise. The last clause of paragraph (d) recognizes that determining the validity or interpretation of a statute or regulation may require a course of action involving disobedience of the statute or regulation or of the interpretation placed upon it by governmental authorities.	~~[12]~~ Paragraph (d) ~~applies whether or not the defrauded party is a party to the transaction. Hence, a lawyer must not participate in a transaction to effectuate criminal or fraudulent avoidance of tax liability. Paragraph (d) does not preclude undertaking a criminal defense incident to a general retainer for legal services.~~ (2) authorizes a lawyer to assist a client to make a good faith effort to a lawful enterprise. The last clause of paragraph (d) recognizes that determining the validity, scope, meaning or application of a law, rule, or regulation ruling of a tribunal. Determining the validity, scope, meaning or application of a law, rule, or ruling of a tribunal in good faith may require a course of action involving disobedience of the statute, law, rule, or regulation ruling of a tribunal, or of the interpretation meaning placed upon it by governmental authorities. Paragraph (d)(2) also authorizes a lawyer to advise a client on the consequences of violating a law, rule, or ruling of a	Although Comment [11] retains the concepts contained in Model Rule 1.2, cmt. [12], the Model Rule comment has been substantially revised to provide better guidance to lawyers, and thus better protection to client's, concerning the scope of subparagraph (d)(2)'s permitted conduct. In particular, in the last two sentences the revised comment expands on the last clause of subparagraph (d)(2), providing guidance to lawyers whose clients intend to engage in civil disobedience.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	tribunal the client does not contend is unenforceable or unjust in itself, as a means of protesting a law or policy the client finds objectionable. For example, a lawyer may properly advise a client about the consequences of blocking the entrance to a public building as a means of protesting a law or policy the client believes to be unjust.
[13] If a lawyer comes to know or reasonably should know that a client expects assistance not permitted by the Rules of Professional Conduct or other law or if the lawyer intends to act contrary to the client's instructions, the lawyer must consult with the client regarding the limitations on the lawyer's conduct. See Rule 1.4(a)(5).	~~[13]~~^[12] If a lawyer comes to know or reasonably should know that a client expects assistance not permitted by ~~the~~these Rules ~~of Professional Conduct~~ or other law or if the lawyer intends to act contrary to the client's instructions, the lawyer must consult with the client regarding the limitations on the lawyer's conduct. See Rule 1.4(a)(~~5~~⁶).	Comment [12] is based on Model Rule 1.2, cmt. [13]. The only changes are to conform to California rules style and to correct a cross-reference.

Rule 1.2 Scope Of Representation And Allocation Of Authority Between Client And Lawyer

(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to the Public Comment Draft)

- (a) Subject to paragraphs (c) and (d), a lawyer shall abide by a client's decisions concerning the objectives of representation and, as required by Rule 1.4, shall consult with the client as to the means by which they are to be pursued. A lawyer may take such action on behalf of the client as is impliedly authorized to carry out the representation. A lawyer shall abide by a client's decision whether to settle a matter. Except as otherwise provided by law in a criminal case, the lawyer shall abide by the client's decision, after consultation with the lawyer, as to a plea to be entered, whether to waive jury trial and whether the client will testify.
- (b) A lawyer's representation of a client, including representation by appointment, does not constitute an endorsement of the client's political, economic, social or moral views or activities.
- (c) A lawyer may limit the scope of the representation if the limitation is reasonable under the circumstances and the client gives informed consent.
- (d)
 - (1) A lawyer shall not counsel a client to engage, or assist a client in conduct that the lawyer knows is criminal, fraudulent, or a violation of any law, rule, or ruling of a tribunal.
 - (2) Notwithstanding paragraph (d)(1), a lawyer may discuss the legal consequences of any proposed course of conduct with a client and may counsel or assist a client to make a good faith effort to determine the validity, scope, meaning or application of a law, rule, or ruling of a tribunal.

Comment

Allocation of Authority between Client and Lawyer

- [1] Paragraph (a) confers upon the client the ultimate authority to determine the purposes to be served by legal representation, within the limits imposed by law and the lawyer's professional obligations. See e.g., Cal. Constitution Article I, section 16; Penal Code section 1018. A lawyer is not authorized merely by virtue of the lawyer's retention by a client, to impair the client's substantial rights or the client's claim itself. Blanton v. Womanicare, Inc. (1985) 38 Cal.3d 396, 404 [212 Cal.Rptr. 151, 156].) Accordingly, the decisions specified in paragraph (a), such as whether to settle a civil matter or waive a jury trial in a civil matter, must also be made by the client. See Rule 1.4(c) for the lawyer's duty to communicate with the client about such decisions. With respect to the means by which the client's objectives are to be pursued, the lawyer shall consult with the client as required by Rule 1.4(a)(2) and may take such action as is impliedly authorized to carry out the representation, ~~provided the lawyer does not violate Rule 1.6 or Business and Professions Code section 6068(e).~~ [See Rule 1.14 and Comment \[4\] of this Rule.](#)
- [2] On occasion, however, a lawyer and a client may disagree about the means to be used to accomplish the client's objectives. Clients normally defer to the special knowledge and skill of their lawyer with respect to the means to be used to accomplish their objectives, particularly with respect to technical, legal and tactical matters. Conversely, lawyers usually defer to the client regarding such questions as the expense to be incurred and concern for third persons who might be adversely affected. Because of the varied nature of the matters about which a lawyer and client might disagree and because the actions in question may implicate the interests of a tribunal or other persons, this Rule does not prescribe how such disagreements are to be resolved. Other law, however, may be applicable and should be consulted by the lawyer. The lawyer should also consult with the client and seek a mutually acceptable resolution of the disagreement. If such efforts are unavailing and the lawyer has a fundamental disagreement with the client, the lawyer may withdraw from the representation. See Rule 1.16(b). Conversely, the client may resolve the disagreement by discharging the lawyer. See Rule 1.16(a)(3).

- [3] At the outset of, or during a representation, the client may authorize the lawyer to take specific action on the client's behalf without further consultation. Absent a material change in circumstances and subject to Rule 1.4, a lawyer may rely on such an advance authorization. The client may, however, revoke such authority at any time.
- [4] In a case in which the client appears to be suffering diminished capacity, the lawyer's duty to abide by the client's decisions is to be guided by reference to Rule 1.14.

Independence from Client's Views or Activities

- [5] Legal representation should not be denied to people who are unable to afford legal services, or whose cause is controversial or the subject of popular disapproval. By the same token, representing a client does not constitute approval of the client's views or activities.

Agreements Limiting Scope of Representation

- [6] The scope of services to be provided by a lawyer may be limited by agreement with the client or by the terms under which the lawyer's services are made available to the client. When a lawyer has been retained by an insurer to represent an insured, for example, the representation may be limited to matters related to the insurance coverage. A limited representation may be appropriate because the client has limited objectives for the representation. In addition, the terms upon which representation is undertaken may exclude specific means that might otherwise be used to accomplish the client's objectives. Such limitations may exclude actions that the client thinks are too costly or that the lawyer regards as imprudent.
- [7] Although this Rule affords the lawyer and client substantial latitude to limit the representation, the limitation must be reasonable under the circumstances. If, for example, a client's objective is limited to securing general information about the law the client needs in order to handle a common and typically uncomplicated legal problem, the lawyer and client may agree that the lawyer's services will be limited to a brief telephone consultation. Such a limitation, however, would not be reasonable if the time allotted was not sufficient to yield advice upon which the client could rely. Although an agreement for a limited representation does not exempt a lawyer from the duty to provide competent representation, the limitation is a factor to be considered when determining the legal knowledge, skill, thoroughness and preparation reasonably necessary for the representation. See Rule 1.1. Even where the scope of representation is expressly limited, the lawyer may still have a duty to alert the client to reasonably apparent legal problems outside the scope of representation.
- [8] All agreements concerning a lawyer's representation of a client must accord with the Rules of Professional Conduct and other law. See, e.g., Rules 1.1, 1.8 and 5.6. See also California Rules of Court 3.35-3.37 (limited scope rules applicable in civil matters generally), and 5.70-5.71 (limited scope rules applicable in family law matters).

Criminal, Fraudulent and Prohibited Transactions

- [9] Paragraph (d) prohibits a lawyer from knowingly counseling or assisting a client to commit a crime or fraud or to violate any rule, law, or ruling of a tribunal. However, this Rule does not prohibit a lawyer from giving a good faith opinion about the foreseeable consequences of a client's proposed conduct. Nor does the fact that a client uses advice in a course of action that is criminal or fraudulent of itself make a lawyer a party to the course of action. There is a critical distinction between presenting an analysis of legal aspects of questionable conduct and recommending the means by which a crime or fraud might be committed with impunity.
- [10] The prohibition in paragraph (d)(1) applies whether or not the client's conduct has already begun and is continuing. For example, a lawyer may not draft or deliver documents that the lawyer knows are fraudulent; nor may the lawyer counsel how the wrongdoing might be concealed. The lawyer may not continue assisting a client in conduct that the lawyer originally believed was legally proper but later discovers is criminal, fraudulent, or the violation of any rule, law, or ruling of a tribunal. In any event, the lawyer shall not violate his or her duty of protecting all confidential information as provided in Rule 1.6 and Business and Professions Code section 6068(e). When a lawyer has been retained with respect to client conduct described in paragraph (d)(1), the lawyer shall limit his or her actions to those that appear to the lawyer to be in the best lawful interest of the client, including counseling the client about possible corrective or remedial action. In some cases, the lawyer's response is limited to the lawyer's right and, where appropriate, duty to resign or withdraw in accordance with Rule 1.16.

- [11] Paragraph (d)(2) authorizes a lawyer to counsel or assist a client to make a good faith effort to determine the validity, scope, meaning or application of a law, rule or ruling of a tribunal. Determining the validity, scope, meaning or application of a law, rule, or ruling of a tribunal in good faith may require a course of action involving disobedience of the law, rule, or ruling of a tribunal, or of the meaning placed upon it by governmental authorities. Paragraph (d)(2) also authorizes a lawyer to advise a client on the consequences of violating a law, rule, or ruling of a tribunal the client does not contend is unenforceable or unjust in itself, as a means of protesting a law or policy the client finds objectionable. For example, a lawyer may properly advise a client about the consequences of blocking the entrance to a public building as a means of protesting a law or policy the client believes to be unjust.
- [12] If a lawyer comes to know or reasonably should know that a client expects assistance not permitted by these Rules or other law or if the lawyer intends to act contrary to the client's instructions, the lawyer must consult with the client regarding the limitations on the lawyer's conduct. See Rule 1.4(a)(6).

Rule 1.2 Scope Of Representation And Allocation Of Authority Between Client And Lawyer

(Commission's Proposed Rule – Clean Version)

- (a) Subject to paragraphs (c) and (d), a lawyer shall abide by a client's decisions concerning the objectives of representation and, as required by Rule 1.4, shall consult with the client as to the means by which they are to be pursued. A lawyer may take such action on behalf of the client as is impliedly authorized to carry out the representation. A lawyer shall abide by a client's decision whether to settle a matter. Except as otherwise provided by law in a criminal case, the lawyer shall abide by the client's decision, after consultation with the lawyer, as to a plea to be entered, whether to waive jury trial and whether the client will testify.
- (b) A lawyer's representation of a client, including representation by appointment, does not constitute an endorsement of the client's political, economic, social or moral views or activities.
- (c) A lawyer may limit the scope of the representation if the limitation is reasonable under the circumstances and the client gives informed consent.
- (d)
 - (1) A lawyer shall not counsel a client to engage, or assist a client in conduct that the lawyer knows is criminal, fraudulent, or a violation of any law, rule, or ruling of a tribunal.
 - (2) Notwithstanding paragraph (d)(1), a lawyer may discuss the legal consequences of any proposed course of conduct with a client and may counsel or assist a client to make a good faith effort to determine the validity, scope, meaning or application of a law, rule, or ruling of a tribunal.

Comment

Allocation of Authority between Client and Lawyer

- [1] Paragraph (a) confers upon the client the ultimate authority to determine the purposes to be served by legal representation, within the limits imposed by law and the lawyer's professional obligations. See e.g., Cal. Constitution Article I, section 16; Penal Code section 1018. A lawyer is not authorized merely by virtue of the lawyer's retention by a client, to impair the client's substantial rights or the client's claim itself. Blanton v. Womanicare, Inc. (1985) 38 Cal.3d 396, 404 [212 Cal.Rptr. 151, 156].) Accordingly, the decisions specified in paragraph (a), such as whether to settle a civil matter or waive a jury trial in a civil matter, must also be made by the client. See Rule 1.4(c) for the lawyer's duty to communicate with the client about such decisions. With respect to the means by which the client's objectives are to be pursued, the lawyer shall consult with the client as required by Rule 1.4(a)(2) and may take such action as is impliedly authorized to carry out the representation. See Rule 1.14 and Comment [4] of this Rule.
- [2] On occasion, however, a lawyer and a client may disagree about the means to be used to accomplish the client's objectives. Clients normally defer to the special knowledge and skill of their lawyer with respect to the means to be used to accomplish their objectives, particularly with respect to technical, legal and tactical matters. Conversely, lawyers usually defer to the client regarding such questions as the expense to be incurred and concern for third persons who might be adversely affected. Because of the varied nature of the matters about which a lawyer and client might disagree and because the actions in question may implicate the interests of a tribunal or other persons, this Rule does not prescribe how such disagreements are to be resolved. Other law, however, may be applicable and should be consulted by the lawyer. The lawyer should also consult with the client and seek a mutually acceptable resolution of the disagreement. If such efforts are unavailing and the lawyer has a fundamental disagreement with the client, the lawyer may withdraw from the representation. See Rule 1.16(b). Conversely, the client may resolve the disagreement by discharging the lawyer. See Rule 1.16(a)(3).

- [3] At the outset of, or during a representation, the client may authorize the lawyer to take specific action on the client's behalf without further consultation. Absent a material change in circumstances and subject to Rule 1.4, a lawyer may rely on such an advance authorization. The client may, however, revoke such authority at any time.
- [4] In a case in which the client appears to be suffering diminished capacity, the lawyer's duty to abide by the client's decisions is to be guided by reference to Rule 1.14.

Independence from Client's Views or Activities

- [5] Legal representation should not be denied to people who are unable to afford legal services, or whose cause is controversial or the subject of popular disapproval. By the same token, representing a client does not constitute approval of the client's views or activities.

Agreements Limiting Scope of Representation

- [6] The scope of services to be provided by a lawyer may be limited by agreement with the client or by the terms under which the lawyer's services are made available to the client. When a lawyer has been retained by an insurer to represent an insured, for example, the representation may be limited to matters related to the insurance coverage. A limited representation may be appropriate because the client has limited objectives for the representation. In addition, the terms upon which representation is undertaken may exclude specific means that might otherwise be used to accomplish the client's objectives. Such limitations may exclude actions that the client thinks are too costly or that the lawyer regards as imprudent.

- [7] Although this Rule affords the lawyer and client substantial latitude to limit the representation, the limitation must be reasonable under the circumstances. If, for example, a client's objective is limited to securing general information about the law the client needs in order to handle a common and typically uncomplicated legal problem, the lawyer and client may agree that the lawyer's services will be limited to a brief telephone consultation. Such a limitation, however, would not be reasonable if the time allotted was not sufficient to yield advice upon which the client could rely. Although an agreement for a limited representation does not exempt a lawyer from the duty to provide competent representation, the limitation is a factor to be considered when determining the legal knowledge, skill, thoroughness and preparation reasonably necessary for the representation. See Rule 1.1. Even where the scope of representation is expressly limited, the lawyer may still have a duty to alert the client to reasonably apparent legal problems outside the scope of representation.

- [8] All agreements concerning a lawyer's representation of a client must accord with the Rules of Professional Conduct and other law. See, e.g., Rules 1.1, 1.8 and 5.6. See also California Rules of Court 3.35-3.37 (limited scope rules applicable in civil matters generally), and 5.70-5.71 (limited scope rules applicable in family law matters).

Criminal, Fraudulent and Prohibited Transactions

- [9] Paragraph (d) prohibits a lawyer from knowingly counseling or assisting a client to commit a crime or fraud or to violate any rule, law, or ruling of a tribunal. However, this Rule does not prohibit a lawyer from giving a good faith opinion about the foreseeable consequences of a client's proposed conduct. Nor does the fact that a client uses advice in a course of action that is criminal or fraudulent of itself make a lawyer a party to the course of action. There is a critical distinction between presenting an analysis of legal aspects of questionable conduct and recommending the means by which a crime or fraud might be committed with impunity.
- [10] The prohibition in paragraph (d)(1) applies whether or not the client's conduct has already begun and is continuing. For example, a lawyer may not draft or deliver documents that the lawyer knows are fraudulent; nor may the lawyer counsel how the wrongdoing might be concealed. The lawyer may not continue assisting a client in conduct that the lawyer originally believed was legally proper but later discovers is criminal, fraudulent, or the violation of any rule, law, or ruling of a tribunal. In any event, the lawyer shall not violate his or her duty of protecting all confidential information as provided in Rule 1.6 and Business and Professions Code section 6068(e). When a lawyer has been retained with respect to client conduct described in paragraph (d)(1), the lawyer shall limit his or her actions to those that appear to the lawyer to be in the best lawful interest of the client, including counseling the client about possible corrective or remedial action. In some cases, the lawyer's response is limited to the lawyer's right and, where appropriate, duty to resign or withdraw in accordance with Rule 1.16.
- [11] Paragraph (d)(2) authorizes a lawyer to counsel or assist a client to make a good faith effort to determine the validity, scope, meaning or application of a law, rule or ruling of a tribunal. Determining the validity, scope, meaning or application of a law, rule, or ruling of a tribunal in good faith may require a course of action involving disobedience of the law, rule, or ruling of a tribunal, or of the meaning placed upon it by governmental authorities. Paragraph (d)(2) also authorizes a lawyer to advise a client on the consequences of violating a law, rule, or ruling of a tribunal the client does not contend is unenforceable or unjust in itself, as a means of protesting a law or policy the client finds objectionable. For example, a lawyer may properly advise a client about the consequences of blocking the entrance to a public building as a means of protesting a law or policy the client believes to be unjust.

- [12] If a lawyer comes to know or reasonably should know that a client expects assistance not permitted by these Rules or other law or if the lawyer intends to act contrary to the client's instructions, the lawyer must consult with the client regarding the limitations on the lawyer's conduct. See Rule 1.4(a)(6).

Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 6 Agree = 3
Disagree = 2
Modify = 1
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
1	California Public Defenders Association ("CPDA") [Garrick Byers]	M	Yes	1.2(a)	The commenter requests that a new comment be added to clarify the last sentence of paragraph (a) of the Rule, which provides: Except as otherwise provided by law in a criminal case, the lawyer shall abide by the client's decision, after consultation with the lawyer, as to a plea to be entered, whether to waive jury trial and whether the client will testify. Because many prosecutors and criminal defense lawyers (and judges) do not know of the basic California law concerning waiver of jury trial, the commenter requests the addition of the following comment: California Constitution article I, section 16, first paragraph, second sentence, provides that "A jury may be waived in a criminal cause by the consent of both parties expressed in open court by the defendant and the defendant's counsel." The commenter also requests the addition of a reference to the leading California treatise on criminal law, as follows: "See, generally, 5	The Commission agrees in part with the request and has added a reference in Comment [1] to the relevant section of the Constitution. The Commission, however, declines to add a reference to the cited treatise because the Rules style does not permit references to such secondary sources.

¹ A = AGREE with proposed Rule

D = DISAGREE with proposed Rule

M = AGREE ONLY IF MODIFIED

NI = NOT INDICATED

Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 6 Agree = 3
Disagree = 2
Modify = 1
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					Witkin & Epstein, California Criminal Law (3d Ed., 2000), Ch. XIV, §§ 452 – 459 ("Waiver of Right [to Jury Trial]")."
2	HALT, Inc. – An Organization of Americans for Legal Reform	A	Yes		The commenter strongly supports the Commission's acceptance of the ABA Model Rule in Proposed Rule 1.2. An attorney works for a client, and has an ethical responsibility to allow the client to make the important decisions in a matter. The commenter supports the Commission's recognition of a lawyer's obligation to "abide by a client's decisions concerning the objectives of representation" and to "abide by a client's decision whether to settle a matter" (Proposed Rule 1.2(a)). In addition, the commenter has long advocated limited representation as a cost-saving innovation that enhances consumer choice. We strongly support the Commission's explicit authorization of this practice (Proposed Rule 1.2(c)).	No response required.
3	Office of Chief Trial Counsel ("OCTC")	M	Yes		OCTC is concerned that subparagraphs (a) and (b), although in the Model Rules, are not rules subject to discipline and, thus, do not belong in the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, OCTC believes that the concepts in subparagraphs (a) and (b) are already implicitly included in the rules regarding competence and the duty to communicate.	The Commission disagrees with the commenter's position. The Rule not only provides understandable disciplinary standards in paragraphs (a) and (d), the latter of which simply carries forward current rule 3-210, but also provides important guidance to lawyers in their relationships with clients.

Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 6
Agree = 3
Disagree = 2
Modify = 1
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					OCTC is concerned that, while subparagraph (c) permits limited scope representations if the limitation is reasonable under the circumstances, it does not specifically prohibit limited scope representations when they are not permitted by law. (In the Matter of Valinoti (Review Dept. 2002) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 498, 520-521.) While Comment 8 states this, it should be in the rule, not just a Comment. OCTC believes that the consent in paragraph (c) should be in writing or at least by written documentation, not just informed consent. This would protect both the client and the attorney and impress upon the client the limitation and the importance of the limitation. This is not more than is being required when the attorney informs the client that he or she does not have professional liability insurance or when an attorney enters into a true retainer agreement. (See e.g. proposed rules 1.4.1 and 1.5(e).) Given that limited scope representation is an important exception, it	The Commission disagrees. OCTC's proposals regarding paragraph (c) and comment [8] do not appear to reflect the views repeatedly expressed by Supreme Court Justice George, the Judicial Council, the Access to Justice Commission and others. Limited scope representation is not prohibited unless there is an exception allowing for such representation. Rather, it is permitted unless specifically prohibited or other duties have been imposed. The OCTC's reading of Valinoti appears overbroad and inconsistent with the goal of access to justice. Nevertheless, the Commission agrees with OCTC's suggestion regarding comment [8] and has added to Comment [7] guidance regarding duties attendant to limited scope representation. The Commission disagrees. The Commission voted unanimously to adopt the rule which is consistent with the Board of Governors resolution concerning limited scope representation. It does not appear that limited scope/discrete task representation is an "adverse" interest or "conflict" that necessitates requiring "written" consent. To some extent, all representations have a limit to the scope. For example, someone providing only "ethics advice" limits the scope of the representation to this area and would not necessarily have the expertise to suggest any or all of the civil/procedural implications of the advice given.

Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 6 Agree = 3 Disagree = 2 Modify = 1 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					would be better policy and more enforceable to require that it be in writing. OCTC agrees with paragraph (d)'s broadening of current rule 3-210 to include criminal and fraudulent conduct as well as any law, rule, or ruling. However, subparagraph (d), unlike rule 3-210, does not specifically provide for the defense of good faith or appropriate steps. Good faith is generally not a defense to a violation of a Rule of Professional Conduct. (See In the Matter of Broderick (Review Dept. 1994) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rpt. 138, 148; Zitny v. State Bar, supra, 64 Cal.2d at 793.) While the Commission's Comments show that it intends to keep a good faith defense, Comments are not rules or authority and OCTC believes that if the Commission wants this defense it should be in the rule and not in a comment. OCTC is concerned with Comments [1] and [2]'s statement that an attorney is required to consult with the client regarding the means by which the attorney handles the client's matter. These Comments appear to be overbroad and could be interpreted to change current law. It has never been that the attorney must consult (or advise) on every step and action, just the significant ones.	The Commission disagrees. Paragraph (d)(2) uses the Model Rule language and provides in part that a lawyer "may counsel or assist a client to make a good faith effort to determine the validity, scope, meaning or application of a law, rule, or ruling of a tribunal." (emphasis added). Whether it is the lawyer who "takes appropriate steps in good faith" to test the validity of any law, etc., or it is the lawyer who "counsel[s] or assist[s] the client to make a good faith effort" is immaterial. They mean precisely the same thing. If anything, the Model Rule language better reflects that the lawyer may take such steps only with the knowledge and consent of the client. The Commission disagrees. See Response to COPRAC, above. In addition, the Commission has included a cross-reference to Rule 1.4(a)(2), which requires that a lawyer "reasonably consult with the client about the means by which to accomplish the client's objectives in the representation." The lawyer does not have to consult with the client about every matter related to the representation.

Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 6 Agree = 3 Disagree = 2 Modify = 1 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					OCTC is concerned that nowhere in the Comments are attorneys advised that the courts have found that even where the scope of the representation is expressly limited, the attorney may still have a duty to alert the client to reasonable apparent legal problems outside the scope of the representation. (See Janik v. Rudy, Exelrod & Zieff (2004) 119 Cal.App.4th 930, 940.) The rest of the Comments seem more appropriate in other forums, such as treatises, law reviews, and ethics opinions.	The Commission has included the following statement at the end of Comment [7]: Even where the scope of representation is expressly limited, the lawyer may still have a duty to alert the client to reasonably apparent legal problems outside the scope of representation. The foregoing should address OCTC's concern. As the Commission has noted with respect to other Rules, the comments are an important part of the Rules modeled on the ABA Model Rules, providing clarification of the black letter and guidance to lawyers on how to be in compliance with their professional obligations.
4	Orange County Bar Association	D	Yes		We oppose the Commission's proposed Rule 1.2 and support the adoption of ABA Model Rule 1.2. Propose changing paragraph (d)(1) of the Model Rule by adding "or a violation of any law, rule, or ruling of a tribunal" after "fraudulent," and by adding "rule or ruling of a tribunal" at the end of paragraph (d)(2) after "law."	The Commission disagrees with the commenter's concerns about the language that has been added to paragraphs (d)(1) and (d)(2). As already noted, it carries forward the language in current rule 3-210, which the commenter has not asserted has caused any problems for lawyers or the courts. It thus provides continuity with current California law.

Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 6 Agree = 3 Disagree = 2 Modify = 1 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					We believe the additional language proposed by the Commission may introduce a degree of ambiguity into the rule, and may make it overbroad and difficult to enforce, inasmuch as the added language could be construed to encompass rules and rulings of tribunals having no jurisdiction over the particular cause at issue. The added language may be unnecessary, because the remedies of contempt and sanctions are available for violations of a tribunal's rules and rulings by those practitioners before that tribunal. The Commission's response expressed disagreement with the OCBA's position, but the only reason given was that the language of Proposed Rule 1.2(d)(1) adopts the language of current Rule 3-120. The objections raised by the OCBA do not appear to have been addressed. OCBA recommends that Comment [5] be stricken in its entirety. Comment [5] purports to relate to paragraph (b) of the Proposed Rule. Paragraph (b) states that a lawyer's representation of a client "does not constitute an endorsement of the client's political, economic, social or moral views or activities." The first sentence of Comment [5] states that	The Commission again disagrees with the commenter's concerns. The first sentence of Comment [5] provides important clarification of paragraph (b). Paragraph (b) simply states that a lawyer's representation of a client "does not constitute an endorsement of the client's political, economic, social or moral views or activities." Comment [5] then links the concepts that because

Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 6 Agree = 3
Disagree = 2
Modify = 1
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					legal representation should not be denied to people “who are unable to afford legal service.” This statement is not germane to the language of paragraph (b), which has nothing to do with ability to pay for legal services. Moreover, this part of the Comment could be construed as creating an obligation to provide legal services with little or no compensation. The rest of the Comment merely restates paragraph (b), and is thus unnecessary. The Commission’s response expressed disagreement with OCBA’s position, on the grounds that Comment [5] is identical to Comment [5] for Model Rule 1.2, and it is consistent with the legislative policy of B&P Code section 6068(h). The OCBA believes that if Comment [5] is not stricken, it should at least be modified to clarify that Rule 1.2(d)(2) does not create any obligation for a particular individual attorney to provide legal services to any particular client for little or no compensation, but rather provides a general goal that clients in general not be denied legal services by the legal community as a whole on the basis of inability to pay.	such a representation does not constitute an endorsement, a lawyer should not raise that possibility as a reason to refuse services to individuals because of their views or activities. As to the commenter’s concern with the reference to “ability to pay,” the Commission disagrees that the phrase could be interpreted as possibly creating an obligation to provide legal services with little or no compensation. Rather, the phrase recognizes that those whose views might be considered offensive are often the ones who are likely not to have the resources necessary to retain a lawyer.
5	San Diego County Bar Association Legal Ethics Committee	A	Yes		We approve the new rule in its entirety.	No response required.

Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 6 Agree = 3 Disagree = 2 Modify = 1 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
6	Santa Clara County Bar Association	A	Yes	1.2(c)	We approve as proposed with the exception of subsection (c), where "informed consent" should be "informed written consent."	The Commission disagrees. The Commission voted unanimously to adopt the rule which is consistent with the Board of Governors resolution. It does not appear that limited scope/discrete task representation is an "adverse" interest or "conflict" that necessitates requiring "written" consent. To some extent, all representations have a limit to the scope. For example, someone providing only "ethics advice" limits the scope of the representation to this area and would not necessarily have the expertise to suggest any or all of the civil/procedural implications of the advice given. Requiring written consent would operate as an impediment to access to justice. It places a burden on legal services attorneys and attorneys who might be willing to undertake a discrete task for a small fee, if they must also create a writing in every such matter as well. This would have a chilling effect and deter attorneys who may be making little or no money. Public protection will not be compromised since attorneys will have the burden of demonstrating that they have obtained "informed consent" - they may choose the obvious method of a writing - but it should not be discipline if they do not. Other jurisdictions have not included such a requirement.

Rule 1.2 Scope of Representation. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 6 Agree = 3 Disagree = 2 Modify = 1 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comment [8]	Add to Comment [8] language that would clarify that county counsel is governed by Government Code 999 et. seq., which gives them greater authority in limiting the scope of their representation in certain situations such as settlements. Specifically, the following is suggested: "A government lawyer's authority and control over decisions concerning the representation may, by statute or regulation, be expanded beyond the limits imposed by paragraphs (a) and (c). See for example, Cal. Gov. Code Sections, 825; 995; 996." This language is the same that is used by the District of Columbia in modifying the ABA Model Rule version.	The Commission did not make the requested change. The Commission has revised the Model Rule language from which proposed Comment [8] is derived to add reference to generally-applicable Rules of Court concerning limited scope representation. Moreover, that comment already states that "[a]ll agreements concerning a lawyer's representation of a client must accord with the Rules of Professional Conduct and other law," which would include the referenced Government Code sections.

Rule 1.2: Scope of Representation and Allocation of Authority Between Client and Lawyer

STATE VARIATIONS

(The following is an excerpt from Regulation of Lawyers: Statutes and Standards (2010 Ed.)
by Steven Gillers, Roy D. Simon and Andrew M. Perlman.)

Alaska: In the rules effective April 15, 2009, Rule 1.2(a) states as follows: “In a criminal case the lawyer shall abide by the client’s decision . . . whether to take an appeal.”

California: Rule 3-210 (Advising the Violation of Law) provides: “A member shall not advise the violation of any law, rule, or ruling of a tribunal unless the member believes in good faith that such law, rule, or ruling is invalid. A member may take appropriate steps in good faith to test the validity of any law, rule, or ruling of a tribunal.” Business & Professions Code 6068(c) requires lawyers to “counsel or maintain those actions, proceedings, or defenses only as appear to him or her legal or just” except in defending a criminal case. In addition, §283 of the California Code of Civil Procedure gives a lawyer express statutory authority to bind a client in certain situations.

Colorado: Rule 1.2(a) and (c) and the Comment to Rule 1.2 encourage “limited representation” of pro se clients. Rule 1.2(c) provides that a lawyer may limit the scope or objectives, “or both,” of the representation if the client consents after consultation, and a lawyer “may provide limited representation to pro se parties as permitted by C.R.C.P. 11(b) and C.R.C.P. 311(b).” The Comments to Colorado Rules 4.2 and 4.3 provide that a pro se party who is receiving “limited representation” is considered “unrepresented” for purposes of Rules 4.2 and 4.3.

Connecticut: Connecticut adds the following sentence to the end of Rule 1.2(a):

Subject to revocation by the client and to the terms of the contract, a client’s decision to settle a matter shall be implied where the lawyer is retained to represent the client by a third party obligated under the terms of a contract to provide the client with a defense and indemnity for the loss, and the third party elects to settle a matter without contribution by the client.

In addition, Connecticut adds to Rule 1.2(c) that a client's informed consent to limit the scope of a representation "shall not be required when a client cannot be located despite reasonable efforts where the lawyer is retained to represent a client by a third party which is obligated by contract to provide the client with a defense." An "Amendment Note" explains that these revisions "address the situation where an insured/client cannot be located despite diligent and good faith efforts by both the lawyer and the insurer."

District of Columbia: D.C. Rule 1.2 generally tracks the ABA Model Rule, but adds a paragraph (d) providing that a "government lawyer's authority and control over decisions concerning the representation may, by statute or regulation, be expanded beyond the limits imposed by paragraphs (a) and (c)." D.C. Rule 1.2(f) — formerly 1.2(e) — retains language that the ABA deleted in 2002.

Florida adds the words "or reasonably should know" in Rule 1.2(d). In addition, Florida's Statement of Client's Rights, which must be provided to every contingent fee client (see Florida Rule 4-1.5(f)), provides that "[y]ou, the client, have the right to make the final decision regarding settlement of a case. . . ."

Illinois: In the rules effective January 1, 2010, Illinois adds Rule 1.2(e), which provides that, "[a]fter accepting employment on behalf of a client, a lawyer shall not thereafter delegate to another lawyer not in the lawyer's firm the responsibility for performing or completing that employment, without the client's informed consent." Comment 14 offers the following explanation:

The prohibition stated in paragraph (e) has existed in Illinois ethics rules and in the prior Code since 1980. It is intended to curtail abuses that occasionally occur when a lawyer attempts to transfer complete or substantial responsibility for a matter to an unaffiliated lawyer without the client's awareness or consent. . . . The Rule is not intended to prohibit lawyers from hiring lawyers outside of their firm to perform certain services on the client's or the law firm's behalf. Nor is it intended to prevent lawyers from engaging lawyers outside of their firm to stand in for discrete events in situations such as personal emergencies, illness or schedule conflicts.

Massachusetts: Rule 1.2(a) provides that a lawyer "does not violate this rule . . . by acceding to reasonable requests of opposing counsel which do not prejudice the rights of his or her client, by being punctual in fulfilling all professional commitments, by avoiding offensive tactics, or by treating with courtesy and consideration all persons involved in the legal process."

Michigan deletes Rule 1.2(b) and adds the following sentence to Rule 1.2(a): “In representing a client, a lawyer may, where permissible, exercise professional judgment to waive or fail to assert a right or position of the client.” Where the official ABA Comment to Rule 1.2 refers to “criminal or fraudulent conduct,” the Michigan Comment refers to “illegal or fraudulent conduct.” Michigan places the substance of Rule 1.2(b) in the Comment to Rule 1.2.

Missouri: Rule 1.2(c) permits the unbundling of legal services, providing as follows:

A lawyer may limit the scope of representation if the client gives informed consent in a writing signed by the client to the essential terms of the representation and the lawyer’s limited role. Use of a written notice and consent form substantially similar to that contained in the comment to this Rule 4-1.2 creates the presumptions:

(a) the representation is limited to the lawyer and the services described in the form, and (b) the lawyer does not represent the client generally or in any matters other than those identified in the form. . . .”

Missouri also retains Rule 1.2(e) from the 1983 version of ABA Model Rule 1.2 (“When a lawyer knows that a client expects assistance not permitted by the rules of professional conduct or other law, the lawyer shall consult with the client regarding the relevant limitations on the lawyer’s conduct.”).

New Hampshire: Rule 1.2(e) provides as follows:

(e) It is not inconsistent with the lawyer’s duty to seek the lawful objectives of a client through reasonably available means, for the lawyer to accede to reasonable requests of opposing counsel that do not prejudice the rights of the client, avoid the use of offensive or dilatory tactics, or treat opposing counsel or an opposing party with civility.

New Hampshire also adds Rule 1.2(f) to govern “limited representation to a client who is or may become involved in” litigation, and adds a detailed sample form for “Consent to Limited Representation” in a Rule 1.2(g).

New Mexico specifies in Rule 16-303(E) that a lawyer must disclose to a tribunal if the lawyer is representing the client in a “limited manner.”

New York: In the rules effective April 1, 2009, New York adds Rule 1.2(e)-(g), which is based on DR 7-101 of the old ABA Model Code. Comment 10 elaborates on what a lawyer must do when a client has undertaken an illegal or fraudulent course of action and “the representation will result in violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct or other law....” Under these circumstances, “the lawyer must advise the client of any relevant limitation on the lawyer’s conduct and remonstrate with the client. See Rules 1.4(a)(5) and 1.16(b)(1). Persuading a client to take necessary preventive or corrective action that will bring the client’s conduct within the bounds of the law is a challenging but appropriate endeavor. If the client fails to take necessary corrective action and the lawyer’s continued representation would assist client conduct that is illegal or fraudulent, the lawyer is required to withdraw.”

North Carolina: Rule 1.2(a)(2) and (3) add language taken from DR 7-101(A)(1) and DR 7-101(B)(1) of the ABA Model Code of Professional Responsibility, and Rule 1.2(c) omits the ABA requirement that the client give informed consent.

Ohio: Rule 1.2(c) provides:

A lawyer who undertakes representation of a client, other than by court appointment, shall confirm in writing, within a reasonable time, the nature and scope of the representation, unless the lawyer has regularly represented the client or the anticipated fee from the representation is $500.00 or less. A lawyer may limit the scope of a new or existing representation if the limitation is reasonable under the circumstances and communicated to the client in writing.

Texas omits ABA Model Rule 1.2(b). See also Texas Rule 1.05 and the annotations following Rule 1.6 below.

Virginia has moved the language of Rule 1.2(b) to Comment 3, and Virginia’s Comment 1 requires lawyers to “advise the client about the advantages, disadvantages and availability of dispute resolution processes that might be appropriate in pursuing” the client’s objectives. Virginia Rule 1.2(d) provides that a “lawyer may take such action on behalf of the client as is impliedly authorized to carry out the representation.”

Wisconsin adds Rule 1.2(e) to clarify the obligations of counsel for an insurer.

Proposed Rule 1.4 [RPC 3-500, 3-510]
“Communication”
(XDraft #9, 6/27/10)

Summary: Proposed Rule 1.4 sets forth a lawyer’s duties to keep a client informed of significant developments in the representation, including offers of settlement. It largely tracks Model Rule 1.4 but retains concepts found in current California rules 3-500 and 3-510, as well as Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 6068(m) and 6103.5.

Comparison with ABA Counterpart

Rule	Comment
☒ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected	☒ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
☐ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule	☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule	☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart	☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

Primary Factors Considered

- ☐ Existing California Law

Rule

RPC 3-500, 3-510

Statute

Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 6068(m) and 6103.5.

Case law

- ☐ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

- ☐ Other Primary Factor(s)

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(13 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 13 due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Less than Six Members Opposing Public Comment Distribution ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 9
Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 1
Abstain 1

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by consensus ☐

Minority/Dissenting Position Included on Model Rule Comparison Chart: ☐ Yes ☒ No

Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

☒ No Known Stakeholders

☐ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

☐ Very Controversial – Explanation:

☐ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

☒ Not Controversial

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.4* Communication

July 2010

(Draft rule revised following consideration of final round of public comment)

INTRODUCTION:

Proposed Rule 1.4 tracks Model Rule 1.4 with some notable exceptions. The proposed Rule differs from the Model Rule in that it clarifies that a lawyer must consult with a client concerning accomplishing the client's objectives only as they relate to the representation. The proposed Rule also limits the duty to keep the client informed by requiring the lawyer to do so only as to significant developments relating to the representation; this change conforms the Rule to the language of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(m). Model Rule 1.4 provides broader obligations insofar as it requires the lawyer to “keep the client reasonably informed about the status of the matter” generally. The draft Rule also requires that a lawyer promptly comply with reasonable client requests for information.

There is no Model Rule counterpart to paragraph (c), which incorporates the general requirements in current Rule 3-510 that pertain to the specific duty of communications of settlement offers in criminal and civil matters. As to civil matters, retention of current rule 3-510 conforms proposed Rule 1.4 to Bus. & Prof. Code § 6103.5. The Commission determined that retaining these specific provisions will enhance public protection by clearly delineating a lawyer's duty when presented with offers to settle.

State Variations. Every state has adopted some version of Model Rule 1.4, with limited variations, mostly related to duties concerning communications regarding settlement or plea offers. See, e.g., Ariz. Rule 1.4(c), D.C. Rule 1.4(c); Michigan Rule 1.4(a). See Selected State Variations, Rule 1.4, from Gillers, Simon & Perlman, REGULATION OF LAWYERS: STATUTES AND STANDARDS (2010), attached.

* Proposed Rule 1.4, XDraft 9 (6/27/10).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.4 Communication	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.4 Communication	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(a) A lawyer shall: (1) promptly inform the client of any decision or circumstance with respect to which the client's informed consent, as defined in Rule 1.0(e), is required by these Rules;	(a) A lawyer shall: (1) promptly inform the client of any decision or circumstance with respect to which written disclosure or the client's informed consent, as defined in Rule 1.0(e), is required by these Rules or the State Bar Act;	Subparagraph (a)(1) is based on Model Rule 1.4(a)(1). The Commission has added "written disclosure" to the Model Rule language because, under some California rules, disclosure and not informed consent is required, and it is just as important to promptly provide the client with an appropriate disclosure. The addition of "the State Bar Act" emphasizes that a lawyer also has duties under that Act.
(2) reasonably consult with the client about the means by which the client's objectives are to be accomplished;	(2) reasonably consult with the client about the means by which to accomplish the client's objectives ~~are to be accomplished~~ in the representation;	Subparagraph (a)(2) is based on Model Rule 1.4(a)(2). Proposed subparagraph (a)(2) differs from the Model Rule in that it clarifies that a lawyer's duty is limited to consultations with the client concerning accomplishing the client's objectives only as they relate to the representation. This change also conforms the language of the Rule to Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(m). In addition, proposed subparagraph (a)(2) is in the active voice to conform to California rules style. See, Bryan A. Garner, GUIDELINES FOR DRAFTING AND EDITING COURT RULES (1996). No change in substance is intended.

* Proposed Rule 1.4, XDraft 9 (6/27/10). Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.4 Communication	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.4 Communication	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(3) keep the client reasonably informed about the status of the matter;	(3) keep the client reasonably informed about significant developments relating to the~~status of the matter~~ representation;	Subparagraph (a)(3) diverges from Model Rule 1.4(a)(3) in that it limits the duty to keep the client reasonably informed only as to significant developments relating to the representation. Model Rule 1.4 provides broader obligations insofar as it requires the lawyer to "keep the client reasonably informed about the status of the matter" generally. As previously noted, limiting the lawyers' obligations to developments "relating to the representation" conforms the Rule to Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(m). A majority of the Commission believe that the ABA standard is somewhat vague and that retaining the "significant developments" standard found in current rule 3-500 provides better guidance to lawyers as to their duty without unduly restricting clients' access to information about their matters. For an explanation of what is intended by "significant development," see proposed Comment [1].
(4) promptly comply with reasonable requests for information; and	(4) promptly comply with reasonable requests for information;~~and~~	Subparagraph (a)(4) is identical to Model Rule 1.4(a)(4).
	(5) promptly comply with reasonable client requests for access to significant documents necessary to keep the client reasonably informed about significant developments relating to the representation, which the lawyer may satisfy by permitting the client to inspect the documents or by furnishing copies of the documents to the client; and	Subparagraph (a)(5) has no counterpart in the Model Rule. Its concept, however, can be found in current rule 3-500 and Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(m), which include the requirement that a lawyer promptly comply "with reasonable requests for information and copies of significant documents when necessary to keep the client [reasonably] informed." The last clause of the subparagraph specifies that a lawyer can achieve compliance by permitting inspection. See also Comment [2] concerning compliance with this subparagraph by providing the client with electronic copies.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.4 Communication	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.4 Communication	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(5) consult with the client about any relevant limitation on the lawyer's conduct when the lawyer knows that the client expects assistance not permitted by the Rules of Professional Conduct or other law.	~~(5)~~(6) consult with the client about any relevant limitation on the lawyer's conduct when the lawyer knows that the client expects assistance not permitted by ~~the~~these Rules ~~of Professional Conduct~~ or other law.	Subparagraph (a)(6) is identical to Model Rule 1.4(a)(5), except that "these Rules," a California rules style convention, has been substituted for "the Rules of Professional Conduct." Although the Model Rules use "these Rules" and "the Rules of Professional Conduct" interchangeably, the Commission consistently uses "these Rules."
(b) A lawyer shall explain a matter to the extent reasonably necessary to permit the client to make informed decisions regarding the representation.	(b) A lawyer shall explain a matter to the extent reasonably necessary to permit the client to make informed decisions regarding the representation.	Paragraph (b) is identical to Model Rule 1.4(b).
	(c) A lawyer shall promptly communicate to the lawyer's client: (1) all terms and conditions of any offer made to the client in a criminal matter; and (2) all amounts, terms, and conditions of any written offer of settlement made to the client in all other matters.	Paragraph (c) has no counterpart in the Model Rule. The Commission included in this draft rule (as subparagraphs (c)(1) and (2)), the requirements in current rule 3-510, which pertain to the specific duty of communications of settlement offers in criminal and civil matters. It was determined that retaining these specific sections will enhance public protection by clearly delineating a lawyer's duty when presented with offers to settle. The Commission believes including this requirement in the Rule itself is preferable to the hortatory language of Model Rule 1.4, cmt. [2]. With respect to written offers of settlement in civil matters, paragraph (c) conforms the Rule to Bus. & Prof. Code § 6103.5.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.4 Communication Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.4 Communication Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[1] Reasonable communication between the lawyer and the client is necessary for the client effectively to participate in the representation.	~~[1] Reasonable communication between the lawyer and the client is necessary for the client effectively to participate in the representation.~~	The Commission recommends not adopting MR 1.4, cmt. [1], because it is unnecessary exposition.
Communicating with Client [2] If these Rules require that a particular decision about the representation be made by the client, paragraph (a)(1) requires that the lawyer promptly consult with and secure the client's consent prior to taking action unless prior discussions with the client have resolved what action the client wants the lawyer to take. For example, a lawyer who receives from opposing counsel an offer of settlement in a civil controversy or a proffered plea bargain in a criminal case must promptly inform the client of its substance unless the client has previously indicated that the proposal will be acceptable or unacceptable or has authorized the lawyer to accept or to reject the offer. See Rule 1.2(a).	~~Communicating with Client~~ ~~[2] If these Rules require that a particular decision about the representation be made by the client, paragraph (a)(1) requires that the lawyer promptly consult with and secure the client's consent prior to taking action unless prior discussions with the client have resolved what action the client wants the lawyer to take. For example, a lawyer who receives from opposing counsel an offer of settlement in a civil controversy or a proffered plea bargain in a criminal case must promptly inform the client of its substance unless the client has previously indicated that the proposal will be acceptable or unacceptable or has authorized the lawyer to accept or to reject the offer. See Rule 1.2(a).~~	The Commission recommends not adopting MR 1.4, cmt. [2]. It determined that the concept of the first sentence of MR 1.4, cmt. [2] is better placed in the Rule itself. See Explanation of Changes for paragraph (c). The Commission has moved the concept encompassed by the second sentence of MR 1.4, cmt. [2] to the second sentence of proposed Comment [6], below.
[3] Paragraph (a)(2) requires the lawyer to reasonably consult with the client about the means to be used to accomplish the client's objectives. In some situations — depending on both the importance of the action under consideration and the feasibility of consulting with the client — this duty will require consultation prior to taking action. In other circumstances, such as during a trial when an	~~[3] Paragraph (a)(2) requires the lawyer to reasonably consult with the client about the means to be used to accomplish the client's objectives. In some situations — depending on both the importance of the action under consideration and the feasibility of consulting with the client — this duty will require consultation prior to taking action. In other circumstances, such as during a trial when an~~	The Commission recommends not adopting the language of MR 1.4, cmt. [3]. Instead, the Commission recommends the adoption of proposed Comment [1], below, which is a more accurate statement of the lawyer's duties under paragraphs (a)(2) and (a)(3). See Explanation of Changes for proposed Comment [1], below.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.4 Communication Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.4 Communication Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
immediate decision must be made, the exigency of the situation may require the lawyer to act without prior consultation. In such cases the lawyer must nonetheless act reasonably to inform the client of actions the lawyer has taken on the client's behalf. Additionally, paragraph (a)(3) requires that the lawyer keep the client reasonably informed about the status of the matter, such as significant developments affecting the timing or the substance of the representation.	~~immediate decision must be made, the exigency of the situation may require the lawyer to act without prior consultation. In such cases the lawyer must nonetheless act reasonably to inform the client of actions the lawyer has taken on the client's behalf. Additionally, paragraph (a)(3) requires that the lawyer keep the client reasonably informed about the status of the matter, such as significant developments affecting the timing or the substance of the representation.~~
[4] A lawyer's regular communication with clients will minimize the occasions on which a client will need to request information concerning the representation. When a client makes a reasonable request for information, however, paragraph (a)(4) requires prompt compliance with the request, or if a prompt response is not feasible, that the lawyer, or a member of the lawyer's staff, acknowledge receipt of the request and advise the client when a response may be expected. Client telephone calls should be promptly returned or acknowledged.	~~[4] A lawyer's regular communication with clients will minimize the occasions on which a client will need to request information concerning the representation. When a client makes a reasonable request for information, however, paragraph (a)(4) requires prompt compliance with the request, or if a prompt response is not feasible, that the lawyer, or a member of the lawyer's staff, acknowledge receipt of the request and advise the client when a response may be expected. Client telephone calls should be promptly returned or acknowledged.~~	The Commission recommends not adopting MR 1.4, cmt. [4] because paragraph (a)(4) is self-explanatory, rendering the Model Rule comment unnecessary exposition.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.4 Communication Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.4 Communication Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	[1] Whether a particular development is significant will generally depend upon the surrounding facts and circumstances. For example, a change in lawyer personnel might be a significant development depending on whether responsibility for overseeing the client's work is being changed, whether the new attorney will be performing a significant portion or aspect of the work, and whether staffing is being changed from what was promised to the client. Other examples of significant developments may include the receipt of a demand for further discovery or a threat of sanctions, a change in a criminal abstract of judgment or re-calculation of custody credits, and the loss or theft of information concerning the client's identity or information concerning the matter for which representation is being provided. Depending upon the circumstances, a lawyer may also be obligated pursuant to paragraphs (a)(2) or (a)(3) to communicate with the client concerning the opportunity to engage in, and the advantages and disadvantages of, alternative dispute resolution processes. Conversely, examples of developments or circumstances that generally are not significant include the payment of a motion fee and the application for or granting of an extension of time for a time period that does not materially prejudice the client's interest.	Comment [1] is based on the concepts in MR 1.4, cmt. [3], but it is a more accurate statement of the lawyer's duties under paragraphs (a)(2) and (a)(3). Comment [1], by providing illustrative examples, is intended to give guidance to lawyers in determining what constitutes a "significant development relating to the representation" within the meaning of (a) (3). One of the examples included is whether an opportunity to engage in alternative dispute resolution constitutes a significant development under the circumstances then existing. There was strong sentiment expressed by the ADR community that the modern ubiquity of ADR justified it being included the text of the rule itself. Although the Model Rule does not limit communications to "significant developments," there is a reference to "significant developments" in MR 1.4, cmt. [3].

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.4 Communication Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.4 Communication Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	[2] A lawyer may comply with paragraph (a)(5) by providing to the client copies of significant documents by electronic or other means. A lawyer may agree with the client that the client assumes responsibility for the cost of copying significant documents the lawyer provides pursuant to paragraph (a)(5). A lawyer must comply with paragraph (a)(5) without regard to whether the client has complied with an obligation to pay the lawyer's fees and costs. This Rule does not prohibit a claim for the recovery of the member's expense in any subsequent legal proceeding.	Comment [2] has no counterpart in the Model Rule because it is concerned with a rule provision without a Model Rule counterpart. The comment clarifies how the costs of providing "significant documents" to the client may be allocated. It also clarifies that even where the costs are to be borne by the client, the failure of the client to pay does not relieve the lawyer of the lawyer's obligations under (a)(5).
Explaining Matters [5] The client should have sufficient information to participate intelligently in decisions concerning the objectives of the representation and the means by which they are to be pursued, to the extent the client is willing and able to do so. Adequacy of communication depends in part on the kind of advice or assistance that is involved. For example, when there is time to explain a proposal made in a negotiation, the lawyer should review all important provisions with the client before proceeding to an agreement. In litigation a lawyer should explain the general strategy and prospects of success and ordinarily should consult the client on tactics that are likely to result in significant expense or to injure or coerce others. On the other hand, a lawyer ordinarily	~~Explaining Matters~~ ~~[5] The client should have sufficient information to participate intelligently in decisions concerning the objectives of the representation and the means by which they are to be pursued, to the extent the client is willing and able to do so. Adequacy of communication depends in part on the kind of advice or assistance that is involved. For example, when there is time to explain a proposal made in a negotiation, the lawyer should review all important provisions with the client before proceeding to an agreement. In litigation a lawyer should explain the general strategy and prospects of success and ordinarily should consult the client on tactics that are likely to result in significant expense or to injure or coerce others. On the other hand, a lawyer ordinarily~~	The Commission recommends only the first sentence of Model Rule 1.4, cmt. [5] as accurately reflecting California law and explaining the Rule. The second sentence is not helpful without the examples that follow. The third sentence is an incorrect statement of law; a lawyer has no authority to accept an agreement without client consent. The fourth sentence relates to competence, not the lawyer's fiduciary duty of full disclosure. The fifth and sixth sentences of the comment are merely practice pointers.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.4 Communication Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.4 Communication Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
will not be expected to describe trial or negotiation strategy in detail. The guiding principle is that the lawyer should fulfill reasonable client expectations for information consistent with the duty to act in the client's best interests, and the client's overall requirements as to the character of representation. In certain circumstances, such as when a lawyer asks a client to consent to a representation affected by a conflict of interest, the client must give informed consent, as defined in Rule 1.0(e).	~~will not be expected to describe trial or negotiation strategy in detail. The guiding principle is that the lawyer should fulfill reasonable client expectations for information consistent with the duty to act in the client's best interests, and the client's overall requirements as to the character of representation. In certain circumstances, such as when a lawyer asks a client to consent to a representation affected by a conflict of interest, the client must give informed consent, as defined in Rule 1.0(e).~~
	[4] As used in paragraph (c), "client" includes: (i) a person who possesses the authority to accept an offer of settlement or plea, (ii) representatives of an organizational client authorized by the client to communicate with the lawyer regarding an offer of settlement or plea, or, (iii) in a class action, all the named representatives of the class.	Comment [4], which clarifies who is the "client" for purposes of this Rule, has no counterpart in the Model Rule. Nevertheless, the Commission deemed this clarification necessary guidance for lawyers handling representative matters and matters where the lawyer reports to more than one person on behalf of an represented entity.
	[5] Because of the liberty interests involved in a criminal matter, paragraph (c)(1) requires that counsel in a criminal matter convey to the client all offers, whether written or oral. As used in this Rule, "criminal matters" includes all legal proceedings where violations of criminal laws are alleged, and liberty interests are involved, including juvenile proceedings.	Comments [5], [6] and [7] clarify a lawyer's duties concerning the communication of settlement offers. A carryover from current rule 3-510, it requires that in criminal matters, all offers, whether made orally or in writing, must be communicated. The second sentence has been added to clarify that although juvenile proceedings are not technically considered "criminal matters," the same duty of communication as in criminal cases is imposed on lawyers in juvenile proceedings.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.4 Communication Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.4 Communication Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	[6] Paragraph (c)(2) requires a lawyer to advise a client promptly of all written settlement offers, regardless of whether the offers are considered by the lawyer to be significant. Notwithstanding paragraph (c)(2), a lawyer need not inform the client of the substance of a written offer of a settlement in a civil matter if the client has previously instructed that such an offer will be acceptable or unacceptable, or has previously authorized the lawyer to accept or to reject the offer, and there has been no change in circumstances that requires the lawyer to consult with the client. See Rule 1.2(a).	Comment [6] clarifies under what circumstances written offers to settle in civil matters must be communicated. The last sentence of Comment [6] incorporates the concept in the last sentence of Model Rule 1.4, cmt. [2]. The language has been revised to recognize that the lawyer must consider whether circumstances have changed before invoking the client's pre-settlement offer authority. This is an important qualification intended to protect the client's interests.
	[7] Any oral offers of settlement made to the client in a civil matter must also be communicated if they are significant.	Comment [7] has no counterpart in the Model Rule. A carryover provision from current rule 3-510, it clarifies when an oral settlement offer must be communicated, leaving it to the lawyers reasonable judgment whether such an offer is a "significant development."
[6] Ordinarily, the information to be provided is that appropriate for a client who is a comprehending and responsible adult. However, fully informing the client according to this standard may be impracticable, for example, where the client is a child or suffers from diminished capacity. See Rule 1.14. When the client is an organization or group, it is often impossible or inappropriate to inform every one of its members about its legal affairs; ordinarily, the lawyer should address communications to the appropriate officials	~~[6]~~ Ordinarily, the information to be provided is that appropriate for a client who is a comprehending and responsible adult. However, fully informing the client according to this standard may be impracticable, for example, where the client is a child or suffers from diminished capacity. See Rule 1.14. When the client is an organization or group, it is often impossible or inappropriate to inform every one of its members about its legal affairs; ordinarily, the lawyer should address communications to the appropriate officials	Comment [8] is identical to Model Rule 1.4, cmt. [6]

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.4 Communication Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.4 Communication Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
of the organization. See Rule 1.13. Where many routine matters are involved, a system of limited or occasional reporting may be arranged with the client.	of the organization. See Rule 1.13. Where many routine matters are involved, a system of limited or occasional reporting may be arranged with the client.
Withholding Information [7] In some circumstances, a lawyer may be justified in delaying transmission of information when the client would be likely to react imprudently to an immediate communication. Thus, a lawyer might withhold a psychiatric diagnosis of a client when the examining psychiatrist indicates that disclosure would harm the client. A lawyer may not withhold information to serve the lawyer's own interest or convenience or the interests or convenience of another person. Rules or court orders governing litigation may provide that information supplied to a lawyer may not be disclosed to the client. Rule 3.4(c) directs compliance with such rules or orders.	~~Withholding Information~~ ~~[7]~~ [9] In some circumstances, a lawyer may be justified in delaying or withholding transmission of information when the client would be likely to react imprudently to an immediate communication. ~~Thus~~ For example, a lawyer might withhold a psychiatric diagnosis of a client when the examining psychiatrist indicates that disclosure would harm the client. A lawyer may not withhold information to serve the lawyer's own interest or convenience or the interests or convenience of another person. ~~Rules or court orders governing litigation may provide that information supplied to~~ This Rule does not require a lawyer may not be disclosed to disclose to the a client. ~~Rule 3.4(c) directs compliance with such rules any information or document that a court order or orders non-disclosure agreement prohibits the lawyer from disclosing to that client.~~ This Rule is not intended to override applicable statutory or decisional law requiring that certain information not be provided to defendants in criminal cases who are clients of the lawyer. Compare Rule 1.16(e)(1) and Comment [9].	Comment [9] is based on MR 1.4, cmt. [7]. The phrase, "or withholding" has been added to clarify that under some circumstances, a lawyer may be obligated to withhold certain information from the client and not only delay its transmission. The Rule also clarifies that client disclosures must not violate court orders or other laws limiting or prohibiting client access to certain information or documents. It also cautions that the rule does not override legal requirements to make disclosures to criminal clients. The Commission has included a cross-reference to proposed Rule 1.16 and its comment, which provide similar guidance to lawyers on their obligations to provide clients with the contents of files when the representation is terminated.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.4 Communication Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.4 Communication Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	[10] This Rule is not intended to create, augment, diminish, or eliminate any application of the work product doctrine. The obligation of the lawyer to provide work product to the client shall be governed by relevant statutory and decisional law.	Comment [10] has no counterpart in the Model Rule. It was added to clarify that the rule does not override the attorney work product doctrine, which in California, is subject to statutory regulation.

Rule 1.4 Communication

(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to the Public Comment Draft)

- (a) A lawyer shall:
- (1) promptly inform the client of any decision or circumstance with respect to which written disclosure or the client's informed consent, as defined in Rule 1.0(e), is required by these Rules or the State Bar Act;
 - (2) reasonably consult with the client about the means by which to accomplish the client's objectives in the representation;
 - (3) keep the client reasonably informed about significant developments relating to the representation;
 - (4) promptly comply with reasonable requests for information;
 - (5) promptly comply with reasonable client requests for access to significant documents necessary to keep the client reasonably informed about significant developments relating to the representation, which the lawyer may satisfy by permitting the client to inspect the documents or by furnishing copies of the documents to the client; and
 - (6) consult with the client about any relevant limitation on the lawyer's conduct when the lawyer knows that the client expects assistance not permitted by these Rules or other law.
- (b) A lawyer shall explain a matter to the extent reasonably necessary to permit the client to make informed decisions regarding the representation.
- (c) A lawyer shall promptly communicate to the lawyer's client:
- (1) all terms and conditions of any offer made to the client in a criminal matter; and
 - (2) all amounts, terms, and conditions of any written offer of settlement made to the client in all other matters.

COMMENT

- [1] Whether a particular development is significant will generally depend upon the surrounding facts and circumstances. For example, a change in lawyer personnel might be a significant development depending on whether responsibility for overseeing the client's work is being changed, whether the new attorney will be performing a significant portion or aspect of the work, and whether staffing is being changed from what was promised to the client. Other examples of significant developments may include the receipt of a demand for further discovery or a threat of sanctions, a change in a criminal abstract of judgment or re-calculation of custody credits, and the loss or theft of information concerning the client's identity or information concerning the matter for which representation is being provided. Depending upon the circumstances, a lawyer may also be obligated pursuant to paragraphs (a)(2) or (a)(3) to communicate with the client concerning the opportunity to engage in, and the advantages and disadvantages of, alternative dispute resolution processes. Conversely, examples of developments or circumstances that generally are not significant include the payment of a motion fee and the application for or granting of an extension of time for a time period that does not materially prejudice the client's interest.

- [2] A lawyer may comply with paragraph (a)(5) by providing to the client copies of significant documents by electronic or other means. A lawyer may agree with the client that the client assumes responsibility for the cost of copying significant documents the lawyer provides pursuant to paragraph (a)(5). A lawyer must comply with paragraph (a)(5) without regard to whether the client has complied with an obligation to pay the lawyer's fees and costs. This Rule ~~is~~does not intended to prohibit a claim for the recovery of the ~~member's~~lawyer's expense in any subsequent legal proceeding.
- [3] The client should have sufficient information to participate intelligently in decisions concerning the objectives of the representation and the means by which they are to be pursued, to the extent the client is willing and able to do so.
- [4] As used in paragraph (c), "client" includes: (i) a person who possesses the authority to accept an offer of settlement or plea, (ii) representatives of an organizational client authorized by the client to communicate with the lawyer regarding an offer of settlement or plea, or, (iii) in a class action, all the named representatives of the class.
- [5] Because of the liberty interests involved in a criminal matter, paragraph (c)(1) requires that counsel in a criminal matter convey to the client all offers, whether written or oral. As used in this Rule, "criminal matters" includes all legal proceedings where violations of criminal laws are alleged, and liberty interests are involved, including juvenile proceedings.

- [6] Paragraph (c)(2) requires a lawyer to advise a client promptly of all written settlement offers, regardless of whether the offers are considered by the lawyer to be significant. Notwithstanding paragraph (c)(2), a lawyer need not inform the client of the substance of a written offer of a settlement in a civil matter if the client has previously instructed that such an offer will be acceptable or unacceptable, or has previously authorized the lawyer to accept or to reject the offer, and there has been no change in circumstances that requires the lawyer to consult with the client. See Rule ~~1.2(a)~~.
- [7] Any oral offers of settlement made to the client in a civil matter must also be communicated if they are significant.
- [8] Ordinarily, the information to be provided is that appropriate for a client who is a comprehending and responsible adult. However, fully informing the client according to this standard may be impracticable, for example, where the client is a child or suffers from diminished capacity. See Rule 1.14. When the client is an organization or group, it is often impossible or inappropriate to inform every one of its members about its legal affairs; ordinarily, the lawyer should address communications to the appropriate officials of the organization. See Rule 1.13. Where many routine matters are involved, a system of limited or occasional reporting may be arranged with the client.
- [9] In some circumstances, a lawyer may be justified in delaying or withholding transmission of information when the client would be likely to react imprudently to an immediate communication. For example, a lawyer might withhold a psychiatric diagnosis of a client when the examining psychiatrist indicates that disclosure would harm the client. A lawyer may not withhold information to serve the lawyer's own interest or convenience or the interests or convenience of another person. This Rule does not require a lawyer to disclose to a client any information or document that a court order or non-disclosure agreement prohibits the lawyer from disclosing to that client. This Rule is not intended to override applicable statutory or decisional law requiring that certain information not be provided to defendants in criminal cases who are clients of the lawyer. Compare Rule ~~1~~1.16(e)(1) and Comment [9].

- [10] This Rule is not intended to create, augment, diminish, or eliminate any application of the work product ~~rule~~doctrine. The obligation of the lawyer to provide work product to the client shall be governed by relevant statutory and decisional law.

Rule 1.4 Communication
(Commission's Proposed Rule – Clean Version)

- (a) A lawyer shall:
- (1) promptly inform the client of any decision or circumstance with respect to which written disclosure or the client's informed consent, as defined in Rule 1.0(e), is required by these Rules or the State Bar Act;
 - (2) reasonably consult with the client about the means by which to accomplish the client's objectives in the representation;
 - (3) keep the client reasonably informed about significant developments relating to the representation;
 - (4) promptly comply with reasonable requests for information;
 - (5) promptly comply with reasonable client requests for access to significant documents necessary to keep the client reasonably informed about significant developments relating to the representation, which the lawyer may satisfy by permitting the client to inspect the documents or by furnishing copies of the documents to the client; and
 - (6) consult with the client about any relevant limitation on the lawyer's conduct when the lawyer knows that the client expects assistance not permitted by these Rules or other law.
- (b) A lawyer shall explain a matter to the extent reasonably necessary to permit the client to make informed decisions regarding the representation.
- (c) A lawyer shall promptly communicate to the lawyer's client:
- (1) all terms and conditions of any offer made to the client in a criminal matter; and
 - (2) all amounts, terms, and conditions of any written offer of settlement made to the client in all other matters.

COMMENT

- [1] Whether a particular development is significant will generally depend upon the surrounding facts and circumstances. For example, a change in lawyer personnel might be a significant development depending on whether responsibility for overseeing the client's work is being changed, whether the new attorney will be performing a significant portion or aspect of the work, and whether staffing is being changed from what was promised to the client. Other examples of significant developments may include the receipt of a demand for further discovery or a threat of sanctions, a change in a criminal abstract of judgment or re-calculation of custody credits, and the loss or theft of information concerning the client's identity or information concerning the matter for which representation is being provided. Depending upon the circumstances, a lawyer may also be obligated pursuant to paragraphs (a)(2) or (a)(3) to communicate with the client concerning the opportunity to engage in, and the advantages and disadvantages of, alternative dispute resolution processes. Conversely, examples of developments or circumstances that generally are not significant include the payment of a motion fee and the application for or granting of an extension of time for a time period that does not materially prejudice the client's interest.

- [2] A lawyer may comply with paragraph (a)(5) by providing to the client copies of significant documents by electronic or other means. A lawyer may agree with the client that the client assumes responsibility for the cost of copying significant documents the lawyer provides pursuant to paragraph (a)(5). A lawyer must comply with paragraph (a)(5) without regard to whether the client has complied with an obligation to pay the lawyer's fees and costs. This Rule does not prohibit a claim for the recovery of the lawyer's expense in any subsequent legal proceeding.
- [3] The client should have sufficient information to participate intelligently in decisions concerning the objectives of the representation and the means by which they are to be pursued, to the extent the client is willing and able to do so.
- [4] As used in paragraph (c), "client" includes: (i) a person who possesses the authority to accept an offer of settlement or plea, (ii) representatives of an organizational client authorized by the client to communicate with the lawyer regarding an offer of settlement or plea, or, (iii) in a class action, all the named representatives of the class.
- [5] Because of the liberty interests involved in a criminal matter, paragraph (c)(1) requires that counsel in a criminal matter convey to the client all offers, whether written or oral. As used in this Rule, "criminal matters" includes all legal proceedings where violations of criminal laws are alleged, and liberty interests are involved, including juvenile proceedings.

- [6] Paragraph (c)(2) requires a lawyer to advise a client promptly of all written settlement offers, regardless of whether the offers are considered by the lawyer to be significant. Notwithstanding paragraph (c)(2), a lawyer need not inform the client of the substance of a written offer of a settlement in a civil matter if the client has previously instructed that such an offer will be acceptable or unacceptable, or has previously authorized the lawyer to accept or to reject the offer, and there has been no change in circumstances that requires the lawyer to consult with the client. See Rule 1.2(a).
- [7] Any oral offers of settlement made to the client in a civil matter must also be communicated if they are significant.
- [8] Ordinarily, the information to be provided is that appropriate for a client who is a comprehending and responsible adult. However, fully informing the client according to this standard may be impracticable, for example, where the client is a child or suffers from diminished capacity. See Rule 1.14. When the client is an organization or group, it is often impossible or inappropriate to inform every one of its members about its legal affairs; ordinarily, the lawyer should address communications to the appropriate officials of the organization. See Rule 1.13. Where many routine matters are involved, a system of limited or occasional reporting may be arranged with the client.
- [9] In some circumstances, a lawyer may be justified in delaying or withholding transmission of information when the client would be likely to react imprudently to an immediate communication. For example, a lawyer might withhold a psychiatric diagnosis of a client when the examining psychiatrist indicates that disclosure would harm the client. A lawyer may not withhold information to serve the lawyer's own interest or convenience or the interests or convenience of another person. This Rule does not require a lawyer to disclose to a client any information or document that a court order or non-disclosure agreement prohibits the lawyer from disclosing to that client. This Rule is not intended to override applicable statutory or decisional law requiring that certain information not be provided to defendants in criminal cases who are clients of the lawyer. Compare Rule 1.16(e)(1) and Comment [9].

- [10] This Rule is not intended to create, augment, diminish, or eliminate any application of the work product doctrine. The obligation of the lawyer to provide work product to the client shall be governed by relevant statutory and decisional law.

Rule 1.4 Communication. [Sorted by Commenter]							TOTAL = 7	Agree = 1	Disagree = 1	Modify = 5	NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
1	COPRAC	M	Yes	Comment [4]	Under the definition of “client” for purposes of communication of settlement offers in a class action may not be practical for lawyers representing entity clients. We propose to revise the Comment to provide that a client “includes a person who possesses the authority to accept an offer of settlement or plea, or in a class action, all the named representatives of the class or a representative authorized by the client to communicate with the lawyer regarding settlement offers.	The Commission generally agrees with the commenter and has revised Comment [4].
				Comment [6]	COPRAC is concerned that Comment [6] includes language that is not sufficiently protective of clients. Because the lawyer may not be aware of changed circumstances that would cause the client to reconsider the authority to settle previously provided, COPRAC believes that a client should always be told of a settlement offer, regardless of whether authority to accept or reject the authority may have been previously provided.	The commenter is correct that it may be possible for there to be changed circumstances of which the lawyer is not aware because the client has not communicated the necessary facts to the lawyer. However, the Commission believes that if such circumstances arose, the client, aware that its previous instructions were no longer appropriate, would communicate such facts to the lawyer. Also, as is suggested by the reference to Rule 1.2(a), the lawyer should not subject to discipline because the lawyer would have complied with the client's directions by rejecting the settlement offer in the Comment [6] situation.

¹ A = AGREE with proposed Rule

D = DISAGREE with proposed Rule

M = AGREE ONLY IF MODIFIED

NI = NOT INDICATED

Rule 1.4 Communication. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 7 Agree = 1 Disagree = 1 Modify = 5 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comment [9]	A bright-line rule requiring all written offers of settlement in a civil matter to be communicated to clients is beneficial to both clients and lawyers and suggests that the proposed language of the Comment be deleted. If the Commission keeps this language, COPRAC joins the LACBA's concern regarding the inclusion of this language. The language appears to be an exception to the proposed Rule and should be clearly stated in the rule text. We disagree with the RRC's conclusion that this language is an interpretation of the Rule and not an exception. COPRAC is concerned that the language in Comment [9] permitting a lawyer to "withhold" information from a client is overly broad. It appears that the impetus for the Comment is to permit a lawyer to withhold information where delivery of the information could result in harm to the client. However, this is not clearly stated. COPRAC proposes replacing the first sentence of the proposed Comment with the following: "A lawyer may be justified in delaying transmission of information when the	See previous response. Commission disagrees and has not made the requested revision. As state previously in its response to LACBA, the sentence provides an interpretation of the Rule, in effect recognizing a client's right to pre-authorize a lawyer to accept settlement offers on the client's behalf so long as there are no changes in the circumstances that require the lawyer to communicate with the client. The Commission disagrees that the suggested change would provide the client with more protection. The example in the second sentence of the Comment indicates that the lawyer cannot make the decision to withhold information in a vacuum. The Comment contemplates an independent justification, such an "examining psychiatrist's [indication] that disclosure would harm the client." The proposed substituted language would based the decision on the lawyer's reasonable belief.

Rule 1.4 Communication. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 7 Agree = 1 Disagree = 1 Modify = 5 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					client would be likely to react imprudently to an immediate communication. In some circumstances, a lawyer may be justified in withholding transmission of information when the lawyer reasonably believes delivery of the information could result in harm to the client or others. See also proposed rule 1.14"
2	HALT, Inc. – an Organization of Americans for Legal Reform	M	Yes	(c)(2) 1.4(c)(2), Comment [7]	HALT strongly supports the RRC's acceptance of ABA MR 1.4 as a substantial improvement over current CRPC 3-500. Without full and regular communication, the attorney-client relationship cannot function properly, and a client is not in a position to make the critic decision during the course of the representation. The proposed rule only requires a lawyer to communicate the "amounts, terms, and conditions of any written offer of settlement made to the client" in civil matters. Whether a settlement offer is oral or written is immaterial; the client has the right to decide whether to accept it under Proposed rule 1.2, and should be informed of all such offers. Comment [7] states "[a]ny oral offers of settlement made to the client in a civil matter must also be communicated if they are significant." But a Comment is not a Rule. As currently drafted, the Proposed rule and the RRC's commentary create unnecessary	No response required. The Commission disagrees that all offers of settlement must be communicated and believes that Comment [7] constitutes an appropriate balance between the need for a client to be informed of significant developments and the practical realities of oral negotiations. The Commission also notes that Comment [7] carries forward what is now Discussion ¶. 2 of current rule 3-510. The Commission is unaware that this placement has interfered with enforcement of the Rule.

Rule 1.4 Communication. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 7 Agree = 1 Disagree = 1 Modify = 5 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					ambiguity. HALT urges the RRC to strike the word "written" from Proposed Rule 1.4(c)(2), so it is clear that a lawyer has an obligation to communicate all settlement offers to a client.
3	Office of Chief Trial Counsel ("OCTC")	M	Yes	Comment [9]	OCTC suggests that the rule also include the language currently in Rule 3-500 that attorneys inform the client about significant developments relating to the employment. While OCTC believes that employment is included in representation, it also believes that using employment as well as representation is clearer and will prevent arguments about whether employment issues are included in this rule. Further, since it is in the current rule, some may argue that the new rules removed any requirement that was included by the language in the old rule. We support Comments [8] and [10]. OCTC is concerned that the first two sentences in Comment [9] are confusing and could be misconstrued by attorneys to think that they can make the decision to withhold information from a client. The other Comments seem more appropriate for treatises, law review articles, or ethics opinions.	The Commission disagrees that including the word "employment" in the Rule is necessary to avoid confusion about the scope of the Rule. The language the Commission has proposed tracks the Model Rule and there is no evidence that it has been interpreted differently from the current California rule. No response required. See response to COPRAC. As the Commission has noted with respect to other Rules, the comments are an important part of the Rules modeled on the ABA Model Rules, providing clarification of the black letter and guidance to Rule 1.4 Communication.

[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 7 Agree = 1
Disagree = 1
Modify = 5
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response lawyers on how to be in compliance with their professional obligations.
4	Paulsen, Bradley	D		1.4(a)(2) 1.4(b)	Commenter, in general, is concerned with attorney conduct in regard to soliciting clients in the area of Homeowner's Notice of Claim of Violation of Functionality Standards, per Civil Code section 910 and Senate Bill 800. Many homeowners do not even realize they are involved in a Claim/Lawsuit, nor do they know why. The soliciting attorney supplied propaganda literature that certain problems are prevalent in the community without even investigating or observing the home first for the sole purpose of making a monetary settlement for the attorney group. The Soliciting Attorney Groups leave homeowners wondering if they really do have a problem, then they tell the homeowners not to talk with their builder, because the builder will take care of warranty items for their customers. This is not accomplishing the clients' objectives, because they don't know what the objectives are, in many cases, the client only assumes that they may receive a settlement check. The Soliciting Attorney Groups only follow the course of a witch hunt to find a construction defect to build their settlement demand and	The Commission has considered the commenter's submission and determined that his concerns lie not with the substance of the Rules, but rather with their enforcement, which is beyond the purview of the Commission's charge.

Rule 1.4 Communication. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 7 Agree = 1 Disagree = 1 Modify = 5 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					do not inform the homeowners that the builder will take care of any warranty deficiencies. The builder will perform the work, in most cases, immediately; while the Soliciting Attorney Group takes months and sometimes years to settle, leaving little or no work being performed to the home. The homeowner may receive a small settlement check years after the fact, which by this time, if something was in need of repair most certainly would have deteriorated or escalated to further repair necessary.
5	San Diego County Bar Association ("SDCBA")	A	Yes		Support as drafted.	No response required.
6	Santa Clara County Bar Association ("SCCBA")	M	Yes		Approve the proposed rule as written. However, comment [7] to the rule should be either deleted or should be included in the rule itself. Rationale: Comment [7] states "Any oral offers of settlement made to the client in a civil matter must also be communicated if they are significant." This comment expands the rule itself. A comment should not create a duty that is not specifically and clearly set forth in the rule.	The Commission disagrees. Comment [7] simply carries forward what is now Discussion ¶. 2 of current rule 3-510. The Commission is unaware that this placement has interfered with enforcement of the Rule.
7	Tracy, Michael	M	No		Comment [4] should read: "As used in paragraph (c), 'client' includes all persons whose authority is required to accept an offer of settlement or plea, or, in a class action, all the named representatives of the class."	The Commission agrees generally that Comment [4] requires revision and has revised it, although not as suggested by the Commenter.

Rule 1.4 Communication. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 7 Agree = 1 Disagree = 1 Modify = 5 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					Comment [6] should read: "Paragraph (c)(2) requires a lawyer to advise a client promptly of all written settlement offers, regardless of whether the offers are considered by the lawyer to be significant. Notwithstanding paragraph (c)(2), a lawyer need not inform the client of the substance of an offer of a settlement conveyed solely by electronic mail in a civil matter if the client has previously instructed that such an offer will be acceptable or unacceptable, or has previously authorized the lawyer to accept or to reject the offer, and there has been no change in circumstances that requires the lawyer to consult with the client. See Rule [1.2(a)]."	The Commission disagrees with the suggested inclusion of a reference to electronic mail. The Commission does not understand why a particular mode of written communication should be distinguished from other modes.

Rule 1.4: Communication

STATE VARIATIONS

(The following is an excerpt from Regulation of Lawyers: Statutes and Standards (2010 Ed.)
by Steven Gillers, Roy D. Simon and Andrew M. Perlman.)

Arizona adds Rule 1.4(c), which provides: “In a criminal case, a lawyer shall promptly inform a client of all proffered plea agreements.”

Arkansas adds the following Rule 1.4(c), which describes a lawyer’s obligation to “promptly notify a client in writing of the actual or constructive receipt by the attorney of a check or other payment . . . of a settlement, judgment, or other monies to which the client is entitled.”:

A lawyer shall promptly notify a client in writing of the actual or constructive receipt by the attorney of a check or other payment received from an insurance company, an opposing party, or from any other source which constitutes the payment of a settlement, judgment, or other monies to which the client is entitled.

California: Rule 3-500 provides:

A member shall keep a client reasonably informed about significant developments relating to the employment or representation, including promptly complying with reasonable requests for information and copies of significant documents when necessary to keep the client so informed.

Rule 3-510 provides:

(A) A member shall promptly communicate to the member’s client:

(1) All terms and conditions of any offer made to the client in a criminal matter; and

(2) All amounts, terms, and conditions of any written offer of settlement made to the client in all other matters.

(B) As used in this rule, “client” includes a person who possesses the authority to accept an offer of settlement or plea, or, in a class action, all the named representatives of the class.

California Business & Professions Code §6068(m) describes the same duties.

District of Columbia: D.C. adds Rule 1.4(c), which requires a lawyer “who receives an offer of settlement in a civil case or a proffered plea bargain in a criminal case” to “promptly” inform the client of its “substance.”

Florida: Rule 4-1.5(f)(4)(C) requires every lawyer entering into a contingent fee agreement in a case involving personal injury or property damage to provide the client with a Statement of Client’s Rights for Contingency Fees that contains the following paragraph:

10. . . . Your lawyer must notify you of all offers of settlement before and after the trial. Offers during the trial must be immediately communicated and you should consult with your lawyer regarding whether to accept a settlement. However, you must make the final decision to accept or reject a settlement.

Louisiana: Rule 1.4(c) provides as follows:

(c) A lawyer who provides any form of financial assistance to a client during the course of a representation shall, prior to providing such financial assistance, inform the client in writing of the terms and conditions under which such financial assistance is made, including but not limited to, repayment obligations, the imposition and rate of interest or other charges, and the scope and limitations imposed upon lawyers providing financial assistance as set forth in Rule 1.8(e).

Massachusetts: The Comment to Rule 1.4 states: “There will be circumstances in which a lawyer should advise a client concerning the advantages and disadvantages of available dispute resolution options. . . .”

Michigan adds to Rule 1.4(a): “A lawyer shall notify the client promptly of all settlement offers, mediation evaluations, and proposed plea bargains.”

Missouri deletes subparagraphs (a)(1) and (a)(2) from ABA Model Rule 1.4.

Nevada has a Rule 1.4(c) entitled “Lawyer’s Biographical Data Form.” Among other details, it requires each lawyer or law firm to maintain a form containing “a factual statement detailing the background, training and experience of each lawyer or law firm.” The form must list certain basic information and requires a lawyer or law firm to provide additional information upon request.

New York: In the rules effective April 1, 2009, New York adds Rule 1.4(a)(1)(ii) and (iii), which provides that a lawyer should promptly inform a client of: “(ii) any information required by court rule or other law to be communicated to a client; and (iii) material developments in the matter including settlement or plea offers.”

Ohio: Rule 1.4(c) provides:

A lawyer shall inform a client at the time of the client’s engagement of the lawyer or at any time subsequent to the engagement if the lawyer does not maintain professional liability insurance in the amounts of at least one hundred thousand dollars per occurrence and three hundred thousand dollars in the aggregate or if the lawyer’s professional liability insurance is terminated. The notice shall be provided to the client on a separate form set forth following this rule and shall be signed by the client.

Rule 1.4(c) does not apply to government lawyers or to in-house counsel.

Virginia adds Rule 1.4(c), which requires a lawyer to “inform the client of facts pertinent to the matter and of communications from another party that may significantly affect settlement or resolution of the matter.”

Proposed Rule 1.4.1 [3-410]

“Disclosure of Professional Liability Insurance”

(XDraft #6, 04/01/10)

Summary: Proposed Rule 1.4.1 is based on rule 3-410, which was adopted by the Supreme Court and became operative on January 1, 2010. Rule 3-410 requires lawyers who do not have professional liability insurance to disclose that fact to clients. Rule 3-410 exempts government lawyers and in-house counsel with regard to the representation of their employer. Proposed Rule 1.4.1 largely tracks rule 3-410 but incorporates the Model Rule format and style conventions, and exempts from the rule court-appointed lawyers as to those matters in which they have been appointed.

Comparison with ABA Counterpart

Rule	Comment
☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
☐ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule	☐ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule	☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
☒ No ABA Model Rule counterpart*	☒ No ABA Model Rule counterpart*

Primary Factors Considered

☒ Existing California Law

Rule	RPC 3-410
Statute	Repealed Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 6147 & 6148.
Case law

☐ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

☐ Other Primary Factor(s)

*NOTE: While there is no ABA Model Rule of Professional Conduct, the ABA has adopted a Model Court Rule which requires a lawyer to certify to the state's attorney regulatory body (State Bar or Sup. Ct.) whether the lawyer is covered by professional liability insurance.

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(13 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 13 due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Less than Six Members Opposing Adoption ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 7

Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 2

Abstain 3

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by Consensus ☐

Commission Minority Position, Known Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

Minority Position Included. (See Introduction): ☐ Yes ☒ No

☒ No Known Stakeholders

☐ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

☐ Very Controversial – Explanation:

☐ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

☒ Not Controversial

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.4.1* Disclosure of Professional Liability Insurance*

June 2010

(Proposed rule following June 15, 2010 public comment deadline.)

INTRODUCTION:

Proposed Rule 1.4.1 is based on rule 3-410, which was adopted by the Supreme Court in July 2009 and became operative on January 1, 2010. Rule 3-410 requires lawyers who do not have professional liability insurance to disclose that fact to clients. Rule 3-410 exempts government lawyers and in-house counsel with regard to the representation of their employer.

Proposed Rule 1.4.1 largely tracks rule 3-410 but incorporates the Model Rule format and style conventions, and exempts from the Rule court-appointed lawyers as to those matters in which they have been appointed. See Explanation of Changes for paragraph (c) and Comment [5].

* Proposed Rule 1.4.1, XDraft 6 (04/01/10).

No Comparable ABA Model Rule (Text provided is current California Rule 3-410)	Commission's Proposed Rule* (Redline/strikeout showing changes to the current California Rule 3-410)	Explanation of Changes to California Rule 3-410
(A) A member who knows or should know that he or she does not have professional liability insurance shall inform a client in writing, at the time of the client's engagement of the member, that the member does not have professional liability insurance whenever it is reasonably foreseeable that the total amount of the member's legal representation of the client in the matter will exceed four hours.	(Aa) A ~~member-lawyer~~ who knows or should know that he or she does not have professional liability insurance shall inform a client in writing, at the time of the client's engagement of the ~~member~~lawyer, that the ~~member-lawyer~~ does not have professional liability insurance whenever it is reasonably foreseeable that the total amount of the ~~member~~lawyer's legal representation of the client in the matter will exceed four hours.	The word "member" is changed to "lawyer" throughout the Rule to conform to the format and style of the proposed Rules, which is based upon that of the Model Rules. Paragraph "(A)" has been changed to paragraph "(a)" to conform to the format and style of the proposed Rules.
(B) If a member does not provide the notice required under paragraph (A) at the time of a client's engagement of the member, and the member subsequently knows or should know that he or she no longer has professional liability insurance during the representation of the client, the member shall inform the client in writing within thirty days of the date that the member knows or should know that he or she no longer has professional liability insurance.	(Bb) If a ~~member~~lawyer does not provide the notice required under paragraph (Aa) at the time of a client's engagement of the ~~member~~lawyer, and the ~~member~~lawyer subsequently knows or should know that he or she no longer has professional liability insurance during the representation of the client, the ~~member~~lawyer shall inform the client in writing within thirty days of the date that the ~~member~~lawyer knows or should know that he or she no longer has professional liability insurance.	See Explanation of Changes to Paragraph (a).

* Proposed Rule 1.4.1, XDraft 6 (04/04/10). Redline comparisons are to current rule 3-410.

No Comparable ABA Model Rule (Text provided is current California Rule 3-410)	Commission's Proposed Rule* (Redline/strikeout showing changes to the current California Rule 3-410)	Explanation of Changes to California Rule 3-410
(C) This rule does not apply to a member who is employed as a government lawyer or in-house counsel when that member is representing or providing legal advice to a client in that capacity.	(~~C~~) This ~~rule~~Rule does not apply to a ~~member~~lawyer who is employed as a government lawyer or in-house counsel when that ~~member~~lawyer is representing or providing legal advice to a client in that capacity. or to a court-appointed lawyer in a criminal or civil action or proceeding with respect to the matter in which the lawyer has been appointed.	Paragraph (c) has been modified to include court-appointed lawyers in criminal and civil matters who represent or provide advice to clients in that capacity. The change is recommended in response to concerns raised by criminal defense lawyers and civil lawyers who regularly serve on panels as court appointed counsel for indigent clients. The public policy of encouraging lawyers to serve as court appointed counsel merits including these lawyers along with government lawyers and full time in house counsel in the exception to the rule. "Member" has also been changed to "lawyer." See Explanation of Changes to Paragraph (a).
(D) This rule does not apply to legal services rendered in an emergency to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the rights or interests of the client.	(~~D~~) This ~~rule~~Rule does not apply to legal services rendered in an emergency to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the rights or interests of the client.	See Explanation of Changes to Paragraph (a).
(E) This rule does not apply where the member has previously advised the client under Paragraph (A) or (B) that the member does not have professional liability insurance.	(~~E~~) This ~~rule~~Rule does not apply where the ~~member~~lawyer has previously advised the client under ~~Paragraph~~paragraph (~~A~~Aa) or (~~B~~Bb) that the ~~member~~lawyer does not have professional liability insurance.	See Explanation of Changes to Paragraph (a).

No Comparable ABA Model Rule (Text provided is current California Rule 3-410)	Commission's Proposed Rule* (Redline/strikeout showing changes to the current California Rule 3-410)	Explanation of Changes to California Rule 3-410
Discussion: [1] The disclosure obligation imposed by Paragraph (A) of this rule applies with respect to new clients and new engagements with returning clients.	~~Discussion~~Comment: [1] The disclosure obligation imposed by Paragraph ~~(Aa) of this rule~~ applies with respect to new clients and new engagements with returning clients.	Comment [1] has been modified to conform to the format and style of the proposed Rules. See Explanation of Changes to Paragraph (a).
[2] A member may use the following language in making the disclosure required by Rule 3-410(A), and may include that language in a written fee agreement with the client or in a separate writing: "Pursuant to California Rule of Professional Conduct 3-410, I am informing you in writing that I do not have professional liability insurance."	[2] A ~~member~~lawyer may use the following language in making the disclosure required by ~~Rule 3-410~~paragraph (Aa), and may include that language in a written fee agreement with the client or in a separate writing: "Pursuant to California Rule of Professional Conduct ~~3-410~~1.4.1, I am informing you in writing that I do not have professional liability insurance."	"Member" has been changed to "lawyer." The reference to "Rule 3-410(A)" has been changed to "paragraph (a)" to conform to the format and style of the proposed Rules. The reference to "3-410" in the form notice has been changed to "1.4.1" to conform to the rule numbering system the Commission recommends for the proposed Rules, which largely tracks the Model Rule numbering system.
[3] A member may use the following language in making the disclosure required by Rule 3-410(B): "Pursuant to California Rule of Professional Conduct 3-410, I am informing you in writing that I no longer have professional liability insurance."	[3] A ~~member~~lawyer may use the following language in making the disclosure required by ~~Rule 3-410~~paragraph (Bb): "Pursuant to California Rule of Professional Conduct ~~3-410~~1.4.1, I am informing you in writing that I no longer have professional liability insurance."	See Explanation of Changes to Comment [1]. See Explanation of Changes to Comment [2].

No Comparable ABA Model Rule (Text provided is current California Rule 3-410)	Commission's Proposed Rule* (Redline/strikeout showing changes to the current California Rule 3-410)	Explanation of Changes to California Rule 3-410
[4] Rule 3-410(C) provides an exemption for a "government lawyer or in-house counsel when that member is representing or providing legal advice to a client in that capacity." The basis of both exemptions is essentially the same. The purpose of this rule is to provide information directly to a client if a member is not covered by professional liability insurance. If a member is employed directly by and provides legal services directly for a private entity or a federal, state or local governmental entity, that entity presumably knows whether the member is or is not covered by professional liability insurance. The exemptions under this rule are limited to situations involving direct employment and representation, and do not, for example, apply to outside counsel for a private or governmental entity, or to counsel retained by an insurer to represent an insured.	[4] ~~Rule 3-410~~Paragraph (C) ~~in part~~ provides an exemption for a "government lawyer or in-house counsel when that ~~member~~lawyer is representing or providing legal advice to a client in that capacity." The basis of both exemptions is essentially the same. The purpose of this ~~rule~~Rule is to provide information directly to a client if a ~~member~~lawyer is not covered by professional liability insurance. If a ~~member~~lawyer is employed directly by and provides legal services directly for a private entity or a federal, state or local governmental entity, that entity presumably knows whether the ~~member~~lawyer is or is not covered by professional liability insurance. The exemptions ~~under this rule~~for government lawyers and in-house counsels are limited to situations involving direct employment and representation, and do not, for example, apply to outside counsel for a private or governmental entity, or to counsel retained by an insurer to represent an insured.	"Rule 3-410(C)" has been changed to "Paragraph (c)" and "member" has been changed to "lawyer" to conform to the format and style of the proposed Rules, which are based on the Model Rules. The phrase, "for government lawyers and in-house counsel" has been substituted for "under this Rule" because paragraph (c) now also refers to "court-appointed" lawyers and the rationale underlying the extension of the exemption to the latter is not the same as for government lawyers or in-house counsel. See Explanation of Changes for paragraph (c).
	[5] Paragraph (c) also provides an exemption for "a court-appointed lawyer in a criminal or civil action or proceeding with respect to the matter in which the lawyer has been appointed." A lawyer must provide notification in all other actions and proceedings as required by paragraphs (a) and (b).	Comment [5] is new. It has been added to explain the limited scope of the paragraph (c) exemption for court-appointed lawyers. The comment clarifies that such lawyers must comply with the notification requirements of paragraphs (a) and (b) in actions and proceedings where the lawyers are not serving by court appointment.

Rule 1.4.1: Disclosure of Professional Liability Insurance

(Commission's Proposed Rule – Clean Version)

- (a) A lawyer who knows or should know that he or she does not have professional liability insurance shall inform a client in writing, at the time of the client's engagement of the lawyer, that the lawyer does not have professional liability insurance whenever it is reasonably foreseeable that the total amount of the lawyer's legal representation of the client in the matter will exceed four hours.
- (b) If a lawyer does not provide the notice required under paragraph (a) at the time of a client's engagement of the lawyer, and the lawyer subsequently knows or should know that he or she no longer has professional liability insurance during the representation of the client, the lawyer shall inform the client in writing within thirty days of the date that the lawyer knows or should know that he or she no longer has professional liability insurance.
- (c) This Rule does not apply to a lawyer who is employed as a government lawyer or in-house counsel when that lawyer is representing or providing legal advice to a client in that capacity, or to a court-appointed lawyer in a criminal or civil action or proceeding with respect to the matter in which the lawyer has been appointed.
- (d) This Rule does not apply to legal services rendered in an emergency to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the rights or interests of the client.
- (e) This Rule does not apply where the lawyer has previously advised the client under paragraph (a) or (b) that the lawyer does not have professional liability insurance.

COMMENT

- [1] The disclosure obligation imposed by Paragraph (a) applies with respect to new clients and new engagements with returning clients.
- [2] A lawyer may use the following language in making the disclosure required by paragraph (a), and may include that language in a written fee agreement with the client or in a separate writing:

"Pursuant to California Rule of Professional Conduct 1.4.1, I am informing you in writing that I do not have professional liability insurance."

- [3] A lawyer may use the following language in making the disclosure required by paragraph (b):

"Pursuant to California Rule of Professional Conduct 1.4.1, I am informing you in writing that I no longer have professional liability insurance."

- [4] Paragraph (c) in part provides an exemption for a "government lawyer or in-house counsel when that lawyer is representing or providing legal advice to a client in that capacity." The basis of both exemptions is essentially the same. The purpose of this Rule is to provide information directly to a client if a lawyer is not covered by professional liability insurance. If a lawyer is employed directly by and provides legal services directly for a private entity or a federal, state or local governmental entity, that entity presumably knows whether the lawyer is or is not covered by professional liability insurance. The exemptions for government lawyers and in-house counsels are limited to situations involving direct employment and representation, and do not, for example, apply to outside counsel for a private or governmental entity, or to counsel retained by an insurer to represent an insured.

- [5] Paragraph (c) also provides an exemption for “a court-appointed lawyer in a criminal or civil action or proceeding with respect to the matter in which the lawyer has been appointed.” A lawyer must provide notification in all other actions and proceedings as required by paragraphs (a) and (b).

Rule 1.4.1 Insurance Disclosure [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 5 Agree = 4 Disagree = 1 Modify = 0 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
1	COPRAC	A	Yes		COPRAC supports the adoption of Proposed Rule 1.4.1 and the Comments to the Rule.	No response required.
2	HALT, Inc. – An Organization of Americans for Legal Reform	A	Yes		HALT believes that all lawyers who offer their services to the general public should be required to carry adequate malpractice insurance. Proposed Rule 1.4.1 is an important step toward that objective and thanks the RRC for beginning to address the problem of uninsured and inadequately covered attorneys. HALT believes there is a better approach reflected by the Oregon system of universal coverage and urges the RRC and the BOGs to monitor the effectiveness of the new disclosure requirements, and to consider a universal coverage system, similar to that which has proven effective in Oregon.	No response required. The issue of other possible regulatory approaches concerning bar members and professional liability insurance was part of the study conducted by the State Bar's Insurance Disclosure Task Force. The State Bar Board of Governors has the discretion to monitor California's experience under the relatively new insurance disclosure rule and to revisit these issues. However, it does not appear that a mandatory insurance rule would necessarily be a Rule of Professional Conduct or within the purview of the Rules Revision Commission.
3	Office of Chief Trial Counsel ("OCTC")	A			OCTC believes Comments 4 and 5 are more appropriate for treatises, law review articles, and ethics opinions.	As the Commission has noted with respect to other Rules, the comments are an important part of the Rules modeled on the ABA Model Rules, providing

¹ A = AGREE with proposed Rule

D = DISAGREE with proposed Rule

M = AGREE ONLY IF MODIFIED

NI = NOT INDICATED

Rule 1.4.1 Insurance Disclosure [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 5 Agree = 4 Disagree = 1 Modify = 0 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response clarification of the black letter and guidance to lawyers on how to be in compliance with their professional obligations.
4	Rozner, Maurice	D	No		This is not a smart rule and it was most likely pushed by large firms to drive the sole practitioner out of business. Disclosure to client is no indication of competence.	The Commission does not agree. The insurance disclosure rule, Rule 3-410, was approved by the Supreme Court and is currently operative. The proposed rule continues the current rule with several revisions.
5	San Diego County Bar Association Legal Ethics Committee	A	Yes		We approve the new rule in its entirety.	No response required.

AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION
STANDING COMMITTEE ON CLIENT PROTECTION

STATE IMPLEMENTATION OF ABA MODEL COURT RULE ON INSURANCE DISCLOSURE

	Requires Disclosure Directly to Client (7) (AK, CA, NH, NM, OH, PA and SD)	Requires Disclosure On Annual Registration Statement¹ (18) (AZ, CO, DE, HI, ID, IL, KS, MA, MI, MN, NE, NV, NC, ND, RI, VA, WA and WV)	Considering Adoption (4) (ME, NY, UT and VT)	Information Made Available to Public	Other Info (See also, Oregon: Professional liability insurance mandated) (AR, CT, FL, KY and TX have decided not to adopt the Model Court Rule)
AL
AK Adopted effective 7/15/93; Amended effective 4/15/2000.	Alaska Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 1.4			N/A
AZ Effective 1/1/07		Supreme Court Rule 32(c), effective January 1, 2007. http://www.supremestate.az.us/rules/ramd_pdf/R-04-0025.pdf		Yes. State Bar of Arizona website.
AR					On January 21, 2006 the House of Delegates of the Arkansas Bar Association voted not to adopt a disclosure rule.
CA Effective 1/1/2010	Rule 3-410. Disclosure of Professional Liability Insurance. California Rules of professional Conduct.  Supreme Ct Order adopting RPC 3-41			N/A

	Requires Disclosure Directly to Client (7) (AK, CA, NH, NM, OH, PA and SD)	Requires Disclosure On Annual Registration Statement¹ (18) (AZ, CO, DE, HI, ID, IL, KS, MA, MI, MN, NE, NV, NC, ND, RI, VA, WA and WV)	Considering Adoption (4) (ME, NY, UT and VT)	Information Made Available to Public	Other Info (See also, Oregon: Professional liability insurance mandated) (AR, CT, FL, KY and TX have decided not to adopt the Model Court Rule)
CO Effective 1/1/09		X http://www.courts.state.co.us/Media/Press_Docs/attorney%20reg%20insurance%20disclosure%20FINAL.pdf		X C.R.C.P. 227: (c) Availability of Information. The information provided by the lawyer regarding professional liability insurance shall be available to the public through the Supreme Court Office of Attorney Registration and on the Supreme Court Office of Attorney Registration website.	Colorado: Supreme Court requires Colorado lawyers to disclose insurance status Private-practice attorneys must make disclosure in annual registration. DENVER – Beginning Jan. 1, 2009, all
CT					At its February 23, 2009 meeting, the Connecticut Superior Court Rules Committee voted unanimously to deny a proposal to adopt an insurance disclosure rule. http://www.jud.ct.gov/Committees/rules/rules_minutes_022309.pdf

	Requires Disclosure Directly to Client (7) (AK, CA, NH, NM, OH, PA and SD)	Requires Disclosure On Annual Registration Statement¹ (18) (AZ, CO, DE, HI, ID, IL, KS, MA, MI, MN, NE, NV, NC, ND, RI, VA, WA and WV)	Considering Adoption (4) (ME, NY, UT and VT)	Information Made Available to Public	Other Info (See also, Oregon: Professional liability insurance mandated) (AR, CT, FL, KY and TX have decided not to adopt the Model Court Rule)
DE Beginning with 1007 Annual Registration Form.		Registration Form		2007 Registration Form no longer available to public. 2009 Registration Form: http://courts.delaware.gov/forms/download.aspx?id=27968
DC
FL					Have declined to adopt the Model Court Rule.
GA
HI Effective 12/1/07		RSCH 2.17(d) http://www.state.hi.us/jud/ctrules/rsch.htm#Rule_17		N/A
ID Effective 10/1/06		Idaho Bar Commission Rule 302(7), effective October 1, 2006		Available to the public upon request.
IL Effective 10/1/04		Amended Illinois Supreme Court Rule 756		Yes http://www.iardc.org/malpracticeinfo.html
KS Effective 9/6/05		Supreme Court Rule 208A		Yes, by means designated by the Court.	http://www.kscourts.org/rules/Rule-Info.asp?r1=Rules+Relating+to+Discipline+of+Attorneys&r2=281
KY					On or about November 14,

	Requires Disclosure Directly to Client (7) (AK, CA, NH, NM, OH, PA and SD)	Requires Disclosure On Annual Registration Statement¹ (18) (AZ, CO, DE, HI, ID, IL, KS, MA, MI, MN, NE, NV, NC, ND, RI, VA, WA and WV)	Considering Adoption (4) (ME, NY, UT and VT)	Information Made Available to Public	Other Info (See also, Oregon: Professional liability insurance mandated) (AR, CT, FL, KY and TX have decided not to adopt the Model Court Rule)
					2006 the KY Sup. Ct. declined to adopt a disclosure rule.
LA
ME			X		The Advisory Committee on the Rules of Professional Conduct is studying the proposed rule on insurance disclosure. On Maine's annual registration forms, there is a question regarding insurance. No detail is required. It is merely do you have professional liability insurance, 'yes' or 'no'
MD
MA Effective 9/1/06		Rule 4:02 Effective Sept. 1, 2006. http://www.massrep.orts.com/courtrules/sjcrules.htm#4:02		Yes.

	Requires Disclosure Directly to Client (7) (AK, CA, NH, NM, OH, PA and SD)	Requires Disclosure On Annual Registration Statement¹ (18) (AZ, CO, DE, HI, ID, IL, KS, MA, MI, MN, NE, NV, NC, ND, RI, VA, WA and WV)	Considering Adoption (4) (ME, NY, UT and VT)	Information Made Available to Public	Other Info (See also, Oregon: Professional liability insurance mandated) (AR, CT, FL, KY and TX have decided not to adopt the Model Court Rule)
MI Beginning with the notice issued for fiscal year 2003-2004		Administrative Order No. 2003-5, dated August 6, 2003 http://www.icle.org/contentfiles/milawnews/Rules/Ao/2003-27_08-06-03%20_or.html		No.
MN Effective 10/1/06		Rule 6 of the Rules of the Supreme Court on Lawyer Registration. Annual Reporting of Professional Liability Insurance Coverage (Effective October 1, 2006) http://www.courts.state.mn.us/documents/0/Public/Clerks_Office/July%202006%20Lawyer%20Registration%20Amend.doc		Yes. Rule 7. Access to Lawyer Registration Records
MO					Not currently being considered.
NE Effective 11/1/03	http://casemaker.nebar.com/pdfs/nsbainfo/rules.pdf	Rules Creating, Controlling, and Regulating Nebraska State Bar Association, Article III, Membership, paragraph (f).		Shall be made available to the public.
NV Adopted 9/13/05 and effective 11/13/05	http://www.leg.state.nv.us/CourtRules/scr.html	Amended Supreme Court Rule 79 (Adopted September 13, 2005 and effective November 13, 2005)		Yes. It will be part of the lawyer's public record available by phone or email inquiry.

	Requires Disclosure Directly to Client (7) (AK, CA, NH, NM, OH, PA and SD)	Requires Disclosure On Annual Registration Statement¹ (18) (AZ, CO, DE, HI, ID, IL, KS, MA, MI, MN, NE, NV, NC, ND, RI, VA, WA and WV)	Considering Adoption (4) (ME, NY, UT and VT)	Information Made Available to Public	Other Info (See also, Oregon: Professional liability insurance mandated) (AR, CT, FL, KY and TX have decided not to adopt the Model Court Rule)
NH Effective 3/1/03	New Hampshire Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 1.19. (Disclosure of Information to the Client) http://www.courts.state.nh.us/supreme/orders/20072507.pdf			N/A
NM Effective 11/2/09	Rule 16-104 Rules of Professional Conduct http://www.nmcompcomm.us/nmrules/nmruleset.aspx?rs=16
NY			Under consideration.
NC Adopted 10/1/03		North Carolina-Rules and Regulations, Subchapter A, Organization of the North Carolina State Bar, Section .0204, Certificate of Insurance Coverage		On the Bar's website: http://www.ncbar.com/home/member_directory.asp and http://www.ncbar.com/InsuranceDisclosures/proprul.asp	The North Carolina State Bar Association has proposed that the Rule Requiring Certification of Insurance Coverage be eliminated. http://www.ncbar.gov/rules/proprul.asp

	Requires Disclosure Directly to Client (7) (AK, CA, NH, NM, OH, PA and SD)	Requires Disclosure On Annual Registration Statement¹ (18) (AZ, CO, DE, HI, ID, IL, KS, MA, MI, MN, NE, NV, NC, ND, RI, VA, WA and WV)	Considering Adoption (4) (ME, NY, UT and VT)	Information Made Available to Public	Other Info (See also, Oregon: Professional liability insurance mandated) (AR, CT, FL, KY and TX have decided not to adopt the Model Court Rule)
ND Effective 8/1/09	http://www.court.state.nd.us/rules/Conduct/frameset.htm	Amended Rule 1.15 of the North Dakota Rules of Professional Conduct		Yes
OH Effective 7/1/01	Ohio Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 1.4(c) http://www.sconet.state.oh.us/Atty-Svcs/ProfConduct/rules/default.asp#Rule14			N/A	Lawyers who hire themselves out to do research and writing for other lawyers need not comply. (Ohio Supreme Court Bd. of Commissioners on Grievances and Discipline, Op. 2005-1, 2/4/05).
OR					All lawyers required to maintain professional liability insurance.
PA Effective 7/1/06	Pennsylvania adopted RPC 1.4(c), effective 7/1/2006. http://www.aop.org/OpPosting/Supreme/out/50drd.1attach.pdf			N/A
RI Effective 4/15/07		Rule 1(b) of Article IV "Periodic Registration of Attorneys". (Effective April 15, 2007)		http://www.courts.state.ri.us/supreme/pdf-files/ORDER_Amendments_to_RI_Supreme_Court_Article_IV_Rule_1_(Attorney_registration).pdf

	Requires Disclosure Directly to Client (7) (AK, CA, NH, NM, OH, PA and SD)	Requires Disclosure On Annual Registration Statement¹ (18) (AZ, CO, DE, HI, ID, IL, KS, MA, MI, MN, NE, NV, NC, ND, RI, VA, WA and WV)	Considering Adoption (4) (ME, NY, UT and VT)	Information Made Available to Public	Other Info (See also, Oregon: Professional liability insurance mandated) (AR, CT, FL, KY and TX have decided not to adopt the Model Court Rule)
SC
SD Effective 1/1/99	South Dakota Model Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 1.4 (Communication)	(SD also requires lawyers to disclose on their annual registration statements.) http://www.sdbar.org/memberspublic/Information/2007_Certificate.pdf		N/A	SD has 7 years of certification to the Supreme Court - 97% have at least $100,000 in coverage, together with name and policy number of the policy. Over the past 7 years, the percentage has never dropped below 96% nor been higher than 97.5% in any given year.
TX					By letter dated April 14, 2010 to the President of the State Bar of Texas, the Supreme Court of Texas declined to adopt an insurance disclosure rule. http://www.supreme.courts.state.tx.us/advisories/pdf/WBJ_Letter_Mandatory_Insurance_Disclosure_041410.PDF
UT			Rule 1.4 Proposed Amendment - Disclosure of Malpractice Insurance Rule 1.4. Communication. http://webster.utahbar.org/news/2005/07/		Required to disclose on registration statement but no Rule enacted. Bar will collect date on coverage for a 2-year period (2009-2011).
			On December 28, 2006 the Civil Rules

	Requires Disclosure Directly to Client (7) (AK, CA, NH, NM, OH, PA and SD)	Requires Disclosure On Annual Registration Statement¹ (18) (AZ, CO, DE, HI, ID, IL, KS, MA, MI, MN, NE, NV, NC, ND, RI, VA, WA and WV)	Considering Adoption (4) (ME, NY, UT and VT)	Information Made Available to Public	Other Info (See also, Oregon: Professional liability insurance mandated) (AR, CT, FL, KY and TX have decided not to adopt the Model Court Rule)
VT			Committee proposed that the Vermont Supreme Court consider adoption of a rule requiring insurance disclosure, not in the Vermont Rules of Professional Conduct, but as part of the Rules for Licensing of Attorneys. In adopting the rule, consideration should be given to requiring disclosure of the liability limits and deductibles of the coverage.
VA Amended effective 7/1/89; 1/1/90; 4/1/90.		Rules of the Virginia Supreme Court, Part 6 § 4 Paragraph 18. Financial Responsibility		Yes, on Bar's website: (See, www.vsb.org , under the headings Public Information, Attorney Records Search, Attorneys without Malpractice Insurance). Total Members Answering PL Questions: 25,921 - FY2005 Private Practice – No Insurance: 1,892 (11%) Private Practice – With Insurance: 14,703 (89%)	Virginia State Bar is seeking comments on a proposed Rule requiring legal malpractice insurance. Comments are due by September 26, 2008. http://www.vsb.org/site/news/item/proposed-insurance-requirement/
WA Effective 7/1/07		Admission to Practice Rule 26 - Insurance Disclosure.		Yes.

	Requires Disclosure Directly to Client (7) (AK, CA, NH, NM, OH, PA and SD)	Requires Disclosure On Annual Registration Statement¹ (18) (AZ, CO, DE, HI, ID, IL, KS, MA, MI, MN, NE, NV, NC, ND, RI, VA, WA and WV)	Considering Adoption (4) (ME, NY, UT and VT)	Information Made Available to Public	Other Info (See also, Oregon: Professional liability insurance mandated) (AR, CT, FL, KY and TX have decided not to adopt the Model Court Rule)
		(Effective July 1, 2007) http://www.courts.wa.gov/court_Rules/proposed/2005Dec/APR26.doc .
WV Effective 5/6/05		State Bar By-Laws – Article III (A) - Financial Responsibility Disclosure http://www.state.wv.us/wvsca/rules/ArticleIII.htm		Yes. ... shall be made available to the public by such means as may be designated by the West Virginia State Bar.
WI
WY

Copyright © 2010 American Bar Association. All rights reserved. Nothing contained in this chart is to be considered the rendering of legal advice. The charts are intended for educational and informational purposes only. We make every attempt to keep these charts as accurate as possible. If you are aware of any inaccuracies in the charts, please send your corrections or additions and the source of that information to John Holtaway, (312) 988-5298, jholtaway@staff.abanet.org

Proposed Rule 1.5 [4-200] “Fees for Legal Services”

(XDraft #14.1, 6/28/10)

Summary: Proposed Rule 1.5, together with proposed Rule 1.5.1 and to a limited extent, proposed Rule 1.8.1, regulates fee arrangements between lawyers and their clients. The principal differences between the proposed Rule and Model Rule 1.5 is the former’s retention of the “unconscionability” standard for imposing discipline relating to legal fees and the provisions regulating flat and fixed fees that are purported to be nonrefundable or earned on receipt. See Introduction.

Comparison with ABA Counterpart

Rule

Comment

- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
- ☒ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
- ☐ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
- ☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
- ☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
- ☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
- ☒ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
- ☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

Primary Factors Considered

- ☒ Existing California Law

Rules

RPC 4-200, 2-200

Statute

Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 6147, 6148

Case law

Herrscher v. State Bar (1934) 4 Cal.2d 399, 402 [49 P.2d 832]; Goldstone v. State Bar (1931) 214 Cal. 490 [6 P.2d 513].

- ☒ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

Arizona Rule 1.5; Washington Rule 1.5 (2008).

- ☐ Other Primary Factor(s)

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(13 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 13 due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Less than Six Members Opposing Public Comment Distribution ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 7

Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 5

Abstain 0

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by consensus ☐

Minority/Position Included on Model Rule Comparison Chart: ☒ Yes ☐ No

Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

☐ No Known Stakeholders

☒ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

California Attorneys for Criminal Justice; Criminal Defense Lawyers Club of San Diego; National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers; and members of the California criminal defense bar. See Public Comment Chart for a complete list of those who commented on proposed Rule 1.5.

☒ Very Controversial – Explanation:

During both public comment periods, members of the California criminal defense bar and some of their representative organizations disagreed with the Commission's proposals regulating fee arrangements that purport to be non-refundable fee. After each public comment period, the Commission revised the Rule in an attempt to address the concerns raised.

☐ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

☐ Not Controversial

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.5* Fees for Legal Services

July 2010

(Draft rule following consideration of second round of public comment.)

INTRODUCTION:

1. Proposed Rule 1.5 diverges from Model Rule 1.5 in several important respects: (1) An unconscionability standard is incorporated into the Rule rather than the Model Rule's "reasonable" fee standard as the bench mark for imposing discipline on lawyers, thus carrying forward the standard in current California Rule 4-200; (2) Model Rule 1.5(b), which identifies requirements for fee agreements and Model Rule 1.5(c), which sets forth requirement for contingent fee agreements, have both been deleted because those topics are already covered in Business & Professions Code §§ 6148 and 6147, respectively [see Explanation of Changes for Model Rule 1.5(b) and (c)]; (3) Model Rule 1.5(e), which concerns fee divisions among lawyers, has been deleted because that topic is covered in a separate rule, proposed Rule 1.5.1 [see Explanation of Changes for Model Rule 1.5(e)]; (4) proposed Rule 1.5 also includes new paragraphs (e) and (f), which have been revised following extensive public comment. Rather than prohibit outright a lawyer from contracting for, charging or collecting a non-refundable fee (first public comment draft), paragraph (e) now permits lawyers to denominate a fee as "non-refundable" or "earned on receipt" or in similar terms, but only if the lawyer makes certain written disclosures to the client that are intended to avoid the client being misled [see Explanation of Changes for paragraph (e) and (f), which explain that the Commission's approach simply recognizes what is California law and is an attempt to balance a number of competing interests that were identified in the public comment]; and (5) It adds new paragraph (g), which prohibits a lawyer from making a material fee agreement modification that is adverse to a client's interests unless: (i) the client is represented by an independent lawyer regarding the modification; or (ii) the lawyer advises the client in writing to seek the advice of an independent lawyer and is provided a reasonable opportunity to do so. New paragraph (g) was added by the Board to enhance public protection and was based upon a recommendation by a minority of the Commission [see Explanation of Changes for paragraph (g); see also, Introduction to proposed Rule 1.8.1].

* Proposed Rule 1.5, XDraft 14.1 (6/28/10).

2. The Commission recommends that California retain the unconscionability standard for disciplining lawyers that is found in current rule 4-200. Seventy-five years ago, in a case seeking disbarment of an attorney, the California Supreme Court rejected a “reasonable fee” standard in discipline:

We think the proper rule in such cases is that the mere fact that a fee is charged in excess of the reasonable value of the services rendered will not of itself warrant discipline of the attorney involved. Ordinarily, the propriety of the fee charged should be left to the civil courts in a proper action. As was said by the Washington court in In Re Wiltsie, 109 Wash. 261, 186 P. 848:

“The board also found, as one of the grounds for his disbarment, that the charges made for these services were excessive. We do not feel like depriving a practitioner of his right to continue his profession on a question as debatable as the propriety of the amount of a fee. Such a question is so much a matter of individual opinion that it should not be the basis for disbarment, except in the most aggravated and extreme case. So far as the record discloses, the fees were voluntarily paid, and, were it the only charge here that such fees were excessive, the extreme penalty would not be merited.”

See Herrscher v. State Bar (1934) 4 Cal.2d 399, 402-403 [49 P.2d 832] (citations omitted). The Court then went on to state what it believed was the appropriate test for imposing discipline on a lawyer:

In the few cases where discipline has been enforced against an attorney for charging excessive fees, there has usually been present some element of fraud or overreaching on the attorney's part, or failure on the attorney's part to disclose the true facts, so that the fee charged, under the circumstances, constituted a practical appropriation of the client's funds under the guise of retaining them as fees.

Generally speaking, neither the Board of Governors nor this court can, or should, attempt to evaluate an attorney's services in a quasi-criminal proceeding such as this, where there has been no failure to disclose to the client the true facts or no overreaching or fraud on the part of the attorney. It is our opinion that the disciplinary machinery of the bar should not be put into operation merely on the complaint of a client that a fee charged is excessive, unless the other elements above mentioned are present. (Emphasis added) (Citations omitted).

Nothing in the intervening 75 years warrants changing that standard. The public is provided sufficient protection against avaricious lawyers who charge “unreasonable” fees through the civil court system and California’s unique system of mandatory fee arbitration and, in extreme cases such as those described in the preceding paragraphs, through imposing discipline on lawyers who charge, contract for or collect an unconscionable fee.

3. Minority. A minority of the Commission takes the position that proposed Rule 1.5 falls short of the Commission's charge to update the California Rules of Professional Conduct to "[a]ssure adequate protection to the public in light of developments that have occurred since the rules were last reviewed and amended" and to "[p]romote confidence in the legal profession and the administration of justice." It contends that by retaining "unconscionability" as the standard for imposing discipline under the Rule, the majority sends a regrettable message to the public and profession alike that California tolerates lawyers charging their clients unreasonable fees. This is an area where the Commission and the Board of Governors should reassess the continued viability of the Herrscher decision, on which the Commission majority has placed great reliance. The concerns the Supreme Court expressed 75 years ago about the efficacy of inquiring into the reasonableness of fees should not control the debate for a self-regulating profession in this sensitive area of lawyer-client relations. Moreover, the proposed Rule is out of step with virtually all other states on the subject of lawyer's fees. Only California and Texas adhere to an "unconscionable fee" standard. A clear majority of the remaining jurisdictions states have adopted the more public protective Model Rule standard which prohibits lawyers from charging "unreasonable fees," while a handful have retained the "clearly excessive" standard from the 1969 ABA Code of Professional Responsibility.

The minority further contends that even if Herrscher remains sound public policy in modern practice, there is no support in the law or in the rules of any jurisdiction for the provision in proposed rule 1.5(a) that permits lawyers to make an agreement, charge and collect unreasonable or excessive expenses so long as the expenses are not "unconscionable." The prohibition against charging unreasonable expenses is generally accepted in all jurisdictions including California. See current rule 4-210 (lawyer may advance reasonable expenses of litigation or in providing any legal service to the client); ABA Formal Opinions 93-379. There is no sound reason for departing from the Model Rule on this important issue of public protection.

4. Non refundable fees & Public Comment. During both rounds of public comment, members of the California criminal defense bar and some of their representative organizations disagreed with the Commission's proposed paragraphs (e) [second round of public comment] (f) [first round of public comment]. The latter provision provided for an absolute ban on any non-refundable fee by stating that a lawyer "shall not charge, contract for or collect a non-refundable fee, except for a true retainer." After the initial round of public comment, the Commission proposed the former provision, which recognized the potential advantage to clients of a "flat" or "fixed" fee arrangement and expressly permitted its use so long as certain disclosures were made in the agreement. Further criticism of the Commission's treatment of non-refundable fees was lodged during the second public comment period.

The Commission believes that the commenters who have disagreed with the Commission's treatment of nonrefundable and earned on receipt fee arrangements misinterpret current California law, which clearly makes fixed and flat fees refundable. Nevertheless, to address the concerns stated by those in the legal community who opposed the revisions, the Commission has made further revisions to the Rule in an attempt to balance the competing interests that had been identified: the interests of clients in taking advantage of the certainty of a flat fee agreement (see Explanation of Changes for paragraph (f)), while still being able to discharge their lawyers at any time without the threat of losing the fee that was advanced to the lawyer whom the client seeks to discharge, and the interests of preventing attachment by third parties of fees advanced by the client. Paragraph (e) now permits the use of the terms "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," or similar terms, but only if the lawyer provides specific written disclosures intended to prevent the client from being misled as to the client's rights to discharge the lawyer at any time and potential right to a refund. For a fuller discussion, please see Explanation of Changes for paragraphs (e) and (f), below.

Minority. A minority of the Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (e)(2) as drafted would be a source of overreaching and confusion. The minority argues that there are many different fee arrangements involving flat or fixed fees. While a lawyer may require advance payment of a fixed or flat fee, the lawyer remains obligated under the rules in all jurisdictions, including Washington, to return any unearned portion. See Model Rule 1.16(d); current California Rule 3-700(D)(2) and Washington Rule 1.5(f)(2). Washington Rule 1.5(f) is not intended to authorize lawyers to charge "non-refundable fees" as proposed rule 1.5(e) purports to do. Rather, Washington's rule provides that the client and the lawyer may agree in writing that a flat or fixed fee paid in advance is the lawyer's property and, therefore, need not be placed in the lawyer's client trust account, which Washington's rule would otherwise require. Unlike the rule in most jurisdictions, California does not required advance fee payments to be place in a client trust account. However, California law does not permit lawyers to make an agreement, charge or retain a "non-refundable" flat or fixed fee that has not been earned. Matthew v. State Bar (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 784, 787-788; Matter of Lais (Rev.Dept 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907, 923; Federal Sav. & Loan Ins. Corp. v. Angell, Holmes & Lea (9th Cir. 1988) 838 F.2d 395, 397 (applying California law). A rule that authorizes lawyers to charge "non-refundable" flat or fixed fees is not good public policy. "Nonrefundable" when used to signify a prepaid fee is misleading because the lawyer's fee is never truly nonrefundable until earned. When used in connection with a "true" or "classic" retainer, the term "nonrefundable" is redundant. Not only is the label not controlling, the term "non-refundable" retainer has been the source of confusion and should not be encouraged in a rule of professional conduct. Most authorities are in agreement. See, Alec Rothrock, The Forgotten Flat Fee; Whose Money is it and Where Should it be Deposited?, 1 Fla. Coastal L. J. 293 (1999), ABA Manual on Professional Responsibility 45:109 (1993), In re Mance, D.C. Ct. of Appeals, 06-BGT-890 (09-24-2009). Many criminal defense lawyers, including some who submitted comments to the earlier version of proposed Rule

1.5, said they would agree to refund a portion of a flat or fixed fee to a client who changed counsel shortly after paying the fixed fee or if charges were dismissed soon after the lawyer was retained.

A separate minority of the Commission takes the position that by limiting an availability fee only to circumstances where the lawyer will additionally bill fully for his or her services when working on the engagement without giving any credit to the client for the “availability fee” payment, the proposed Rule changes existing law, limits the availability fee to situations which rarely if ever occur in real life, makes other “advance fees” subject to third party sequestration, and serves neither client nor lawyer well. The minority concludes that there are alternative means of protecting a client who becomes entitled to return of all or part of an advance fee, as explained in the attached dissent, below.

5. Variations in Other Jurisdictions. Forty-one jurisdictions have adopted a reasonable fee standard. Eight jurisdictions have retained the “clearly excessive or illegal” standard from the 1969 ABA Model Code of Professional Responsibility. Two jurisdictions have the “illegal or unconscionable” standard. See also State Variations, below.

Proposed Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services Rules Revision Commission – Minority Dissent

Availability Fees, Advance Fees, and Flat Fees Paid in Advance

First, availability fees are clearly earned by the lawyer upon receipt, not subject to trust account deposit, and nonrefundable. Baranowski v. State Bar (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 153, 163 et seq., plainly so held. However, since that decision the State Bar Court (not the Supreme Court, whose Baranowski case stands unassailed and has been cited elsewhere as authoritative, see, eg., In re McDonald Bros. Const. Inc. (Bk. N.D. Ill. 1990) 114 B.R. 989, 997-1002) has whittled away at its holding in Matter of Fonte (1994) 2 Cal. St. Bar Rptr. 752, and In re Brockway (2006) 4 Cal. St. Bar Rptr. 944. Thus, in practice, the protection a lawyer has on receipt of an availability fee under Baranowski has been eroded and scarcely exists.

Secondly, in real life there is no point or almost no point in an availability fee as we have narrowly defined that term, i.e., a fee purely for having the lawyer available – presumably, by refusing other work which may or may not come along – but where the lawyer is also required to charge the client separately for the work when the lawyer performs that work. Under what circumstances would a lawyer institute this arrangement, and what would be the required non-unconscionable level at which such a second fee could be established? Or how would one measure the value of time (i.e., of availability), except by the work to be done and separately billed for?

Yet, as criminal defense lawyers have made amply clear to the Commission. and as applies equally to lawyers representing bankrupts and certain other debtors, and perhaps other relationships which have not been brought forward to the Commission's attention, such lawyers need to have a fully earned fee upon engagement, because to the extent that the fee has not been fully earned (i.e., that it may be refunded), it does not wholly belong to the lawyer; and law enforcement or similar adverse parties may seize the funds from the lawyer, leaving the lawyer unpaid and, unless a court orders the lawyer to work without fee, leaving the client unrepresented.

Thus, one defect in the proposed Rule is that in the praiseworthy effort to protect clients against certain potential improprieties – the lawyer's being paid and then not performing the work, or the client changing her mind and not being able to recover an advance fee so that she can pay a successor – we are creating another, serious trap for lawyer and client alike.

The same fault underlies the proposed Rule that provides that when a lawyer accepts an availability fee, there must also be a separate charge for the work being done, beyond the availability fee: if that is not the case, it is not a true availability fee. The availability fee may thus never be used to pay the lawyer for actual work on the client's matter.

This concept comes out of early case law; and indeed, in the early days of California jurisprudence, there may have been situations where a client came to a lawyer to say that the client would pay the lawyer just to be able to call on him if needed. However, this was before the rise of the billable hour; and there is no authority and to my knowledge no anecdotal experience which indicates that more recent history (say, since WW II) actually shows such situations, where an availability fee was followed by hourly or other pro rata charges for the work when done.

So, the Commission is either carrying forward into the 21st century a formulation which has had no meaning since the 19th, or ignoring the true meaning of an availability fee.

The motive behind this approach is client protection – as is true with the post-Baranowski cases cited above. However, lawyers in fact use the availability fee, or a “fully earned at the time of payment” version of a flat fee, for legitimate and client-beneficial purposes. The Commission’s formulation undercuts both points of this established practice, which is allowed under the current California Rule. In the interest of one aspect of client protection, the proposed Rule deprives both client and lawyer of an important and necessary means to allow clients to retain lawyers, and lawyers to accept certain engagements, in socially valuable situations.

There are other ways to solve this problem. One, but not necessarily the only one, is not to limit or forbid “true retainer” fees or fully earned advance fees which also include payment for work to be done, but rather to require that lawyers may not willfully (a) fail to do the work whose value is included in the flat fee or availability retainer, or (b) refuse to refund a prorated portion if the contemplated work is not done.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(a) A lawyer shall not make an agreement for, charge, or collect an unreasonable fee or an unreasonable amount for expenses. The factors to be considered in determining the reasonableness of a fee include the following:	(a) A lawyer shall not make an agreement for, charge, or collect an ~~unreasonable~~ unconscionable or illegal fee or an ~~unreasonable amount for expenses. The factors to be considered~~ unconscionable or illegal in determining the reasonableness of a fee include the following: house expense.	The first sentence of paragraph (a) has been revised to substitute the recommended standard – unconscionable or illegal – for the Model Rule's "reasonable" standard. See Introduction. The second sentence has been similarly revised and moved to paragraph (c) as that paragraph's introductory clause. The limitation in paragraph (c) on charging an unconscionable or illegal expense is limited those expenses charged that incurred in-house by a lawyer, over which the lawyer has control. The Commission was concerned that some expenses incurred, for example from retaining consultants and experts, might be viewed as unconscionable. However, the cost of such expenses are often beyond the ability of a lawyer to control.
	(b) A fee is unconscionable under this Rule if it is so exorbitant and wholly disproportionate to the services performed as to shock the conscience; or if the fee would amount to an improper appropriation of the client's funds because there has been an element of fraud or overreaching by the lawyer in negotiating or setting the fee, or the lawyer has failed to disclose the material facts. Unconscionability of a fee shall be determined on the basis of all the facts and circumstances existing at the time the agreement is entered into except where the parties contemplate that the fee will be affected by later events.	The Commission recommends including a definition for "unconscionable" fee, a definition not provided in current rule 4-200. The language of the definition is taken from California decisional law, including two Supreme Court cases. See Herrscher v. State Bar (1934) 4 Cal.2d 399, 402 [49 P.2d 832]; Goldstone v. State Bar (1931) 214 Cal. 490 [6 P.2d 513]. Paragraph (b) is intended to be used in conjunction with the factors set forth in paragraph (c) as an analytical framework for determining whether a fee is unconscionable. The last sentence specifies the time at which the conscionability of a fee is to be determined.

* Proposed Rule 1.5, XDraft 14.1 (6/28/10). Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	(c) Among the factors to be considered, where appropriate, in determining the conscionability of a fee or in-house expense are the following:	Paragraph (c) is based on the second sentence and subparagraphs of Model Rule 1.5(a), revised by substituting the recommended “unconscionable” standard.
	(1) the amount of the fee or in-house expense in proportion to the value of the services performed;	Subparagraph (1) has no counterpart in the Model Rule. Carried forward from current rule 4-200(B)(1), subparagraph (1) recognizes that a lawyer should assess the costs and benefits of the lawyer’s services in determining what tasks to perform.
	(2) the relative sophistication of the lawyer and the client;	Subparagraph (2) has no counterpart in the Model Rule. Carried forward from current rule 4-200(B)(2), subparagraph (1) recognizes that the experience of a client in using legal services can be relevant in determining the conscionability of a fee.
(1) the time and labor required, the novelty and difficulty of the questions involved, and the skill requisite to perform the legal service properly;	~~(13) the time and labor required,~~ the novelty and difficulty of the questions involved, and the skill requisite to perform the legal service properly;	Subparagraph (3) is identical to Model Rule 1.5(a)(1), except that the phrase “the time and labor required” has been given status as a separate factor for consideration. See subparagraph (10).
(2) the likelihood, if apparent to the client, that the acceptance of the particular employment will preclude other employment by the lawyer;	~~(24)~~ the likelihood, if apparent to the client, that the acceptance of the particular employment will preclude other employment by the lawyer;	Subparagraph (4) is identical to Model Rule 1.5(a)(2).

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(3) the fee customarily charged in the locality for similar legal services;	~~(3) the fee customarily charged in the locality for similar legal services;~~	The Commission recommends that Model Rule 1.5(a)(3) be rejected because the identified factor, while relevant to determining the reasonableness of a fee, is not relevant to determining the conscionability of a fee.
(4) the amount involved and the results obtained;	(4 ⁵) the amount involved and the results obtained;	Subparagraph (5) is identical to Model Rule 1.5(a)(4).
(5) the time limitations imposed by the client or by the circumstances;	(5 ⁶) the time limitations imposed by the client or by the circumstances;	Subparagraph (6) is identical to Model Rule 1.5(a)(5).
(6) the nature and length of the professional relationship with the client;	(6 ⁷) the nature and length of the professional relationship with the client;	Subparagraph (7) is identical to Model Rule 1.5(a)(6).
(7) the experience, reputation, and ability of the lawyer or lawyers performing the services; and	(7 ⁸) the experience, reputation, and ability of the lawyer or lawyers performing the services; and	Subparagraph (8) is identical to Model Rule 1.5(a)(7).

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(8) whether the fee is fixed or contingent.	~~(8)~~ whether the fee is fixed or contingent.	Subparagraph (9) is identical to Model Rule 1.5(a)(8).
	(10) the time and labor required.	Subparagraph (10) consists of language that has been moved from Model Rule 1.5(a)(1) and given its own subparagraph.
	(11) whether the client gave informed consent to the fee or in-house expense.	Subparagraph (11) has no counterpart in the Model Rule. It is carried forward from current rule 4-200(B)(11), which provides: "(11) The informed consent of the client to the fee."
(b) The scope of the representation and the basis or rate of the fee and expenses for which the client will be responsible shall be communicated to the client, preferably in writing, before or within a reasonable time after commencing the representation, except when the lawyer will charge a regularly represented client on the same basis or rate. Any changes in the basis or rate of the fee or expenses shall also be communicated to the client.	~~(b) The scope of the representation and the basis or rate of the fee and expenses for which the client will be responsible shall be communicated to the client, preferably in writing, before or within a reasonable time after commencing the representation, except when the lawyer will charge a regularly represented client on the same basis or rate. Any changes in the basis or rate of the fee or expenses shall also be communicated to the client.~~	The Commission recommends deletion of Model Rule 1.5(b), which prescribes what a lawyer is obligated to communicate to a client about the scope of representation and basis or rate of the fee. Those requirements are already addressed in Business & Professions Code § 6148. Under that statute, the client already has a remedy for a lawyer's violation of the statute: having the contract voided. Section 6148(c). The Commission does not recommend that a violation of section 6147 subject a lawyer to discipline under this Rule in addition to the remedy provided in the statute.
(c) A fee may be contingent on the outcome of the matter for which the service is rendered, except in a matter in which a contingent fee is prohibited by paragraph (d) or other law. A	~~(c) A fee may be contingent on the outcome of the matter for which the service is rendered, except in a matter in which a contingent fee is prohibited by paragraph (d) or other law. A~~	The Commission recommends deletion of Model Rule 1.5(c), which prescribes a lawyer's duties when the lawyer is retained on a contingent fee basis. Those requirements are already addressed in Business & Professions Code § 6147. Under that contingent fee agreement shall be in a writing signed by the client and shall state the method by which the fee is to be determined, including the percentage or percentages that shall accrue to the lawyer in the event of settlement, trial or appeal; litigation and other expenses to be deducted from the recovery; and whether such expenses are to be deducted before or after the contingent fee is calculated. The agreement must clearly notify the client of any expenses for which the client will be liable whether or not the client is the prevailing party. Upon conclusion of a contingent fee matter, the lawyer shall provide the client with a written statement stating the outcome of the matter and, if there is a recovery, showing the remittance to the client and the method of its determination.	~~contingent fee agreement shall be in a writing signed by the client and shall state the method by which the fee is to be determined, including the percentage or percentages that shall accrue to the lawyer in the event of settlement, trial or appeal; litigation and other expenses to be deducted from the recovery; and whether such expenses are to be deducted before or after the contingent fee is calculated. The agreement must clearly notify the client of any expenses for which the client will be liable whether or not the client is the prevailing party. Upon conclusion of a contingent fee matter, the lawyer shall provide the client with a written statement stating the outcome of the matter and, if there is a recovery, showing the remittance to the client and the method of its determination.~~	statute, the client already has a remedy for a lawyer's violation of the statute: having the contract voided. Section 6147(b). The Commission does not recommend that a violation of section 6147 subject a lawyer to discipline under this Rule in addition to the remedy provided in the statute.

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(d) A lawyer shall not enter into an arrangement for, charge, or collect: (1) any fee in a domestic relations matter, the payment or amount of which is contingent upon the securing of a divorce or upon the amount of alimony or support, or property settlement in lieu thereof; or (2) a contingent fee for representing a defendant in a criminal case.	(d) A lawyer shall not enter into an arrangement for, charge, or collect: (1) any fee in a ~~domestic relations~~family law matter, the payment or amount of which is contingent upon the securing of a ~~divorce~~dissolution or declaration of nullity of a marriage or upon the amount of ~~alimony~~spousal or child support, or property settlement in lieu thereof; or	Paragraph (d) is based on Model Rule 1.5(d), except that the language in subparagraph (1) has been revised to conform to the language used in that area of law in California, e.g., "family law" in place of "domestic relations". The Commission recommends adoption of Model Rule 1.5(d) as revised. The Commission recognizes that there are other kinds of contingent fee cases that might be prohibited, for example, the representation of a governmental entity by a private lawyer or firm on a contingent basis, (see, e.g, County of Santa Clara v. Superior Court (2008) 74 Cal.Rptr.3d 842, review granted, 80 Cal.Rptr.3d

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	(2) a contingent fee for representing a defendant in a criminal case.	629 (7/23/2008). However, the two kinds of cases regulated under Model Rule 1.5(d) have traditionally been viewed as implicating important Constitutional rights or public policy. See, e.g., Restatement (3d) Law of Lawyers § 35, comments f.(i), f.(ii) and g. In the family law matters, California has a strong public policy of promoting reconciliation and maintaining the family unit. Because a lawyer who is being paid on a contingent basis would recover a fee only if the marriage is dissolved and property apportioned, permitting contingent fees in these cases would undermine the California policy. In criminal cases, a lawyer who is being paid on a contingent basis would recover a fee only if the client is found not guilty. That would create a conflict for a lawyer if the best interests of the client, in light of the evidence, warrant the client entering a plea.

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(e) A division of a fee between lawyers who are not in the same firm may be made only if: (1) the division is in proportion to the services performed by each lawyer or each lawyer assumes joint responsibility for the representation; (2) the client agrees to the arrangement, including the share each lawyer will receive, and the agreement is confirmed in writing; and (3) the total fee is reasonable.	~~(e) A division of a fee between lawyers who are not in the same firm may be made only if:~~ ~~(1) the division is in proportion to the services performed by each lawyer or each lawyer assumes joint responsibility for the representation;~~ ~~(2) the client agrees to the arrangement, including the share each lawyer will receive, and the agreement is confirmed in writing; and~~ ~~(3) the total fee is reasonable.~~	The Commission recommends deletion of Model Rule 1.5(e) because the subject of fee divisions between lawyers is addressed in a separate rule. See proposed Rule 1.5.1. The Commission determined that fee divisions should be addressed in a free-standing rule because: (i) proposed Rule 1.5.1 is a substantial departure from the Model Rule (ii) the Commission is recommending several revisions to current rule 2-200 to impose more obligations on lawyers and enhance client protection, and (iii) of the large amount of litigation this Rule has traditionally engendered. See proposed Rule 1.5.1, Introduction, ¶. 8.
	(e) When permitted by paragraph (f), a lawyer may make an agreement for, charge, or collect a fee that is denominated as "earned on receipt" or "nonrefundable," or in similar terms, but only if the client is advised in writing that the client nevertheless may discharge the lawyer at any time and may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged, and the client agrees to the arrangement in a writing signed by the client.	Paragraph (e) has no counterpart in the Model Rule. In recommending its adoption, the Commission is attempting to balance the interests of clients in taking advantage of the certainty of a flat fee agreement (see Explanation of Changes for paragraph (f)), while still being able to discharge their lawyers at any time without the threat of losing the fee that was advanced to the lawyer whom the client seeks to discharge, and the interests of preventing attachment by third parties of fees advanced by the client. Instead of banning "nonrefundable" or "earned-on-receipt" fee agreements outright, or simply prohibiting the use of these terms under any circumstances, after further consideration following the extensive public comment, the Commission determined that lawyers should be permitted to use these terms so long as they make certain disclosures in writing to the client.

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
		The disclosures simply state the current law of California, i.e., that no fee nonrefundable until earned and a client has the right at any time to discharge the client's lawyer. Paragraph (f) describes two kinds of fee arrangement with which the terms "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" are commonly used. The concept of paragraph (e) is also found in Arizona Rule 1.5(d)(3). See also Explanation of Changes for paragraph (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B].
	(f) A lawyer is permitted to denominate a fee as "earned on receipt" or "nonrefundable" only in making an agreement for the following types of fee arrangements:	Paragraph (f) permits the use of the terms, "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" only in two types of fee arrangements, as described in subparagraphs (f)(1) and (f)(2).
	(1) a true retainer, which is a fee that a client pays to a lawyer to ensure the lawyer's availability to the client during a specified period or on a specified matter, but not as compensation for legal services performed or to be performed.	Subparagraph (f)(1) is the first of the fee arrangements that this Rule permits to be denominated as non-refundable or earned on receipt. Subparagraph (f)(1) carries forward this nonrefundable/earned on receipt fee arrangement that traditionally has been recognized in the profession and is already found in current rule 3-700(D)(2).
	(2) a flat fee for specified legal services, which constitutes complete payment for those services and may be paid in whole or in part in advance of the lawyer providing the services.	Subparagraph (2) describe the second of the fee arrangements that can be denominated as nonrefundable or earned on receipt: a flat fee. A variant of subparagraph (2) was added following the initial public comment to address concerns raised by members of the California criminal defense bar that prohibiting such earned-on-receipt flat fees and requiring all such fees paid to criminal defense lawyers to be advance fees, could result in the government impounding the fee advance, thereby preventing a criminal defendant from retaining the defendant's counsel of choice. The Commission believes the written disclosures required under paragraph (e) will operate to prevent abuses of the flat fee arrangement and avoid the problems envisioned by the defense bar. See the Public Comment chart for a complete list of the members of the California criminal defense bar who submitted public comment on proposed Rule 1.5.

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	(g) A lawyer shall not make a material modification to an agreement by which the lawyer is retained by the client that is adverse to the client's interests unless the client is either represented with respect to the modification by an independent lawyer or is advised in writing by the lawyer to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client's choice and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice.	Paragraph (g) addresses fee agreement modifications that occur during the course of a representation. Paragraph (g) has no counterpart in the Model Rule and was adopted by the Board of Governors based upon a recommendation of a minority of the Commission. In response to Board member concerns about the Commission's initial proposal for limited applicability of Rule 1.8.1 to fee agreement modifications, paragraph (f) was drafted and garnered the support of a minority of the Commission. The minority drafted paragraph (g) to afford new public protection by prohibiting a lawyer from making a material fee agreement modification that is adverse to a client's interests unless: (1) the client is represented by an independent lawyer regarding the modification; or (2) the lawyer advises the client in writing to seek the advice of an independent lawyer and is provided a reasonable opportunity to do so. Fee agreement modifications that are not adverse to a client's interests are not prohibited by paragraph (f) and, in this regard, there are new comments that provide guidance for applying the rule. See also Explanation of Changes for Comments [3] – [3C].

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Reasonableness of Fee and Expenses [1] Paragraph (a) requires that lawyers charge fees that are reasonable under the circumstances. . . . [COMMENT [1] is continued in the next row]	~~Reasonableness~~Unconscionability of Fee ~~and Expenses~~ [1] Paragraph (a) requires that lawyers charge fees that are not unconscionable or illegal under the circumstances. An illegal fee can result from a variety of circumstances, including when a lawyer renders services under a fee agreement that is unenforceable as illegal or against public policy, (e.g., Kallen v. Delug (1984) 157 Cal.App.3d 940, 950-951 [203 Cal.Rptr. 879] [fee agreement with other lawyer entered under threat of withholding client file]), when a lawyer contracts for or collects a fee that exceeds statutory limits (e.g., In re Shalant (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 829; In re Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266 [fees exceeding limits under Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6146]), or when an unlicensed lawyer provides legal services. E.g., Birbrower, Montalbano, Condon and Frank v. Superior Court (1998) 17 Cal.4th 119, 136 [70 Cal.Rptr.2d 304]; In re Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896.	The title for this section of the Rule has been revised to reflect the standard being recommended. The Commission recommends that Model Rule 1.5, cmt. [1] be rejected because it addresses the reasonable fee standard, which the Commission has recommended be rejected. See Introduction. In its place, the Commission has proposed Comment [1] and [1B], which clarifies paragraphs (a) and (b) and provides additional guidance for their application by citing to California decisional law concerning illegal or unconscionable fees.
[COMMENT [1] continued] The factors specified in (1) through (8) are not exclusive. Nor will each factor be relevant in each instance. Paragraph (a) also requires that expenses	[1B] Paragraph (a) ~~requires that lawyers charge fees that are reasonable under the circumstances~~ defines an unconscionable fee. See Herrscher v. State Bar (1934) 4 Cal.2d 399, 402 [49 P.2d 832]; Goldstone v. State Bar (1931) 214 Cal.	Comment [1B] emphasizes that the eleven factors in paragraph (c) are not exclusive, and that not all of them will necessarily be relevant in every instance. The next-to-last sentence observes that contingent fees are subject to the same unconscionability standard as other fee arrangements. Finally, the last sentence for which the client will be charged must be reasonable. A lawyer may seek reimbursement for the cost of services performed in-house, such as copying, or for other expenses incurred in-house, such as telephone charges, either by charging a reasonable amount to which the client has agreed in advance or by charging an amount that reasonably reflects the cost incurred by the lawyer.	490 [6 P.2d 513]. The factors specified in paragraphs (c)(1) through (811) that are to be considered in determining whether a fee is conscionable are not exclusive. Nor will each factor necessarily be relevant in each instance. Paragraph Contingent fees, like any other fees, are subject to the unconscionability standard of paragraph (a). also ~~requires that expenses for which the client will be charged must be reasonable. A lawyer may seek reimbursement for the cost services performed in in-house, such as copying, or for other expenses incurred in-house, such as telephone~~are charges, either by charging a reasonable amount to which the client has agreed in advance or by charging an amount that reasonably reflects the cost incurred by the lawyer or firm as opposed to third-party charges.	explains what is meant by an “in-house expense.”

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Basis or Rate of Fee [2] When the lawyer has regularly represented a client, they ordinarily will have evolved an understanding concerning the basis or rate of the fee and the expenses for which the client will be responsible. In a new client-lawyer relationship, however, an understanding as to fees and expenses must be promptly established. Generally, it is desirable to furnish the client with at least a simple memorandum or copy of the lawyer's customary fee arrangements that states the general nature of the legal services to be provided, the basis, rate or total	Basis or Rate of Fee ~~[2] When the lawyer has regularly represented a client, they ordinarily will have evolved an understanding concerning the basis or rate of the fee and the expenses for which the client will be responsible. In a new client lawyer relationship, however, an understanding as to fees and expenses must be promptly established. Generally, it is desirable to furnish the client with at least a simple memorandum or copy of the lawyer's customary fee arrangements that states the general nature of the legal services to be provided, the basis, rate or total~~	The Commission recommends that Model Rule 1.5, cmt. [2] be rejected for the reasons given in the Explanation of Changes for Model Rule 1.5(b).

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
amount of the fee and whether and to what extent the client will be responsible for any costs, expenses or disbursements in the course of the representation. A written statement concerning the terms of the engagement reduces the possibility of misunderstanding.	~~amount of the fee and whether and to what extent the client will be responsible for any costs, expenses or disbursements in the course of the representation. A written statement concerning the fee terms of the engagement reduces the possibility of misunderstanding.~~
[3] Contingent fees, like any other fees, are subject to the reasonableness standard of paragraph (a) of this Rule. In determining whether a particular contingent fee is reasonable, or whether it is reasonable to charge any form of contingent fee, a lawyer must consider the factors that are relevant under the circumstances. Applicable law may impose limitations on contingent fees, such as a ceiling on the percentage allowable, or may require a lawyer to offer clients an alternative basis for the fee. Applicable law also may apply to situations other than a contingent fee, for example, government regulations regarding fees in certain tax matters.	~~[3] Contingent fees, like any other fees, are subject to the reasonableness standard of paragraph (a) of this Rule. In determining whether a particular contingent fee is reasonable, or whether it is reasonable to charge any form of contingent fee, a lawyer must consider the factors that are relevant under the circumstances. Applicable law may impose limitations on contingent fees, such as a ceiling on the percentage allowable, or may require a lawyer to offer clients an alternative basis for the fee. Applicable law also may apply to situations other than a contingent fee, for example, government regulations regarding fees in certain tax matters.~~	The Commission recommends that Model Rule 1.5, cmt. [3] be rejected for the reasons given in the Explanation of Changes for Model Rule 1.5(c).
	[2] In many circumstances, Business and Professions Code, sections 6147 and 6148 govern what a lawyer is required to include in a fee agreement, and provide consequences for a lawyer's failure to comply with the requirements. (See, e.g., In re Harney (1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266.)	Comment [2] has no counterpart in the Model Rule. It contains cross-references to Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 6147 and 6148, which govern contingent and other fee agreements in California. See also Explanation of Changes Model Rule 1.5(b) and (c).

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	Modifications of Agreements by which a Lawyer is Retained by a Client [3] Paragraph (g) imposes a specific requirement with respect to modifications of agreements by which a lawyer is retained by a client, when the amendment is material and is adverse to the client's interests. A material modification is one that substantially changes a significant term of the agreement, such as the lawyer's billing rate or manner in which fees or costs are determined or charged. A material modification is adverse to a client's interests when the modification benefits the lawyer in a manner that is contrary to the client's interest. Increases of a fee, cost, or expense pursuant to a provision in a pre-existing agreement that permits such increases are not modifications of the agreement for purposes of paragraph (g). However, such increases may be subject to other paragraphs of this Rule, or other Rules or statutes.	See above explanation of paragraph (g). Comment [3] has no counterpart in the Model Rule and was adopted by the Board of Governors based upon a recommendation of a minority of the Commission. Comment [3] clarifies that the Paragraph (g) prohibition applies only to a material fee agreement modification with a current client that is adverse to the client's interests, provides a standard for determining whether a modification is material, and clarifies a common agreement that would not be material.
	[3A] Whether a particular modification is material and adverse to the interest of the client depends on the circumstances. For example a modification that increases a lawyer's hourly billing rate or the amount of a lawyer's contingency fee ordinarily is material and adverse to a client's interest under paragraph (g). On the other hand, a modification that reduces a lawyer's fee ordinarily is not material and adverse to a client's interest under paragraph (g). A modification that extends the time within which a	See above explanation of paragraph (g). Comment [3A] has no counterpart in the Model Rule and was adopted by the Board of Governors based upon a recommendation of a minority of the Commission. Comment [3A] addresses the issue of whether a particular fee agreement modification is "material" and "adverse." It provides an example of a modification that is material and adverse and an example of a modification that is not material and not adverse.

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	client is obligated to pay a fee ordinarily is not material and adverse to a client's interests, particularly when the modification is made in response to a client's adverse financial circumstances.
	[3B] In general, the negotiation of an agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client is an arms length transaction. Setzer v. Robinson (1962) 57 Cal.2d 213 [18 Cal.Rptr. 524]. Once a lawyer-client relationship has been established, the lawyer owes fiduciary duties to the client that apply to the modification of the agreement that are in addition to the requirements in Paragraph (g). Lawyers should consult case law and ethics opinions to ascertain their professional responsibilities with respect to modifications to an agreement by which a client retains a lawyer's services. See, e.g., Ramirez v. Sturdevant (1994) 21 Cal.App.4th 904, 913 [26 Cal.Rptr.2d 554]; Berk v. Twentynine Palms Ranchos, Inc. (1962) 201 Cal.App.2d 625 [20 Cal.Rptr. 144]; Carlson, Collins, Gordon & Bold v. Banducci (1967) 257 Cal.App.2d 212 [64 Cal.Rptr.915]. Depending on the circumstances, other rules and statutes also may apply to the modification of an agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client, including, without limitation, Rule 1.4 (Communication), Rule 1.7 (Conflicts of Interest), and Business and Professions Code section 6106.	See above explanation of paragraph (g). Comment [3B] has no counterpart in the Model Rule and was adopted by the Board of Governors based upon a recommendation of a minority of the Commission. Comment [3B] clarifies that while only certain fee agreement modifications are subject to paragraph (g), lawyers still have professional responsibilities to clients with respect to all fee modifications. In general, these responsibilities arise from the lawyer's fiduciary duties and are addressed in ethics opinions and case law. The Comment is intended to alert lawyers about the existence of such duties and to direct lawyers to examples of current law on the subject. The Comment also provides cross references to Rule 1.4 regarding client communication, Rule 1.7 regarding conflicts of interests, and the statutory prohibition against conduct constituting moral turpitude found in the State Bar Act.

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	[3C] A modification is subject to the requirements of Rule 1.8.1 when the modification confers on the lawyer an ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client, such as when the lawyer obtains an interest in the client's property to secure the amount of the lawyer's past due or future fees.	See above explanation of paragraph (f). Comment [3C] has no counterpart in the Model Rule and was adopted by the Board of Governors based upon a recommendation of a minority of the Commission. Comment [3C] explains that Rule 1.8.1 applies to a fee agreement modification that confers on the lawyer an ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client. Such fee modifications would be subject to the full rigorous protocol of Rule 1.8.1.
Terms of Payment [4] A lawyer may require advance payment of a fee, but is obliged to return any unearned portion. See Rule 1.16(d). A lawyer may accept property in payment for services, such as an ownership interest in an enterprise, providing this does not involve acquisition of a proprietary interest in the cause of action or subject matter of the litigation contrary to Rule 1.8 (i). However, a fee paid in property instead of money may be subject to the requirements of Rule 1.8(a) because such fees often have the essential qualities of a business transaction with the client.	Terms of Payment [4] A lawyer may require advance payment of a fee, but is obliged to return any unearned portion. See Rule 1.16~~(de)~~(2). ~~A lawyer may accept property in payment for services, such as an ownership interest in an enterprise, providing this does not involve acquisition of a proprietary interest in the cause of action or subject matter of the litigation contrary to Rule 1.8 (i). However, a~~ fee paid in property instead of money may be subject to the requirements of Rule ~~1.8(a) because such fees often have the essential qualities of a business transaction with the client~~1.8.1.	Comment [4] is based on Model Rule 1.5, cmt. [4]. The second sentence has been deleted because it concerns Model Rule 1.8(i), which the Commission has not recommended be adopted. The other changes are to correct the cross-references to the appropriate proposed Rule or provision of a proposed Rule.
[5] An agreement may not be made whose terms might induce the lawyer improperly to curtail services for the client or perform them in a way contrary to the client's interest. For example, a lawyer should not enter into an agreement whereby services are to be provided only up to a stated amount when it is	[5] An agreement may not be made whose terms might induce the lawyer improperly to curtail services for the client or perform them in a way contrary to the client's interest. For example, a lawyer should not enter into an agreement whereby services are to be provided only up to a stated amount when it is	Comment [5] is identical to Model Rule 1.5, cmt. [5] except that the last, hortatory sentence of the Model Rule comment has been deleted.

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
foreseeable that more extensive services probably will be required, unless the situation is adequately explained to the client. Otherwise, the client might have to bargain for further assistance in the midst of a proceeding or transaction. However, it is proper to define the extent of services in light of the client's ability to pay. A lawyer should not exploit a fee arrangement based primarily on hourly charges by using wasteful procedures.	foreseeable that more extensive services probably will be required, unless the situation is adequately explained to the client. Otherwise, the client might have to bargain for further assistance in the midst of a proceeding or transaction. However, it is proper to define the extent of services in light of the client's ability to pay. ~~A lawyer should not exploit a fee arrangement based primarily on hourly charges by using wasteful procedures.~~
Prohibited Contingent Fees [6] Paragraph (d) prohibits a lawyer from charging a contingent fee in a domestic relations matter when payment is contingent upon the securing of a divorce or upon the amount of alimony or support or property settlement to be obtained. This provision does not preclude a contract for a contingent fee for legal representation in connection with the recovery of post-judgment balances due under support, alimony or other financial orders because such contracts do not implicate the same policy concerns.	Prohibited Contingent Fees [6] Paragraph (d) ~~prohibits a lawyer from charging a contingent fee in a domestic relations matter when payment is contingent upon the securing of a divorce or upon the amount of alimony or support or property settlement to be obtained. This provision~~ (1) does not preclude a contract for a contingent fee for legal representation in connection with the recovery of ~~post-judgment~~ balances past due under child or spousal support, ~~alimony~~ or other financial orders because such contracts do not implicate the same policy concerns.	Comment [6] is based on Model Rule 1.5, cmt. [6]. The first sentence has been deleted because it simply restates the prohibition in paragraph (d)(1) and uses terminology different from that used in California. See Explanation of Changes for paragraph (d). The second sentence has been revised to substitute terminology used in California for the Model Rule terminology.
	Prohibited Designation of Fees as Nonrefundable [6A] Paragraph (e) prohibits the designation of a fee as "earned on receipt," or as "nonrefundable," or in similar terms unless the required disclosures	Comment [6A], which is derived in part from Arizona Rule 1.5, Comment [7], clarifies the rationale underlying the Commission's approach in paragraph (e) and its application. Several cases

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	concerning the client's right to discharge the lawyer and the potential for a refund are made. The unconscionability requirement of paragraph (a) and the application of the factors in paragraph (c) may mean that a client is entitled to a refund of an advance fee payment even though it might have been denominated as "nonrefundable," "earned upon receipt" or in similar terms that imply the client would never become entitled to a refund. So that a client is not misled by the use of such terms, paragraph (e) requires certain minimum disclosures that must be included in the written fee agreement. This does not mean the client will always be entitled to a refund, nor does it determine how any refund should be calculated, but merely requires that the client be advised of the possibility of the entitlement to a refund. In addition to a determination that a fee is unconscionable, a client's entitlement to a refund might be based upon: (1) a determination that all or a portion of the fees paid have not been earned; or (2) some other failure of consideration, such as a natural disaster that destroys the lawyer's law office making it impossible for the lawyer to render the agreed upon legal services. The foregoing examples are not intended to be a comprehensive statement of all possible bases for a client's entitlement to a refund. Although there is always a potential for a refund because of subsequent events, paragraph (e) does not prohibit a lawyer from making an agreement for a fee which is earned upon receipt so long as the required disclosures are made	supporting the Commission's approach are included in the Comment.

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	in a writing signed by the client. As indicated by case law, however, a client may be entitled to a refund notwithstanding how the fees paid might have been characterized. See, e.g., Matthew v. State Bar (1989) 49 Cal.3d 784 [263 Cal.Rptr. 660]; In re Matter of Lais (Rev. Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907. While discipline may result from a failure to refund fees, a primary forum for the resolution of fee dispute issues is mandatory fee arbitration under the State Bar Act. See Business and Professions Code sections 6200 et. seq. Nothing in this Rule is intended to prejudge the outcome of fee arbitration proceedings as this Rule, like any law, must be applied to the facts of a particular matter.
	Paragraph (e) Requirement of a Writing in an Emergency [6B]A lawyer may not be able to comply with the disclosure and writing requirements of paragraph (e) before the lawyer renders legal services in an emergency to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the rights or interests of the client. In such situations, the lawyer must comply with paragraph (e) as soon as practicable after the legal services have been provided.	At the request of the criminal bar, the Commission has added a Comment that explains how a lawyer should proceed in the event of an emergency. The Comment recognizes that under exigent circumstances, a lawyer might not be able to provide the client with the required disclosures in writing. However, the lawyer must provide those disclosures as soon as practicable.

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	Payment of Fees in Advance of Services [7] Every fee agreed to, charged, or collected, including a fee under paragraph (f)(1) or (f)(2), is subject to paragraph (a) and may not be unconscionable.	Comment [7] has no counterpart in the Model Rule. It is based in part on Washington Rule 1.5, cmt. [10].
	[8] Paragraph (f)(1) describes a true retainer, which is sometimes known as a "general retainer," or "classic retainer." A true retainer secures availability alone, that is, it presumes that the lawyer is to be additionally compensated for any actual work performed. Therefore, a payment purportedly made to secure a lawyer's availability, but that will be applied to the client's account as the lawyer renders services, is not a true retainer under paragraph (f)(1). In addition to the statements required under paragraph (e), the written true retainer agreement should specify the time period or purpose of the lawyer's availability and that the client will be separately charged for any services provided. Concerning the lawyer's obligations with respect to the deposit of a true retainer in a trust account, see Rule 1.15, Comments [8] and [9].	Comment [8] has no counterpart in the Model Rule. It is based in part on Washington Rule 1.5, cmt. [13]. It carries forward the substance of the definition for "true retainer" in current rule 3-700(D)(2). The Comment also provides guidance on determining whether a particular fee arrangement is a true retainer.

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	[9] Paragraph (f)(2) describes a fee structure that is known as a "flat fee". A flat fee constitutes complete payment for specified legal services, and does not vary with the amount of time or effort the lawyer expends to perform or complete the specified services.	Comment [9] has no counterpart in the Model Rule. It is based in part on Washington Rule 1.5, cmt. [14]. The Comment clarifies that if all the requirements set forth in subparagraph (e)(2) are not satisfied, the flat fee must be treated as if it were an advance fee under Rule 1.15.
	[10] When a lawyer-client relationship terminates, the lawyer must refund the unearned portion of a fee. See Rule 1.16(e)(2). To the extent a fee is unconscionable, it never can be considered to have been earned. In the event of a dispute relating to a fee under paragraph (e)(1) or (e)(2), the lawyer must comply with Rule 1.15(d)(2).	Comment [11] has no counterpart in the Model Rule. Comment [11] points lawyers to Rule 1.15(d)(2) for their obligations when disputes arise concerning fees advanced under paragraph (e)(1) or (e)(2).
Division of Fee [7] A division of fee is a single billing to a client covering the fee of two or more lawyers who are not in the same firm. A division of fee facilitates association of more than one lawyer in a matter in which neither alone could serve the client as well, and most often is used when the fee is contingent and the division is between a referring lawyer and a trial specialist. Paragraph (e) permits the lawyers to divide a fee either on the basis of the proportion of services they render or if each lawyer assumes responsibility for the representation as a whole. In	Division of Fee ~~[7] A division of fee is a single billing to a client covering the fee of two or more lawyers who are not in the same firm. A division of fee facilitates association of more than one lawyer in a matter in which neither alone could serve the client as well, and most often is used when the fee is contingent and the division is between a referring lawyer and a trial specialist. Paragraph (e) permits the lawyers to divide a fee either on the basis of the proportion of services they render or if each lawyer assumes responsibility for the representation as a whole. In~~	Model Rule 1.5, cmts. [7] and [8] have been deleted because they relate to fee divisions, which are covered separately under proposed Rule 1.5.1. See also Explanation of Changes for paragraph (c).

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
addition, the client must agree to the arrangement, including the share that each lawyer is to receive, and the agreement must be confirmed in writing. Contingent fee agreements must be in a writing signed by the client and must otherwise comply with paragraph (c) of this Rule. Joint responsibility for the representation entails financial and ethical responsibility for the representation as if the lawyers were associated in a partnership. A lawyer should only refer a matter to a lawyer whom the referring lawyer reasonably believes is competent to handle the matter. See Rule 1.1.	~~addition, the client must agree to the arrangement, including the share that each lawyer is to receive, and the agreement must be confirmed in writing. Contingent fee agreements must be in a writing signed by the client and must otherwise comply with paragraph (c) of this Rule. Joint responsibility for the representation entails financial and ethical responsibility for the representation as if the lawyers were associated in a partnership. A lawyer should only refer a matter to a lawyer whom the referring lawyer reasonably believes is competent to handle the matter. See Rule 1.1.~~
[8] Paragraph (e) does not prohibit or regulate division of fees to be received in the future for work done when lawyers were previously associated in a law firm.	~~[8] Paragraph (e) does not prohibit or regulate division of fees to be received in the future for work done when lawyers were previously associated in a law firm~~	See Explanation of Changes for Model Rule 1.5, cmt. [7].
Disputes over Fees [9] If a procedure has been established for resolution of fee disputes, such as an arbitration or mediation procedure established by the bar, the lawyer must comply with the procedure when it is mandatory, and, even when it is voluntary, the lawyer should conscientiously consider submitting to it. Law may prescribe a procedure for determining a lawyer's fee, for example, in representation of an executor or administrator, a class or a person entitled to a	~~Disputes over Fees~~ ~~[9] If a procedure has been established for resolution of fee disputes, such as an arbitration or mediation procedure established by the bar, the lawyer must comply with the procedure when it is mandatory, and, even when it is voluntary, the lawyer should conscientiously consider submitting to it. Law may prescribe a procedure for determining a lawyer's fee, for example, in representation of an executor or administrator, a class or a person~~	The Commission has recommended that Comment [9] be deleted because arbitration of fee disputes in California is largely governed under the Mandatory Fee Arbitration Act, Bus. & Prof. Code § 6200 et seq.

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5 Fees Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
reasonable fee as part of the measure of damages. The lawyer entitled to such a fee and a lawyer representing another party concerned with the fee should comply with the prescribed procedure.	~~entitled to a reasonable fee as part of the measure of damages. The lawyer entitled to such a fee and a lawyer representing another party concerned with the fee should comply with the prescribed procedure.~~
	[11] A division of fees among lawyers is governed by Rule 1.5.1.	Comment [12] provides a cross-reference to Rule 1.5.1, the proposed Rule that governs fee divisions.

{Note: Green/Italic text in the middle column indicates Model Rule text that has been moved rather than stricken.}

Rule 1.5: Fees For Legal Services

(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to the Public Comment Draft)

- (a) A lawyer shall not make an agreement for, charge, or collect an unconscionable or illegal fee or an unconscionable or illegal in-house expense.
- (b) A fee is unconscionable under this Rule if it is so exorbitant and wholly disproportionate to the services performed as to shock the conscience; or if the ~~lawyer, in negotiating or setting the fee, has engaged in fraudulent conduct or overreaching, so that the fee charged, under the circumstances, constitutes or fee~~ amount to an improper appropriation of the ~~client's~~ client's funds. ~~because there has been an element of fraud or overreaching by the lawyer in negotiating or setting the fee, or the lawyer has failed to disclose the material facts.~~ Unconscionability of a fee shall be determined on the basis of all the facts and circumstances existing at the time the agreement is entered into except where the parties contemplate that the fee will be affected by later events.
- (c) Among the factors to be considered, where appropriate, in determining the conscionability of a fee or in-house expense are the following:
 - (1) the amount of the fee or in-house expense in proportion to the value of the services performed;
 - (2) the relative sophistication of the lawyer and the client;
 - (3) the novelty and difficulty of the questions involved, and the skill requisite to perform the legal service properly;
 - (4) the likelihood, if apparent to the client, that the acceptance of the particular employment will preclude other employment by the lawyer;
 - (5) the amount involved and the results obtained;
 - (6) the time limitations imposed by the client or by the circumstances;
 - (7) the nature and length of the professional relationship with the client;
 - (8) the experience, reputation, and ability of the lawyer or lawyers performing the services;
 - (9) whether the fee is fixed or contingent;
 - (10) the time and labor required;
 - (11) whether the client gave informed consent to the fee or in-house expense.
- (d) A lawyer shall not enter into an arrangement for, charge, or collect:
 - (1) any fee in a family law matter, the payment or amount of which is contingent upon the securing of a dissolution or declaration of nullity of a marriage or upon the amount of spousal or child support, or property settlement in lieu thereof; or

- (2) a contingent fee for representing a defendant in a criminal case.

~~(e) A lawyer shall not make an agreement for, charge, or collect a non-refundable fee, except:~~

~~(1) a lawyer may charge (e) When permitted by paragraph (f), a lawyer may make an agreement for, charge, or collect a fee that is denominated as "earned on receipt" or "nonrefundable," or in similar terms, but only if the client is advised in writing that the client nevertheless may discharge the lawyer at any time and may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged, and the client agrees to the arrangement in a writing signed by the client.~~

(f) A lawyer is permitted to denominate a fee as "earned on receipt" or "nonrefundable" only in making an agreement for the following types of fee arrangements:

(1) a true retainer, which is a fee that a client pays to a lawyer to ensure the lawyer's availability to the client during a specified period or on a specified matter, in addition to and apart from any but not as compensation for legal services performed. A true retainer must or to be agreed to in a writing signed by the client. Unless otherwise agreed, a true retainer is the lawyer's property on receipt performed.

~~(2) a lawyer may charge a flat fee for specified legal services, which constitutes complete payment for those services and may be paid in whole or in part in advance of the lawyer providing the services. If agreed to in advance in a writing signed by the client, a flat fee is the lawyer's property on receipt. The written fee agreement shall, in a manner that can~~

~~easily be understood by the client, include the following: (i) the scope of the services to be provided; (ii) the total amount of the fee and the terms of payment; (iii) that the fee is the lawyer's property immediately on receipt; (iv) that the fee agreement does not alter the client's right to terminate the lawyer-client relationship; and (v) that the client may be entitled to a refund of a portion of the fee if the agreed-upon legal services have not been completed.~~

~~(fg)~~ A lawyer shall not make a material modification to an agreement by which the lawyer is retained by the client that is adverse to the client's interests unless the client is either represented with respect to the modification by an independent lawyer or is advised in writing by the lawyer to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client's choice and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice.

COMMENT

Unconscionability of Fee

[1] Paragraph (a) requires that lawyers charge fees that are not unconscionable or illegal under the circumstances. An illegal fee can result from a variety of circumstances, including when a lawyer renders services under a fee agreement that is unenforceable as illegal or against public policy, (e.g., Kallen v. Delug (1984) 157 Cal.App.3d 940, 950-951 [203 Cal.Rptr. 879] [fee agreement with other lawyer entered under threat of withholding client file]), when a lawyer contracts for or collects a fee that exceeds statutory limits (e.g., In re Shalant (Rev. Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 829; In re Harney (Rev. Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266 [fees exceeding limits under Business and Professions Bus. & Prof. Code section, § 6146]), or when an unlicensed lawyer provides legal services. ~~(e)~~E.g., Birbrower, Montalbano, Condon and Frank v. Superior Court (1998) 17 Cal.4th 119, 136 [70 Cal.Rptr.2d 304]; In re Wells (~~Rev.~~Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896-~~2~~].

[1B] Paragraph (b) defines an unconscionable fee. ~~(See Herrscher v. State Bar (1934) 4 Cal.2d 399, 402 [49 P.2d 832]; Goldstone v. State Bar (1931) 214 Cal. 490 [6 P.2d 513]-~~4~~].~~ The factors specified in paragraphs (c)(1) through (11) that are to be considered in determining whether a fee is conscionable are not exclusive. Nor will each factor necessarily be relevant in each instance. Contingent fees, like any other fees, are subject to the unconscionability standard of paragraph (a) ~~of this Rule.~~ In-house expenses are charges by the lawyer or firm as opposed to third-party charges.

Basis or Rate of Fee

[2] In many circumstances, Business and Professions Code, sections 6147 and 6148 govern what a lawyer is required to include in a fee agreement, and provide consequences for a lawyer's failure to comply with the requirements. ~~(See, e.g., In re Harney (1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266-~~2~~).~~

Modifications of Agreements by which a Lawyer is Retained by a Client

[3] Paragraph ~~(f)~~(g) imposes a specific requirement with respect to modifications of agreements by which a lawyer is retained by a client, when the amendment is material and is adverse to the client's interests. ~~-~~ A material modification is one that substantially changes a significant term of the agreement, such as the lawyer's billing rate or manner in which fees or costs are determined or charged. A material modification is adverse to a client's interests when the modification benefits the lawyer in a manner that is contrary to the client's interest. Increases of a fee, cost, or expense pursuant to a provision in a pre-existing agreement that permits such increases are not modifications of the agreement for purposes of paragraph ~~(f)~~(g). However, such increases may be subject to other paragraphs of this Rule, or other Rules or statutes.

[3A] Whether a particular modification is material and adverse to the interest of the client depends on the circumstances. For example a modification that increases a lawyer's hourly billing rate or the amount of a lawyer's contingency fee ordinarily is material and adverse to a client's interest under paragraph ~~(f)~~(g). On the other hand, a modification that reduces a lawyer's fee ordinarily is not material and adverse to a client's interest under paragraph ~~(f)~~(g). A modification that extends the time within which a client is obligated to pay a fee ordinarily is not material and adverse to a client's interests, particularly when the modification is made in response to a client's adverse financial circumstances.

[3B] In general, the negotiation of an agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client is an arms length transaction. Setzer v. Robinson (1962) 57 Cal.2d 213 [18 Cal.Rptr. 524]. Once a lawyer-client relationship has been established, the lawyer owes fiduciary duties to the client that apply to the modification of the agreement that are in addition to the requirements in ~~paragraph (f)~~Paragraph (g). Lawyers should consult case law and ethics opinions to ascertain their professional responsibilities with respect to modifications to an agreement by which a client retains a lawyer's services. ~~(See, e.g., Ramirez v. Sturdevant (1994) 21 Cal.App.4th 904, 913 [26 Cal.Rptr.2d 554]; Berk v. Twentynine Palms Ranchos, Inc. (1962) 201 Cal.App.2d 625 [20 Cal.Rptr. 144]; Carlson, Collins, Gordon & Bold v. Banducci (1967) 257 Cal.App.2d 212 [64 Cal.Rptr.915]-~~4~~).~~ Depending on the circumstances, other ~~Rules~~rules and statutes also may apply to the modification of an agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client, including, without limitation, Rule 1.4 (Communication), Rule 1.7 (Conflicts of Interest), and Business and Professions Code section 6106.

[3C] A modification is subject to the requirements of Rule 1.8.1 when the modification confers on the lawyer an ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client, such as when the lawyer obtains an interest in the client's property to secure the amount of the lawyer's past due or future fees.

Terms of Payment

[4] A lawyer may require advance payment of a fee but is obliged to return any unearned portion. See Rule 1.16(e)(2). A fee paid in property instead of money may be subject to the requirements of Rule 1.8.1.

[5] An agreement may not be made whose terms might induce the lawyer improperly to curtail services for the client or perform them in a way contrary to the client's interest. For example, a lawyer should not enter into an agreement whereby services are to be provided only up to a stated amount when it is foreseeable that more extensive services probably will be required, unless the situation is adequately explained to the client. Otherwise, the client might have to bargain for further assistance in the midst of a proceeding or transaction. However, it is proper to define the extent of services in light of the client's ability to pay.

Prohibited Contingent Fees

[6] Paragraph (d)(1) does not preclude a contract for a contingent fee for legal representation in connection with the recovery of balances past due under child or spousal support or other financial orders because such contracts do not implicate the same policy concerns.

Prohibited Designation of Fees as Nonrefundable

[6A] Paragraph (e) prohibits the designation of a fee as "earned on receipt," or as "nonrefundable," or in similar terms unless the required disclosures concerning the client's right to discharge the lawyer and the potential for a refund are made. The unconscionability requirement of paragraph (a) and the application of the factors in paragraph (c) may mean that a client is entitled to a refund of an advance fee payment even though it might have been denominated as "nonrefundable," "earned upon receipt" or in similar terms that imply the client would never become entitled to a refund. So that a client is not misled by the use of such terms, paragraph (e) requires certain minimum disclosures that must be included in the written fee agreement. This does not mean the client will always be entitled to a refund, nor does it determine how any refund should be calculated, but merely requires that the client be advised of the possibility of the entitlement to a refund. In addition to a determination that a fee is unconscionable, a client's entitlement to a refund might be based upon: (1) a determination that all or a portion of the fees paid have not been earned; or (2) some other failure of consideration, such as a natural disaster that destroys the lawyer's law office making it impossible for the lawyer to render the agreed upon legal services. The foregoing examples are not intended to be a comprehensive statement of all possible bases for a client's entitlement to a refund. Although there is always a potential for a refund because of subsequent events, paragraph (e) does not prohibit a lawyer from making an agreement for a fee which is earned upon receipt so long as the required disclosures are made in a writing signed by the client. As indicated by case law, however, a client may be entitled to a refund notwithstanding how the fees paid might have been characterized. See, e.g., Matthew v. State Bar (1989) 49 Cal.3d 784 [263 Cal.Rptr. 660]; In re Matter of Lais (Rev. Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907. While discipline may result from a failure to refund fees, a primary forum for the resolution of fee dispute issues is mandatory fee arbitration under the State Bar Act. See Business and Professions Code sections 6200 et. seq. Nothing in this Rule is intended to prejudice the outcome of fee arbitration proceedings as this Rule, like any law, must be applied to the facts of a particular matter.

Paragraph (e) Requirement of a Writing in an Emergency

[6B] A lawyer may not be able to comply with the disclosure and writing requirements of paragraph (e) before the lawyer renders legal services in an emergency to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the rights or interests of the client. In such situations, the lawyer must comply with paragraph (e) as soon as practicable after the legal services have been provided.

Payment of Fees in Advance of Services

[7] Every fee agreed to, charged, or collected, including a fee ~~that is a lawyer's property on receipt~~ under paragraph (e)(1) or (e)(2), is subject to ~~Rule 1.5~~paragraph (a) and may not be unconscionable.

[8] Paragraph (e)(1) describes a true retainer, which is sometimes known as a "general retainer," or "classic retainer." A true retainer secures availability alone, that is, it presumes that the lawyer is to be additionally compensated for any actual work performed. Therefore, a payment purportedly made to secure a lawyer's availability, but that will be applied to the client's account as the lawyer renders services, is not a true retainer under paragraph (e)(1). ~~The~~(1). In addition to the statements required under paragraph (e), the written true retainer agreement should specify the time period or purpose of the lawyer's availability, and that the client will be separately charged for any services provided, ~~and that the lawyer will treat the payment as.~~ Concerning the lawyer's ~~property immediately on receipt.~~obligations with respect to the deposit of a true retainer in a trust account, see Rule 1.15, Comments [8] and [9].

[9] Paragraph (e)(2) describes a fee structure that is known as a "flat fee". A flat fee constitutes complete payment for specified legal services, and does not vary with the amount of time or effort the lawyer expends to perform or complete the specified services. ~~—If the requirements of paragraph (f)(2) are not met, a flat fee received in advance must be treated as an advance for fees. See Rule 1.15.~~

~~[10] If a lawyer and a client agree to a true retainer under paragraph (e)(1) or a flat fee under paragraph (e)(2) and the lawyer complies with all applicable requirements, the fee is considered the lawyer's property on receipt and must not be deposited into a client trust account. See Rule 1.15(f). For definitions of the terms "writing" and "signed," see Rule 1.0.1(n).~~

~~[11]~~ [10] When a lawyer-client relationship terminates, the lawyer must refund the unearned portion of a fee. See Rule 1.16(e)(2). To the extent a fee is unconscionable, it never can be considered to have been earned. In the event of a dispute relating to a fee under paragraph (e)(1) or (e)(2) ~~of this Rule,~~ the lawyer must comply with Rule 1.15(d)(2).

Division of Fee

~~[12]~~ [11] A division of fees among lawyers is governed by Rule 1.5.1.

Rule 4-2001.5: Fees for Legal Services
(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to Current California Rule)

- (Aa) A ~~member~~lawyer shall not ~~enter into~~make an agreement for, charge, or collect an ~~illegal or~~unconscionable or illegal fee or an unconscionable or illegal in-house expense.
- (Bb) A fee is unconscionable under this Rule if it is so exorbitant and wholly disproportionate to the services performed as to shock the conscience; or if the fee would amount to an improper appropriation of the client's funds because there has been an element of fraud or overreaching by the lawyer in negotiating or setting the fee, or the lawyer has failed to disclose the material facts. Unconscionability of a fee shall be determined on the basis of all the facts and circumstances existing at the time the agreement is entered into except where the parties contemplate that the fee will be affected by later events. ~~Among the factors to be considered, where appropriate, in determining the conscionability of a fee are the following:~~
- (c) Among the factors to be considered, where appropriate, in determining the conscionability of a fee or in-house expense are the following:
- (1) ~~The~~the amount of the fee or in-house expense in proportion to the value of the services performed_;
 - (2) ~~The~~the relative sophistication of the ~~member~~lawyer and the client_;
 - (3) ~~The~~the novelty and difficulty of the questions involved_; and the skill requisite to perform the legal service properly_;
 - (4) ~~The~~the likelihood, if apparent to the client, that the acceptance of the particular employment will preclude other employment by the ~~member~~lawyer_;
 - (5) ~~The~~the amount involved and the results obtained_;
 - (6) ~~The~~the time limitations imposed by the client or by the circumstances_;
 - (7) ~~The~~the nature and length of the professional relationship with the client_;
 - (8) ~~The~~the experience, reputation, and ability of the ~~member~~lawyer or ~~members~~lawyers performing the services_;
 - (9) ~~Whether~~whether the fee is fixed or contingent_;
 - (10) ~~The~~the time and labor required_;
 - (11) ~~The informed consent of whether~~ the client gave informed consent to the fee or in-house expense.
- (d) A lawyer shall not enter into an arrangement for, charge, or collect:
- (1) any fee in a family law matter, the payment or amount of which is contingent upon the securing of a dissolution or declaration of nullity of a marriage or upon the amount of spousal or child support, or property settlement in lieu thereof; or

- (2) a contingent fee for representing a defendant in a criminal case.
- (e) When permitted by paragraph (f), a lawyer may make an agreement for, charge, or collect a fee that is denominated as “earned on receipt” or “nonrefundable,” or in similar terms, but only if the client is advised in writing that the client nevertheless may discharge the lawyer at any time and may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged, and the client agrees to the arrangement in a writing signed by the client.
- (f) A lawyer is permitted to denominate a fee as “earned on receipt” or “nonrefundable” only in making an agreement for the following types of fee arrangements:
- (1) a true retainer, which is a fee that a client pays to a lawyer to ensure the lawyer’s availability to the client during a specified period or on a specified matter, but not as compensation for legal services performed or to be performed.
- (2) a flat fee for specified legal services, which constitutes complete payment for those services and may be paid in whole or in part in advance of the lawyer providing the services.
- (g) A lawyer shall not make a material modification to an agreement by which the lawyer is retained by the client that is adverse to the client’s interests unless the client is either represented with respect to the modification by an independent lawyer or is advised in writing by the lawyer to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client’s choice and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice.

COMMENT

Unconscionability of Fee

[1] Paragraph (a) requires that lawyers charge fees that are not unconscionable or illegal under the circumstances. An illegal fee can result from a variety of circumstances, including when a lawyer renders services under a fee agreement that is unenforceable as illegal or against public policy (e.g., Kallen v. Delug (1984) 157 Cal.App.3d 940, 950-951 [203 Cal.Rptr. 879] [fee agreement with other lawyer entered under threat of withholding client file]), when a lawyer contracts for or collects a fee that exceeds statutory limits (e.g., In re Shalant (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 829; In re Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266 [fees exceeding limits under Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6146]), or when an unlicensed lawyer provides legal services. E.g., Birbrower, Montalbano, Condon and Frank v. Superior Court (1998) 17 Cal.4th 119, 136 [70 Cal.Rptr.2d 304]; In re Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896.

[1B] Paragraph (b) defines an unconscionable fee. See Herrscher v. State Bar (1934) 4 Cal.2d 399, 402 [49 P.2d 832]; Goldstone v. State Bar (1931) 214 Cal. 490 [6 P.2d 513]. The factors specified in paragraphs (c)(1) through (11) that are to be considered in determining whether a fee is conscionable are not exclusive. Nor will each factor necessarily be relevant in each instance. Contingent fees, like any other fees, are subject to the unconscionability standard of paragraph (a). In-house expenses are charges by the lawyer or firm as opposed to third-party charges.

Basis or Rate of Fee

[2] In many circumstances, Business and Professions Code, sections 6147 and 6148 govern what a lawyer is required to include in a fee agreement, and provide consequences for a lawyer's failure to comply with the requirements. See, e.g., In re Harney (1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266.

Modifications of Agreements by which a Lawyer is Retained by a Client

[3] Paragraph (g) imposes a specific requirement with respect to modifications of agreements by which a lawyer is retained by a client, when the amendment is material and is adverse to the client's interests. A material modification is one that substantially changes a significant term of the agreement, such as the lawyer's billing rate or manner in which fees or costs are determined or charged. A material modification is adverse to a client's interests when the modification benefits the lawyer in a manner that is contrary to the client's interest. Increases of a fee, cost, or expense pursuant to a provision in a pre-existing agreement that permits such increases are not modifications of the agreement for purposes of paragraph (g). However, such increases may be subject to other paragraphs of this Rule, or other Rules or statutes.

[3A] Whether a particular modification is material and adverse to the interest of the client depends on the circumstances. For example a modification that increases a lawyer's hourly billing rate or the amount of a lawyer's contingency fee ordinarily is material and adverse to a client's interest under paragraph (g). On the other hand, a modification that reduces a lawyer's fee ordinarily is not material and adverse to a client's interest under paragraph (g). A modification that extends the time within which a client is obligated to pay a fee ordinarily is not material and adverse to a client's interests, particularly when the modification is made in response to a client's adverse financial circumstances.

[3B] In general, the negotiation of an agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client is an arms length transaction. Setzer v. Robinson (1962) 57 Cal.2d 213 [18 Cal.Rptr. 524]. Once a lawyer-client relationship has been established, the lawyer owes fiduciary duties to the client that apply to the modification of the agreement that are in addition to the requirements in Paragraph (g). Lawyers should consult case law and ethics opinions to ascertain their professional responsibilities with respect to modifications to an agreement by which a client retains a lawyer's services. See, e.g., Ramirez v. Sturdevant (1994) 21 Cal.App.4th 904, 913 [26 Cal.Rptr.2d 554]; Berk v. Twentynine Palms Ranchos, Inc. (1962) 201 Cal.App.2d 625 [20 Cal.Rptr. 144]; Carlson, Collins, Gordon & Bold v. Banducci (1967) 257 Cal.App.2d 212 [64 Cal.Rptr.915]. Depending on the circumstances, other rules and statutes also may apply to the modification of an agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client, including, without limitation, Rule 1.4 (Communication), Rule 1.7 (Conflicts of Interest), and Business and Professions Code section 6106.

[3C] A modification is subject to the requirements of Rule 1.8.1 when the modification confers on the lawyer an ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client, such as when the lawyer obtains an interest in the client's property to secure the amount of the lawyer's past due or future fees.

Terms of Payment

[4] A lawyer may require advance payment of a fee but is obliged to return any unearned portion. See Rule 1.16(e)(2). A fee paid in property instead of money may be subject to the requirements of Rule 1.8.1.

[5] An agreement may not be made whose terms might induce the lawyer improperly to curtail services for the client or perform them in a way contrary to the client's interest. For example, a lawyer should not enter into an agreement whereby services are to be provided only up to a stated amount when it is foreseeable that more extensive services probably will be required, unless the situation is adequately explained to the client. Otherwise, the client might have to bargain for further assistance in the midst of a proceeding or transaction. However, it is proper to define the extent of services in light of the client's ability to pay.

Prohibited Contingent Fees

[6] Paragraph (d)(1) does not preclude a contract for a contingent fee for legal representation in connection with the recovery of balances past due under child or spousal support or other financial orders because such contracts do not implicate the same policy concerns.

Prohibited Designation of Fees as Nonrefundable

[6A] Paragraph (e) prohibits the designation of a fee as "earned on receipt," or as "nonrefundable," or in similar terms unless the required disclosures concerning the client's right to discharge the lawyer and the potential for a refund are made. The unconscionability requirement of paragraph (a) and the application of the factors in paragraph (c) may mean that a client is entitled to a refund of an advance fee payment even though it might have been denominated as "nonrefundable," "earned upon receipt" or in similar terms that imply the client would never become entitled to a refund. So that a client is not misled by the use of such terms, paragraph (e) requires certain minimum disclosures that must be included in the written fee agreement. This does not mean the client will always be entitled to a refund, nor does it determine how any refund should be calculated, but merely requires that the client be advised of the possibility of the entitlement to a refund. In addition to a determination that a fee is unconscionable, a client's entitlement to a refund might be based upon: (1) a determination that all or a portion of the fees paid have not been earned; or (2) some other failure of consideration, such as a natural disaster that destroys the lawyer's law office making it impossible for the lawyer to render the agreed upon legal services. The foregoing examples are not intended to be a comprehensive statement of all possible bases for a client's entitlement to a refund. Although there is always a potential for a refund because of subsequent events, paragraph (e) does not prohibit a lawyer from making an agreement for a fee which is earned upon receipt so long as the required disclosures are made in a writing signed by the client. As indicated by case law, however, a client may be entitled to a refund notwithstanding how the fees paid might have been characterized. See, e.g., Matthew v. State Bar (1989) 49 Cal.3d 784 [263 Cal.Rptr. 660]; In re Matter of Lais (Rev. Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907. While discipline may result from a failure to refund fees, a primary forum for the resolution of fee dispute issues is mandatory fee arbitration under the State Bar Act. See Business and Professions Code sections 6200 et. seq. Nothing in this Rule is intended to prejudge the outcome of fee arbitration proceedings as this Rule, like any law, must be applied to the facts of a particular matter.

Paragraph (e) Requirement of a Writing in an Emergency

[6B] A lawyer may not be able to comply with the disclosure and writing requirements of paragraph (e) before the lawyer renders legal services in an emergency to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the rights or interests of the client. In such situations, the lawyer must comply with paragraph (e) as soon as practicable after the legal services have been provided.

Payment of Fees in Advance of Services

[7] Every fee agreed to, charged, or collected, including a fee under paragraph (f)(1) or (f)(2), is subject to paragraph (a) and may not be unconscionable.

[8] Paragraph (f)(1) describes a true retainer, which is sometimes known as a “general retainer,” or “classic retainer.” A true retainer secures availability alone, that is, it presumes that the lawyer is to be additionally compensated for any actual work performed. Therefore, a payment purportedly made to secure a lawyer’s availability, but that will be applied to the client’s account as the lawyer renders services, is not a true retainer under paragraph (f)(1). In addition to the statements required under paragraph (e), the written true retainer agreement should specify the time period or purpose of the lawyer’s availability and that the client will be separately charged for any services provided. Concerning the lawyer’s obligations with respect to the deposit of a true retainer in a trust account, see Rule 1.15, Comments [8] and [9].

[9] Paragraph (f)(2) describes a fee structure that is known as a “flat fee”. A flat fee constitutes complete payment for specified legal services, and does not vary with the amount of time or effort the lawyer expends to perform or complete the specified services.

[10] When a lawyer-client relationship terminates, the lawyer must refund the unearned portion of a fee. See Rule 1.16(e)(2). To the extent a fee is unconscionable, it never can be considered to have been earned. In the event of a dispute relating to a fee under paragraph (e)(1) or (e)(2), the lawyer must comply with Rule 1.15(d)(2).

Division of Fee

[11] A division of fees among lawyers is governed by Rule 1.5.1.

Rule 1.5: Fees For Legal Services
(Commission's Proposed Rule – Clean Version)

- (a) A lawyer shall not make an agreement for, charge, or collect an unconscionable or illegal fee or an unconscionable or illegal in-house expense.
- (b) A fee is unconscionable under this Rule if it is so exorbitant and wholly disproportionate to the services performed as to shock the conscience; or if the fee would amount to an improper appropriation of the client's funds because there has been an element of fraud or overreaching by the lawyer in negotiating or setting the fee, or the lawyer has failed to disclose the material facts. Unconscionability of a fee shall be determined on the basis of all the facts and circumstances existing at the time the agreement is entered into except where the parties contemplate that the fee will be affected by later events.
- (c) Among the factors to be considered, where appropriate, in determining the conscionability of a fee or in-house expense are the following:
 - (1) the amount of the fee or in-house expense in proportion to the value of the services performed;
 - (2) the relative sophistication of the lawyer and the client;
 - (3) the novelty and difficulty of the questions involved, and the skill requisite to perform the legal service properly;
 - (4) the likelihood, if apparent to the client, that the acceptance of the particular employment will preclude other employment by the lawyer;
 - (5) the amount involved and the results obtained;
 - (6) the time limitations imposed by the client or by the circumstances;
 - (7) the nature and length of the professional relationship with the client;
 - (8) the experience, reputation, and ability of the lawyer or lawyers performing the services;
 - (9) whether the fee is fixed or contingent;
 - (10) the time and labor required;
 - (11) whether the client gave informed consent to the fee or in-house expense.
- (d) A lawyer shall not enter into an arrangement for, charge, or collect:
 - (1) any fee in a family law matter, the payment or amount of which is contingent upon the securing of a dissolution or declaration of nullity of a marriage or upon the amount of spousal or child support, or property settlement in lieu thereof; or

- (2) a contingent fee for representing a defendant in a criminal case.
- (e) When permitted by paragraph (f), a lawyer may make an agreement for, charge, or collect a fee that is denominated as “earned on receipt” or “nonrefundable,” or in similar terms, but only if the client is advised in writing that the client nevertheless may discharge the lawyer at any time and may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged, and the client agrees to the arrangement in a writing signed by the client.
- (f) A lawyer is permitted to denominate a fee as “earned on receipt” or “nonrefundable” only in making an agreement for the following types of fee arrangements:
 - (1) a true retainer, which is a fee that a client pays to a lawyer to ensure the lawyer’s availability to the client during a specified period or on a specified matter, but not as compensation for legal services performed or to be performed.
 - (2) a flat fee for specified legal services, which constitutes complete payment for those services and may be paid in whole or in part in advance of the lawyer providing the services.
- (g) A lawyer shall not make a material modification to an agreement by which the lawyer is retained by the client that is adverse to the client’s interests unless the client is either represented with respect to the modification by an independent lawyer or is advised in writing by the lawyer to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client’s choice and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice.

COMMENT

Unconscionability of Fee

[1] Paragraph (a) requires that lawyers charge fees that are not unconscionable or illegal under the circumstances. An illegal fee can result from a variety of circumstances, including when a lawyer renders services under a fee agreement that is unenforceable as illegal or against public policy, (e.g., Kallen v. Delug (1984) 157 Cal.App.3d 940, 950-951 [203 Cal.Rptr. 879] [fee agreement with other lawyer entered under threat of withholding client file]), when a lawyer contracts for or collects a fee that exceeds statutory limits (e.g., In re Shalant (Review Dept. 2005) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 829; In re Harney (Review Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266 [fees exceeding limits under Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6146]), or when an unlicensed lawyer provides legal services. E.g., Birbrower, Montalbano, Condon and Frank v. Superior Court (1998) 17 Cal.4th 119, 136 [70 Cal.Rptr.2d 304]; In re Wells (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 896.

[1B] Paragraph (b) defines an unconscionable fee. See Herrscher v. State Bar (1934) 4 Cal.2d 399, 402 [49 P.2d 832]; Goldstone v. State Bar (1931) 214 Cal. 490 [6 P.2d 513]. The factors specified in paragraphs (c)(1) through (11) that are to be considered in determining whether a fee is conscionable are not exclusive. Nor will each factor necessarily be relevant in each instance. Contingent fees, like any other fees, are subject to the unconscionability standard of paragraph (a). In-house expenses are charges by the lawyer or firm as opposed to third-party charges.

Basis or Rate of Fee

[2] In many circumstances, Business and Professions Code, sections 6147 and 6148 govern what a lawyer is required to include in a fee agreement, and provide consequences for a lawyer's failure to comply with the requirements. See, e.g., In re Harney (1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 266.

Modifications of Agreements by which a Lawyer is Retained by a Client

[3] Paragraph (g) imposes a specific requirement with respect to modifications of agreements by which a lawyer is retained by a client, when the amendment is material and is adverse to the client's interests. A material modification is one that substantially changes a significant term of the agreement, such as the lawyer's billing rate or manner in which fees or costs are determined or charged. A material modification is adverse to a client's interests when the modification benefits the lawyer in a manner that is contrary to the client's interest. Increases of a fee, cost, or expense pursuant to a provision in a pre-existing agreement that permits such increases are not modifications of the agreement for purposes of paragraph (g). However, such increases may be subject to other paragraphs of this Rule, or other Rules or statutes.

[3A] Whether a particular modification is material and adverse to the interest of the client depends on the circumstances. For example a modification that increases a lawyer's hourly billing rate or the amount of a lawyer's contingency fee ordinarily is material and adverse to a client's interest under paragraph (g). On the other hand, a modification that reduces a lawyer's fee ordinarily is not material and adverse to a client's interest under paragraph (g). A modification that extends the time within which a client is obligated to pay a fee ordinarily is not material and adverse to a client's interests, particularly when the modification is made in response to a client's adverse financial circumstances.

[3B] In general, the negotiation of an agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client is an arms length transaction. Setzer v. Robinson (1962) 57 Cal.2d 213 [18 Cal.Rptr. 524]. Once a lawyer-client relationship has been established, the lawyer owes fiduciary duties to the client that apply to the modification of the agreement that are in addition to the requirements in Paragraph (g). Lawyers should consult case law and ethics opinions to ascertain their professional responsibilities with respect to modifications to an agreement by which a client retains a lawyer's services. See, e.g., Ramirez v. Sturdevant (1994) 21 Cal.App.4th 904, 913 [26 Cal.Rptr.2d 554]; Berk v. Twentynine Palms Ranchos, Inc. (1962) 201 Cal.App.2d 625 [20 Cal.Rptr. 144]; Carlson, Collins, Gordon & Bold v. Banducci (1967) 257 Cal.App.2d 212 [64 Cal.Rptr.915]. Depending on the circumstances, other rules and statutes also may apply to the modification of an agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client, including, without limitation, Rule 1.4 (Communication), Rule 1.7 (Conflicts of Interest), and Business and Professions Code section 6106.

[3C] A modification is subject to the requirements of Rule 1.8.1 when the modification confers on the lawyer an ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client, such as when the lawyer obtains an interest in the client's property to secure the amount of the lawyer's past due or future fees.

Terms of Payment

[4] A lawyer may require advance payment of a fee but is obliged to return any unearned portion. See Rule 1.16(e)(2) A fee paid in property instead of money may be subject to the requirements of Rule 1.8.1.

[5] An agreement may not be made whose terms might induce the lawyer improperly to curtail services for the client or perform them in a way contrary to the client's interest. For example, a lawyer should not enter into an agreement whereby services are to be provided only up to a stated amount when it is foreseeable that more extensive services probably will be required, unless the situation is adequately explained to the client. Otherwise, the client might have to bargain for further assistance in the midst of a proceeding or transaction. However, it is proper to define the extent of services in light of the client's ability to pay.

Prohibited Contingent Fees

[6] Paragraph (d)(1) does not preclude a contract for a contingent fee for legal representation in connection with the recovery of balances past due under child or spousal support or other financial orders because such contracts do not implicate the same policy concerns.

Prohibited Designation of Fees as Nonrefundable

[6A] Paragraph (e) prohibits the designation of a fee as "earned on receipt," or as "nonrefundable," or in similar terms unless the required disclosures concerning the client's right to discharge the lawyer and the potential for a refund are made. The unconscionability requirement of paragraph (a) and the application of the factors in paragraph (c) may mean that a client is entitled to a refund of an advance fee payment even though it might have been denominated as "nonrefundable," "earned upon receipt" or in similar terms that imply the client would never become entitled to a refund. So that a client is not misled by the use of such terms, paragraph (e) requires certain minimum disclosures that must be included in the written fee agreement. This does not mean the client will always be entitled to a refund, nor does it determine how any refund should be calculated, but merely requires that the client be advised of the possibility of the entitlement to a refund. In addition to a determination that a fee is unconscionable, a client's entitlement to a refund might be based upon: (1) a determination that all or a portion of the fees paid have not been earned; or (2) some other failure of consideration, such as a natural disaster that destroys the lawyer's law office making it impossible for the lawyer to render the agreed upon legal services. The foregoing examples are not intended to be a comprehensive statement of all possible bases for a client's entitlement to a refund. Although there is always a potential for a refund because of subsequent events, paragraph (e) does not prohibit a lawyer from making an agreement for a fee which is earned upon receipt so long as the required disclosures are made in a writing signed by the client. As indicated by case law, however, a client may be entitled to a refund notwithstanding how the fees paid might have been characterized. See, e.g., Matthew v. State Bar (1989) 49 Cal.3d 784 [263 Cal.Rptr. 660]; In re Matter of Laís (Rev. Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907. While discipline may result from a failure to refund fees, a primary forum for the resolution of fee dispute issues is mandatory fee arbitration under the State Bar Act. See Business and Professions Code sections 6200 et. seq. Nothing in this Rule is intended to prejudice the outcome of fee arbitration proceedings as this Rule, like any law, must be applied to the facts of a particular matter.

Paragraph (e) Requirement of a Writing in an Emergency

[6B] A lawyer may not be able to comply with the disclosure and writing requirements of paragraph (e) before the lawyer renders legal services in an emergency to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the rights or interests of the client. In such situations, the lawyer must comply with paragraph (e) as soon as practicable after the legal services have been provided.

Payment of Fees in Advance of Services

[7] Every fee agreed to, charged, or collected, including a fee under paragraph (f)(1) or (f)(2), is subject to paragraph (a) and may not be unconscionable.

[8] Paragraph (f)(1) describes a true retainer, which is sometimes known as a “general retainer,” or “classic retainer.” A true retainer secures availability alone, that is, it presumes that the lawyer is to be additionally compensated for any actual work performed. Therefore, a payment purportedly made to secure a lawyer’s availability, but that will be applied to the client’s account as the lawyer renders services, is not a true retainer under paragraph (f)(1). In addition to the statements required under paragraph (e), the written true retainer agreement should specify the time period or purpose of the lawyer’s availability and that the client will be separately charged for any services provided. Concerning the lawyer’s obligations with respect to the deposit of a true retainer in a trust account, see Rule 1.15, Comments [8] and [9].

[9] Paragraph (f)(2) describes a fee structure that is known as a “flat fee”. A flat fee constitutes complete payment for specified legal services, and does not vary with the amount of time or effort the lawyer expends to perform or complete the specified services.

[10] When a lawyer-client relationship terminates, the lawyer must refund the unearned portion of a fee. See Rule 1.16(e)(2). To the extent a fee is unconscionable, it never can be considered to have been earned. In the event of a dispute relating to a fee under paragraph (e)(1) or (e)(2), the lawyer must comply with Rule 1.15(d)(2).

Division of Fee

[11] A division of fees among lawyers is governed by Rule 1.5.1.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 66 Agree = 0
Disagree = 60
Modify = 4
NI = 2

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
1	Arguedas, Cassman & Headley, LLP	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	We are unaware of any pattern of attorneys abusing non-refundable fees to bilk their clients. Such misconduct is barred by already-existing rules, such as current Rule 4-200, which prohibits attorneys from charging or collecting unconscionable fees. Exception (e)(1) to the Proposed Rule purports to permit a “true retainer” fee to “ensure the lawyer’s availability to the client.” But the Proposed Rule would prohibit an agreement under which the retainer would constitute a minimum fee that ensures the attorney’s availability yet also serves as a credit against which the attorney charges her time until the fee is exhausted. Such arrangements are common and benefit both the client and the attorney. Proposed Rule 1.5(e)(2) purports to permit “flat fee” agreements under which the fee becomes the property of the attorney upon receipt, but the Rule will in fact make such arrangements impossible. Subsection (e)(2) requires a written agreement that states, among other things, “that the client may be entitled to a refund of a portion of the fee if the agreed-upon legal services have not been completed.” This is a contradiction – the fee cannot be the lawyer’s property upon receipt if it is also potentially refundable.	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning “nonrefundable” and “earned on receipt” fees. Notwithstanding the commenter’s stated position and practice, with the exception of a “true retainer” as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as “nonrefundable,” “earned on receipt,” etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted to do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests.

¹ A = AGREE with proposed Rule D = DISAGREE with proposed Rule M = AGREE ONLY IF MODIFIED NI = NOT INDICATED

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					The Proposed Rule would essentially bar flat fee arrangements by placing all the risk on the attorney – under the Proposed Rule, if the case requires less work than anticipated at the time of the agreement, the attorney will be required to refund a portion of the fee, but if the case requires more work, the attorney will be stuck with the flat fee. Few attorneys will enter into such an arrangement. It is a matter of concern that the Proposed Rule has proceeded this far toward approval without proper notification to the Bar's membership. Many attorneys and organizations opposed previous efforts to make similar amendments to the rules governing non-refundable fees, yet this Proposed Rule was conditionally approved by the Board of Governors without any meaningful opportunity for public comment. This procedure seems to violate the terms of Rule of the State Bar 1.10, and in any case is not advisable when, as here, the proposal at issue is likely to be the subject of significant controversy.	The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns. However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statutes, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This leaves unclear that, under current California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer's responsibilities and the client's and lawyer's reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in those provisions. Concerning the asserted lack of notice, the Commission notes that the Commission's drafts of this proposed rule have been issued for public comment in two separate instances and that these public comment distributions and also related public hearings were noticed on the State Bar website. Moreover, because the current draft of the proposed rule has been revised further, the Commission anticipates that the Board of Governors will authorize a further public comment period.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services. [Sorted by Commenter]
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
2	Ash, Jon	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	I have been a licensed attorney since 1972. My practice has been limited to criminal defense. For the past 38 years, I have been charging a flat fee service based on my experience in dealing with every type of criminal offense. I have found, over the years, that my clients would much rather know, up front, what the handling of a case is going to cost. If my fees aren't acceptable to them, I can always refer them to an attorney that might charge less. If the handling of a case takes much less time than anticipated, I have the ability to refund fees if I wish. In all my years, I might have had one or two clients, out of hundreds, who have asked for any type	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					of refund. It's been my experience most criminal defense attorneys in California charge a flat fee. Not only does a client feel more assured knowing what the fees are going to be, I believe an all inclusive fee encourages more attorney-client contact. I tell my clients to call with any problem or question. This approach promotes better trust; the client knows I'm not encouraging contact so I can bill for an extra 15 minutes. My primary practice is now in Oregon. I've been practicing in Bend since 1993. A lot of criminal defense attorneys in Oregon charge by the hour and I've heard many complaints from clients regarding that approach. Clients feel they are being "nickel and dimed" to death and appreciate the flat fee approach. I constantly hear that their attorney is "dragging the case out" just to charge additional hourly fees. If an attorney is too expensive, clients won't hire them. Fee arbitration is always an option if a client is really taken advantage of. Clients are usually looking for results. If they get the result they want for a set amount of money, they are happy. Curtailing the flat fee would be a mistake.	Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted to do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests.
3	Avola, Melyssa	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	Proposed New Rule of Professional Conduct, Rule 1.5(e)(4-200) Abolishing Non- Refundable Retainers would radically alter the way the majority of the Criminal Defense Bar does business. "Flat Fees" or "Fixed Retainers" are a common, and accepted way to	See Response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ").

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					retain clients in need of a criminal defense attorney. Such a practice keeps fees low to accommodate clients that may not be financially able to pay for accrued hourly fees and costs. Please refer to the attached letter from the President of CACJ Board of Governors, Ann C. Moorman for more information.
4	Ball, Scott	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	This is simply untenable and would have a profound negative effect on the practice of law in the area of criminal defense, as well as other areas of law as well. Flat fee, non-refundable retainers enable attorneys to take cases where it is impossible at the outset to know the amount of work that will be necessary. When we take a case, we agree that we will not ask for additional funds when the work necessary is greater than anticipated - and to be able to make that guarantee it has to work both ways.	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services. [Sorted by Commenter]
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
5	Berman, Richard P.	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	The new proposed State Bar Rule 1.5(e)(4-200) to prohibit non-refundable retainers is an anti-consumer measure. I have been practicing criminal law, both as a prosecutor and a defense attorney, for almost 40 years. During that time I have won numerous awards and received the highest possible peer ratings and reviews. It is unfair to the public to prohibit them from negotiating a reasonable and fair price for my services. In America, competition and the free market are hallmarks of our success. If a consumer wants to pay for my years of experience, track record of success, thousands of hours of post-law school education, reputation and expertise, they should be free to do so. If I could not charge a significant non-refundable retainer, I would be likely forced to charge an hourly fee which could not be reflective of my past accomplishments and experience in relationship to a relatively new and unproven attorney. If the new attorney is charging the "going rate" of $250.00 to $350.00 per hour, I would have to charge many times that amount per hour to reasonably value my services. Simply put, a large non-refundable retainer paid to me may provide the results and the piece of mind that a new attorney may never be able to provide, and do so with a fair and reasonable cost to the client.	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted to do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					Anyone who has dealt with a person charged with a serious crime, or their family, knows the stress that a criminal prosecution visits upon a defendant and his/her family. If I can save a person's liberty, reputation, life savings, and professional license, and do so in an expeditious manner that does not force him/her and the family to go through protracted proceedings, then the consumer has enjoyed the freedom to hire the lawyer they desire at the price that they are free to negotiate and to enjoy the results, of the many thousands of clients I have represented the complaints about the fees can be counted on the fingers of one hand. That is in almost 40 years of handling both serious and mundane criminal matters and charging what I and the client feel is fair and reasonable, I simply cannot provide such services under the new proposed state Bar Rule. Both the public and I will lose a great deal if this measure is passed.	of competing client interests.
6	Bermant, Alison	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	I have been practicing criminal defense law for 11 years now; eight years in private practice after working as a public defender. To have the State Bar suddenly involved in my fee contracts with my clients is very disturbing. 100% of the time that I have allowed clients to make payments to me for work performed, I have not been paid. There are no exceptions to this. My experience is such that if I am not paid in full prior to the making of the first	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					court appearance, I will not be paid. Once a case is resolved, the client no longer has any interest in keeping his or her obligations to me because they are either incarcerated or so focused on paying court fines and reporting to their probation or parole officer that it is not on their agenda to see that the lawyer who helped them gets paid. Every criminal lawyer I have ever come in contact with works on a flat fee basis for this very reason. In some cases, when a client insists on me working for an hourly rate, I will do so. Generally I end up charging them significantly more because of the amount of time I spend on the phone dealing with my client's emotional issues over being prosecuted for their crimes. Flat rate fees in criminal cases are the only way to assure an attorney gets paid. While many people believe that criminal lawyers are getting rich and some sort of windfall by this agreement, I am here to tell you that there are so few Johnny Cochrans in this world. I still live month to month most times. I have been out of law school for 11 years and every single month have made significant law student loan payments (still am). Not being paid for my work eventually means I go out of business. That is my reality. I vehemently oppose any modifications to the way I conduct my business. I'm happy to come down and	earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					discuss this in person as well so you understand what real life is really about.
7	Beverly Hills Bar Association	D	Yes	1.5(e)	We write in opposition to subdivision (e) of the Proposed New Rule of Professional Conduct 1.5, "Fees for Legal Services." Subdivision (e) would subject lawyers to professional discipline for using the term "non-refundable" in their retainer agreements. We do not believe that lawyers who mistakenly employ the wrong term for an otherwise-proper fee agreement should be disciplined. In addition, ABA Model Rule 1.5 does not impose discipline for use of the term "non-refundable." Adoption of the Proposed Rule 1.5(e) would mean that a lawyer following public policy and using a written fee agreement, but selecting the term "non-refundable," would be subject to discipline, whereas a lawyer working without a written fee agreement would not be disciplined. That result would provide a disincentive for using written fee agreements and would be contrary to the expressed policy of the State of California. The distinction between "non-refundable" and "true retainer" is subtle. Ethics experts can and often do disagree. Many criminal defense lawyers (and a host of other lawyers) do not know the nuanced issues that can be triggered by use of these terms, and in reality, many lawyers use the terms interchangeably. Lawyers are not and should not be subject to professional	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					discipline for inadvertence or negligence. Use of a non-refundable fee is not sanctionable in other jurisdictions. As a Louisville Bar Association article notes, “[m]any jurisdictions, including Kentucky, allow an attorney to refer to a fee as non-refundable.” A recent order from the Michigan Supreme Court validated a lawyer’s non-refundable fee agreement in a disciplinary case, and dismissed the charges against the lawyer. (attached) The Court cited the relevant rule, and stated that the “agreement is unambiguous because it clearly states that the $4,000 minimum fee is non-refundable.” In addition, esteemed ethics professors Geoffrey Hazard and William Hodes conclude that “[s]everal situations may be imagined in which a substantial non-refundable fee—better understand as a minimum fee—might be justified.” While we do not support or endorse gratuitous use of the term “non-refundable,” we do oppose a rule that will discourage written fee agreements and subject to discipline numerous lawyers who misunderstand the sophisticated distinctions, particularly when this terminology is widely permitted throughout the United States.	The Commission also notes that the Rule as revised does not prohibit flat or fixed fees, or even absolutely prohibit the use of the terms “nonrefundable” or earned on receipt,” or similar terms. Instead, the Rule is intended to ensure that clients are not misled into believing that they cannot recover fees paid in advance under any circumstances, which could result in their forfeiting their right to discharge their lawyer at any time.
8	Bloom, Allen	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	The prohibition of a non-refundable fee option would have serious negative consequences on the rights and benefits of a client/defendant in a criminal case. I can unequivocally state that the benefits and rights	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning “nonrefundable” and “earned on receipt”

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response of an defendant/client in a criminal case would be considerably benefitted by having the option of being able to accept an attorney fee agreement on a non-refundable fee basis. The foundation for my beliefs are as follows: 1. A non-refundable and fixed fee agreement provides certainty to the client. They know what they are going to pay at the beginning of the case and they never have to worry that their fee will increase. In my cases, it usually means that I have greatly undercharged the client, because I end up spending more time on the case than I originally estimated, yet never charge a client more. 2. It provides better and full service to the client. The client never has to practice "check-book defense", deciding whether a particular meritorious motion or legal task should be taken as compared to what it would cost. There never is a "short changing" of services, but rather is an expansion of services available. 3. It increases access to the attorney. A client doesn't ever have to worry that he is going to suffer financially by being billed by communicating with his attorney a multitude of times. In this regard, I am reminded of a true story involving the client who met his lawyer at the Padre game, talked about Tony Gwynn and the Padre pitching and asked about the status of his case, only to	fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					receive a bill the following week for legal consultation. 4. It eliminates the chances of conflict between the client and his attorney. Because the attorney also gains certainty in the receipt of a non-refundable fee at the beginning of the case, there never is a situation where the attorney is not paid for his services, either intentionally or because of a change of financial circumstances of the client, meaning that the attorney does work for the client - maybe is forced to go to trial for the client cuz the judge will NOT relieve an attorney just for the client's failure to pay - all of which builds in a sometimes subtle and sometimes not so subtle conflict between client and attorney. It It should also be noted, that a non-refundable fee agreement is really a much fairer system, if there is ever a dispute as to the fee. This works to the benefit of the client. Let's look at the two circumstances: non-refundable and refundable. If there is a NON-refundable fee agreement, and at the end of the case or anywhere in the middle, the client disputes the fee, the client has the right to (a) attempt an informal resolution, but if such a resolution is not successful, has the right to (b) DEMAND arbitration and the atty MUST, as a matter of state law, accept the arbitration requirement. Of course, the client has the option of (c) filing a law suit. In all matters the attorney is obligated to try to resolve the matter.	However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statutes, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This leaves unclear that, under current California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer's responsibilities and the client's and lawyer's reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in those provisions.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					On the other hand if there is a REFUNDABLE fee agreement, and the client disputes the fee, the client has the right to (a) seek an in informal resolution, but if such a resolution is not successful, but here the situation changes. The disputed funds now have to be placed in a special trust account and though the client has the right to demand arbitration, the attorney does NOT have the right to do so. In short, the client can refuse to try to settle the issue, and ignore all the efforts of the attorney to resolve the situation. The money remains in the trust account and the client, if she wishes, can do absolutely nothing and if she acts in this way, the ONLY resolution that the atty has is to SUE HIS CLIENT. It destroys atty-client trust; it works greatly to the detriment of the client; it potentially opens the door to privileged communications - it's just bad. Finally, it should be remembered that, of course, it is possible that there could be abuses by the unscrupulous atty taking advantage of a non-refundable fee agreement. There is a remedy is place to deal with such a circumstance. If a case is dismissed two days after filing, then, of course, the prohibition against unconscionable fees and my own ethics, demand that I return a large, if not all, the fee. If I, not my client, were to walk away from representation, then the full fee should be returned.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					But problems with unscrupulous attorneys can occur with equal frequency with any other billing system: hourly (where the hours can be gouged and multiplied for unnecessary work); task (where poor work can be done for services). simply put, there is no billing system which is immune for an unscrupulous attorney, or for that matter, an unscrupulous client. The best way to have fair fees and good services for clients, is to have good attorneys and fair clients, and no system of billing guarantees that, however, we should look to create a system which enhances the chances of good representation, and I have found, after 35 years of practice, that the best method is through a non-refundable fee system.
9	Borden, Mark (Commenter submitted three separate comments on this rule.)	D	No	1.5(e)	The commenter disagrees with the proposed rule.	The Commission cannot provide a response without an explanation why the commenter disagrees with the Rule. However, the Commission directs the commenter to the response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ")
10	Borden, Mark (Commenter submitted three separate comments on this rule.)	D	No	1.5(e)	The commenter objects to the aspect of the rule regarding non-refundable retainers. The commenter states that this proposed rule "is being done by people who are on large salaries, people from large law firms, and by people who work for the State Bar who have never had to practice in the private sector and earn fees from clients. This is another case of too many bureaucrats with too much time on their hands."	See response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ"). The Commission disagrees with the commenter's allegations.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
11	Borden, Mark (Commenter submitted three separate comments on this rule.)	D	No	1.5(e)	If adopted, Paragraph (e) will fundamentally alter the practice of law in California, create unnecessary complexity and confusion, seriously undermine the attorney-client relationship, and prevent many clients from obtaining representation. It is contrary to the interests of the two groups who are most affected, the lawyer and their clients. Commenter's letter contains 14 examples of potential negative impacts concerning the Proposed Rule.	See response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ").
12	Breeze, John W.	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	As an attorney that has been in private practice for the last 33years, I highly disagree and oppose the proposed change to Rule 1.5(f), providing that "a lawyer shall not make an agreement for, charge, or collect a nonrefundable fee, except that a lawyer may make an agreement for, charge or collect a true retainer fee that is paid solely for the purposes of insuring the availability of the lawyer for the matter." This language clearly demonstrates the Commission's clear intent to abolish nonrefundable retainers subject to the limited exceptions in subparagraph (e). It prohibits the long-established practice of charging a minimum fee to insure availability where the client will also be credited for future work done either on an hourly basis or for the amount of the true retainer. The obvious problem with subparagraph (e)(2) is that if any portion of a "nonrefundable" fee "may be" refundable, then the entire fee cannot be the lawyer's	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted do so, provided the lawyer

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					property. As a lawyer who has been in private practice since 1976, I highly oppose this amendment to the rules that would basically outlaw nonrefundable retainers. Isn't there anyone that has actually practiced in the private sector who understands what a nonrefundable retainer is? These types of fees are necessary in order to secure the attendance of attorneys at upcoming court proceedings and to guarantee that the client will be represented at those proceedings. If I am going to be required to refund, non refundable retainer fees, then I might as well get out of private practice. The amendment also fails to take into consideration that lawyers pay income taxes on nonrefundable retainer fees and if these fees are going to be refundable, it will have an impact on the lawyer's ability to report his true income to the Franchise Tax Board and the IRS. I ask you whether the State Bar has received any complaints from any of my clients dealing with the issue of nonrefundable retainer fees. I have no knowledge that any of my clients have ever objected to being charged a nonrefundable retainer fee. Therefore, there is no need to amend the Rules of Court if there are no complaints regarding the way I deal with nonrefundable retainers. This is just another example of how the State Bar is	includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns. However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statutes, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This leaves unclear that, under current

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					trying to legislate in an area that properly needs to be addressed either by the state legislature or by lawyer professional groups as opposed to the State Bar. I strongly recommend that this amendment be rejected.	California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer's responsibilities and the client's and lawyer's reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in those provisions.
13	California Attorneys for Criminal Justice (CACJ) [Nancy Moorman]	D	Yes	1.5(e)	Non-refundable retainer agreements have been accepted as proper fee arrangements for many years. In October of 1992, the State Bar Board of Governors concluded that a non-refundable retainer (one that is "earned when paid") was an appropriate fee arrangement. In fact, the Board of Governors endorsed the continued use of "fixed fees," "flat fees," and "non-refundable retainers" as long as the written agreement expressly described the arrangement and included the language that the fees paid in advance of legal services are "earned when paid." We are unclear why the Board is now considering a ban on non-refundable fee agreements. As we understand it, there have not been a substantial number of complaints from consumer/clients about such fee arrangements. Without a factual basis to justify the ban or the modifications as proposed, the action seems to be lacking in utility.	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					As with all fee agreements, non-refundable fee arrangements are subject to well-established professional rules that prohibit charging an unconscionable fee and/or keeping an unearned fee. These rules include: (1) the rule against charging excessive fees (Rule 1.5(a)) and (2) the longstanding rule requiring lawyers to refund unearned fees upon withdrawal from representation (Rule 1.16). These existing rules seem to curb abuses by unscrupulous lawyers. Further action seems to be lacking justification. As proposed, Paragraph (e)(1) and Comment [8] prohibit the established practice of charging a minimum fee to ensure availability (true retainer) when the client will also be credited for future work done, whether on an hourly basis or for the amount of the true retainer. It deprives the lawyer and the client of the ability to contract in a way that is beneficial to the client by insuring the attorney's availability and prevents the lawyer from receiving a true retainer earned when received if he/she performs any legal work whatsoever. These types of fee arrangements are very common. They give a sense of certainty or security to the client and protect the attorney from being uncompensated. Paragraph (e)(2) and Comment [5] would often require that the "non-refundable" "flat fee" cover fees for the	is permitted do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns. However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statutes, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					entire length of the case, including trial. This is not required under current rules and it not practical. Since the proposal would require the “flat fee” to cover contingencies (e.g., trial or an administrative evidentiary hearing) that often cannot be accurately predicted (or, truly foreseeable) at the inception of the agreement, the flat fee that covers these contingencies may need to be significantly higher than it otherwise would be at the outset. In other words, lawyers may feel the need to charge a larger fee to cover unforeseen contingencies, even those that are not truly likely to occur. This will make certain services unaffordable and in the absence of a true justification, is not in the best interest of either the consumer/client community or the Bar. Paragraph 1.5(e)(2)’s new requirement that specific, detailed wording be included in flat fee contracts presents a trap for the honest lawyer who is not familiar with these new rules and the complex fact patterns that potentially will develop. It is also inconsistent with the “sanctified” State Bar fee forms that have been distributed by the Bar for approximately the past 20 years and represent the “gold standard” for California lawyers. Flat fees, earned when paid, often work to the benefit of the client especially in criminal matters when clients typically have less money available to hire a lawyer. Often lawyers quote flat fees that are far less than	leaves unclear that, under current California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer’s responsibilities and the client’s and lawyer’s reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in those provisions.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					what the cost would be if charged at an hourly rate. If the lawyer agrees to non-refundable "flat fee" that is earned when received and substantially underestimates the legal work ultimately performed, s/he will certainly not be terminated by the client. However, when the lawyer through reputation, skill and ability has, in a short time, obtained a significant result that may curtail the case or cuts short the life of the case, the Proposed Rule encourages clients to terminate the representation without cause and obtain a refund of a substantial portion of the "flat fee," which, under the Proposed Rule would no longer be "the lawyer's property" to which the lawyer is entitled. This is not a just result.
14	Campbell, James F.	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	Non-refundable fees, or flat fees, have been used in criminal cases in California for well over a hundred years. The average client is better served by a flat fee in a criminal case, particularly in a misdemeanor case, where to charge hourly would be prohibitive. The average client in a criminal case has no way of having the costs for criminal representation predicted with any real accuracy. It is very difficult for defense lawyers to collect an hourly fee in a criminal case after the work has been performed. The flat fee structure is a better way to deliver this type of legal representation. The client has a predetermined fee that they know they can pay or not pay. It is not open ended. This also encourages counsel to more efficiently deliver the legal service without an eye on the clock. To my knowledge, I have not heard of any reports where clients have	See response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ").

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					been harmed by non-refundable retainers in criminal cases. I know that my clients are very happy to know what it will cost to defend the case and that the fee will not exceed that non-refundable flat fee. I wish I had more room to tell you how stupid an idea this is. Where is the problem that you feel needs a solution?
15	Cooper, James	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	With respect to privately criminal cases, the hourly rate scheme is impractical and unworkable. If attorneys could only ask for their compensation after the services have been provided, then clients would never pay us. There are rules in place to deal with excessive fees. This proposed rule would actually frustrate a client's effort to hire a lawyer.	See response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ").
16	Criminal Defense Lawyers Club of San Diego	D	Yes	1.5(e)	This Proposed Rule puts in place a condition that essentially makes the fee "flat" only upon the client's wish as the case proceeds. If the work for the attorney is substantial, the client will be content with the flat fee arrangement. But if the attorney seems to be on the way to a result that will end the case on a favorable note for the client can pull out of the "flat fee" contract, fire the attorney, and demand a substantial refund. Specifically, paragraph (e) of Rule 1.5 prohibits non-refundable retainers for legal services except under the circumstances outlined in subpart (1) and (2). Yet, the latter Rule, while first stating the fee is the attorney's on delivery, then says the client may be entitled to a refund prior to the "completion" of services. This paragraph adds uncertainty (which will certainly promote fee disputes) and promotes the	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services. [Sorted by Commenter]
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					problem identified in the preceding paragraph.	a fee agreement as “nonrefundable,” “earned on receipt,” etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns. However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statutes, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This leaves unclear that, under current California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer's responsibilities and the client's and lawyer's reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in those provisions.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services. [Sorted by Commenter]
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
17	Daar, Randolph E.	D	No	1.5(e)	I have used non-refundable retainers at various times in my practice. The rules that exist now adequately protect clients from excessive fees or failure of lawyers to refund fees upon withdrawal from representation. The new proposed rule deprives a client of the ability to formally retain an attorney in the circumstance in which, because of the nature of the scope of the proposed representation, it is necessary to secure the attorney services.	See response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ").
18	Davies, Leroy	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	It is unnecessary in light of California's long-standing prohibition on charging unconscionable fees, a standard which is sufficient to safeguard clients from lawyers who over-charge, and which provides a uniform yardstick regardless of the type of billing arrangement (hourly, contingent or flat).	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					It is internally inconsistent and confusing: the fee is the “lawyer’s property on receipt,” but the client is told s/he/it “may be entitled to a refund” under circumstances. It will cause litigation in the context of an injunction, jeopardy assessment or forfeiture because the language providing that “the client may be entitled to a refund of a portion of the fee” appears to give clients a residual interest in a fee that purportedly was “the lawyer’s property immediately on receipt.” This will lead to a proliferation of litigation in bankruptcy, tax, collections, criminal, family law, and other matters in which both flat fee arrangements, and injunctions, assessments and/or forfeitures, are commonplace. It may incentivize lawyers to prolong matters rather than resolve them as soon as possible (already a common complaint regarding hourly billing by some lawyers), to avoid disputes with clients seeking a refund because “the agreed-upon legal services have not been completed.” It may incentivize lawyers to minimize in retainer agreements the extent of the work for which a flat fee is being paid, in order to avoid disputes with clients seeking a refund because “the agreed-upon legal services have not been completed.” Greater clarity and detail in retainer agreements, not less, should be encouraged, not discouraged.	exception of a “true retainer” as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as “nonrefundable,” “earned on receipt,” etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns. However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					It has no counterpart in the ABA Model Rules. Thus, it does not advance the goal of national uniformity, which was among the goals of revising California's existing rules of professional conduct. There also is no judicial or other authority, or national experience, to inform us of the consequences of adopting the novel rule. Finally, it was submitted to the State Bar Board of Governors for preliminary approval without the prior public comment that is mandated by State Bare Rule 1.10, and thus suffers from a lack of input by the array of practitioners who would be impacted by the rule.	problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statues, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This leaves unclear that, under current California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer's responsibilities and the client's and lawyer's reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in those provisions. Concerning the asserted lack of notice, the Commission notes that the Commission's drafts of this proposed rule have been issued for public comment in two separate instances and that these public comment

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services. [Sorted by Commenter]
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
						distributions and also related public hearings were noticed on the State Bar website. Moreover, because the current draft of the proposed rule has been revised further, the Commission anticipates that the Board of Governors will authorize a further public comment period.
19	Dillworth, Andrew & Balin, William	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	We oppose subdivision (e) of rule 1.5 as presently drafted. Subdivision (e) begins with the predicate that "[a] lawyer shall not make an agreement for, charge, or collect a non-refundable fee, except:...." We respectfully submit that there is no such thing as a "non-refundable" fee and therefore the premise upon which the subdivision is based is misguided and is likely to create unnecessary confusion for both lawyers and clients. The predicate language carries two implications. First, it implies that a fee can actually be non-refundable. Second, it implies that a non-refundable fee is ethically permissible in certain circumstances. According to proposed rule 1.5(e)(1) & (2), those circumstances include: (1) a true retainer, and (2) a flat fee for specified services. Even a true retainer, however, is subject to possible refund under the particular facts and circumstances of	The Commission agrees with the commenters that no fee, except for a true retainer, is nonrefundable, and has attempted in both public comment drafts to so provide. However, the Commission also recognizes that there are genuine concerns expressed by other public commenters and so has further revised the Rule to balance competing client interests. The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. As noted in the revised draft, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					a case. If a lawyer whose availability is to be secured by a true retainer is not available, then there is no legitimate basis for the lawyer to keep the retainer. Consider, for example, a situation in which the retainer is paid to secure the availability of a prominent criminal defense attorney. The client's willingness to pay the retainer is based on the attorney's high profile in this area of practice, and her busy trial schedule. Were the attorney to subsequently advise the client that she had another case that demanded her attention but someone else within the firm would be available to represent the client, would the client not be entitled to a refund of the true retainer? A true retainer must also be earned in order for the lawyer to have a legitimate claim to it. If the lawyer makes him or herself available for the agreed period of time then she earns the retainer. It may be earned earlier than subsequent fees incurred in connection with the provision of actual legal services, but it is not earned simply by the lawyer's physical receipt of the funds. The same is equally true, if not more so, with regard to a flat fee for specified services. Such fees typically contemplate not only availability of the lawyer or law firm, but the provision of specified legal services in connection with the case. In many cases this includes the totality of legal services that will be required from beginning to conclusion of the representation. A flat fee is not earned on receipt of the funds, but rather upon provision of the specified	state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted to do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission also believes that the written disclosures required by paragraph (e) will avoid the potential that a client will misapprehend the true nature of the fixed fee arrangement, while at the same time providing some comfort to lawyers and clients in preventing the seizure by third parties of funds advanced to the lawyer.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					legal services. From the misguided premise that a fee can be non-refundable, subdivision (e) compounds the problem by stating "[i]f agreed to in advance, in a writing signed by the client, a flat fee is the lawyer's property on receipt." In our view, it should not be within the purview of the fee rule to try and create, modify or dictate property rights between lawyers, clients and third parties; and, the inclusion of this language does not effectively establish such rights. Moreover, attempting to define such rights and interests under a general rule ultimately fails because the issues of "when" a fee is earned and "whether it is to be refunded" are fact-specific. Subdivision (e) seems to acknowledge these points when it states that a lawyer who is attempting to earn his or her fee "upon receipt" must nonetheless advise the client in writing that the non-refundable fee may in fact be refundable if the agreed-upon legal services have not been completed. Subdivision (e) therefore sets up an oxymoron. It purports to recognize the existence and permissibility of a "non-refundable" fee earned on receipt, while simultaneously acknowledging that such a fee is still "refundable." The general public and lawyers, who seek guidance from the rules of professional conduct, are not well-served by a facially inconsistent rule - particularly in an area as important as the provision and handling of client funds. It is common knowledge that the lawyers), are entitled to clear guidance regarding these issues. The confusion created by subdivision (e) is exacerbated by the fact that the requirements of 1.5(e)(2)(iii)-(v)' which deal with flat fees are not present in 1.5(e)(1) which deals with true retainers. Proposed rule 1.5(e)(2)(iii)-(v) requires a lawyer to advise a client in writing: "... (iii) that the fee is the lawyer's property immediately on receipt; (iv) that the fee agreement does not alter the client's right to terminate the lawyer-client relationship; and (v) that the client may be entitled to a refund of a portion of the fee if the agreed-upon legal services have not been completed." Why is a client who pays a flat fee, but whose lawyer does not perform any or all of the contemplated services, entitled on the face of the rule to a potential refund while a client who pays a true retainer, whose lawyer is not in fact available, is not? Why, for that matter, is the flat fee earned on receipt when the true retainer is not? The materials provided by the Commission do not provide a rationale for differentiating between these two types of allegedly non-refundable fees, yet the requirements set forth in 1.5(e)(2) are not set forth in [1.5(e)(1)]. We respectfully suggest that the answer to these questions is that neither fee is truly "non-refundable," and neither is "earned" simply by receipt.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					The notion that a true retainer or flat fee can truly be non-refundable is also at odds with the language in proposed rule 15, as well as other rules of professional conduct, which recognize that a fee (regardless of type) may not be illegal or unconscionable, and that any unearned portion of a fee must be refunded. See, e.g., proposed rules 1.5(a) and 1.16(e). The provisions of subdivision (e) as drafted make these other provisions and rules, and the relationship between them, all the more confusing for practitioners and clients. The effort to dictate through a rule of discipline when a fee is earned and whether it is refundable is also inconsistent with the approach taken by the Commission in other rules. For example, proposed rule 1.15(g) recognizes that when there is a dispute between a client and lawyer over funds, the lawyer must place the disputed funds in a trust account until the dispute is resolved. The rule does not seek to determine whether the fees were in fact earned, who they belong to, etc, What principled basis is there for taking a different approach when addressing the important and fact-specific issue of whether a client's fee will be non-refundable? Given that the provisions of subdivision (e) undermine its central premise (i.e., that a fee can be non-refundable), the question becomes "what is the real purpose and function of subdivision(e)?" The answer

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					apparently is that it is directed at assisting a subset of lawyers (principally, criminal defense lawyers) in trying to fend-off third party efforts to seize client funds. We would respectfully submit that regardless of whether one agrees with the proposition that a fee rule should be drafted for the purpose of delineating property rights between a client and a third party, the effectiveness of the provision is dubious. It is not clear that a rule of discipline would have any effect on resolution of the legal issue of who actually owns or is entitled to the property (whether through seizure proceedings or otherwise). Whatever minimal benefit lawyers might receive from being able to point to such language is significantly outweighed by the confusion and risks that such a rule would create for clients. The esoteric issues, and special interests, that underlie the rationale for subdivision (e) will be lost on clients. At the end of the day, a client who reads subdivision (e) is left with the following: (1) a true retainer to secure availability is nonrefundable, and the default is that it is earned upon receipt, even if the lawyer ends up being unavailable, and (2) a flat fee for specified services can be non-refundable but even if the parties agree it is non-refundable it may still be "refundable." Will a client who reads the proposed rule have an accurate sense of the non-refundable nature of the fee? As the Commission is undoubtedly aware, there have

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					historically been significant differences of viewpoint with regard to true retainers, flat fees and non-refundable fees. This longstanding disagreement, even among lawyers who devote their practices to matters of professional responsibility, demonstrates why subdivision (e), as drafted, is not helpful to lawyers or to clients. Simply put, the subdivision does not provide greater clarity, it only muddies already murky waters. The language of subdivision (e) comes in large part from Washington State Rule of Professional Conduct 1.5. The use of Washington's language, while undoubtedly well-intentioned, is eventually unproductive because the Washington rule and the proposed rule address different issues. The Washington rule is tied in large part to the placement of funds received from the client, It creates an exception to the general requirement that the funds be placed in a trust account by providing that flat fees do not need to be placed in a trust account. Unlike most other states in the country, California is generally considered not to require an advance fee to be placed in a trust account. See, e.g., Baranowski v. State Bar (1979) 24 Cal.3d 153, 164; see also Cal. State Bar Formal Opn. 2007-172 ("Under rule 4-100, as it has been construed by the courts, an attorney is ethically permitted, but not required, to deposit fees not yet earned into a client trust account."). The purpose behind the Washington rule therefore doesn't exist in California where the exception has already been

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response embodied by California law. Which brings us back to the question what is the real purpose and function of subdivision (e)? Subdivision (e) does not benefit clients. A client has no interest in a fee truly being non-refundable, only the lawyer stands to gain. So, at the end of the day, subdivision (e) will exist for the purpose of assisting a subset of lawyers in fending-off third party claims to client funds through provisions that are unlikely to have any substantive impact on the legal issue of who is actually entitled to the funds. We respectfully urge the Commission to amend proposed rule 1.5(e) to prohibit non-refundable fees in their entirety, as no fee is truly non-refundable. We understand that such a rule was originally proposed by the Commission. We further urge the Commission not to try and use the fee rule to address when a fee is earned, or who owns it. A straightforward rule prohibiting, non-refundable fees would provide clear guidance to both clients and to lawyers. It would also be consistent with established case law and other rules of professional conduct that recognize that a fee must be earned, and that a fee is always subject to "potential refund" depending on the facts and circumstances. If the Commission does not wish to prohibit non-refundable fees through a rule of discipline, then we

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					urge the Commission to get rid of subdivision (e) altogether. Its inclusion is unnecessary. Clients will not be prejudiced by its omission. Nor will its omission place lawyers (criminal defense or otherwise) in a position any different than that which currently exists, and thus will not prejudice their ability to make the substantive arguments on which they seek to rely in responding to third party claims.
20	Dorvall, Shannon M.	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	Not necessary. Sufficient safeguards in the long-standing existing rule re charging unconscionable fees to protect clients from being overcharged under all billing arrangements. Internally inconsistent and confusing to state the fee is the lawyer's property on receipt but the client is told it may be refundable under certain circumstances. Will lead to litigation in the context of an injunction, jeopardy assessment or forfeiture because language providing "the client may be entitled to a refund of a portion of the fee" appears to give clients a residual interest in a fee that purportedly was "the lawyer's property immediately on receipt." Will also lead to proliferation of litigation in bankruptcy, tax, collections, criminal, family law, and other matters in which both flat fee arrangements, and injunctions, assessments and/or forfeitures, are commonplace. May be incentive for lawyers to delay, rather than	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					resolve, disputes where clients seek refunds because “the agreed-upon legal services have not been completed. May be incentive for lawyers to minimize clear description in fee agreement of agreed-upon services to be provided. Greater clarity and detail should be encouraged. No ABA counterpart thus does not advance goal of national uniformity. No judicial or other authority, or national experience, to inform of consequences of adopting a novel rule. Submitted to BOGs for preliminary approval without prior public comment as mandated by State Bar rules, thus suffers from lack of input from affected practitioners. May result in lawyers declining to accept representation on flat-fee basis providing disservice to clients who require certainty of flat-fee arrangement vs. potentially limitless cost of retaining counsel on hourly basis.	explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns. However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statutes, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This leaves unclear that, under current California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer's responsibilities and the client's and lawyer's reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in those provisions.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
21	Duree, John	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	I have been in private practice for 29 years. I have used flat fee, non-refundable retainers in at least 85% of my cases. I have never had a fee dispute with a client in a flat fee case, because my contracts are simple, straightforward and fair. My clients appreciate agreements of such a nature because they know the total amount my representation will cost. They are beneficial to me because I do not have to concern myself with time keeping or collections and our decisions on how to proceed in the case are not cost-based; unlike civil cases, my cases are usually about liberty, not money, and assessing strategies on the basis of their cost is simply not done in my practice. My initial agreements are for flat fee amounts through the preliminary examination. If the case goes beyond that point, I reach a new agreement or withdraw. My clients are clearly informed of this limitation at the outset, and I have never had a dispute on this issue. The reasons for this limitation are: First, most cases	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted do so, provided the lawyer

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					resolve at, before or immediately after the prelim--to charge a fee based on going, through trial when less than 5% of my cases go that far would be unnecessarily expensive to the client. Second, case law does not require a motion to withdraw if the attorney wishes to do so between the prelim and the next appearance. It is a natural breaking point in the litigation. Third, I do not know how extensive a jury trial will be until I have done the review and investigation of the matter, which, in my practice is largely done prior to the prelim. Postponing the fee agreement for trial allows me to make a fair estimate of the extent of work trial would require and hence, to set a fair fee. The timing also gives my clients the opportunity to decide whether to continue with me or to seek other counsel after they know the total fee. I have charged hourly fees in a number of cases, generally when my client is a corporation or quite wealthy. The reason I am willing to bill hourly in such cases is that the client is sufficiently financially strong that I am confident that my bills will be paid. I have found that my total fees are substantially higher when I bill hourly. Hourly billing would not be an effective method of paying for representation for me or for most of my clients, I am not sure why the state bar is considering a change to rules governing fee agreements to get rid of a fair and workable method for attorneys and clients	includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns. However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statutes, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This leaves unclear that, under current

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services. [Sorted by Commenter]
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					operating in the criminal justice system, but I hope, on full reflection, it will decide against such change.	California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer's responsibilities and the client's and lawyer's reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in those provisions.
22	Gabbert, Paul L.	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	I have first hand experience in the importance of non-refundable retainers and their significance to the attorney-client relationship in general and in fee forfeitures and Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") and California Franchise Tax Board ("FTB") jeopardy and termination assessment, seizure and levying contexts in particular. On at least three occasions, in which I was representing clients who had their assets seized for federal or state forfeiture, and my compensation was contingent upon obtaining the return of the seized currency, all of the money was seized pursuant to IRS and FTB assessments. This, in turn, required substantial collateral litigation to obtain the return of the funds and payment of my fees.' True retainers and other fixed fees are the only way for practitioners to avoid these pitfalls. Initially, it is my understanding that the proposed new	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					rule was adopted by the Board of Governors without appropriate notice and public comment as required by Rule of the State Bar 1.10(A). The present provision for post-hoc public comment neither solves nor resolves the Special Commission's and the Board of Governors' apparent failures to follow their own rules. Although the purported purpose of the new rule is to protect clients, it appears to work to the detriment of clients and attorneys as well as ignoring the reality of more than a century of practice by California attorneys who have used various varieties of the non-refundable retainer fee. It is also my understanding that the Board of Governors has previously endorsed the continued use of "fixed fees," "flat fees," and "non-refundable retainers" earned upon receipt. Nor am I aware of any course of conduct or pattern of wrongdoing by California attorneys that would warrant modifying the existing rules as well as implicitly questioning the case law upholding them that are not already adequately provided for in the existing body of rules prohibiting the obvious: charging unconscionable fees and stealing money from clients for services not performed. The primary reason that the non-refundable retainer or other fixed, fee earned upon receipt is essential to criminal defense practitioners and to their clients is to avoid fee forfeiture, seizure by tax assessments, orders to withhold, levies, restraining orders, preliminary injunctions, and years of uncompensated	is permitted do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns. However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statutes, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					collateral litigation that distracts the lawyer from the purpose for which he was hired. The proposed new rule with its multiple qualifiers and conditions muddies rather than clarifies the existing law. State and federal prosecutors, agents and taxing authorities will have a field day with the proposed rule. It opens the door to seemingly endless "investigations" regarding the nature of the legal work performed by the lawyer and whether or not the fees belong to him or to the client. By definition, any monies deposited into the client's trust account belong to the client and are fair game for seizure, levy, and forfeiture. In criminal securities litigation involving federal prosecutors and the Securities and Exchange Commission ("SEC") payment of attorney's fees and the relationship of that payment to restraining orders and preliminary injunctions can not only distract the attorney from the case she was hired to defend, it can eclipse the underlying case and result in the attorney having to defend herself in contempt proceedings based on how her fee was paid. Even when the attorney prevails in the litigation, this can result in the functional equivalent of a fee forfeiture because the cost of successfully defending the civil contempt action can greatly reduce or eradicate the fee paid to defend the client in the underlying criminal action. Thus, the proposed new Rule 1.5(e)(2) exposes members of the bar performing a variety of legal	leaves unclear that, under current California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer's responsibilities and the client's and lawyer's reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in those provisions. Concerning the asserted lack of notice, the Commission notes that the Commission's drafts of this proposed rule have been issued for public comment in two separate instances and that these public comment distributions and also related public hearings were noticed on the State Bar website. Moreover, because the current draft of the proposed rule has been revised further, the Commission anticipates that the Board of Governors will authorize a further public comment period.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response services to substantial financial risk and additional, uncompensated, extrinsic litigation by increasing the likelihood of the restraint and/or seizure of fees where the client has criminal, bankruptcy, state or federal tax or SEC investigations as well as being subject to a civil or criminal forfeiture or restraining orders. Given the existing minefields in these multiple, overlapping areas of practice, Rule 1.5(e)(2) not only substantially increases the risk of attorney fee seizure and forfeiture, it will deprive many criminal defendants of their Sixth Amendment rights to the retained lawyer of their choice and prohibit many civil clients facing state and federal regulatory and civil penalty actions from retaining counsel. Rule 1.5(e)(2) provides that "[i]f agreed to in advance in writing signed by the client, a flat fee is the lawyer's property upon receipt." Whether or not this is a true statement depends upon the applicable substantive law and a host of factually particular circumstances. Pursuant to its rule making authority, the State Bar cannot promulgate, overrule, alter, amend, or change existing substantive law. The cited portion of the proposed new rule in conjunction with its subsequent, multiple conditions and qualifications, is an unnecessary attempt to meld diverse areas of the law into a single rule that encompasses all potential future circumstances. Given the protean nature of human conduct, this is a factual impossibility, and greatly

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response exceeds the Bar's rule making authority. Cash flow is the economic life blood of all law firms. Under the proposed new Rule, and its multiple exceptions, when a skilled lawyer through knowledge, experience, reputation and carefully cultivated relationships obtains a significant benefit for the client within a short time, that does not resolve the entire case, the new Rule encourages clients to terminate representation without cause and obtain a refund of a substantial portion of the "flat fee" that would, under this proposal, no longer apparently belong to the attorney. Although it may seem counter intuitive, or even counter-empirical, to those who have not practiced in this area, there can be a surprising lack of gratitude and loyalty from clients even when counsel obtains significant results during the course of the litigation such as pre-trial release on bail, partial suppression of evidence, a severance of the defendant, the release of some assets, and the severance or dismissal of counts. In short, there is no apparent historical, factual, legal or logical basis for the proposed new rule. It appears to unnecessarily and unreasonably create fertile new ground for fee disputes, including arbitration claims, bar complaints and lawsuits, as well as fee seizures, fee levies, fee forfeitures, and civil and criminal

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response contempt proceedings against attorneys. Accordingly, the proposed new rule should be withdrawn.
23	Garcia, Antonio	D	No		No comment submitted.	The Commission cannot provide a response without an explanation why the commenter disagrees with the Rule. However, the Commission directs the commenter to the response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ")
24	Gericke, J. Robert	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	I am opposed to the suggested new rule. In California we have a strong policy of protecting clients, as well we should. However, I think that in the field of criminal law there needs to some consideration to protecting the attorney. The nonrefundable fee tends to do that while also offering the client clear notice of the cost of representation. I would also note that fees in criminal cases tend to be pretty affordable compared to other areas of practice. If the reader has ever been through a divorce this should be evident. The rules for being relieved due to non-payment are different in criminal cases and this is another consideration. If non-refundable fees are banned should criminal attorneys charge by the hour? Can they be relieved more easily for nonpayment? What impact will this have on court calendars? I strongly urge that this proposed rule be scrapped. Criminal clients have many other protections. This rule	See response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ").

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response is not needed.
25	Goodman, Louis J.	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	Joins in the comments of CACJ, above.	See response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ").
26	Gordon, Kenneth G.	D	No	1.5(e)	My principal concern with the proposed change to Rule 1.5(e) has to do with the language of (e)(2) pertaining to flat fees. Assuming the attorney and client agree in writing, a flat fee is the lawyer's property on receipt. As such, the attorney should properly deposit this fee into his operating account and take it into income. In a tax sense, the attorney has dominion and control over the fee and should treat it as income. In the event that it is not the lawyer's property or is subject to a substantial risk of forfeiture, then the tax treatment would be otherwise. The language of Proposed Rule 1.5(e)(2)(v) provides that the written fee agreement shall include a provision that the client may be entitled to a refund of a portion of the fee if the agreed upon legal services have not been performed. This language appears to introduce a substantial condition into the equation of the lawyer's dominion and control of the fee. I believe that there are sufficient remedies against abuses, such as the non-performance or incompetent performance of legal services, without the broad brush approach embodied in the Proposed Rule that not only alters property rights, but puts the interests of both the lawyer and client at risk in certain fact situations.	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					The core issue under the Proposed Rule is one of property or interest in property. It appears that the Proposed Rule is confusing and inherently contradictory. If the flat fee is the lawyer's property upon receipt, then there should not be a basis for seizure. However, if the client has a right to a refund of fees attributable to services not completed, then the client has a property interest that can be seized by a taxing agency. My comments have addressed the proposed rule change within a very narrow range of my tax practice and focused on a particular civil tax issue. There are many other factual situations, including those within the criminal law context, that raise issues of legal exposure for both the attorney and client which have not been addressed in this letter. Hopefully, the Commission considering this rule change will reconsider its position regarding this Proposed Rule. Existing legal remedies and professional restraints on attorneys are, in my opinion, sufficient to protect clients. The obfuscation of property rights pertaining to flat fees appears counter-productive to the interests of clients.	regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns. However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statutes, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This leaves unclear that, under current California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
						was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer's responsibilities and the client's and lawyer's reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in those provisions.
27	Gregory, Kenneth C.	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	Your proposed rule is misplaced on so many levels. First, I share a concern that a significant level of deceit is involved in moving this proposed rule forward. The normal and typical process for introducing such a rule has been ignored; in favor of a secretive and deceitful move to push consideration of the rule without encountering known and legitimate opposition – THAT IS NO WAY FOR THE GOVERNMENT TO CONDUCT PROPER BUSINESS. Second, the premise for the bill is seriously flawed and appears to be someone's personal vendetta rather than a legitimate need looking for an actual solution. I recommend that you take the time to read and consider the attached letter from CACJ.	The Commission disagrees with the commenter's statement concerning the Commission's alleged motives. The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
						explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests.
28	HALT (Theresa Meehan Rudy)	D	No	1.5	HALT is disappointed by the Commission's rejection of the ABA Model Rule, and its abject failure to propose any meaningful ethical standards to govern attorneys fees. By retaining the operative language in current California Rule of Professional Responsibility 4-200, Proposed Rule 1.5 would only prohibit fees that are "unconscionable or illegal." An ethical rule that prohibits only the unenforceable and the unlawful adds nothing. For many years, HALT has raised questions about the elasticity of the ABA's requirement that attorneys only charge "reasonable" fees. But even that flawed approach offers some protection to consumers. The California approach protects only lawyers who charge unreasonable fees. HALT urges the Commission to revisit the issue of reasonable attorneys fees and, at a minimum, adopt the ABA Model Rule.	The Commission believes that retaining the present "unconscionable" fee standard is appropriate for disciplinary purposes in contrast to the "reasonable" standard of the ABA Model Rules. The latter standard is more suited to a fee dispute regime. California is unique in having an extensive mandatory fee arbitration program in which claims of unreasonable fees can be resolved, leaving to the disciplinary system the more serious claims of unconscionability.
29	Hansen, Michael E.	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	It is unnecessary in light of California's long-standing prohibition on charging unconscionable fees, a standard which is sufficient to safeguard clients from lawyers who over-charge, and which provides a uniform yardstick regardless of the type of billing arrangement (hourly, contingent or flat).	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					It is internally inconsistent and confusing: the fee is the “lawyer’s property on receipt,” but the client is told s/he/it “may be entitled to a refund” under circumstances. It will cause litigation in the context of an injunction, jeopardy assessment or forfeiture because the language providing that “the client may be entitled to a refund of a portion of the fee” appears to give clients a residual interest in a fee that purportedly was “the lawyer’s property immediately on receipt.” This will lead to a proliferation of litigation in bankruptcy, tax, collections, criminal, family law, and other matters in which both flat fee arrangements, and injunctions, assessments and/or forfeitures, are commonplace. It may incentivize lawyers to prolong matters rather than resolve them as soon as possible (already a common complaint regarding hourly billing by some lawyers), to avoid disputes with clients seeking a refund because “the agreed-upon legal services have not been completed.” It may incentivize lawyers to minimize in retainer agreements the extent of the work for which a flat fee is being paid, in order to avoid disputes with clients seeking a refund because “the agreed-upon legal services have not been completed.” Greater clarity and detail in retainer agreements, not less, should be encouraged, not discouraged.	exception of a “true retainer” as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as “nonrefundable,” “earned on receipt,” etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns. However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					It has no counterpart in the ABA Model Rules. Thus, it does not advance the goal of national uniformity, which was among the goals of revising California's existing rules of professional conduct. There also is no judicial or other authority, or national experience, to inform us of the consequences of adopting the novel rule. Finally, it was submitted to the State Bar Board of Governors for preliminary approval without the prior public comment that is mandated by State Bare Rule 1.10, and thus suffers from a lack of input by the array of practitioners who would be impacted by the rule.	problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statues, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This leaves unclear that, under current California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer's responsibilities and the client's and lawyer's reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in those provisions. Concerning the asserted lack of notice, the Commission notes that the Commission's drafts of this proposed rule have been issued for public comment in two separate instances and that these public comment

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services. [Sorted by Commenter]
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
						distributions and also related public hearings were noticed on the State Bar website. Moreover, because the current draft of the proposed rule has been revised further, the Commission anticipates that the Board of Governors will authorize a further public comment period.
30	Hazard, Geoffrey, Deborah Rhode & Richard Zitrin (ethics law professors group)	D	No	1.5(a), (b)	The California Commission has insisted, repeatedly and counter-intuitively, in retaining the word "unconscionable" to define the propriety of fees and - even more puzzlingly - some expenses. The ABA uses the far more intelligible word "unreasonable." Moreover, California's own Business & Professions Code, in evaluating fee recoveries without written contracts, also uses the "reasonable" standard. Finally, the term "unconscionable" appears to create a higher threshold than "unreasonable," thus being lawyer-rather than client-protective. Thus, the California rule would perpetuate use of a difficult-to-define, rather archaic, and lawyer-protective term that is at odds with the ABA formulation and at the same time perpetuates two California standards - one under the ethics rules and one under the State Bar Act. This simply makes no sense. We strongly urge the Board to remove the word unconscionable and replace it with "unreasonable."	The Commission believes that retaining the present "unconscionable" fee standard is appropriate for disciplinary purposes in contrast to the "reasonable" standard of the ABA Model Rules. The latter standard is more suited to a fee dispute regime. California is unique in having an extensive mandatory fee arbitration program in which claims of unreasonable fees can be resolved, leaving to the disciplinary system the more serious claims of unconscionability.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
31	Heithecker, Philip	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	Flat fee retainers in our rural county allows access to defense attorneys. Simply put, most, if not all, of my clients could not afford my hourly rate. Defendants would be left without representation as they would be too wealthy for the public defender and not wealthy enough for a private attorney.	See response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ").
32	Hicks, Aaron	D	No		If we are forced to do away with flat fee retainers, our clients will be billed much higher fees based on hourly work on their case. Most will not be able to afford private representation. Many will be forced to go with public defenders, crippling the private bar and bankrupting the state for the public defender representation. Please leave this alone.	See response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ").
33	Imhoff, Vince	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	Not necessary. Sufficient safeguards in the long-standing existing rule re charging unconscionable fees to protect clients from being overcharged under all billing arrangements. Internally inconsistent and confusing to state the fee is the lawyer's property on receipt but the client is told it may be refundable under certain circumstances. Will lead to litigation in the context of an injunction, jeopardy assessment or forfeiture because language providing "the client may be entitled to a refund of a portion of the fee" appears to give clients a residual interest in a fee that purportedly was "the lawyer's property immediately on receipt." Will also lead to proliferation of litigation in bankruptcy, tax, collections, criminal, family law, and other matters in which both	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					flat fee arrangements, and injunctions, assessments and/or forfeitures, are commonplace. May be incentive for lawyers to delay, rather than resolve, disputes where clients seek refunds because "the agreed-upon legal services have not been completed. May be incentive for lawyers to minimize clear description in fee agreement of agreed-upon services to be provided. Greater clarity and detail should be encouraged. No ABA counterpart thus does not advance goal of national uniformity. No judicial or other authority, or national experience, to inform of consequences of adopting a novel rule. Submitted to BOGs for preliminary approval without prior public comment as mandated by State Bar rules, thus suffers from lack of input from affected practitioners. May result in lawyers declining to accept representation on flat-fee basis providing disservice to clients who require certainty of flat-fee arrangement vs. potentially limitless cost of retaining counsel on hourly basis.	a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns. However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statutes, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services. [Sorted by Commenter]
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
						proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This leaves unclear that, under current California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer's responsibilities and the client's and lawyer's reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in those provisions. Concerning the asserted lack of notice, the Commission notes that the Commission's drafts of this proposed rule have been issued for public comment in two separate instances and that these public comment distributions and also related public hearings were noticed on the State Bar website. Moreover, because the current draft of the proposed rule has been revised further, the Commission anticipates that the Board of Governors will authorize a further public comment period.
34	Ingber, Joe	D	No	1.5(e)	To modify/abolish rule 1.5(e) re: non-refundable retainer agreements, would create chaos in an unnecessary manner. Please vote against this	See response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ").

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response abolition.
35	Johnson, Phil	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	As a criminal lawyer who has served in the public defenders' realm in Louisiana and California for over 20 years and then in a solo or independent contractor capacity, I depend on simplicity and clarity in contracts with clients who need representation, but who do not have a lot of money. I protest this rule. But I will leave to others with more experience and insight the task of adequately explaining to the Commission why the substance of this new rule is abhorrent. I write separately to protest the abysmal lack of notice to the members of the Bar this paid organization was created to assist and serve. I submit that if I similarly tried to foist upon a client - - without any prior notice - - a contract that allowed me to change my hourly rate under certain circumstances (i.e., DA suddenly amends information to include enhancements and priors, or refuses to cooperate in providing discovery, judge issues stunning rulings requiring pretrial writs, etc.) because I cannot modify it any other way, the client-attorney relationship would be adversely impacted. It follows that his case would suffer along with the client's best interests, a complaint would inevitably follow and much energy and time would be lost in a lose-lose situation with absolutely no benefit to anyone. And of course, I would probably be hauled before the Bar Court as one of those villains who are out to gouge clients and otherwise cast aspersions on	Concerning the asserted lack of notice, the Commission notes that the Commission's drafts of this proposed rule have been issued for public comment in two separate instances and that these public comment distributions and also related public hearings were noticed on the State Bar website. Moreover, because the current draft of the proposed rule has been revised further, the Commission anticipates that the Board of Governors will authorize a further public comment period.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					the legal profession. That is how I view this failure to effectively notify the rank and file that this unsupported and unsupportable engraftment is coming down the pike one more time. Why is notice such a problem in these troubling areas? In 35 years of practice, like the vast majority of others on this list, I have never been cited by any state bar for any malfeasance. Fortunately, I am semi-retired and so this concern has somewhat less impact on me than for my less aged brethren. For now, I just hope I can live out my days without looking over my shoulder for more trebuchetlaunched boulders like this one, raining down from the sky. This may speed up my decision to do something else for a living with less downside. I also feel that it may lead others to do the same thing.
36	Kolodny, Stephen	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	I write this letter to express my opposition to the proposed new Rule of Conduct that would abolish the right of lawyers to charge flat or non-refundable fees. For many different reasons, in family law, such a Rule would be grossly unfair to the lawyers and allow many clients to receive services at a cost far below the reasonable compensation for the work, effort and experience that goes into the representation of that client. In family law it is not uncommon for potential clients to go around and conflict out lawyers they do not want to have as opposing counsel. Sadly, this is a practice that	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning “nonrefundable” and “earned on receipt” fees. Notwithstanding the commenter’s stated position and practice, with the exception of a “true retainer” as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					is promulgated by some lawyers in our community but also has clearly taken hold in the general community because of the proliferation of this kind of advice on various special interest web sites. One of the ways a high profile law firm can protect itself from this kind of practice is to have non-refundable retainer agreements so that the client does not hire you, conflict you out and then fire you, paying only for an hour or so of your time. There is truly a premium value to the retention of certain lawyers in all fields, unfortunately in the Family Law field the concept of "conflicting out" has become a tactic used by some litigants and some lawyers. In Family Law it is not uncommon for some of us to substantially limit the intake of cases so that we can provide full and complete services to the clients we commit to represent. Only by knowing that there will a specific fee [minimum fee] can we afford to do that. If a client is accepted and then we turn away another potential client because of work load commitments, we should not be prejudiced because the client we accepted then chooses to leave before much work is done. In Family Law we are often asked to prepare Pre or Post Nuptial Agreements, which are documents that have very substantial potential liability associated with them. The fees charged are document specific fees, not related to time expended. Prohibition of flat fees [which are a form of non-refundable retainers or will	state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns. However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statutes, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					ultimately be categorized as such] would severely inhibit the willingness of lawyers to provide services in this difficult area. To my knowledge, members of the Bar practicing in many fields including bankruptcy, immigration, family law, criminal law, tax law, and SEC law, as well as entertainment and real estate law understand that there is nothing about a non-refundable retainer that permits a lawyer to charge an unconscionable or clearly excessive fee. That is, the non-refundable retainer, as with any other traditional fee arrangement, has always been subject to well-established professional rules that apply to the unscrupulous lawyer who extracts an unconscionable fee as a "non-refundable retainer" from a naive client, has no established basis for doing so or to justify the amount charged, does little or no work, and keeps the clients' money. These rules include: (1) the case-by-case Rule against charging excessive fees (Rule 1.5(a)) and (2) the longstanding Rule requiring lawyers to refund unearned fees upon withdrawal from representation (Rule 1.16). Common sense, fairness, and the existing protections against unconscionable fees, dictate that under a non-refundable retainer arrangement, except as allowed by historical rules and precedent, if a lawyer does very little or no work, the client is entitled to a full refund. Similarly, members of the Bar have almost universally	that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This leaves unclear that, under current California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer's responsibilities and the client's and lawyer's reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in those provisions. Concerning the asserted lack of notice, the Commission notes that the Commission's drafts of this proposed rule have been issued for public comment in two separate instances and that these public comment distributions and also related public hearings were noticed on the State Bar website. Moreover, because the current draft of the proposed rule has been revised further, the Commission anticipates that the Board of Governors will authorize a further

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					recognized that when a client signs an agreement and pays a non-refundable retainer, there are unanticipated events that can result in a refund of a non-refundable retainer. For instance, a client would be entitled to a full refund if his/her lawyer gets sick and does no work. Likewise, an honest lawyer would refund a $10,000 non-refundable retainer if, shortly after receiving it, the client changes her mind and fires him/her without cause, and the lawyer has not done any meaningful work. In these and many other unanticipated circumstances, a non-refundable retainer would be "unconscionable" under Rule 1.5(a) and an honest lawyer would refund the unearned portion of the fee. If adopted, Paragraph (e) to abolish non-refundable retainers (Ex. 2) will fundamentally alter the practice of law in California, create unnecessary complexity and confusion, seriously undermine the attorney-client relationship, and prevent many clients from obtaining representation. It is contrary to the interests of the two groups who are most affected, the lawyers and their clients because, for example: 1. The Board of Governors adopted this 2009 Proposal without any input from the membership. Considering the significance of Paragraph (e) to lawyers and their clients throughout California and the controversy surrounding the Proposal, the Commission should have publicized and/or explained these changes to	public comment period.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response ensure that a cross-section of the bar knew of their existence so that the membership could meaningfully respond or object before the Board of Governors' tentative approval. Rule of the State Bar 1.10(A) ("Public Comment") requires Proposals for the Rules of the State Bar to be circulated for public comment before adoption, amendment, or repeal by the Board of Governors. Section 1.10(B)(2) states that Public Comment is not required: "(2) to modify a proposal that has been circulated for public comment when the board deems the modification non-substantive or reasonably implicit in the proposal." This 2009 proposal cannot be reasonably interpreted as a "non-substantive" "modification" of the abandoned 2008 proposal, Rule 1.5(f). The current after the fact public comment does not solve this problem. See discussion Ex. 1. P. 12. 2. Paragraph (e) prevents fully-informed clients and their lawyers from knowingly entering into a non-refundable retainer agreement that benefits clients. It ignores the reality that since the 19th century, thousands of California lawyers have used some form of the non-refundable retainer (that falls outside of the limited exceptions in Paragraph (e)'s ban on non-refundable retainers in (e) (1) and (2)). 3. There is no identifiable pattern of abuse or wrongdoing by California lawyers resulting from the current rules that mandates the abolition of the non-

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					refundable retainer or that would be remedied by this sweeping change. The Proposal is a solution in search of a problem. 4. The Proposal ignores the fact that in October of 1992, the Board of Governors concluded that a non-refundable retainer "earned when paid" was a perfectly appropriate fee arrangement. The Board of Governors endorsed the continued use of "fixed fees," and "flat fees," and "non-refundable retainers," to be earned when paid, with title immediately transferring to the attorney so long as the written fee agreement explicitly spelled out the arrangement with the inclusion of an express statement that such fees paid in advance of legal services are "earned when paid." See October 1992 State Bar Memorandum and attachments in connection with a "Request that the Supreme Court of California Approve Amendments ... to Rules of Professional Conduct." It also ignores the fact that it was the Committee on Professional Responsibility and conduct ("COPRAC") that first suggested (See May 20, 1991 COPRAC Memorandum), that any change to the rules should explicitly add "non-refundable retainers" as part of the definition of "true" retainers earned upon receipt. COPRAC is also on record as stating it is "concerned" that any proposed rule change not "unduly restrict" a lawyer's ability to charge a truly non-refundable retainer in appropriate circumstances. Id.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					5. Paragraph (c)(1) and Comment [8] prohibit the long-established practice of charging a minimum fee to ensure availability (true retainer) when the client will also be credited for future work done either on an hourly basis or for the amount of the true retainer. It deprives the lawyer and the client of the ability to contract in a way that is beneficial to the client (and which no client would refuse) and prevents the lawyer from receiving a true retainer earned when received if she does any legal work. 6. Paragraph (e)(2) and Comment [5] would often require that the proposed "flat fee" to cover fees for the entire length of the case, including trial. Since this "flat fee" is required to cover contingencies (i.e., trial or an administrative evidentiary hearing), that often cannot be reasonably predicted prior to being retained, the significant portion of the flat fee that covers these contingencies is refundable, at least until the time that the contingencies occur. 7. Paragraph (e)(2) requires the lawyer and client to inaccurately describe the actual nature of the "flat fee" by representing that the fee "is the lawyer's property on receipt." The critical issue is not what the fee is called but who owns the funds. 8. Rather than protecting the client's entitlement to a refund of the proposed "flat fee" (see proposed Rule 1.5(e)(2)(v)). Paragraph 1.5(e)(2) actually will deprive

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					the client from ever receiving a refund if these funds are the subject of any federal or state seizure, jeopardy assessments, restraining order or forfeiture, or even attachment by potential creditors. The lawyer cannot return all or part of the fee to the client because the seizing agency will be entitled to any fee refund. 9. Paragraph (e)(2) exposes lawyers performing all types of legal services to extrinsic litigation or significant financial risk by facilitating the restraining and/or seizure of fees if any client has a potential criminal or bankruptcy problem or has a dispute with the IRS, the Franchise Tax Board, the S.E.C., or is the potential target of a civil or criminal forfeiture or restraining order, or is vulnerable to potential creditors' claims. 10. Because Paragraph 1.5(e)(2) will substantially increase the risk of attorney fee forfeiture or civil seizure, compliance with Paragraph (e) deprives those accused of crimes of their constitutional rights to retain the lawyer of their choice and many family lawyer litigants of their ability to retain counsel. 11. Paragraph (e)(2) permits a client to terminate representation without cause, before all of the work has been completed and after the lawyer has performed a substantial amount of work, and will result in clients filing arbitration claims, lawsuits, or Bar complaints.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					12. The Proposal will generate increased client bar complaints, arbitration claims, and civil actions involving fee disputes, for example, when an attorney and a client cannot agree on the amount of funds that must be returned in an advance fee case even when an attorney is terminated without cause. 13. Paragraph 1.5(e)(2)'s novel requirement that specific, detailed wording be included in flat fee contracts presents a trap for the honest lawyer who is unfamiliar with these new Rules and the complex fact patterns that will develop. It is also inconsistent with the "sanctified" State Bar fee forms (that have been distributed by the Bar for approximately the past 20 years) that represent the "gold standard" for California lawyers.' 14. The Proposal impacts the economic viability of small law firms and the practice of large firms. If the lawyer agrees to the proposed advance "flat fee" that is earned when received and substantially underestimates the legal work, he will certainly not be terminated by the client. However, when the lawyer through skill and ability has, in a short time obtained a significant result that is not outcome-determined in an ongoing case, the Rule encourages clients to terminate the representation without cause and obtain a refund of a substantial portion of the "flat fee" that under this Proposal would no longer be "the lawyer's

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					property" or property to which the lawyer is entitled. This Proposal effectively penalizes an effective and/or efficient lawyer or the promotion of early resolution of disputes, all of which is contrary to the legislature's stated intent in the Family Code and which should be the principal to which all lawyers should subscribe. The proposed new Rule 1.5(e), drafted by the Commission, essentially prohibits non-refundable fees for performing legal services. In doing so, it abolishes and/or redefines a widely accepted historical fee arrangement, and in reality will provide that most payments to do legal work in the future will not be earned when received regardless of the attempts in Rule 1.5(e) to inaccurately describe some fees as "the lawyer's property upon receipt."
37	Langford, Carol	D	No	1.5(f)	A lawyer has a fiduciary relationship, a relationship of confidence and trust, to always put the needs of the client above his or her own. When trust is breached, the integrity of the legal system and the public's respect for the legal profession is jeopardized. The Proposed Rules are designed to regulate lawyer's conduct and bolster the public's confidence in the legal profession. I am concerned that the language of Rule 1.5(f) does not set a high enough standard to protect a client's interest in cases of modification. Rule 1.5(f) language states that a lawyer shall not	No response necessary. The Commission believes that "adverse" in

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					make a modification that is “adverse.” Adverse is defined as a modification that “benefits the lawyer in a manner that is contrary to the client's interests.” I am concerned this language is unclear. Whether a particular modification is adverse to the interest of the client always depends on the circumstances. I believe that a modification that increases a client's fee for a project should be adverse. In addition, adverse modification occurs when the client is coerced or agrees to it under duress or threat of non-performance. However, not all modifications are adverse. A modification that extends the time within which a client is obligated to pay a fee ordinarily is not adverse. The current language does make clear these distinctions. It doesn't set forth a requirement that the client who consents to the modification in writing can do so only if it is knowing and intelligent and the deal is fair and reasonable. The proposed rule will not deter adverse modifications and promote ethical transactions between lawyers and their clients. I support the adoption of a higher standard in evaluating interests adverse to clients as in current Rule 3-300. It states that a lawyer must avoid interests adverse to a client unless all three requirements are satisfied. These requirements are: a) The transaction or acquisition and its terms are fair and reasonable to the client and are fully disclosed and transmitted in writing to the client in a manner which should	the circumstances of the proposed rule can be well understood and is not unclear. The Commission does not disagree with the commenter's premise and has addressed this very issue in Comments [3] and [3A]. The Commission disagrees that the enhanced protocol in current rule 3-300 [proposed Rule 1.8.1] is necessary for fee modifications unless they convey to the lawyer an ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					reasonably have been understood by the client; and (b) The client either is represented in the transaction or acquisition by an independent lawyer of the client's choice or is advised in writing by the lawyer to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client's choice and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice; and (c) The client thereafter consents in writing to the terms of the transaction or the terms of the acquisition and the lawyer's role in the transaction or acquisition, including whether the lawyer is representing the client in the transaction or acquisition.
38	Law Practice Management Section, State Bar of California [William E. Hoffman]	M	No	1.5	The State Bar Should Acknowledge and Encourage Alternative Fee Arrangements. LPMT believes that Proposed Rule 1.5, as drafted, would hamper the development of alternative fee arrangements, arrangements that would benefit clients and attorneys alike. This consequence is particularly likely given the historical emphasis on hours as the billing touchstone – a touchstone that will likely be less relevant in evaluating alternative arrangements. The Proposed Rule should more directly acknowledge and encourage such alternative fee arrangements, in addition to contingency fees and strictly flat fees. The failure to remove hours expended as the litmus test of conscionability interferes with the development of alternative fee arrangements, which can be of great worth to clients as they plan and budget. Hours expended are often irrelevant and should not be the	The Commission did not make the requested change. The proposed Rule already acknowledges that the factors in paragraph (c) are not exclusive. Moreover, aside from factor (c)(10) ("the time and labor required"), nothing in the Rule suggests that the amount of time spent is the preferred benchmark for determining the unconscionability of a fee. It is but one of eleven non-exclusive factors.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response standard by which such alternative fee arrangements should be judged. Many lawyers on fixed fees do not keep track of time – that is one of the benefits to both lawyer and client. Rather, alternative fee arrangements can provide the client with much-valued specificity and certainty of cost and time. On the lawyer's side, such arrangements encourage the lawyer to invest in technology, which will yield a better and more efficient result for the lawyer's clients. Without the ability to thus amortize the capital expense of new technology and innovate, lawyers will see no incentive to change to more dynamic fee arrangements that would benefit both client and lawyer While it might not be advisable to address specific alternative arrangements in the Proposed Rule itself, LPMT does urge the Commission to revise its Comments to Proposed Rule 1.5. In particular, we highly recommend that the Commission: • note that such alternative fee arrangements are subject to the proscription against unconscionable fees; and • acknowledge that the factors used to evaluate the conscionability of fees can and should be weighted differently in certain alternative fee arrangements. By doing so, the Commission would clarify that

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					Proposed Rule 1.5 is not meant to chill the development of such alternative fee arrangements, while at the same time ensuring that such arrangements are nevertheless subject to a fundamental ethical standard. For the foregoing reasons, we recommend that Comment [1B] be amended as follows: [1B] Paragraph (b) defines an unconscionable fee. (See Herrscher v. State Bar (1934) 4 Cal.2d 399, 402 [49 P.2d 832]; Goldstone v. State Bar (1931) 214 Cal. 490 [6 P.2d 513].) The factors specified in paragraphs (c)(1) through (11) that are to be considered in determining whether a fee is conscionable are not exclusive. Nor will each factor necessarily be relevant in each instance. Indeed, it is anticipated that the weighting of factors and the relevance of each factor would be dependent upon the facts of a given fee arrangement. Contingent fees and other alternative fee arrangements, like any other fees, are subject to the unconscionability standard of paragraph (a) of this Rule. In-house expenses are charges by the lawyer or firm as opposed to third-party charges.
36	Linscheid, E. Michael	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	The proposed rule ignores the realities of the practice of criminal defense. Currently, the nonrefundable fee allows a client to pay a known amount which will cover the entirety of his criminal representation without	See response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ").

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services. [Sorted by Commenter]
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					additional fees. An attorney and client that enter into a contract for a nonrefundable retainer can feel secure that the retainer fee will cover the representation of the client through trial. Such a retainer allows a client to make decisions about a legal defense without taking into consideration the additional costs that may be incurred.
37	Loftus, Richard A.	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	I am a sole practitioner in the area of criminal defense. The proposed rule is unnecessary, interferes with my ability to contract with potential clients, and in many cases would result in my charging fees that would be much greater than those charged as a flat fee. In many cases, I make court appearances over and above the necessary minimum number strictly for the purpose of benefiting an interest of the client. If my fee arraignments were now all going to be done on an hourly basis, the cost to the client would increase dramatically. Most of my clients could not afford this increase, and be forced to make difficult decisions, based upon limited resources, that would not be in their best interest. I would respectfully urge the rejection of the Proposed New Rule 1.5(e)(4-200)	See response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ").
38	Los Angeles County Bar Association, Professional Responsibility and Ethics Committee (PREC)	M	Yes	1.5(e)(2)	The proposal discourages lawyers from efficiently resolving matters given the potential it creates for a client to request a refund because "the agreed-upon legal services have not been completed." For example, if a lawyer settles a matter before trial, a fee	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt"

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					agreement that provided that the fee would cover representation through trial could be construed to require a partial refund, even though the case was favorably resolved. This would be unfair, and is contrary to the longstanding treatment of what constitutes an earned fee. Sub-parts (e)(2)(i), (ii) and (iv) are equally applicable to all types of retainer agreements. Including them in a sub-part that pertains only to flat fee agreements creates the misleading negative inference that these requirements may not apply to hourly or contingency fee agreements. If it is desirable to mandate that fee agreements contain additional provisions, this should be accomplished through the existing statutory framework in the B&P Code. The Legislature could choose to amend sections 6147 and 6148 to specifically address flat fees, but attorneys who use flat fee arrangements should not be singled out for discipline for failing to have details in a fee agreement that are not required for other type of fee arrangements. Sup-part (e)(2) provides that the fee is the "lawyer's property on receipt," but also requires the attorney to state that the client "may be entitled to a refund" under certain circumstances. This is confusing. Also, stating that a fee is the lawyer's property on receipt suggests the creation of substantive law. Isn't the intent simply to clarify that a flat fee need not be placed in the client	fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					trust account? To describe the fee as the “lawyer’s property” increases the likelihood of future litigation over who owns the fee, especially when combined with the mandate that counsel state that the client may be entitled to a refund. Ambiguities in fee agreements are construed against the lawyer, and this draft rule mandates an ambiguity. The proposed language in sub-part (e)(2) is unnecessary in light of the prohibition on charging unconscionable fees, a traditional and well established standard which sufficiently safeguards clients from unscrupulous lawyers who overcharge clients, and which provides a uniform standard regardless of the type of retainer agreement involved. The language of (e)(2) may discourage the attorney from providing details in the fee agreement regarding the extent of the work for which a flat fee is being paid because of the potential it creates for a client to request a refund because “the agreed-upon legal services have not been completed.” The proposed language will foment greater discord over fee agreements, which is not in the interests of either clients or the legal profession. This proposal likely will lead to litigation in the context of an injunction, jeopardy assessment or forfeiture. It may lead to substantial problems in bankruptcy, tax, collections, criminal, family law, and other matters in	However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statutes, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This leaves unclear that, under current California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer’s responsibilities and the client’s and lawyer’s reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in those provisions. Concerning the asserted lack of notice, the Commission notes that the Commission’s drafts of this proposed rule have been

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					which both flat fees arrangements, and injunctions, assessments and/or forfeitures, are commonplace. The reason for this is that persons or entities with a claim against a client will seek to seize and forfeit a client's potential interest in obtaining a refund based on the client's possible right to "be entitled to a refund of a portion of the fee." How would a creditor of the client know whether the agreed upon services were or were not provided? This proposal has no counterpart in the ABA Model Rules. Thus, it does not advance the intended goal of national uniformity that is among the purposes for revising California's existing rules of professional conduct. Finally, PREC is aware that some practitioners have expressed concern that this provision was presented to the State Bar Board of Governors without the prior public comment that is required by State Bar Rule 1.10. If there has been a failure to comply with any procedural rule, PREC believes that the Rules Revision commission should consider recommending necessary corrective action in order to ensure that all of California's new Rules of Professional Conduct are lawfully adopted.	issued for public comment in two separate instances and that these public comment distributions and also related public hearings were noticed on the State Bar website. Moreover, because the current draft of the proposed rule has been revised further, the Commission anticipates that the Board of Governors will authorize a further public comment period.
39	Los Angeles Public Defenders [Michael Judge]	NI	No	Comment [9]	Comment [9] refers to paragraph (f)(2) but there is no paragraph (f)(2). Paragraph (e)(2) was probably intended.	The Commission has resolved this discrepancy in the revised rule draft.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comment [10]	Comment [10] refers to Rule 1.0.1(n), the definition of "signed," but there is no such provision in Rule 1.0.1.	The Commission has added a definition of "signed" to proposed Rule 1.0.1(n).
40	Martinez, Martin James	M	No	1.5(e)	The Proposed Rule is cause for concern in as much as it will have detrimental effects on criminal defense attorneys. The best solution would be to continue to allow criminal retainers to be placed in the general account as a classic true non-refundable retainer. If the rules committee is still determined to eliminate the use of non-refundable retainers, then a workable compromise would be an amendment to the Proposed Rule that it is not a violation of the rules of professional responsibility to place the retained funds in the general account in criminal defense matters. This would alleviate concerns of the State Bar, of the chilling effects that a non-refundable retainer would have in the eyes of the client, thinking that they cannot change counsel. Yet, this amendment would allow criminal defense attorneys to continue to maintain an active law office. If the funds are placed in trust, it would hamper the everyday operations of the criminal law office.	The Commission notes that there is no requirement that advance fees be placed in a client trust account.
41	Meltzer, Paul	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	I join in the opposition to the Proposed Rule filed by the California Attorneys for criminal Justice (CACJ).	See response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ").
42	Moss, Richard	D	No	1.5(e)	Abolishing non-refundable retainers will fundamentally alter the practice of law in California, create unnecessary complexity and confusion, seriously undermine the attorney-client relationship, and prevent many clients from obtaining representation.	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt"

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					Considering the significance of Paragraph (e) to lawyers and their clients throughout California and the controversy surrounding the Proposal, the Commission should have publicized and/or explained these changes to ensure that a cross-section of the bar knew of their existence so that the membership could meaningfully respond or object before the Board of Governors' tentative approval. Paragraph (e) prevents fully-informed clients and their lawyers from knowingly entering into a non-refundable retainer agreement that benefits clients. It ignores the reality that since the 19th century, thousands of California lawyers have used some form of the non-refundable retainer (that falls outside of the limited exceptions to Paragraph (e)'s ban on non-refundable retainers in (e)(1) and (2)). The Proposal ignores the fact that in October of 1992, the Board of Governors concluded that a non-refundable retainer "earned when paid" was a perfectly appropriate fee arrangement. The Board approved/endorsed the continued use of "fixed fees," "flat fees," and "non-refundable retainers" to be earned when paid, with title immediately transferring to the attorney so long as the written fee agreement explicitly spelled out the arrangement with the inclusion of an express statement that such fees paid in advance of legal services are "earned when paid."	fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted to do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					Paragraph (e)(1) and Comment [8] prohibit the long-established practice of charging a minimum fee to ensure availability (true retainer) when the client will also be credited for future work done either on an hourly basis or for the amount of the true retainer. It deprives the lawyer and the client of the ability to contract in a way that is beneficial to the client (and which no client would refuse) and prevents the lawyer from receiving a true retainer earned when received if she does any legal work. Paragraph (e)(2) and Comment [5] would often require that the proposed “flat fee” to cover fees for the entire length of the case, including trial. Since this “flat fee” is required to cover contingencies (i.e. trial or an administrative evidentiary hearing) that often cannot be reasonably predicted prior to being retained, the significant portion of the flat fee that covers these contingencies is refundable, at least until the time that the contingencies occur. Paragraph (e)(2) requires the lawyer and client to inaccurately describe the actual nature of the “flat fee” by representing that the fee “is the lawyer’s property on receipt.” The critical issue is not what the fee is called but who owns the funds. Rather than protecting the client’s entitlement to a refund of the proposed “flat fee” (see Proposed Rule	However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statutes, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This leaves unclear that, under current California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer’s responsibilities and the client’s and lawyer’s reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in those provisions. Concerning the asserted lack of notice, the Commission notes that the Commission’s drafts of this proposed rule have been

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					1.5(e)(2)(v)), Paragraph 1.5(e)(2) actually will deprive the client from ever receiving a refund if these funds are the subject of any federal or state seizure, jeopardy assessments, restraining order or forfeiture, or even attachment by potential creditors. The lawyer cannot return all or part of the fee to the client because the seizing agency will be entitled to any fee refund. Paragraph (e)(2) exposes lawyers performing all types of legal services to extrinsic litigation or significant financial risk by facilitating the restraint and/or seizure of fees if any client has a potential criminal or bankruptcy problem or has a dispute with the IRS, the Franchise Tax Board, the S.E.C., or is the potential target of a civil or criminal forfeiture or restraining order, or is vulnerable to potential creditors' claims. Because Paragraph 1.5(e)(2) will substantially increase the risk of attorney fee forfeiture or civil seizure, compliance with Paragraph (e) deprives those accused of crimes of their constitutional rights to retain the lawyer of their choice and many civil clients of their ability to retain counsel. Paragraph (e)(2) permits a client to terminate representation without cause, before all of the work has been completed and after the lawyer has performed a substantial amount of work, and will result in clients filing arbitration claims, lawsuits, or Bar	issued for public comment in two separate instances and that these public comment distributions and also related public hearings were noticed on the State Bar website. Moreover, because the current draft of the proposed rule has been revised further, the Commission anticipates that the Board of Governors will authorize a further public comment period.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					complaints. The Proposal will generate increased client bar complaints, arbitration claims, and civil actions involving fee disputes, for example, when an attorney and a client cannot agree on the amount of funds that must be returned in an advance fee case even when an attorney is terminated without cause. Paragraph 1.5(e)(2)'s novel requirement that specific, detailed wording be included in flat fee contracts presents a trap for the honest lawyer who is unfamiliar with these new Rules and the complex fact patterns that will develop. It is also inconsistent with the "sanctified" State Bar fee forms that represent the "gold standard" for California lawyers. The Proposal impacts the economic viability of small law firms and the practice of large firms. If the lawyer agrees to the proposed advance "flat fee" that is earned when received and substantially underestimates the legal work, he will certainly not be terminated by the client. However, when the lawyer through skill and ability has, in a short time obtained a significant result that is not outcome-determinative in an ongoing case, the Rule encourages clients to terminate the representation without cause and obtain a refund of a substantial portion of the "flat fee" that under this Proposal would no longer be "the lawyer's property" or property to which the lawyer is entitled.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
43	Mueller, Gael G.	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	The only people who would even raise this issue are those who have never practiced criminal law. People who come to a criminal defense attorney can not afford hourly fees and most would not understand them. They would not pay the bill. More importantly, the work required on a criminal case could not be done as monies received would be in the trust account. For instance, discovery on a criminal matter is charged to a private criminal defense attorney by the District Attorney's Office. This can run into hundreds of dollars depending on the complexity of the case and must be paid "up front". The amount of discovery is unknown to the attorney until it is received. Additionally, the number of appearances, the number of phone calls, the number of hearings are all unknown quantities at the time that a client retains a criminal defense attorney. An hourly estimate is impossible and could run into hundreds of thousands of dollars for a case which now costs around 20-30 thousand. We do not bill on hourlies for a very good reason-people need us to protect their constitutional rights-not just their money. This new "rule" would shut down my business. I will not charge people on an unreasonable basis.	See response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ").

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
44	National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers (NACDL)	D	Yes	1.5(e)(2)	NACDL is concerned that the present text of Proposed Rule 1.5(e)(2) undermines the Sixth Amendment right to counsel by impairing the ability of lawyers and clients to agree that a client will pay a flat fee for legal representation by counsel in a specified matter. As drafted, the language of the Proposed Rule will substantially discourage, if not preclude, criminal defense lawyers from offering to represent clients on a flat fee basis. This is a common form of retention in criminal cases in California and throughout the country. The Proposed Rule discourages flat fees by making flat fees received by counsel vulnerable to third-party claims against clients and/or their property, forfeitures, jeopardy assessments, seizures, liens and attachments. These types of claims would be asserted against counsel because of the inchoate interest the Proposed Rule appears to give a client in fees which purportedly were the "lawyer's property on receipt." This additional potential risk and expense will cause many, if not most, criminal defense lawyers to decline to agree to represent clients on a flat fee basis. Discouraging counsel from using flat fee arrangements is a disservice to those clients who may desire such fee arrangements. Flat fee arrangements allow persons who are under investigation or accused of offenses to plan in advance and reduce the risks they face. If such persons were unable to secure	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted to do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					representation in a matter for a flat fee, they would receive the service of counsel retained on an hourly basis only as long as they could continue to compensate counsel on an hourly basis. Flat fee arrangements place the bulk of the risk upon lawyers, and enable risk-sharing between clients and defense counsel. A virtual ban on flat fees – as would result from adoption of the Proposed Rule – will shift the entire burden to clients and disproportionately burden less wealthy individuals. Proposed Rule 1.5(e)(2) is unnecessary in light of the prohibition of unconscionable fees, a uniform standard applicable to all types of fee arrangements, including contingency, hourly and flat fees. This standard is sufficient to protect clients from being charged unreasonable fees, and to safeguard clients from excessive charges where a client chooses to discharge counsel, or other unforeseen circumstances arise such as the death of a client or counsel prior to the conclusion of a matter. The language of the Proposed Rule that provides a fee is the “lawyer’s property on receipt,” but a client also “may be entitled to a refund,” under certain circumstances, is internally inconsistent and confusing. Clarity, rather than confusion, best serves clients and counsel with respect to retainer agreements.	through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns. However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statutes, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This leaves unclear that, under current California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer’s responsibilities and the client’s and lawyer’s reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					There is no counterpart to Proposed Rule 1.5(e)(2) in the ABA Model Rules and there is no national authority to provide guidance on how the provision may be interpreted by California disciplinary authorities or courts. Accordingly, it may create uncertainty and the potential for protracted and costly litigation, rather than certainty, which best serves the interests of both clients and counsel. Sub-parts (e)(2)(i), (ii) and (iv) are equally applicable to all types of retainer agreements, but placing them in a sub-part that pertains only to flat fee agreements creates the inaccurate negative inference they may not apply to hourly or contingent fee agreements. The Proposed Rule could discourage detailed descriptions of the “agreed-upon legal services” in written retainer agreements because it encourages third parties to assert an interest on a previously paid fee on the grounds that “the agreed-upon legal services have not been completed.” This would increase disputes between clients and counsel. Finally, NACDL is concerned that Proposed Rule 1.5(e) is among a large number of Proposed Rules that were provisionally adopted in a manner that may have deprived the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California of the insights of lawyers, and other members of the public, who have knowledge and experience with flat fee arrangements. NACDL	those provisions. Concerning the asserted lack of notice, the Commission notes that the Commission’s drafts of this proposed rule have been issued for public comment in two separate instances and that these public comment distributions and also related public hearings were noticed on the State Bar website. Moreover, because the current draft of the proposed rule has been revised further, the Commission anticipates that the Board of Governors will authorize a further public comment period.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services. [Sorted by Commenter]
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					understands that Proposed Rule 1.5(e) was among a number of provisions adopted by the Board without the prior public comment required by Rule 1.10 of the Rules of the State Bar of California. NACDL believes that public comment in accordance with Rule 1.10 is critical to ensure fairness and the adoptions of a sound and informed rule. Although the Board's adoption was subject to potential reconsideration following a period of public comment for all rules provisionally adopted, NACDL believes that this does not provide a sufficient opportunity for the public scrutiny that is essential for a rule that substantially impacts the Sixth Amendment right to counsel and disproportionately burdens clients of limited means.
45	Office of Chief Trial Counsel ("OCTC")	M	No	1.5(b)	1. Unconscionable Fees. OCTC still prefers the ABA's language for this rule. Further, OCTC remains opposed to any attempt to specifically define the term "unconscionability" in subsection (b) of proposed rule 1.5. The phrase "unconscionable fee" is sufficiently defined by case law and has been found not to be unconstitutionally vague. (In the Matter of Berg (Review Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 725, 732.) In our view, any attempt to specifically define what constitutes an unconscionable fee is likely to be overbroad or under inclusive. Sufficient guidance regarding the determination of whether a fee is unconscionable is provided by a list of facts set forth in subsection (c) of proposed rule 1.5.	1. The Commission believes that retaining the present "unconscionable" fee standard is appropriate for disciplinary purposes in contrast to the "reasonable" standard of the ABA Model Rules. The latter standard is more suited to a fee dispute regime. California is unique in having an extensive mandatory fee arbitration program in which claims of unreasonable fees can be resolved, leaving to the disciplinary system the more serious claims of unconscionability.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				1.5(c)	2. However, we urge the Commission to consider adding additional factors to the list set forth in subsection (c). Those additional factors are (1) whether the fee involves an element of fraud or overreaching on the attorney's part (see Herrscher v. State Bar (1935) 4 Cal.2d 399, 403; In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980, 989); (2) whether there was any failure on the attorney's part to disclose the true facts to the client (see Herrscher v. State Bar, supra , 4 Cal.2d at 403); (3) whether the client consented or authorized the legal service (see In the Matter of Connor (Review Dept. 2008) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 93, 104); (4) whether the attorney fully explained the fee agreement to the client and/or the client understood the terms of fee agreement (see In the Matter of Kroff (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838, 851; In the Matter of Van Sickle (Review Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980); and (5) whether the services are legal in nature and whether the attorney charges the client for clerical or non-legal services at the same rate as legal services. Other states have disciplined attorneys for charging the same fee for these non-legal services at the legal services rate. (See e.g. In re Green (Co. 2000) 11 P.3d 1078 [charging lawyer's rate for faxing documents, etc]; Prof'l Ethics & Conduct of Iowa State Bar v. Zimmerman (Iowa 1991) 465 N.W.2d 288 [lawyer charged full hourly rate for attending ward's birthday party and discussing toiletry needs];	2. The Commission has made a change along the lines the commenter suggests, adding the terms to the definition of "unconscionable" in paragraph (b).

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				1.5(c)	Cincinnati Bar Assn v. Alsfelder (Ohio 2004) 816 N.E.2d 218 [charging for discussions and advice about boyfriends, vehicles, and restaurants].)	3. The Commission disagrees that it is necessary to state in the blackletter, rather than in a comment, that the factors are not exclusive.
				1.5(b)	4. We believe that the proposed definition of an "unconscionable fee" as currently drafted is inconsistent with case law. The proposed definition in subparagraph (b) states in pertinent part, that a fee is unconscionable if the lawyer "has engaged in fraudulent conduct or overreaching." Proposed rule 1.0.1(d) states "fraud or fraudulent means conduct that is fraudulent under the law of the applicable jurisdiction and has a purpose to deceive." This suggests that all the elements of civil fraud must be present to constitute unconscionability. However, under the case law, it is sufficient that the negotiation, setting or charging of the fee "involves an element of fraud or overreaching, which may not require proof of all of the elements of civil fraud. (See Herrscher v. State Bar , supra , 4 Cal.2d at 403; In the Matter of Van Sickle , supra , 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. at 989.)	4. The Commission has made changes along the lines the commenter suggested.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				1.5(e)	5. True retainers, non-refundable fees, and flat fees. OCTC supports the concept proposed in subparagraph (e) regarding true retainers, non-refundable fees, and flat fees. Proposed paragraph (e) is nothing more than a reiteration of current law regarding true retainers, non-refundable fees, and flat fees. Several of the commentators opposed to subparagraph (e) appear to be under a misunderstanding of current law. It is well established that only a true retainer to secure an attorney's availability over time is non-refundable. This is because it is considered earned when paid. Advanced fees, however, no matter how the attorney characterizes them, must be refunded if not earned. A failure to do is disciplinable. (See In the Matter of Lais (Review Dept. 1998) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 907; In the Matter of Phillips (Review Dept. 2001) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 315; In the Matter of Fonte (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 752; Matthew v. State Bar (1989) 49 Cal.3d 984.) Flat fees also must be earned by performance of services. Any attempt to deal with the issue of creditor rights and government forfeiture rules as proposed by some of the other commentators is beyond the scope of the Rules of Professional Conduct.	5. No response required.
				1.5(e)	6. The one change subparagraph (e) does add to the rule is the requirement for written fee agreements. Given the unusual nature of these agreements and the need to make sure the clients are aware of and understand them, it is good public policy to require that	6. No response required.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services. [Sorted by Commenter]
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					they be in writing and places California closer to what is required in other jurisdictions.
46	Orange County Bar Association ("OCBA")	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	We are aware that a number of other persons have raised the concern that the Board of Governors adopted this proposed rule in the first instance without conforming to public comment procedures established in State Bar Rule 1.10. The OCBA believes that the State Bar should be concerned with the potential implications if the rule is adopted without complying with its. own procedural rules. Substantively, the OCBA is opposed to the present formulation of Rule 1.5, and especially the provisions of paragraph (e)(2) and the comments related to that section. There already is an existing statutory scheme for written fee agreements in B&P Code sections 6146 through 6148. Several of the terms i n proposed paragraph (e)(2) are already contained in these statutory requirements. If there is concern that flat fee arrangements contain peculiar risks for clients, those should be addressed within the existing statutory framework. Lawyers are not subject to discipline for failing to comply with B&P Code sections 6147 and 6148. It would be inappropriate to impose disciplinary consequences only upon those lawyers who charge flat fees, and not those who enter into other fee arrangements.	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					Paragraph (e)(2) mandates five contract terms that "shall" be set forth in the flat fee agreement. The 'OCBA believes that requiring inclusion of all of these provisions actually will lead to greater uncertainty and confusion. For instance, it is internally inconsistent to state that the flat fee is the lawyer's property immediately upon receipt, while at the same time mandating that the fee is refundable. Lawyers may believe and claim the fee has been fully earned because the rule declares it is their property. It should not be an ethical requirement that the lawyer state in writing that a fee which is the lawyer's property might have to be given back. This will create ambiguity, resulting in more disputes over whether or not the fee is refundable. It would be very simple to state expressly in the rule that flat fees for specified legal services contractually agreed to between attorney and client need not be placed in the client trust account, without also stating that the flat fee is the attorney's property. That solves the issue of whether or not the fees may be placed in the general account. Whether or not such fees are refundable to a client when the representation ends should depend upon the parties' agreement, as well as whether the lawyer has substantially completed the tasks for which he or she was retained. Substantial completion of the task is difficult to define. There are many factors including the	The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns. However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statutes, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This leaves unclear that, under current California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer's responsibilities and the client's and lawyer's

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					possibility that an early settlement or resolution is one way to complete a task, even if the consequence is to avoid- trial or other proceedings that might have been contemplated. The question of whether or not the client would be entitled to a partial refund should be left to the parties' .agreement, subject only to the traditional, well-defined rules that prohibit unconscionable fees (Rule 1.15(a)), and mandate the return of an unearned fee (Rule 1.16). A lawyer should not be subject to discipline for retaining a flat fee unless that lawyer violates those rules. The question of whether the flat fee lawyer has earned the fee may be resolved just like all other fee disputes. It should not be a separate basis for lawyer discipline unless the overall fee arrangement or the fee charged was unconscionable, or was not appropriately earned by the performance of a proper degree of services. By seeking to resolve the widespread concern over "nonrefundable" fees, the proposed language is simply overbroad. There is also a risk that the disclosures mandated by paragraph (e)(2) could discourage early resolution of matters by providing incentives for flat fee lawyers to delay resolution of matters so as not to be accused of receiving an excessive fee. This could be an unintended consequence of the rule, contrary to public policy favoring early resolution of disputes. Just because a lawyer has been able to negotiate a	reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in those provisions.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comment [9]	favorable early resolution does not mean that the fee is unearned. Better guidance is needed in the comments if the intent is to provide a means of determining when a fee has or has not been earned. In Comment [9], there is a typographical mistake which erroneously refers to paragraph (f)(2), a provision that does not exist. We believe that is intended to refer to paragraph (e)(2). With regard to the substance of Comment [9], the lawyer's failure to include the required contract language would essentially convert the payment received from a flat fee to an advance fee deposit-- a refundable deposit against which a reasonable fee should be charged. Yet, because the parties were contracting for a flat fee, they did not set a rate or method of calculating a different fee. Thus, this provision will necessitate a quantum meruit determination in every instance where the paragraph (e)(2) language is missing, leading to more fee disputes. In summary, the OCBA is strongly opposed to the provisions of paragraph (e)(2) as presently drafted, and would discourage the Commission from imposing special contractual terms that are appropriately left to the parties or better governed by existing statutory provisions.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
47	Osterhoudt, William	D	No	1.5(e)	Non-refundable fees are a justifiable arrangement to accommodate appropriate needs of attorneys and clients in a wide variety of settings and have been long recognized by the State Bar and widely utilized without any demonstrated pattern of abuse or misconduct. Inadequate notice to and input from bar members who opposed 2008 version of rule. With recognized and effective protections in place, there is no reason to adopt a new rule absent supporting evidence that clients need protection from pattern of misconduct. Proposed change is unwarranted interference with freedom of clients and lawyers to make informed decisions re terms of representation. Provision that "true retainer" be "in addition to and apart from any compensation for legal services performed" is highly problematic because it would prohibit lawyers and clients from agreeing that a retainer to secure the lawyer's availability may also be used, in whole or part, to compensate the lawyer for work actually performed. If any part of a "nonrefundable" fee may be refundable, then the entire fee cannot be the lawyer's property. Lawyers pay income taxes on nonrefundable fees and under 1.5(e)(2)(v) they may have to do so even though the fee may be refundable.	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted to do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					Ample protections already exist to discourage unscrupulous lawyers who seek to retain substantial fees after doing little or no work, or after being discharged. Will invite needless disputes and litigation about circumstances under which a “nonrefundable” fee must be refunded in part. Comment [5] problematic and does not provide guidance. In practice, it is often impossible for attorney to know what services “probably will be required” at the outset of the representation and will not know, much less be in a position to “adequately explain” the services that will “probably” be required. Proposed rule would require lawyer to anticipate all stages and to embrace them within the agreement which could lead to Bar complaints and litigation. The meaning of “foreseeable that more extensive services probably will be required” and “adequately explained to the client” in Comment [5] will lead to administrative complaints and civil litigation. Urge that proposal be rejected or at a minimum, that it be withdrawn pending a full opportunity for member of the bar and various affected Bar Associations to comment.	through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns. However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statutes, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This leaves unclear that, under current California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer’s responsibilities and the client’s and lawyer’s reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in those provisions. Concerning the asserted lack of notice, the Commission notes that the Commission's drafts of this proposed rule have been issued for public comment in two separate instances and that these public comment distributions and also related public hearings were noticed on the State Bar website. Moreover, because the current draft of the proposed rule has been revised further, the Commission anticipates that the Board of Governors will authorize a further public comment period.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services. [Sorted by Commenter]
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
48	Pancer, Michael	D	No		I believe that the "flat fee" can play an important role in maximizing the availability of legal services, especially to those who can least afford it. Many clients prefer to have a "flat fee" arrangement. Unless a client is extremely wealthy, a client is concerned about the cost of legal services and often does not want to enter into an agreement where the amount is indefinite. And while there may be attorneys who would take advantage of the "flat fee" opportunity, certainly there now exists sufficient safeguards to prevent "unconscionable" fees. But if "flat fee" contracts are not going to be enforced and therefore not entered, many potential clients will find themselves unable to avail themselves of legal services that they	See response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ").

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services. [Sorted by Commenter]
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response request and require.
49	Paulsen, Bradley T.	NI	No		The commenter has submitted a lengthy letter with attachments complaining about the conduct of certain plaintiffs' lawyers in the construction industry are violating the law and certain Rules of Professional Conduct in soliciting client homeowners. The commenter specifically refers to certain Rules of Professional Conduct, including proposed Rule 1.5(a) and (b), and asserts that the subject lawyers are in violation of these provisions. The commenter, however, does not suggest any revisions to the identified paragraphs of the Rule, instead noting that "random review and/or inspections are needed from the State Bar on attorney actions and processes used in lawsuits and SB 800 claims."	The Commission has considered the commenter's submission and determined that his concerns lie not with the substance of the Rules, but rather with their enforcement, which is beyond the purview of the Commission's charge.
50	Perlis, Michael F.	D	No	1.5(e)	The Rule proposing the abolition of non-refundable retainers would only serve to further deprive the people of the ability to secure legal representation and/or compel attorneys who are already involved on behalf of those individuals to become involuntary pro bono advocates. Neither alternative is an appropriate avenue. In practice, the non-refundable retainer as it currently operates does not do a disservice to the client. Attorney overreaching is readily remedied and most attorneys would clearly be prepared to return unused portions of retainers where it would be inappropriate to retain them.	See response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ").

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					Proposed Rule 1.5(e)(2) does not solve the problem. It requires attorneys and clients to make binding estimates of what may be complex legal proceedings, leaves open the possibility that government agencies could require termination of counsel and return of unused retainers, and could potentially lead to attorney/client conflict relative to an evaluation of what portion of a retainer need be returned relative to non-completed legal services.
51	Pyle, Walter K.	D	No	1.5(e)	Flat Fees. Traditionally, criminal cases are handled on a flat fee basis (although in recent years I have seen variants or hybrids that involve flat fees). The proposed rule says that a flat fee is the lawyer's property on receipt, but then in the last subpart says the agreement must say "that the client may be entitled to a refund of a portion of the fees if the agreed-upon legal services have not been completed." First, I think this is ambiguous. For example, if I agree with a client to represent him for $15,000 through preliminary examination, with an additional fee to be charged if an information is filed in superior court (a common flat fee arrangement), but.-I talk to the district attorney a week after the arraignment and I settle the case on very favorable terms, have I not "completed the' agreed-upon services, because there was no preliminary examination? What if I have to withdraw from the case because the client has told me he	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted do so, provided the lawyer

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					intends to commit perjury? What if the client fires me for no good reason? In my opinion I have fulfilled the contract in the first instance, and the client has breached the agreement in the second. The third situation is not a "breach," because the client always has the right to terminate the services of the lawyer, but in none of these cases should the client be entitled to a refund. Second, I have to pay income taxes on that full $15,000. I only get a deduction if I refund part of the money. Third, requiring a refund of a fee that has already been fully earned actually means that the fee has not really been earned after all, or means that the fee is not really the lawyer's property, doesn't it? The only time that I can think of where the client is entitled to a refund of a flat fee is if the lawyer breaches the contract. Finally, a a flat fee is not related to the number of hours the lawyer puts in. What you look at is what the lawyer obligated herself to do. If she puts in far more hours than she believed she would when she quoted the fee (which happens fairly often), she does not get to charge an additional fee. By the same token, if she puts in far less hours than she believed she would (which happens far less often), the client should not get a refund. And with a flat fee contract, the client (and the lawyer) know exactly what the fee will be.	includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns. However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statutes, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This leaves unclear that, under current

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					True Retainers. I have always treated a true retainer (usually in an hourly fee case) the way the rule does-it makes me available, period. Other lawyers believe that they should be able to apply hourly credits against such a retainer. I think the other lawyers have the better argument, and that my method results in the client paying too much. One of the most important concerns of a lawyer is whether he will get paid. In a complex case I might want to ensure I receive $150,000, so I'm going to ask for that up front. I don't mind working for my fees, but I want to make sure I get paid. But under the rule, I would have to charge $150,000 to be available, and then charge a further fee on top of that as I work on the case. If client could not pay the additional fee, a lawyer would have a right to withdraw from the case. I think it is more equitable to allow hourly credits to that $150,000 (or a part of it), and I think the rule should allow that. It is common practice for my expert witnesses to charge a non-refundable "minimum fee" like that (and give hourly credits), and I think lawyers should be able to, too. I see no way, in actual practice, that the rule's true retainer provision "protects" the client any more than a non-refundable minimum fee. Clients are already protected by the unconscionable fee limitation in the first part of the rule. Finally, while it does not happen often, criminal lawyers are concerned that they will take on a complex	California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer's responsibilities and the client's and lawyer's reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in those provisions.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					case but the government will seek to seize the fee as the property of the client. A non-refundable retainer (with hourly credits), which becomes the property of the lawyer upon receipt, would prevent this.
52	Ragen, Frank J.	D	No	1.5(e)	I oppose the Proposed New Rule of Professional Conduct, Rule 1.5(e) (4-200), Abolishing Non-refundable retainers. A modification of the Proposed Rules of Professional Conduct which prohibits non-refundable retainers for legal service will do a disservice to the public, and create unnecessary litigation. Many times in my thirty-eight years of practice I have offered clients the option of a non-refundable retainer/flat fee for legal services or hourly billing. Many times the clients have selected the non-refundable retainer. The reason often voiced for choosing this option is that the amount of attorney fees is capped by the amount of the non-refundable retainer. When an hourly billing is selected there is no limit on what the attorney's fees might be. Attached hereto is an analysis of the Proposed Rule. I agree with the analysis and I incorporate it by reference. In my years of practice I have never had a problem with a client when a client chose a non-refundable retainer as an option.	See response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ").
53	Rojas, Edward R.	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	For all the reasons Mr. Tarlow stated.	See response to Barry Tarlow.
54	San Diego County Bar Association	D	Yes		CA should adopt ABA Model Rule 1.5(a) with the addition of the factors in rule 4-200 to determine reasonableness.	The Commission believes that retaining the present "unconscionable" fee standard is appropriate for disciplinary purposes in contrast to the “reasonable” standard of the ABA Model Rules. The latter standard is more suited to a fee dispute regime. California is unique in having an extensive mandatory fee arbitration program in which claims of unreasonable fees can be resolved, leaving to the disciplinary system the more serious claims of unconscionability.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services. [Sorted by Commenter]
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
55	Schweitzer, Eric H.	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	Proposed Rule 1.5 would prevent thousands of Californians from obtaining meaningful access to the criminal courts. The scarcity of public defender resources, particularly in misdemeanor matters is becoming worse and worse from coast to coast. Those private practitioners who provide a realistic alternative to going to court and pleading guilty (usually at arraignment) with the public defender must rely on non-refundable retainers in order to remain viable economic enterprises. The non-refundable retainer benefits both the public and the legal profession because fewer and fewer Californians can afford the cost of a jury trial and because most cases that would plead guilty at arraignment (with the public defender) are likely to be settled far more beneficially for the client or dismissed before trial due to the work of a flat fee compensated private counsel. Proposed Paragraph (e)(1) would have disastrous consequences on the adversary system, because most persons who could afford the relatively modest fees for legal assistance from one stage of the proceedings to the	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning “nonrefundable” and “earned on receipt” fees. Notwithstanding the commenter’s stated position and practice, with the exception of a “true retainer” as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as “nonrefundable,” “earned on receipt,” etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted to do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					next, could in no way afford a retainer based upon availability for a trial that would, in all likelihood, never occur. Clients need certainty about the cost of a case that they simply want to have settled without the need for protracted litigation or risk. Lawyers often settle the most egregious cases to the client's benefit solely through reputation, skill and ability that would otherwise be unavailable due to the uncertainty of costs. If changed as intended, Rule 1.5 would cause a division between the lawyer's best interests and those of his or her clients. Lawyers would be logically viewed as prolonging cases just to justify a fee, rather than for any legitimate purpose, and in most instances, those criticisms would be rightly based. Please protect the integrity of the adversary system of criminal justice by allowing Californians to choose to engage qualified legal counsel of their choice, when faced with criminal prosecution.	explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests.
56	Sevilla, Charles	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	Subpart (2) adds uncertainty to the Rules. While the Rule states that the fee is the property of the attorney on receipt, this is contradicted by the addition of the clause stating the client, upon termination of the relationship, can demand a refund. A fee cannot be both an attorney's property if it is also subject to a client right of refund. This makes the fee status uncertain and has direct implications in matters of creditor rights and government forfeiture claims. The client's interest in fee contracts are already protected in a number of areas: (1) B&P Code section	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					6148; (2) CRPC Rule 3-300; Hawk v. State Bar, In re Corona; (3) CRPC Rule 3-700(D)(2); and (4) CRPC 4-200, Bushman v. State Bar. Many criminal defense lawyers are sole practitioners who regularly charge flat fees for routine criminal matters. This Rule unnecessarily puts in place a condition that essentially makes the fee fixed (or "flat") only at client sufferance. If the work for the attorney is substantial, the client will be content with a fixed fee. But if the attorney seems to be on the way to a speedy result that will end the case on a favorable note for the client, the client can pull out of the "flat fee" contract, fire the attorney, and demand a substantial refund. There is no such thing as a "flat" fee when one party to the contract can void it at will.	fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests.
57	Sheahen, Robert	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	Nonrefundable retainer fees benefit both attorney and client. We are not talking about gigantic or unconscionable fees. But a reasonable nonrefundable retainer fee is of the essence in the practice of criminal law. Suppose, for example, Attorney A charges a refundable $10,000 fee against $350 an hour. Attorney A then proceeds to spend 30 hours on the case doing, say, "research." The fee is exhausted and the client has received nothing -- except a request for an additional fee.	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					Attorney B, however, knows his way around. He charges a nonrefundable fee of $10,000 --- or a minimum fee of $10,000 – and puts in only ten hours on the case -- and gets a dismissal for the client. Should this attorney -- having achieved a great result for the client -- be forced to return most of the fee? In the situation of Attorney B, the new Rule would encourage attorneys simply to waste their time to build up "hours" to justify the larger fee. The proposed new Rule is not workable. I urge the Bar to reject it and to create a new Rule guided by "the eye of experience."	state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests.
58	Spital, Samuel	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	My concerns about proposed Rule 1.5(e)(2) include the following: 1. It is unnecessary in light of California's long-standing prohibition on charging unconscionable fees, a standard which is sufficient to safeguard clients from lawyers' who over-charge, and which provides a uniform yardstick regardless of the type of billing arrangement (hourly, contingency or flat); 2. It will cause litigation in the context of an injunction, jeopardy assessment or forfeiture because the language providing that "the client may be entitled to a refund of a portion, of the fee" appears to give clients a residual interest in a fee that purportedly was	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					"the . lawyer's property immediately on receipt." This will lead to a proliferation of litigation in bankruptcy, tax, collections, criminal, family law, and other matters in which both flat fees arrangements, and injunctions, assessments and/or forfeitures, are commonplace; 3. It may incentivize lawyers to prolong matters rather than resolve them as soon as possible (already a common complaint regarding hourly billing by some lawyers), to avoid disputes with clients seeking a refund because "the agreed-upon legal services have not been completed"; 4. It may incentivize lawyers to minimize in retainer agreements the extent of the work for which a flat fee is being paid, in order to avoid disputes with clients seeking a refund because "the agreed-upon legal services have not been completed." Greater clarity and detail in retainer agreements, not less, should be encouraged, not discouraged; 5. It has no counterpart in the ABA Model Rules. Thus, it does not advance the goal of national uniformity, which was among the goals of revising California's existing rules of professional conduct. There also is no judicial or other authority, or national experience, to inform us of the consequences of adopting the novel rule; and 6. It was submitted to the State Bar Board of	comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns. However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statues, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services. [Sorted by Commenter]
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					Governors for preliminary approval without the prior public comment that is mandated by State Bar Rule 1.10, and thus suffers from a lack of input by the array of practitioners who would be impacted by the rule. Because of the preceding issues, if the proposed new rule were adopted in its existing format, many lawyers would decline to represent clients on a flat fee basis. Ultimately this would be a substantial disservice to clients because many require the certainty that a flat-fee arrangement provides, and cannot afford the potentially limitless costs of retaining counsel on an hourly basis.	lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This leaves unclear that, under current California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer's responsibilities and the client's and lawyer's reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in those provisions. Concerning the asserted lack of notice, the Commission notes that the Commission's drafts of this proposed rule have been issued for public comment in two separate instances and that these public comment distributions and also related public hearings were noticed on the State Bar website. Moreover, because the current draft of the proposed rule has been revised further, the Commission anticipates that the Board of Governors will authorize a further public comment period.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services. [Sorted by Commenter]
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
59	Tarlow, Barry	D	No	1.5(e)	Rule 1.5(e), essentially prohibiting non-refundable retainers for almost all legal services, will drastically impact the economics of practicing law in California as well as the ability of people in need of representation to obtain legal services. Considering the significance of the 2009 revisions to Rule 1.5(e)(1)-(2) I am especially concerned that in apparent violation of State Bar Rule 1.10(A) this novel version of Rule 1.5(e)(1)-(2) prepared by the Commission for the Revision of the Rules of Professional Conduct was neither publicized nor disseminated, in any manner prior to its November 2009 approval by the Board of Governors. Therefore, the membership of the Bar was unaware of this new Rule or that it would be considered at the November 14, 2009 Board of Governors meeting and were unable to meaningfully respond or object and be heard at the RAC and Board of Governors' November meetings. The Commission has not published any comprehensive or detailed factual and legal analysis for enacting these extensive changes or demonstrated that a need exists to do so. Rule 1.5(e)(1)-(2) also clearly violates the "Commission Charter." The Commission has asserted that a principle reason for this Rule "is client protection." However, since 1991, I have asked the proponents of attempts to abolish non-refundable retainers for evidence supporting the claim	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning "nonrefundable" and "earned on receipt" fees. Notwithstanding the commenter's stated position and practice, with the exception of a "true retainer" as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as "nonrefundable," "earned on receipt," etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response that in California there is a pattern of unethical lawyers cheating clients by using non-refundable retainers. None has been forthcoming. It is also significant that this prohibition appears nowhere in the ABA Model Rules. Since the 19th Century non-refundable retainers have been used in California and are currently permitted in many states. In fact, in 1992 the Board of Governors of the California Bar endorsed the continued use of “fixed fees,” “flat fees,” and “non-refundable retainers” so long as the written fee agreement explicitly spelled out the arrangement and that the fee was “earned when paid.” Their decision was widely publicized. As far as I can determine, the Commission has never provided written analysis of this persuasive authority, advised the current Board of Governors of its existence and certainly has not demonstrated why it should be ignored by those who now sit on the Board of Governors. Prohibiting nonrefundable retainers, see 1.5(e)(2), will make these fee payments the property of the client until the work is performed. This is so regardless of the inaccurate representation set out in Rule 1.5(e)(2) requiring a written agreement by the lawyer and client asserting that the “flat fee is the lawyer’s property on receipt.” The critical issue in fee forfeiture and restraining order situations is not what the fee is called but who owns the funds.	through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns. However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statutes, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This leaves unclear that, under current California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer’s responsibilities and the client’s and lawyer’s reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					Abolishing the nonrefundable retainer, that for years has protected clients and lawyers from fee restraints, fee forfeiture and jeopardy assessments, will expose lawyers performing many types of legal work to great financial risk. It will facilitate the restraint or seizure of fees if the client has a potential problem involving, for example, securities law, bankruptcy, criminal law, tax law and even some creditors' claims. Why enact this novel and untested fee arrangement that will result in years of collateral litigation, when for more than 40 years the nonrefundable retainer has proved to be the best available fee agreement to protect the client and lawyer from fee restraint and/or fee forfeiture? The proposed Rule changes and Comments are also confusing and internally inconsistent. Rule 1.5(e)(2)'s novel requirement that specific, detailed wording be included in flat fee agreements presents a trap for the honest lawyer who is unfamiliar with these new Rules and the complex fact patterns that will develop. It will also certainly cause clients to fire their lawyers without cause and demand a refund of fees that until now have been considered and were in fact earned when received. The result will be the filing of arbitration demands, State Bar complaints, and civil suits. Of course, if a lawyer has seriously underestimated the work involved in a complicated "flat fee" case, which often occurs, ordinarily he will never be discharged without cause.	those provisions. Concerning the asserted lack of notice, the Commission notes that the Commission's drafts of this proposed rule have been issued for public comment in two separate instances and that these public comment distributions and also related public hearings were noticed on the State Bar website. Moreover, because the current draft of the proposed rule has been revised further, the Commission anticipates that the Board of Governors will authorize a further public comment period.

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
66	Thompson, Daryl B.	D	No	1.5(e)	Non-refundable retainer agreements have been accepted as a proper fee arrangement for many years. In October of 1992, the State Bar Board of Governors concluded that a non-refundable retainer (one that is “earned when paid”) was an appropriate fee arrangement. In fact, the Board of Governors endorsed the continued use of “fixed fees,” “flat fees,” and “non-refundable retainers” as long as the written fee agreement expressly described the arrangement and included the language that the fees paid in advance of legal services are “earned when paid.” As with all fees and fee arrangements, non-refundable fee arrangements are subject to well-established	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state current California law concerning “nonrefundable” and “earned on receipt” fees. Notwithstanding the commenter’s stated position and practice, with the exception of a “true retainer” as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as “nonrefundable,” “earned on receipt,” etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted to do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					professional rules that prohibit charging an unconscionable fee and/or keeping an unearned fee. These rules include (1) the rule against charging excessive fees (Rule 1.5(a)); and (2) the longstanding rule requiring lawyers to refund unearned fee upon withdrawal from representation (Rule 1.16)). These existing rules control unscrupulous lawyers as it stands. Paragraph 1.5(e)(2)'s new requirement that specific, detailed wording be included in flat fee contracts presents a trap for the honest lawyer who is not familiar with these new rules and the complex fact patterns that potentially will develop. It is also inconsistent with the "sanctified" State Bar fee forms that have been distributed by the Bar for approximately the past 20 years and represent the "gold standard" for California lawyers.	provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This leaves unclear that, under current California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer's responsibilities and the client's and lawyer's reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in those provisions.
60	Thomson, James S.	D	No	1.5(e)	Non-refundable retainer agreements have been accepted as a proper fee arrangement for many years. In October of 1992, the State Bar Board of Governors	The Commission believes that proposed paragraphs (e) and (f), as clarified by Comments [6A] and [6B], accurately state

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					concluded that a non-refundable retainer (one that is “earned when paid”) was an appropriate fee arrangement. In fact, the Board of Governors endorsed the continued use of “fixed fees,” and “non-refundable retainers” as long as the written fee agreement expressly described the arrangement and included the language that the fees paid in advance of legal services are “earned when paid.” As with all fees and fee arrangements, non-refundable fee arrangements are subject to well established professional rules that prohibit charging an unconscionable fee and/or keeping an unearned fee. These rules include (1) the rule against charging excessive fees (Rule 1.5(a)); and (2) the longstanding rule requiring lawyers to refund unearned fee upon withdrawal from representation (Rule 1.16)). These existing rules control unscrupulous lawyers as it stands. Paragraph 1.5(e)(2)’s new requirement that specific, detailed wording be included in flat fee contracts presents a trap for the honest lawyer who is not familiar with these new rules and the complex fact patterns that potentially will develop. It is also inconsistent with the “sanctified” State Bar fee forms that have been distributed by the Bar for approximately the past 20 years and represent the “gold standard” for California lawyers.	current California law concerning “nonrefundable” and “earned on receipt” fees. Notwithstanding the commenter’s stated position and practice, with the exception of a “true retainer” as described in paragraph (f)(1), there is a substantial amount of settled case law that a fee is not earned until the lawyer has provided the agreed services, and that any unearned fees must be returned to the client. To state otherwise would be misleading. Nevertheless, unlike previous public comment drafts, paragraphs (e) and (f) do not prohibit outright the characterization of a fee agreement as “nonrefundable,” “earned on receipt,” etc. Rather, the lawyer is permitted to do so, provided the lawyer includes a written disclosure to the client explaining that the client may discharge the lawyer at any time and that the client may or may not be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fees charged. The Commission regards this approach as careful balancing of competing client interests. The Commission has considered the risk to lawyers and clients that a fee will be seized through actions taken against a client or the lawyer by law enforcement or regulatory authorities, by a bankruptcy court or

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					Flat fees, earned when paid, often work to the benefit of the client especially in criminal matters when clients typically have less money available to hire a lawyer. Certainty about the cost of the case gives the client comfort and confidence that they have the lawyer they want and can afford and are not required to make decisions to avoid additional fees. Often lawyers quote flat fees that are far less than what the cost would be if charged at an hourly rate.	trustee, or by a creditor, and appreciates that these are important concerns. However, it is outside the authority of this Commission to resolve these potential problems as they arise from applicable Federal or State statutes, regulations, or appellate opinions and are not a function of the Rules of Professional Conduct. Further, the Commission does not agree that the current rules adequately protect clients (or provide adequate notice to lawyers of their legal obligations). Current rule 3-700(D)(2), which is carried into proposed Rule 1.16(e)(2), only says that a lawyer must refund unearned fees. This leaves unclear that, under current California law, there is no payment for legal services that can be made nonrefundable by agreement between lawyer and client to the extent that the lawyer has not actually performed the services for which payment was made. Paragraphs (e) and (f) and Comments [6A] and [6B] clarify the lawyer's responsibilities and the client's and lawyer's reasonable expectations when entering into the kinds of agreements addressed in those provisions.
62	Van Elgort, Howard M.	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	I have been a member of the State Bar of California since 1/9/62, and have been in private practice for	See response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ").

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					most of this time. I also served as a Judge for 6 years in San Bernardino County. I only handle criminal cases. Eliminating non-refundable and flat fee retainer agreements will only raise fees to clients resulting in heavier caseloads for public defender offices. I know, that if I where to charge for my time on an hourly basis, my fees would far exceed that of my non-refundable retainer fee and flat fee agreements for other services. Most of my clients would not be able to hire private counsel. These proposed changes are a step backwards in the Bar's effort to expand the availability of legal services.
63	Webster, James W.	D	No	1.5(e)(2)	I have been practicing since 1977 and my practice is devoted probably 85% to criminal defense. If this rule passes my ultimate fees to my clients will need to go way up. I completely agree with the comments in the letter to you dated May 25, 2010, from Ann C. Moorman, President CACJ Board of Governors	See response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ").
64	Worthington, Thomas	D	No	1.5(e)	Our office opposes the proposed new rule of professional conduct which would, for all practical purposes, abolish non-refundable retainers. The most important reason that a "true retainer" should be allowed in criminal cases is that, often, the reputation of the law firm is critical to the outcome of the case. A demonstration of cooperation can lead to the filing of lesser charges and an opportunity for the client to make bail. Sometimes the best advice can	See response to California Attorneys for Criminal Justice ("CACJ").

Rule 1.5 Fees for Legal Services. [Sorted by Commenter]
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					give the client is an early admission of guilt, which is given great weight by the courts in deciding on the ultimate disposition. The more effective our negotiations with the District Attorney at the early stage of the proceeding, the more likely it is that a good result will be accomplished without the expenditure of the kind of time that would be involved if the case is left to languish in the congested criminal justice system. For a small practice to be financially viable, we must balance our caseload. Some cases resolve quickly, partly because of our excellent reputation. Others take forever no matter what we try to do. It is the cases that resolve quickly that give our firm the financial ability to represent clients who cannot manage the fees and costs involved when their cases drag on forever.

Rule 1.5: Fees

STATE VARIATIONS

(The following is an excerpt from Regulation of Lawyers: Statutes and Standards (2010 Ed.)
by Steven Gillers, Roy D. Simon and Andrew M. Perlman.)

Alaska: In the rules effective April 15, 2009, Rule 1.5(b) requires all fee agreements to be in writing when the fee will exceed $1,000. Moreover, Rule 1.5(f) instructs lawyers that they “should seek to avoid controversies over fees with clients and should attempt to resolve amicably any differences on the subject.”

Arizona: Rule 1.5(b) requires lawyers to enter written fee agreements “before or within a reasonable time after commencing the representation.” Arizona adds Rule 1.5(d)(3), which provides that when a lawyer denominates a fee as “earned upon receipt” or “nonrefundable,” the client must be informed “in writing that the client may nevertheless discharge the lawyer at any time and in that event may be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fee based upon the value of the representation pursuant to paragraph (a).” Finally, Comment 6 says that Rule 1.5(d) allows a contingent fee “for legal representation in connection with the recovery of post-judgment balances due under support, alimony or other financial orders because such contracts do not implicate the same policy concerns” as other domestic relations matters.

Arkansas: Rule 1.5(d)(1) adds that in a domestic relations matter, “after a final order or decree is entered a lawyer may enter into a contingent fee contract for collection of payments which are due pursuant to such decree or order.”

California: Rule 4-200 forbids lawyers to “enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or unconscionable fee.” Unconscionability is determined based on facts “existing at the time the agreement is entered into except where the parties contemplate that the fee will be affected by later events.” The rule contains 11 factors to weigh in determining conscionability, many of them derived from the Model Rules. In addition, see Business & Professions Code §§ 6147-6149 (governing contingency fee contracts and other fee arrangements), and Business & Professions Code §§ 6200-6206 (establishing a system and procedures for arbitrating fee disputes).

Colorado: Rule 1.5(b) requires a lawyer who has not regularly represented a client to communicate the basis or rate of the fee and expenses “in writing.” Rule 1.5(b) also provides: “Except as provided in a written fee agreement, any material changes to the basis or rate of the fee or expenses are subject to the provisions of Rule 1.8(a),” which imposes stringent requirements on business transactions with clients. Colorado Rule 1.5(c) also requires more elaborate disclosures in contingency fee cases than ABA Model Rule 1.5.

Delaware: Rule 1.5(e) does not require that the client know how lawyers in different firms are dividing a fee. Delaware adds Rule 1.5(f), which allows the lawyer to require the client to pay fees in advance, provided that the lawyer gives the client “a written statement” explaining, among other things, that “the fee is refundable if not earned.”

District of Columbia: D.C. Rule 1.5(b) requires a written fee agreement where the lawyer has not “regularly represented” the client. Rule 1.5(d) forbids contingent fees in criminal cases but not in matrimonial cases. Rule 1.5(e) does not require that the client be told how much each lawyer is to receive when fees are divided between lawyers not in the same firm, but the client must be told “the effect of the association of lawyers outside the firm on the fee to be charged.”

Florida: Rule 4-1.5(a) prohibits any fee “generated by employment that was obtained through advertising or solicitation not in compliance with the Rules Regulating The Florida Bar” or that is “clearly excessive.” A clearly excessive fee includes (1) a fee that exceeds a reasonable fee by so much that it constitutes “clear overreaching or an unconscionable demand,” or (2) a fee sought or secured “by means of intentional misrepresentation or fraud upon the client, a nonclient party, or any court, as to either entitlement to, or amount of, the fee.” Florida also caps the percentage amount of any contingent fee.

Regarding fee sharing between lawyers in different firms, Rule 4-1.5(f)(2) requires that each participating lawyer “shall sign the contract with the client and shall agree to assume joint legal responsibility to the client for the performance of the services in question as if each were partners of the other lawyer or law firm involved.” Florida also tightly controls the terms on which lawyers in different firms may share fees. Rule 4-1.5(f)(4)(D) provides that “the lawyer assuming primary responsibility for the legal services” must receive “a minimum of 75% of the total fee,” and “the lawyer assuming secondary responsibility” can receive “a maximum of 25% of the total fee. Any fee in excess of 25% shall be presumed to be clearly excessive.” But if two or more lawyers expect to “accept substantially equal active participation in the providing of legal services,” then they may seek court authorization to divide the fee however they propose “based upon a sworn petition signed by all counsel that shall disclose in detail those services to be performed.”

Florida Rule 4-1.5(g) provides that if lawyers in different firms share fees on a basis not in proportion to the amount of work done, then each lawyer must not only agree to assume “joint legal responsibility for the representation” but must also agree “to be available for consultation with the client.

The Florida Supreme Court may also order any lawyer found guilty of violating the fee rules “to forfeit the fee or any part thereof,” either by returning the excessive part of any fee to the client or by forfeiting all or part of an otherwise improper fee to the Florida Bar Clients’ Security Fund. See Florida Supreme Court Rule 3-5.1(h).

Finally, Rule 4-1.5(i) provides that, if a retainer agreement includes a mandatory arbitration clause, the agreement must include a verbatim, bolded recitation of the notice that appears at the end of Rule 1.5(i).

Georgia adds to Rule 1.5(c) that a lawyer must include in the written statement at the conclusion of a contingent fee matter the amount of the attorney’s fee and “(D) if the attorney’s fee is divided with another lawyer who is not a partner in or an associate of the lawyer’s firm or law office, the amount of fee received by each and the manner in which the division is determined.” Georgia also adds to Rule 1.5(e)(2) that the client must be “advised of the share that each lawyer is to receive” when lawyers in different firms share a fee.

Illinois: In the rules effective January 1, 2010, Rule 1.5(e)(1) provides that a division of a fee with a lawyer in a different firm is permissible if it “is in proportion to the services performed by each lawyer, or if the primary service performed by one lawyer is the referral of the client to another lawyer and each lawyer assumes joint financial responsibility for the representation.”

Maine: In the rules effective August 1, 2009, Maine includes two additional considerations in Rule 1.5(a): whether the client gave informed consent to the fee agreement and whether the fee agreement was in writing. In Rule 1.5(d)(3), Maine prohibits a lawyer from charging a fee based on “a percentage of the value of the estate” for administering an estate in probate.

Massachusetts: Rule 1.5(c) does not require a contingent fee to be in writing if it concerns “the collection of commercial accounts” or “insurance company subrogation claims,” but all other contingent fee agreements must be in writing and must contain greater detail than ABA Model Rule 1.5(c) requires. Rule 1.5(e) permits a lawyer to pay a fee to a referring lawyer even when the referring lawyer does not perform any services or take joint responsibility for the matter. Although the client must consent to such a referral fee, the client’s consent need not be in writing, and a comment indicates that the lawyer does not have to disclose the size of the referral fee unless the client asks.

Michigan: Rule 1.5(d) forbids contingent fees in “a domestic relations matter” without qualification. In personal injury and wrongful death claims, Michigan Court Rule 8.121 sets a maximum contingent fee of “one-third of the amount recovered” and provides that receiving, retaining, or sharing a larger contingent fee “shall be deemed to be the charging of a ‘clearly excessive fee’ in violation of” Rule 1.5(a). Michigan omits ABA Model Rule 1.5(e)(1).

New Hampshire: Rule 1.5(e) permits fee sharing between lawyers in different firms if the division is made “either: (a) in reasonable proportion to the services performed or responsibility or risks assumed by each, or (b) based on an agreement with the referring lawyer,” provided that in either case the lawyers obtain the client’s signed written agreement to the division of fees and the total fee charged by all lawyers “is not increased by the division of fees and is reasonable.”

New Jersey: Rule 1.5(b) requires a fee agreement to be in writing if the lawyer has not regularly represented the client. In addition, New Jersey has adopted various court rules that tightly control contingent fees, especially in tort cases.

New York: In the rules effective April 1, 2009, Rule 1.5 contains numerous significant variations. For example, 1.5(a) relies on the definition of an excessive fee found in DR 2-106(B) of the old Model Code. Moreover, Rule 1.5(d) prohibits:

(2) a fee prohibited by law or rule of court;

(3) a fee based on fraudulent billing;

(4) a nonrefundable retainer fee; provided that a lawyer may enter into a retainer agreement with a client containing a reasonable minimum fee clause if it defines in plain language and sets forth the circumstances under which such fee may be incurred and how it will be calculated....

Comments 1A and 1B explain the purpose of Rule 1.5(d)(3) as follows:

[1A] A billing is fraudulent if it is knowingly and intentionally based on false or inaccurate information. Thus, under an hourly billing arrangement, it would be fraudulent to knowingly and intentionally charge a client for more than the actual number of hours spent by the lawyer on the client’s matter; similarly, where the client has agreed to pay the lawyer’s cost of in-house services, such as for photocopying or telephone calls, it would be fraudulent knowingly and intentionally to charge a client more than the actual costs incurred. Fraudulent billing requires an element of scienter and does not include inaccurate billing due to an innocent mistake.

[1B] A supervising lawyer who submits a fraudulent bill for fees or expenses to a client based on submissions by a subordinate lawyer has not automatically violated this Rule. Whether the lawyer is responsible for a violation must be determined by reference to Rules 5.1, 5.2 and 5.3.

Comment 5A explains that “New York Court Rules require every lawyer with an office located in New York to post in that office, in a manner visible to clients of the lawyer, a ‘Statement of Client’s Rights.’” Rule 1.5(e) provides that a copy of this Statement must be provided to all domestic relations clients.

Finally, New York Court Rules supplement Rule 1.5(b) and provide that most fee agreements must be in writing. 22 N.Y.C.R.R. Part 1215 provides as follows:

Part 1215 Written Letter of Engagement

§1215.21 Requirements

(a) Effective March 4, 2002, an attorney who undertakes to represent a client and enters into an arrangement for, charges or collects any fee from a client shall provide to the client a written letter of engagement before commencing the representation, or within a reasonable time thereafter (i) if otherwise impracticable or (ii) if the scope of services to be provided cannot be determined at the time of the commencement of representation. For purposes of this rule, where an entity (such as an insurance carrier) engages an attorney to represent a third party, the term “client” shall mean the entity that engages the attorney. Where there is a significant change in the scope of services or the fee to be charged, an updated letter of engagement shall be provided to the client.

(b) The letter of engagement shall address the following matters:

(1) explanation of the scope of the legal services to be provided;

(2) explanation of attorney’s fees to be charged, expenses and billing practices; and,

(3) where applicable, shall provide that the client may have a right to arbitrate fee disputes under Part 137 of this Title.

(c) Instead of providing the client with a written letter of engagement, an attorney may comply with the provisions of subdivision (a) of this section by entering into a signed written retainer agreement with the client, before or within a reasonable time after commencing the representation, provided that the agreement addresses the matters set forth in subdivision (b) of this section.

§1215.2 Exceptions

This section shall not apply to

(a) representation of a client where the fee to be charged is expected to be less than $3000;

(b) representation where the attorney's services are of the same general kind as previously rendered to and paid for by the client;

(c) representation in domestic relations matters subject to Part 1400 of this Title; or

(d) representation where the attorney is admitted to practice in another jurisdiction and maintains no office in the State of New York, or where no material portion of the services are to be rendered in New York.

North Carolina: Rule 1.5(a) forbids a “clearly excessive fee” but otherwise substantially tracks ABA Model Rule 1.5(a). North Carolina adds Rule 1.5(f), which provides as follows:

(f) Any lawyer having a dispute with a client regarding a fee for legal services must:

(1) make reasonable efforts to advise his or her client of the existence of the North Carolina State Bar's program of fee dispute resolution at least 30 days prior to initiating legal proceedings to collect the disputed fee; and

(2) participate in good faith in the fee dispute resolution process if the client submits a proper request.

Ohio: Rule 1.5(b) requires fee agreements to be in writing unless the lawyer has “regularly represented” the client and is charging on the same basis or the fee is $500 or less. Any change in the basis of a fee previously communicated must be “promptly communicated to the client in writing.” Rule 1.5(e), in permitting division of fees, does not require that the client be informed of the amount each lawyer is receiving.

Oregon: Among other variations, Rule 1.5(d) permits a division of fees between lawyers in different firms if “(1) the client gives informed consent to the fact that there will be a division of fees, and (2) the total fee of the lawyers for all legal services they rendered the client is not clearly excessive.”

Pennsylvania: Rule 1.5(a) prohibits an “illegal or clearly excessive fee” (rather than an “unreasonable” one) and makes no reference to expenses. Rule 1.5(b) requires a fee agreement to be “in writing” if a lawyer has not “regularly” represented a client. Pennsylvania Rule 1.5(e) requires only that “(1) the client is advised of and does not object to the participation of all the lawyers involved, and (2) the total fee of the lawyers is not illegal or clearly excessive. . . .”

Rhode Island: Rule 1.5(b) provides that if a lawyer has not regularly represented a client, the basis or rate of the fee “shall be communicated to the client in writing.” The same rule requires lawyers to send quarterly bills unless the client agrees to a different billing schedule or the fee is fixed or contingent.

South Carolina: Rule 1.5(d)(1) expressly permits a lawyer to charge a contingency fee “in collection of past due alimony or child support.”

Texas: Rule 1.04(a) forbids “illegal” or “unconscionable” fees and lists the same considerations as in ABA Model Rule 1.5. The Texas Rules do not forbid contingent fees in family law matters but the Comment says they are “rarely justified.” Rule 1.04(f), which governs the division of fees between lawyers in different firms, generally parallels ABA Model Rule 1.5(e) but requires client consent “in writing to the terms of the arrangement prior to the time of the association or referral proposed. . . .”

Virginia: Rule 1.5(b) provides in part: “The lawyer’s fee shall be adequately explained to the client.” Rule 1.5(d)(1) forbids contingent fees in “a domestic relations matter, except in rare instances.” Comment 3a says that those rare instances include situations where “the parties are divorced and reconciliation is not a realistic prospect.” Rule 1.5(e) requires full disclosure to the client when lawyers are dividing a fee. The “terms of the division of the fee” must be “disclosed to the client,” the client must consent, the total fee must be reasonable, and the fee division and client consent must be “obtained in advance of the rendering of legal services.” However, while a writing is said to be preferable, none is required.

Wisconsin: Rule 1.5(e) permits lawyers in different firms to divide a fee only if the total fee is reasonable and the lawyers satisfy several other specific requirements.

Proposed Rule 1.5.1 [RPC 2-200]

“Fee Divisions Among Lawyers”

(XDraft #10, 6/28/10)

Summary: Proposed Rule 1.5.1 governs the division of fees among lawyers. Unlike Model Rule 1.5(e), which permits lawyers to divide fees only in proportion to the work each lawyer does or if the referring lawyer assumes responsibility for the matter, the California Rule, like the rules in many other states (see State Rule(s) Variations, below), permits a referring lawyer to divide a fee without providing services or assuming responsibility, so long as the lawyer complies with the Rule’s requirements. Following the second round of public comment, a single change was made to Comment [1] to clarify the Rule’s scope.

Comparison with ABA Counterpart

Rule	Comment
☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
☒ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected	☒ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule	☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule	☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart	☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

Primary Factors Considered

- ☒ Existing California Law

Rule

RPC 2-200

Statute

Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 6147-6149, 6200-6206

Case law

Chambers v. Kay; Mink v. Maccabee; Moran v. Harris

- ☒ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

AZ, AR, DE, D.C., FL, GA, IL, MI, NH, NJ, NY, NC, OH, OR, PA, RI, SC, VA, WI

- ☐ Other Primary Factor(s)

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(13 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 13 due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Less than Six Members Opposing Public Comment Distribution ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 7
Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 2
Abstain 2

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by consensus ☐

Minority/Dissenting Position Included on Model Rule Comparison Chart: ☒ Yes ☐ No

Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

☒ No Known Stakeholders

☐ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

☐ Very Controversial – Explanation:

☒ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

The proposed Rule will change prerequisites for a valid fee sharing agreement.

☐ Not Controversial

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.5.1* Fee Divisions Among Lawyers

July 2010

(Draft rule revised following consideration of second round of public comment)

INTRODUCTION:

1. Proposed Rule 1.5.1 amends current California rule 2-200 and continues the policy that allows for payment of referral fees and for the division of fees between lawyers who are not in the same law firm. This subject is covered in ABA Model Rule 1.5(e), which the Commission decided not to adopt.
2. The key difference between ABA Model Rule 1.5(e) and rule 2-200 is that the ABA Rule does not permit “pure” referral fees while the California rule does. A “pure” referral fee is one in which the referring lawyer does not continue to represent the client in the matter being referred. The Model Rule requires that both lawyers represent the client in the matter and that the division occur either in proportion to their work on the matter or on the basis that both are responsible for the client’s matter. Current rule 2-200 allows for a referral fee where the referring lawyer is not involved in the client’s representation. The Commission concluded that the current rule should be retained with revisions.
3. The Restatement (Third) of the Law of Lawyering § 47, cmt. b, explains the rationale for the ABA Model Rule approach as follows:
“The traditional prohibition of fee-splitting among lawyers is justified primarily as preventing one lawyer from recommending another to a client on the basis of the referral fee that the recommended lawyer will pay, rather than that lawyer’s qualifications. The prohibition has also been defended as preventing overcharging that may otherwise result when a client pays two lawyers and only one performs services. Beyond that, the prohibition reflects a general hostility to commercial methods of obtaining clients.”

* Proposed Rule, Draft 10 (6/28/10).

INTRODUCTION (Continued):

Those grounds do not warrant a complete ban on fee-splitting between lawyers. It is often desirable for one lawyer to refer a client to another, either because the services of two are appropriate or because the second lawyer is more qualified for the work in question. Allowing the referring lawyer to receive reasonable compensation encourages such desirable referrals. Lawyers are more able than other referral sources to identify other lawyers who will best serve their client. Even if a referring lawyer is compensated for the referral, that lawyer has several reasons to refer the client to a good lawyer rather than a bad one offering more pay. The referring lawyer will wish to satisfy the client, will to an extent remain responsible for the work of the second lawyer (see Subsection (1) & Comment c hereto), and, because fee-splitting arrangements most commonly occur in representations in which only a contingent fee is charged, will usually receive no fee at all unless the second lawyer helps the client to prevail. The reasonable-fee requirement of Subsection (3), moreover, reduces the likelihood that fee-splitting will lead to client overcharging. The balance between the dangers and advantages of fee-splitting is sufficiently close that informed clients should be able to agree to it, provided the safeguards specified in this Section are followed.”

4. California has taken an approach consistent with the Restatement, which recognizes that the policy allowing for referral fees may best serve client interests by not requiring the referring lawyer’s continuing involvement in the client’s matter. In Moran v. Harris (1982) 131 Cal.App.3d 913, the court held that the payment of referral fees is not contrary to public policy. In so doing, the court stated, “If the ultimate goal is to assure the best possible representation for a client, a forwarding fee is an economic incentive to less capable lawyers to seek out experienced specialists to handle a case. Thus, with marketplace forces at work, the specialist develops a continuing source of business, the client is benefited and the conscientious, but less experienced lawyer is subsidized to competently handle the cases he retains and to assure his continued search for referral of complex cases to the best lawyers in particular fields.” (Moran v. Harris, supra, 131 Cal.App.3d at 921-922.)

5. No case since Moran has questioned the policy of permitting referral fees. The Commission did not receive public comment advocating that referral fees should not be permitted.

INTRODUCTION (Continued):

6. Because the Commission concluded that the payment of “pure” referral fees should continue, it was necessary to deviate from the Model Rule language. In addition, proposed Rule 1.5.1 incorporates a number of client protective provisions not found in the Model Rule.

7. Proposed Rule 1.5.1 is also a departure from current California rule 2-200. The proposed Rule will require that the agreement to divide a fee be in writing and that the client consent to the division after full disclosure at the time the lawyers enter into the agreement to divide the fee. These changes were made because an underlying reason for the rule is to assure that the client's representation is not adversely affected as a result of an agreement to divide a fee. Under the current rule, disclosure and client consent are not required until the fee is to be divided. The Commission concluded that deferring disclosure and client consent to the time the fee is divided denies the client a meaningful opportunity to consider the concerns the rule is intended address. A minority of the Commission disagrees with the majority. The minority concludes that the amount of the fee to be divided is an important consideration in the client's decision to consent to a division of a fee. In the minority's view the client's consent should be obtained prior to the division of the fee when the amount of the fee that is being divided is known, as the current rule provides.

8. A Note on the Rule Number: The Commission has also departed from the Model Rule by making this Rule on fee division a separate rule and giving it the number “1.5.1”. Because this Rule is a substantial departure from the Model Rule, the fact that the Commission is recommending several revisions to current rule 2-200 to impose more obligations on lawyers and enhance client protection, the fact that this Rule is a free-standing rule in the current California Rules of Professional Conduct, and the large amount of litigation this Rule has traditionally engendered, the Commission determined that this Rule should remain free-standing, rather than be part of a rule on legal fees as is the case of the Model Rule. Having a separate rule will help ensure that lawyers have notice and comply with the rule's provisions intended to enhance client protection.

9. Paragraph (B) of current rule 2-200: The Commission has moved the concept that is contained in current rule 2-200(B) to proposed Rule 7.2(b) to conform to the logic of the Model Rule organization.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5(e) Fees	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.5.1 Fee Divisions Among Lawyer	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(e) A division of a fee between lawyers who are not in the same firm may be made only if:	(~~ea~~) ~~A division of a fee between lawyers~~ Lawyers who are not in the same law firm ~~may be made only if~~ shall not divide a fee for legal services unless:	Proposed paragraph (a) is a variation on Model Rule 1.5(e). The Model Rule states that a division of fees between lawyers who are not in the same law firm “may be made only if” the lawyer complies with the subparts. The proposed rule states that lawyers who are not in the same law firm “shall not divide a fee for legal services” unless the lawyers comply with the subparts. Substantively, the difference reflects a policy to permit, but not encourage referral fees and other fee divisions. See discussion of Moran v. Harris (1982) 131 Cal.App.3d 913, in the Introduction, paragraph 4. Stylistically, proposed paragraph (a) is in the active voice, the preferred style for California Rules of Court. In addition, the draft rule refers to “a fee for legal services,” which also is in current Rule 2-200. The Model Rule refers to a “division of a fee between lawyers” without specifying whether the fee is one for legal services. The Rule is intended to address issues that could affect legal representation of clients as a result of a division of fees obtained from the representation. As a result, the Commission believes that the Rule should be directed to fees for legal services rather than fees that are obtained in performing non-legal services. In light of the fact that the phrase “fee for legal services” is in the current California rule, deleting that phrase from the proposed Rule could be misinterpreted as an intent to broaden the scope of the Rule. Given the considerable litigation that has occurred under the current rule, the Commission concluded that the reference in Rule 2-200(a) should not be changed.

* Proposed Rule 1.5.1, XDraft 10 (6/28/10). Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5(e) Fees	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.5.1 Fee Divisions Among Lawyer	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(1) the division is in proportion to the services performed by each lawyer or each lawyer assumes joint responsibility for the representation;	~~(1) the division is in proportion to the services performed by each lawyer or each lawyer assumes joint responsibility for the representation;~~ (1) The lawyers enter into a written agreement to divide the fee;	Proposed paragraph (a)(1) is new. It differs from paragraph (e)(1) of the Model Rule, which restricts fee divisions to lawyers who work on a client's matter or assume joint responsibility for it, and so precludes referral fees and other types of fee division arrangements. Proposed paragraph (a)(1) adds a requirement that the lawyers dividing a fee enter into a written agreement for the division. The requirement was added to aid in the enforcement of the rule. The overall concept in the proposed rule is that the client consent to the division at the time the lawyers agree to divide the fee. Requiring the lawyers to enter into an agreement sets the point at which consent is obtained. Requiring the agreement to be in writing makes the existence of the agreement verifiable in disciplinary proceedings and assures that compliance will occur when the agreement is made.
(2) the client agrees to the arrangement, including the share each lawyer will receive, and the agreement is confirmed in writing; and	~~(2) the client agrees to the arrangement, including the share each lawyer will receive, and the agreement is confirmed in writing; and~~ (2) The client has consented in writing, either at the time the lawyers enter into the agreement to divide the fee or as soon thereafter as reasonably practicable, after a full written disclosure to the client that a division of fees will be made, the identity of the lawyers who are parties to the division, and the terms of the division; and	Proposed paragraph (a)(2) provides better client protection than Model Rule 1.5(e) by requiring full written disclosure and setting out the specific matters that must be disclosed to the client. The Model Rule states that the client must merely "agree to the arrangement, including the share each lawyer receives." Under the Model Rule, while the client's agreement must be in writing, the disclosure is not required to be in writing. Proposed paragraph (a)(2) requires not only client consent in writing, but also full disclosure in writing that a division will be made, the identity of the lawyers who are parties to the agreement and the terms of the division.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5(e) Fees	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.5.1 Fee Divisions Among Lawyer	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
		Paragraph (a)(2) also substantially changes the requirements in current Rule 2-200 with respect to the timing of client consent. A division of fees raises concerns that should be disclosed to the client at the time the lawyers entered into the agreement to divide the fee. The concerns may include (1) whether the client is actually retaining a lawyer appropriate for the client's matter or whether the lawyer's involvement is based only on the agreement to divide the fees, (2) whether the lawyer dividing the fee will devote sufficient time to the client's matter in light of the fact that the lawyer is receiving a reduced fee, and (3) whether the client would prefer a different arrangement. Neither the Model Rule nor the current California rule mandates that the client be informed at the time the lawyers enter into the agreement to divide the fee. See Mink v. Maccabee (2004) 121 Cal.App.4th 835, 838 (the rule's requirement that the client's consent be obtained before the fee division "cannot reasonably be read to require the client's written consent prior to the lawyer's entering into a fee-splitting arrangement, or prior to the commencement of work, or at any time other than prior to the division of fees.") Both require a client's agreement to occur before the fee is divided, which could occur at the end of the case. The Commission concluded that allowing client consent to occur prior to the division and after the lawyers have agreed to divide the fee would not allow the client to assess the issues the Rule is intended address. If the agreement is entered into at the outset of the engagement and the division occurs after the matter has concluded, the client would have no meaningful opportunity to address any of the foregoing concerns. The arrangement could have an adverse effect on the lawyer-client relationship and the client would have no opportunity to avoid those consequences by refusing to consent to the arrangement. For all of these reasons, the Commission concluded that the time for client consent needed to be advanced to the time the lawyers enter into the agreement to divide the fee. A minority of the Commission dissented from the Commission's decision to revise the timing of the disclosure and consent requirement. In their opinion, the client will have a better understanding of the consequences of the agreement to divide fees when the fee is about to be divided than at the beginning of the arrangement between the lawyers, because at the time the fee will be divided, the amount of fees to be divided will be known instead of speculative. In the minority's view, under existing law, which allows for consent to occur prior to the division, the client can address the foregoing concerns by refusing the consent to the division and is in a better position to decide whether to consent to the division when the client knows the amount of the fee to be divided. In the minority's view, under existing law, which allows for consent to occur prior to the division, the client can address the foregoing concerns by refusing the consent to the division and is in a better position to decide whether to consent to the division when the client knows the amount of the fee to be divided. Paragraph (a)(2) also revises current Rule 2-200 by adding requirements for the disclosure to the client. Rule 2-200(A)(1) currently requires disclosure that a division will be made and the terms of the division. Paragraph (a)(2) adds a requirement that the identity of the lawyers who are parties to the division be included in the disclosure. This element is derived from concepts in the Model Rule.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5(e) Fees	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.5.1 Fee Divisions Among Lawyer	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5(e) Fees	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.5.1 Fee Divisions Among Lawyer	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(3) the total fee is reasonable.	(3) ~~the~~The total fee charged by all lawyers is ~~reasonable~~not increased solely by reason of the agreement to divide fees.	Proposed paragraph (a)(3) deviates from Model Rule paragraph (e)(3) in order to afford greater client protection. The Model Rule provides that the total fee must be reasonable. Under the Model Rule, clients can end up paying higher fees as a result of the division of fees, so long as the total fee is reasonable. Proposed paragraph (a)(3) prevents that result from occurring, so that the division of fees does not result in a higher cost to the client. The question of whether a lawyer may charge an unreasonable fee or an illegal and unconscionable fee is addressed in proposed Rule 1.5. It is unnecessary to repeat the limitation in this Rule. Proposed Comment [7] to this Rule informs lawyers that proposed Rule 1.5 also applies to the fee to be divided.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5(e) Fees Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.5.1 Fee Divisions Among Lawyer Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Division of Fee [7] A division of fee is a single billing to a client covering the fee of two or more lawyers who are not in the same firm. A division of fee facilitates association of more than one lawyer in a matter in which neither alone could serve the client as well, and most often is used when the fee is contingent and the division is between a referring lawyer and a trial specialist. Paragraph (e) permits the lawyers to divide a fee either on the basis of the proportion of services they render or if each lawyer assumes responsibility for the representation as a whole. In addition, the client must agree to the arrangement, including the share that each lawyer is to receive, and the agreement must be confirmed in writing. Contingent fee agreements must be in a writing signed by the client and must otherwise comply with paragraph (c) of this Rule. Joint responsibility for the representation entails financial and ethical responsibility for the representation as if the lawyers were associated in a partnership. A lawyer should only refer a matter to a lawyer whom the referring lawyer reasonably believes is competent to handle the matter. See Rule 1.1.	~~Division of Fee~~ ~~[7] A division of fee is a single billing to a client covering the fee of two or more lawyers who are not in the same firm. A division of fee facilitates association of more than one lawyer in a matter in which neither alone could serve the client as well, and most often is used when the fee is contingent and the division is between a referring lawyer and a trial specialist. Paragraph (e) permits the lawyers to divide a fee either on the basis of the proportion of services they render or if each lawyer assumes responsibility for the representation as a whole. In addition, the client must agree to the arrangement, including the share that each lawyer is to receive, and the agreement must be confirmed in writing. Contingent fee agreements must be in a writing signed by the client and must otherwise comply with paragraph (c) of this Rule. Joint responsibility for the representation entails financial and ethical responsibility for the representation as if the lawyers were associated in a partnership. A lawyer should only refer a matter to a lawyer whom the referring lawyer reasonably believes is competent to handle the matter. See Rule 1.1.~~	Model Rule Comment [7] defines a division of a fee as a single billing covering the fee of two or more lawyers who are not in the same firm. The Model Rule Comment is directed to the narrow focus of the Model Rule. The Comment notes that the Model Rule typically applies in contingency fee cases where a referring lawyer brings in a specialist, but remains involved in the case. The Commission elected not to retain this Comment for two reasons. First, the Comment reflects the limited focus of the Model Rule and is inconsistent with the proposed Rule. Second, the Comment presents a limited definition of a fee division (a single billing covering the fees of two or more lawyers not in the same firm). It does not cover situations where one lawyer bills the client, but divides the fee the client pays with another lawyer. The California Supreme Court recognized that such an arrangement would be a division of a fee in Chambers v. Kay (2002) 29 Cal.4th 142 (adopting a test stated in State Bar Formal Opinion 1994-138). The Commission believes that the division of a fee in this manner presents the same need for client protection in the form of full disclosure and consent as the form of division referenced in the Model Rule Comment. Based on the Model Rule Comment, it might be possible for one lawyer to bill a client and divide the fee the client pays with another lawyer without having to obtain the client's consent. The Commission concluded that a broader definition provides greater client protection, reflects the manner in which fee divisions occur in practice and closes a loophole in the Model Rule that would allow a lawyer to avoid the disclosure requirements in the Rule.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5(e) Fees Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.5.1 Fee Divisions Among Lawyer Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[8] Paragraph (e) does not prohibit or regulate division of fees to be received in the future for work done when lawyers were previously associated in a law firm.	~~[8] Paragraph (e) does not prohibit or regulate division of fees to be received in the future for work done when lawyers were previously associated in a law firm.~~	Model Rule Comment [8] states that the rule does not apply to a division of fees for work done when the lawyers were associated in the same law firm. The Comment is tied to the narrow definition of a division of a fee in Comment [7], which is tied to a single billing of two lawyer's fees. Although poorly worded, Comment [8] attempts to state that if the lawyers were in the same law firm at the time the fees were billed, the Rule does not prohibit the payment of the divided fee if, at the time the fee is paid, the lawyers are no longer in the same law firm. The Commission concluded that the Comment is inconsistent with the proposed Rule in that it is based on a narrower, less client-protective concept of what constitutes a division of a fee. Furthermore, as written the Comment could exempt situations that should be covered by the rule. For example, if two lawyers in the same law firm had an agreement to divide a contingency fee in a case, but shortly after the case commences, one of the lawyers leaves the firm, the client would be in the same position as the client would be in if the lawyers had never been in the same law firm. Yet, if the Comment is applied to the proposed Rule, the former situation would be exempt from the proposed Rule.
	[1] A division of a fee under paragraph (a) occurs when a lawyer pays to a lawyer who is not in the same law firm a portion of specific fees paid by or on behalf of a client. For a discussion of criteria for determining whether a division of a fee under paragraph (a) has occurred, see Chambers v. Kay (2002) 29 Cal.4th 142 [126 Cal.Rptr.2d 536].	Proposed Comment [1] replaces the first sentence in Model Rule Comment [7] with a definition of a division of a fee that the Supreme Court endorsed in Chambers v. Kay (2002) 29 Cal.4th 142 [126 Cal.Rptr.2d 536]. In response to public comment, the Commission added the phrase, "or on behalf of" to reflect that the fee is sometimes paid by a third person.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5(e) Fees Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.5.1 Fee Divisions Among Lawyer Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	[2] Paragraph (a) applies to referral fees in which a lawyer, who does not work on the client's matter, receives a portion of any fee paid to another lawyer who is not in the same law firm. Paragraph (a) also applies to a division of a fee between lawyers who are not in the same law firm but who are working jointly for a client.	Proposed Comment [2] replaces the balance of Model Rule Comment [7]. It explains the situations in which the proposed Rule applies.
	[3] Paragraph (a) requires both the lawyer dividing the fee and the lawyer receiving the division to comply with the requirements of this Rule.	Proposed Comment [3] was added in response to comments from the Office of Chief Trial Counsel ("OCTC"). OCTC requested that the Rule make clear that each lawyer who is a party to the division has the obligation to assure the client is fully informed and consents to the arrangement. OCTC was concerned that each lawyer might attempt to avoid the obligations under the rule by claiming that the other was supposed to inform the client and obtain the client's consent. Proposed Comment [3] states that the proposed Rule requires both the lawyer dividing the fee and the lawyer receiving the fee to comply with the proposed Rule's requirements.
	[4] Paragraph (a)(2) requires lawyers to make full disclosure to the client and to obtain the client's written consent when the lawyers enter into the agreement to divide the fee in order to address matters that may be of concern to the client and that may not be addressed adequately later in the engagement. These concerns may include 1) whether the client is actually retaining a lawyer appropriate for the client's matter or whether the	Proposed Comment [4] explains the rationale for requiring disclosure and client consent at the time the lawyers enter into the agreement to divide the fee. It is intended to inform lawyers about the considerations to be addressed when fully informing the client about the agreement to divide the fee.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5(e) Fees Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.5.1 Fee Divisions Among Lawyer Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	lawyer's involvement is based on the lawyer's agreement to divide the fee; 2) whether the lawyer dividing the fee will devote sufficient time to the matter in light of the fact that the lawyer will be receiving a reduced fee; and 3) whether the client may prefer to negotiate a more favorable arrangement directly with the lawyer dividing the fee.
	[5] This Rule does not apply to a division of fees pursuant to court order.	Proposed Comment [5] excludes divisions of fees pursuant to court order. The Commission concluded that the courts are in a position to protect client interests when issuing an order to divide fees. Lawyers who divide fees pursuant to the direction of a court should not be subject to discipline for complying with the order.
	[6] This Rule does not subject a lawyer to discipline unless a lawyer actually pays the divided fee to a lawyer who is not in the same law firm without having complied with the requirements in paragraph (a).	Proposed Comment [6] addresses an issue that arose about what act constitutes the grounds for discipline. As written the Model Rule, the current California rule and the proposed Rule all state the prohibition as being the division of the fee without complying with the rules' requirements. OCTC submitted a comment stating that OCTC considers the agreement to divide the fee to be the violation rather than the division. OCTC requested the Commission clarify this point in the proposed Rule. The Commission unanimously disagreed with OCTC's construction, but agreed that the proposed Rule should make clear when a lawyer is subject to discipline. Comment [6] provides that clarification. Numerous court decisions have unanimously held that an agreement to divide a fee made in violation of existing Rule 2-200 is void. (See Chambers v. Kay (2002) 29 Cal.4th 142; Margolin v.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.5(e) Fees Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.5.1 Fee Divisions Among Lawyer Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
		Shemaria (2000) 85 Cal.App.4th 891; Scolinos v. Kolts (1995) 37 Cal.App.4th 635.) Under the proposed Rule, that result would extend to any agreement not in writing, or about which a client has not been informed, or to which the client has not consented at the time the agreement is made. The Commission concluded that it would not be appropriate to subject lawyers to discipline for entering into a void agreement that does not result in the division of a fee.
	[7] Under Rule 1.5, a lawyer cannot enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or unconscionable fee. Under Rule 1.5 a lawyer cannot divide or enter into an agreement to divide an illegal or unconscionable fee.	Proposed Comment [7] addresses the concept contained in Model Rule 1.5(e)(3) by making clear that the fee to be divided must comply with the restrictions on illegal and unconscionable fees in proposed Rule 1.5.

Rule 1.5.1: ~~Financial Arrangements~~Fee Divisions Among Lawyers

(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to the Public Comment Draft)

- (a) Lawyers who are not in the same law firm shall not divide a fee for legal services unless:
- (1) The lawyers enter into a written agreement to divide the fee;
 - (2) The client has consented in writing, either at the time the lawyers enter into the agreement to divide the fee or as soon thereafter as reasonably practicable, after a full written disclosure to the client that a division of fees will be made, the identity of the lawyers who are parties to the division, and the terms of the division; and
 - (3) The total fee charged by all lawyers is not increased solely by reason of the agreement to divide fees.
- [3] Paragraph (a) requires both the lawyer dividing the fee and the lawyer receiving the division to comply with the requirements of ~~the~~this Rule.
- [4] Paragraph (a)(2) requires lawyers to make full disclosure to the client and to obtain the client's written consent when the lawyers enter into the agreement to divide the fee in order to address matters that may be of concern to the client and that may not be addressed adequately later in the engagement. These concerns may include 1) whether the client is actually retaining a lawyer appropriate for the client's matter or whether the lawyer's involvement is based on the lawyer's agreement to divide the fee; 2) whether the lawyer dividing the fee will devote sufficient time to the matter in light of the fact that the lawyer will be receiving a reduced fee; and 3) whether the client may prefer to negotiate a more favorable arrangement directly with the lawyer dividing the fee.

COMMENT

- [1] A division of a fee under paragraph (a) occurs when a lawyer pays to a lawyer who is not in the same law firm a portion of specific fees paid by or on behalf of a client. For a discussion of criteria for determining whether a division of a fee under paragraph (a) has occurred, see Chambers v. Kay (2002) 29 Cal.4th 142 [126 Cal.Rptr.2d 536].
- [2] Paragraph (a) applies to referral fees in which a lawyer, who does not work on the client's matter, receives a portion of any fee paid to another lawyer who is not in the same law firm. Paragraph (a) ~~is also intended to apply~~ applies to a division of a fee between lawyers who are not in the same law firm but who are working jointly for a client.
- [5] This Rule does not apply to a division of fees pursuant to court order.
- [6] This Rule does not subject a lawyer to discipline unless the lawyer actually pays the divided fee to a lawyer who is not in the same law firm without having complied with the requirements in paragraph (a).
- [7] Under Rule 1.5, a lawyer cannot enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or unconscionable fee. Under Rule 1.5 a lawyer cannot divide or enter into an agreement to divide an illegal or unconscionable fee.

Rule ~~2-200~~ Financial Arrangements^{1.5.1: Fee Divisions} Among Lawyers

(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to Current California Rule)

(Aa) ~~A member~~ Lawyers who are not in the same law firm shall not divide a fee for legal services ~~with a lawyer who is not a partner of, associate of, or shareholder with the member~~ unless:

(1) The lawyers enter into a written agreement to divide the fee;

~~(12)~~ The client has consented in writing thereto, either at the time the lawyers enter into the agreement to divide the fee or as soon thereafter as reasonably practicable, after a full written disclosure ~~has been made in writing to the client~~ that a division of fees will be made, the identity of the lawyers who are parties to the division, and the terms of such ~~the~~ division; and

~~(23)~~ The total fee charged by all lawyers is not increased solely by reason of the ~~provision for division of~~ agreement to divide ~~fees and is not unconscionable as that term is defined in rule 4-200.~~

~~(B) Except as permitted in paragraph (A) of this rule or rule 2-300, a member shall not compensate, give, or promise anything of value to any lawyer for the purpose of recommending or securing employment of the member or the member's law firm by a client, or as a reward for having made a recommendation resulting in employment of the member or the member's law firm by a client. A member's offering of or giving a gift or gratuity to any lawyer who has made a recommendation resulting in the employment of the member or the member's law firm shall not of itself violate this rule, provided that the gift or gratuity was not offered in consideration of any promise, agreement, or understanding that such a gift or gratuity would be forthcoming or that referrals would be made or encouraged in the future.~~

COMMENT

[1] A division of a fee under paragraph (a) occurs when a lawyer pays to a lawyer who is not in the same law firm a portion of specific fees paid by or on behalf of a client. For a discussion of criteria for determining whether a division of a fee under paragraph (a) has occurred, see Chambers v. Kay (2002) 29 Cal.4th 142 [126 Cal.Rptr.2d 536].

[2] Paragraph (a) applies to referral fees in which a lawyer, who does not work on the client's matter, receives a portion of any fee paid to another lawyer who is not in the same law firm. Paragraph (a) also applies to a division of a fee between lawyers who are not in the same law firm but who are working jointly for a client.

[3] Paragraph (a) requires both the lawyer dividing the fee and the lawyer receiving the division to comply with the requirements of this Rule.

[4] Paragraph (a)(2) requires lawyers to make full disclosure to the client and to obtain the client's written consent when the lawyers enter into the agreement to divide the fee in order to address matters that may be of concern to the client and that may not be addressed adequately later in the engagement. These concerns may include 1) whether the client is actually retaining a lawyer appropriate for the client's matter or whether the lawyer's involvement is based on the lawyer's agreement to divide the fee; 2) whether the lawyer dividing the fee will devote sufficient time to the matter in light of the fact that the lawyer will be receiving a reduced fee; and 3) whether the client may prefer to negotiate a more favorable arrangement directly with the lawyer dividing the fee.

- [5] This Rule does not apply to a division of fees pursuant to court order.
- [6] This Rule does not subject a lawyer to discipline unless the lawyer actually pays the divided fee to a lawyer who is not in the same law firm without having complied with the requirements in paragraph (a).
- [7] Under Rule 1.5, a lawyer cannot enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or unconscionable fee. Under Rule 1.5 a lawyer cannot divide or enter into an agreement to divide an illegal or unconscionable fee.

Rule 1.5.1: Fee Divisions Among Lawyers
(Commission's Proposed Rule – Clean Version)

- (a) Lawyers who are not in the same law firm shall not divide a fee for legal services unless:
- (1) The lawyers enter into a written agreement to divide the fee;
 - (2) The client has consented in writing, either at the time the lawyers enter into the agreement to divide the fee or as soon thereafter as reasonably practicable, after a full written disclosure to the client that a division of fees will be made, the identity of the lawyers who are parties to the division, and the terms of the division; and
 - (3) The total fee charged by all lawyers is not increased solely by reason of the agreement to divide fees.
- [3] Paragraph (a) requires both the lawyer dividing the fee and the lawyer receiving the division to comply with the requirements of this Rule.
- [4] Paragraph (a)(2) requires lawyers to make full disclosure to the client and to obtain the client's written consent when the lawyers enter into the agreement to divide the fee in order to address matters that may be of concern to the client and that may not be addressed adequately later in the engagement. These concerns may include 1) whether the client is actually retaining a lawyer appropriate for the client's matter or whether the lawyer's involvement is based on the lawyer's agreement to divide the fee; 2) whether the lawyer dividing the fee will devote sufficient time to the matter in light of the fact that the lawyer will be receiving a reduced fee; and 3) whether the client may prefer to negotiate a more favorable arrangement directly with the lawyer dividing the fee.

COMMENT

- [1] A division of a fee under paragraph (a) occurs when a lawyer pays to a lawyer who is not in the same law firm a portion of specific fees paid by or on behalf of a client. For a discussion of criteria for determining whether a division of a fee under paragraph (a) has occurred, see Chambers v. Kay (2002) 29 Cal.4th 142 [126 Cal.Rptr.2d 536].
- [2] Paragraph (a) applies to referral fees in which a lawyer, who does not work on the client's matter, receives a portion of any fee paid to another lawyer who is not in the same law firm. Paragraph (a) also applies to a division of a fee between lawyers who are not in the same law firm but who are working jointly for a client.
- [5] This Rule does not apply to a division of fees pursuant to court order.
- [6] This Rule does not subject a lawyer to discipline unless the lawyer actually pays the divided fee to a lawyer who is not in the same law firm without having complied with the requirements in paragraph (a).
- [7] Under Rule 1.5, a lawyer cannot enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or unconscionable fee. Under Rule 1.5 a lawyer cannot divide or enter into an agreement to divide an illegal or unconscionable fee.

Rule 1.5.1 Financial Arrangements Among Lawyers.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 3 Agree = 1
Disagree = 1
Modify = 1
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
1	Office of Chief Trial Counsel	D	Yes		Many of the Comments to this rule are more appropriate for treatises, law reviews, or ethics.	The Commission declined to eliminate any of the Comments. The current version of this Rule has been the subject of a number of reported decisions. The number of times the Rule has been litigated demonstrates that there needs to be more of an explanation about the Rule in the Comments than exists in the Discussion of the current Rule.
				Comment [4]	OCTC is concerned that Comment [4] appears more limited than the purposes stated in Chambers v. Kay p. 156-157 and, thus, could be confusing and misleading. If the purposes of the rule are to be stated, all the purposes should be stated.	The Commission does not think the concern is warranted. The purpose of the Comment is to provide the rationale for obtaining client consent at the time of the agreement rather than at the time of the division. It is not a general statement of purpose. The factors in the Comment come from Chambers v. Kay . The Commission did not see anything in the wording of the Comment that would create the confusion OCTC suggests.
				Comment [5]	OCTC disagrees with Comment [5]. There is nothing in the rule which would void or limit the rule regarding fee sharing by a court's approving a fee, which is what Comment [5] seems to be saying, although it provides no authority for this proposition. (OCTC believes this Comment is not in the Model Rules.) In In the Matter of Harney , the attorney argued that he could not be disciplined for his illegal fee	The Commission declined to change the Comment. The Commission added Comment [5] because the Commission believes that the courts are in a position to protect the client's interests in ordering the division. The matter pending before the Supreme Court concerns the current rule, which is changing. The Commission believes that courts should have the flexibility to allow divisions and should not be limited by the Rule in exercising that

¹ A = AGREE with proposed Rule D = DISAGREE with proposed Rule M = AGREE ONLY IF MODIFIED NI = NOT INDICATED

Rule 1.5.1 Financial Arrangements Among Lawyers.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 3 Agree = 1
Disagree = 1
Modify = 1
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comment [6]	because a court had approved his fee. The Review Department rejected this claim. Likewise, an attorney is currently arguing to the Supreme Court that the State Bar Court erred in finding he violated Rule 2-200 because they are court awarded fees. (In the Matter of Phillip Kay, 01-O-1930, Supreme Court Case No. S180405.) Unless and until the Supreme Court agrees with this argument, the Comment should be stricken. OCTC strongly disagrees with Comment [6]. Comment [6]'s statement that the rule does not subject a lawyer to discipline unless the lawyer actually pays the divided fee is inconsistent with subparagraph (a)(2) of the rule, which states that attorneys must obtain the client's consent "at the time the lawyers enter into the agreement to divide the fee or as soon thereafter as reasonably practicable." While there are civil cases that have held that Current Rule 2-200 does not apply until the actual division of fees, those cases addressed the civil enforceability of fee agreements between lawyers, not attorney discipline. Comment [6] would permit attorneys to violate the rule with no consequences. Further, Comment [6] would be overbroad, confusing, and misleading, implying that there	flexibility. The Rule continues the current prohibition on the division of a fee without client consent. The Rule does not state a prohibition on entering into agreement to divide a fee. The requirements for a written agreement and client consent are prerequisites for a division of a fee, not an independent basis for discipline. The Comment was added to make sure there was no confusion on this point. To revise the Comment as suggested would be inconsistent with the Rule. The Commission believes that the division of the fee should remain the trigger for the Rule's application. The Commission does not believe that the Comment is overly broad. It addresses the Rule 1.5.1 Financial Arrangements Among Lawyers.

[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 3 Agree = 1
Disagree = 1
Modify = 1
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					can be no disciplinary consequences for a failure to advise the clients of the agreement between the lawyers and obtaining the client's informed written consent to the fee sharing at the time the lawyers enter into the agreement to divide fees if the fees are not actually paid. However, the State Bar Court has found attorneys culpable of soliciting, assisting, or inducing a violation of Current Rule 1-120 and violating the duty to keep clients informed of significant developments under Current Rule 3-500 and B&P Code section 6068(m) when attorneys enter into an agreement to share fees without advising clients of the agreement and obtaining the client's informed written consent, even when the fees were not ultimately shared. (See e.g. In the Matter of David D. Mangar, Case No. 06-O-10183, Supreme Court Case No. S180863; In the Matter of Philip E. Kay, Case No. 01-O-1930, Supreme Court Case No. S180405. The Supreme Court approved the haring department's findings and ordered the disbarment of Mr. Mangar.) At the very least, the Comment should advise that attorneys may be disciplined for (1) failing to advise the client of the agreement at the time of the agreement, in violation of their duty to advise the client of significant	application of the Rule only. Revising the Comment as OCTC suggests would suggest that a prerequisite to a division of a fee was an independent basis for discipline, which is not the Commission's intent.

Rule 1.5.1 Financial Arrangements Among Lawyers.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 3 Agree = 1
Disagree = 1
Modify = 1
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					developments under B&P Code 6068(m) and Rule 1.4 (Current Rule 3-500) (see Chambers v. Kay); and (2) assisting in, soliciting, and/or inducing a violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct or the State Bar Act in violation of Proposed Rule 8.4(a) (Current Rule 1-120).
2	Rothschild, Toby	A	No	Comment [1]	Comment [1] seems to limit the restriction on fee divisions to fees "paid by a client." Does this mean that a fee paid by a third party on behalf of a client (such as a family member or an insurer) can be divided without regard to consent or written agreement? The comment should probably say "by or on behalf of a client."	The Commission revised Comment [1] along the lines suggested by the commenter.
3	San Diego County Bar Association	M	Yes		Some supported the new timing requirement for client consent, others prefer the current rule that imposes no strict timing requirement, still others suggest that the rule be changed to require disclosure to a client in a signed retainer agreement.	Commission did not make any revisions in response to this comment As the Commission explained in Comment [4], there are three client concerns associated with this rule: 1) whether the client is actually retaining the lawyer appropriate for the client's matter or whether the lawyer's involvement is based on the lawyer's agreement to divide the fee, 2) whether the lawyer dividing the fee will devote sufficient time to the matter in light of the fact that the lawyer will be receiving a reduced fee, and 3) whether the client may prefer to negotiate a more favorable arrangement. These concerns cannot be address if the client's consent is not required until the fee is divided. If the division affect's the lawyer's

Rule 1.5.1 Financial Arrangements Among Lawyers. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 3 Agree = 1 Disagree = 1 Modify = 1 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
						performance or client decides that the lawyer was not appropriate, it is too late to do anything about it. The rule was drafted to give the client the opportunity to address the issues in advance rather than after the fact. The proposed Rule recognizes that the agreement to divide a fee may not occur until after the client has signed a fee agreement. The Commission concluded that tying client consent to the time that the lawyers enter into the agreement affords the most client protection.

Rule 1.5: Fees

STATE VARIATIONS

(The following is an excerpt from Regulation of Lawyers: Statutes and Standards (2010 Ed.)
by Steven Gillers, Roy D. Simon and Andrew M. Perlman.)

Alaska: In the rules effective April 15, 2009, Rule 1.5(b) requires all fee agreements to be in writing when the fee will exceed $1,000. Moreover, Rule 1.5(f) instructs lawyers that they “should seek to avoid controversies over fees with clients and should attempt to resolve amicably any differences on the subject.”

Arizona: Rule 1.5(b) requires lawyers to enter written fee agreements “before or within a reasonable time after commencing the representation.” Arizona adds Rule 1.5(d)(3), which provides that when a lawyer denominates a fee as “earned upon receipt” or “nonrefundable,” the client must be informed “in writing that the client may nevertheless discharge the lawyer at any time and in that event may be entitled to a refund of all or part of the fee based upon the value of the representation pursuant to paragraph (a).” Finally, Comment 6 says that Rule 1.5(d) allows a contingent fee “for legal representation in connection with the recovery of post-judgment balances due under support, alimony or other financial orders because such contracts do not implicate the same policy concerns” as other domestic relations matters.

Arkansas: Rule 1.5(d)(1) adds that in a domestic relations matter, “after a final order or decree is entered a lawyer may enter into a contingent fee contract for collection of payments which are due pursuant to such decree or order.”

California: Rule 4-200 forbids lawyers to “enter into an agreement for, charge, or collect an illegal or unconscionable fee.” Unconscionability is determined based on facts “existing at the time the agreement is entered into except where the parties contemplate that the fee will be affected by later events.” The rule contains 11 factors to weigh in determining conscionability, many of them derived from the Model Rules. In addition, see Business & Professions Code §§ 6147-6149 (governing contingency fee contracts and other fee arrangements), and Business & Professions Code §§ 6200-6206 (establishing a system and procedures for arbitrating fee disputes).

Colorado: Rule 1.5(b) requires a lawyer who has not regularly represented a client to communicate the basis or rate of the fee and expenses “in writing.” Rule 1.5(b) also provides: “Except as provided in a written fee agreement, any material changes to the basis or rate of the fee or expenses are subject to the provisions of Rule 1.8(a),” which imposes stringent requirements on business transactions with clients. Colorado Rule 1.5(c) also requires more elaborate disclosures in contingency fee cases than ABA Model Rule 1.5.

Delaware: Rule 1.5(e) does not require that the client know how lawyers in different firms are dividing a fee. Delaware adds Rule 1.5(f), which allows the lawyer to require the client to pay fees in advance, provided that the lawyer gives the client “a written statement” explaining, among other things, that “the fee is refundable if not earned.”

District of Columbia: D.C. Rule 1.5(b) requires a written fee agreement where the lawyer has not “regularly represented” the client. Rule 1.5(d) forbids contingent fees in criminal cases but not in matrimonial cases. Rule 1.5(e) does not require that the client be told how much each lawyer is to receive when fees are divided between lawyers not in the same firm, but the client must be told “the effect of the association of lawyers outside the firm on the fee to be charged.”

Florida: Rule 4-1.5(a) prohibits any fee “generated by employment that was obtained through advertising or solicitation not in compliance with the Rules Regulating The Florida Bar” or that is “clearly excessive.” A clearly excessive fee includes (1) a fee that exceeds a reasonable fee by so much that it constitutes “clear overreaching or an unconscionable demand,” or (2) a fee sought or secured “by means of intentional misrepresentation or fraud upon the client, a nonclient party, or any court, as to either entitlement to, or amount of, the fee.” Florida also caps the percentage amount of any contingent fee.

Regarding fee sharing between lawyers in different firms, Rule 4-1.5(f)(2) requires that each participating lawyer “shall sign the contract with the client and shall agree to assume joint legal responsibility to the client for the performance of the services in question as if each were partners of the other lawyer or law firm involved.” Florida also tightly controls the terms on which lawyers in different firms may share fees. Rule 4-1.5(f)(4)(D) provides that “the lawyer assuming primary responsibility for the legal services” must receive “a minimum of 75% of the total fee,” and “the lawyer assuming secondary responsibility” can receive “a maximum of 25% of the total fee. Any fee in excess of 25% shall be presumed to be clearly excessive.” But if two or more lawyers expect to “accept substantially equal active participation in the providing of legal services,” then they may seek court authorization to divide the fee however they propose “based upon a sworn petition signed by all counsel that shall disclose in detail those services to be performed.”

Florida Rule 4-1.5(g) provides that if lawyers in different firms share fees on a basis not in proportion to the amount of work done, then each lawyer must not only agree to assume “joint legal responsibility for the representation” but must also agree “to be available for consultation with the client.

The Florida Supreme Court may also order any lawyer found guilty of violating the fee rules “to forfeit the fee or any part thereof,” either by returning the excessive part of any fee to the client or by forfeiting all or part of an otherwise improper fee to the Florida Bar Clients’ Security Fund. See Florida Supreme Court Rule 3-5.1(h).

Finally, Rule 4-1.5(i) provides that, if a retainer agreement includes a mandatory arbitration clause, the agreement must include a verbatim, bolded recitation of the notice that appears at the end of Rule 1.5(i).

Georgia adds to Rule 1.5(c) that a lawyer must include in the written statement at the conclusion of a contingent fee matter the amount of the attorney’s fee and “(D) if the attorney’s fee is divided with another lawyer who is not a partner in or an associate of the lawyer’s firm or law office, the amount of fee received by each and the manner in which the division is determined.” Georgia also adds to Rule 1.5(e)(2) that the client must be “advised of the share that each lawyer is to receive” when lawyers in different firms share a fee.

Illinois: In the rules effective January 1, 2010, Rule 1.5(e)(1) provides that a division of a fee with a lawyer in a different firm is permissible if it “is in proportion to the services performed by each lawyer, or if the primary service performed by one lawyer is the referral of the client to another lawyer and each lawyer assumes joint financial responsibility for the representation.”

Maine: In the rules effective August 1, 2009, Maine includes two additional considerations in Rule 1.5(a): whether the client gave informed consent to the fee agreement and whether the fee agreement was in writing. In Rule 1.5(d)(3), Maine prohibits a lawyer from charging a fee based on “a percentage of the value of the estate” for administering an estate in probate.

Massachusetts: Rule 1.5(c) does not require a contingent fee to be in writing if it concerns “the collection of commercial accounts” or “insurance company subrogation claims,” but all other contingent fee agreements must be in writing and must contain greater detail than ABA Model Rule 1.5(c) requires. Rule 1.5(e) permits a lawyer to pay a fee to a referring lawyer even when the referring lawyer does not perform any services or take joint responsibility for the matter. Although the client must consent to such a referral fee, the client’s consent need not be in writing, and a comment indicates that the lawyer does not have to disclose the size of the referral fee unless the client asks.

Michigan: Rule 1.5(d) forbids contingent fees in “a domestic relations matter” without qualification. In personal injury and wrongful death claims, Michigan Court Rule 8.121 sets a maximum contingent fee of “one-third of the amount recovered” and provides that receiving, retaining, or sharing a larger contingent fee “shall be deemed to be the charging of a ‘clearly excessive fee’ in violation of” Rule 1.5(a). Michigan omits ABA Model Rule 1.5(e)(1).

New Hampshire: Rule 1.5(e) permits fee sharing between lawyers in different firms if the division is made “either: (a) in reasonable proportion to the services performed or responsibility or risks assumed by each, or (b) based on an agreement with the referring lawyer,” provided that in either case the lawyers obtain the client’s signed written agreement to the division of fees and the total fee charged by all lawyers “is not increased by the division of fees and is reasonable.”

New Jersey: Rule 1.5(b) requires a fee agreement to be in writing if the lawyer has not regularly represented the client. In addition, New Jersey has adopted various court rules that tightly control contingent fees, especially in tort cases.

New York: In the rules effective April 1, 2009, Rule 1.5 contains numerous significant variations. For example, 1.5(a) relies on the definition of an excessive fee found in DR 2-106(B) of the old Model Code. Moreover, Rule 1.5(d) prohibits:

(2) a fee prohibited by law or rule of court;

(3) a fee based on fraudulent billing;

(4) a nonrefundable retainer fee; provided that a lawyer may enter into a retainer agreement with a client containing a reasonable minimum fee clause if it defines in plain language and sets forth the circumstances under which such fee may be incurred and how it will be calculated....

Comments 1A and 1B explain the purpose of Rule 1.5(d)(3) as follows:

[1A] A billing is fraudulent if it is knowingly and intentionally based on false or inaccurate information. Thus, under an hourly billing arrangement, it would be fraudulent to knowingly and intentionally charge a client for more than the actual number of hours spent by the lawyer on the client’s matter; similarly, where the client has agreed to pay the lawyer’s cost of in-house services, such as for photocopying or telephone calls, it would be fraudulent knowingly and intentionally to charge a client more than the actual costs incurred. Fraudulent billing requires an element of scienter and does not include inaccurate billing due to an innocent mistake.

[1B] A supervising lawyer who submits a fraudulent bill for fees or expenses to a client based on submissions by a subordinate lawyer has not automatically violated this Rule. Whether the lawyer is responsible for a violation must be determined by reference to Rules 5.1, 5.2 and 5.3.

Comment 5A explains that “New York Court Rules require every lawyer with an office located in New York to post in that office, in a manner visible to clients of the lawyer, a ‘Statement of Client’s Rights.’” Rule 1.5(e) provides that a copy of this Statement must be provided to all domestic relations clients.

Finally, New York Court Rules supplement Rule 1.5(b) and provide that most fee agreements must be in writing. 22 N.Y.C.R.R. Part 1215 provides as follows:

Part 1215 Written Letter of Engagement

§1215.21 Requirements

(a) Effective March 4, 2002, an attorney who undertakes to represent a client and enters into an arrangement for, charges or collects any fee from a client shall provide to the client a written letter of engagement before commencing the representation, or within a reasonable time thereafter (i) if otherwise impracticable or (ii) if the scope of services to be provided cannot be determined at the time of the commencement of representation. For purposes of this rule, where an entity (such as an insurance carrier) engages an attorney to represent a third party, the term “client” shall mean the entity that engages the attorney. Where there is a significant change in the scope of services or the fee to be charged, an updated letter of engagement shall be provided to the client.

(b) The letter of engagement shall address the following matters:

- (1) explanation of the scope of the legal services to be provided;
- (2) explanation of attorney’s fees to be charged, expenses and billing practices; and,

(3) where applicable, shall provide that the client may have a right to arbitrate fee disputes under Part 137 of this Title.

(c) Instead of providing the client with a written letter of engagement, an attorney may comply with the provisions of subdivision (a) of this section by entering into a signed written retainer agreement with the client, before or within a reasonable time after commencing the representation, provided that the agreement addresses the matters set forth in subdivision (b) of this section.

§1215.2 Exceptions

This section shall not apply to

(a) representation of a client where the fee to be charged is expected to be less than $3000;

(b) representation where the attorney's services are of the same general kind as previously rendered to and paid for by the client;

(c) representation in domestic relations matters subject to Part 1400 of this Title; or

(d) representation where the attorney is admitted to practice in another jurisdiction and maintains no office in the State of New York, or where no material portion of the services are to be rendered in New York.

North Carolina: Rule 1.5(a) forbids a “clearly excessive fee” but otherwise substantially tracks ABA Model Rule 1.5(a). North Carolina adds Rule 1.5(f), which provides as follows:

(f) Any lawyer having a dispute with a client regarding a fee for legal services must:

(1) make reasonable efforts to advise his or her client of the existence of the North Carolina State Bar's program of fee dispute resolution at least 30 days prior to initiating legal proceedings to collect the disputed fee; and

(2) participate in good faith in the fee dispute resolution process if the client submits a proper request.

Ohio: Rule 1.5(b) requires fee agreements to be in writing unless the lawyer has “regularly represented” the client and is charging on the same basis or the fee is $500 or less. Any change in the basis of a fee previously communicated must be “promptly communicated to the client in writing.” Rule 1.5(e), in permitting division of fees, does not require that the client be informed of the amount each lawyer is receiving.

Oregon: Among other variations, Rule 1.5(d) permits a division of fees between lawyers in different firms if “(1) the client gives informed consent to the fact that there will be a division of fees, and (2) the total fee of the lawyers for all legal services they rendered the client is not clearly excessive.”

Pennsylvania: Rule 1.5(a) prohibits an “illegal or clearly excessive fee” (rather than an “unreasonable” one) and makes no reference to expenses. Rule 1.5(b) requires a fee agreement to be “in writing” if a lawyer has not “regularly” represented a client. Pennsylvania Rule 1.5(e) requires only that “(1) the client is advised of and does not object to the participation of all the lawyers involved, and (2) the total fee of the lawyers is not illegal or clearly excessive. . . .”

Rhode Island: Rule 1.5(b) provides that if a lawyer has not regularly represented a client, the basis or rate of the fee “shall be communicated to the client in writing.” The same rule requires lawyers to send quarterly bills unless the client agrees to a different billing schedule or the fee is fixed or contingent.

South Carolina: Rule 1.5(d)(1) expressly permits a lawyer to charge a contingency fee “in collection of past due alimony or child support.”

Texas: Rule 1.04(a) forbids “illegal” or “unconscionable” fees and lists the same considerations as in ABA Model Rule 1.5. The Texas Rules do not forbid contingent fees in family law matters but the Comment says they are “rarely justified.” Rule 1.04(f), which governs the division of fees between lawyers in different firms, generally parallels ABA Model Rule 1.5(e) but requires client consent “in writing to the terms of the arrangement prior to the time of the association or referral proposed. . . .”

Virginia: Rule 1.5(b) provides in part: “The lawyer’s fee shall be adequately explained to the client.” Rule 1.5(d)(1) forbids contingent fees in “a domestic relations matter, except in rare instances.” Comment 3a says that those rare instances include situations where “the parties are divorced and reconciliation is not a realistic prospect.” Rule 1.5(e) requires full disclosure to the client when lawyers are dividing a fee. The “terms of the division of the fee” must be “disclosed to the client,” the client must consent, the total fee must be reasonable, and the fee division and client consent must be “obtained in advance of the rendering of legal services.” However, while a writing is said to be preferable, none is required.

Wisconsin: Rule 1.5(e) permits lawyers in different firms to divide a fee only if the total fee is reasonable and the lawyers satisfy several other specific requirements.

Proposed Rule 1.6 [RPC 3-100; B&P §6068(e)]

“Confidentiality of Information”

(ALT3, XDraft #14, 6/28/10)

Summary: This amended rule refers to the duty of confidentiality encompassed by B&P §6068(e) and identifies limited exceptions, such as the permissive exception for revealing information to prevent a criminal act likely to result in death or substantial bodily harm. Following public comment, the Commission implemented a change in rule language to address concerns raised by several public commenters. See Introduction, ¶. 4. Some nonsubstantive revisions were made to the Rule and comment following the second round of public comment.

Comparison with ABA Counterpart

Rule	Comment
☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule	☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
☒ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule	☒ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart	☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

Primary Factors Considered

☒ Existing California Law

Rule

RPC 3-100

Statute

Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(e); Evid. Code §§950 et seq.

Case law

☐ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

☒ Other Primary Factor(s)

California's policy on client confidentiality has been historically and fundamentally different from the approach taken in the Model Rules. (See the introduction to the Model Rule comparison chart.)

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(13 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 13 due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Less than Six Members Opposing Adoption ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 7
Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 5
Abstain 0

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by Consensus ☐

Commission Minority Position, Known Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

Minority/Dissenting Position Included on Model Rule Comparison Chart: ☒ Yes ☐ No

(See the introduction and the explanation of paragraphs (a), (b)(3), (b)(4), and (b)(5) in the Model Rule comparison chart.)

☒ No Known Stakeholders

☐ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

☒ Very Controversial – Explanation:

See the introduction and the Explanation of paragraphs (b)(3), (b)(4), and (b)(5) in the Model Rule comparison chart.

☐ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

☐ Not Controversial

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.6* Confidentiality of Information

July 2010

(Proposed rule following June 15, 2010 public comment deadline.)

INTRODUCTION:

1. Proposed Rule 1.6 is derived primarily from current California rule 3-100 and is only loosely based on Model Rule 1.6 for two principal reasons: First, there are inherent limitations on a Rule of Professional Conduct that addresses confidentiality because in California, the lawyer's duty of confidentiality is based on Business & Professions Code section 6068(e). Rule 3-100 did not come into existence until July 2004, when the Legislature, as part of an enactment to create the first express exception to the statutory duty of confidentiality, engaged the Supreme Court and State Bar to draft and promulgate a rule of professional conduct to assist in the implementation of the amendment. Second, Model Rule 1.6 and its numerous exceptions are based on policy decisions that are inimical to California's traditional emphasis on client protection.
2. Accordingly, although proposed Rule 1.6 follows the basic Model Rule framework, the Commission recommends a Rule that more closely adheres to current rule 3-100, a rule that affords clients substantially more notice and protection than the Model Rule. To the extent the Rule includes exceptions not currently found in rule 3-100, they are exceptions already recognized in well-settled California law. What follows is a roadmap for consideration of the proposed Rule.

* Proposed Rule 1.6, ALT3, Draft 14 (6/28/10)

3. Genesis of current California rule 3-100 and its continuation in proposed Rule 1.6. In 2003, the Legislature passed and the Governor signed into law Assembly Bill 1101, which amended Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(e) to provide for an exception that permits but does not require a lawyer to reveal confidential information to prevent a criminal act likely to result in death or substantial bodily harm. AB1101 also provided in Section 3 of the Act for the appointment of a task force by the State Bar President in consultation with the Supreme Court “to make recommendations for a rule of professional conduct regarding professional responsibility issues related to the implementation of this act.” The Legislature also identified in Section 3 a series of issues for the Task Force to address, including whether a lawyer must inform a client or a prospective client about the attorney's ability to reveal the client's or prospective client's confidential information to prevent a criminal act likely to result in death or substantial bodily harm, and whether the lawyer must take steps to dissuade a client from committing a criminal act before revealing the client's confidential information. In conformance with its statutory mandate, the Task Force drafted and proposed rule 3-100, which was adopted by the State Bar and approved by the Supreme Court, effective July 1, 2004. Current rule 3-100 is thus limited in scope to providing guidance to lawyers seeking to conform their conduct to sections 6068(e)(1) and (2). With one major exception, (see item #4, below), the Commission has, for the most part, retained the black letter and discussion paragraphs of rule 3-100. See paragraphs (a), (b)(1), (c), (d) and (e) of the black letter rule, and Comments [2]-[6], and [9]-[18], and the Explanation of Changes for each.
4. Proposed change to language in public comment version of the Rule following public comment. The Commission recommends a material change from the public comment draft of the Rule: the deletion of the second sentence of paragraph (a) in that draft. The second sentence had been added because of an apparent disjunction in language between the subdivisions of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(e), from which current rule 3-100 is derived, California being the only jurisdiction in which a lawyer's duty of confidentiality is set forth in a statute. Section 6068(e)(1) provides that it is the duty of every lawyer: “To maintain inviolate the confidence, and at every peril to himself or herself to preserve the secrets, of his or her client.” However, subdivision (2) of section 6068(e) provides an exception to the duty of confidentiality that permits a lawyer to “reveal confidential information relating to the representation of a client to the extent that the attorney reasonably believes the disclosure is necessary to prevent a criminal act that the attorney reasonably believes is likely to result in death of, or substantial bodily harm to, an individual.” (Emphasis added). The Commission added a sentence to paragraph (a) of the public comment version of the Rule¹ to link the concepts of “confidence” and “secret” in subdivision (e)(1) to the concept of “confidential information relating to the representation” in subdivision (e)(2), which it understood to be coterminous with the language in subdivision (e)(1).

However, both a minority of the Commission and a number of public commenters argued that the term “confidential information relating to the representation” is narrower than the very broad protection provided client confidential information in subdivision (e)(1) and, as a result, continued use of the term “confidential information relating to the representation” in proposed Rule 1.6 would have the effect of lessening protection for client confidential information. The minority, armed with the public comment that had expressed concerns with the continued importation of subdivision (e)(2)’s language into proposed Rule 1.6, convinced a majority of the Commission that the concerns were well-placed. That newly-created majority then voted to reject the public comment version and instead recommend that rule 3-100, revised to conform to new Rules format and style, be carried forward.

Subsequently, however, the drafters proposed an alternative to simply carrying forward current rule 3-100. This alternative involved deleting the second sentence of paragraph (a) of the public comment version and replacing the defined term, “information relating to the representation of a client” with “information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e).” By using the latter term, the breadth of protection provided by proposed Rule 1.6 is coterminous with the breadth of protection provided under section 6068(e), which should assuage the concerns of the public commenters who communicated their concerns with using the phrase, “information relating to the representation of a client.” As to the concern that Rule 1.6 will now conflict with the statute, specifically the language of section 6068(e)(2), the Commission has concluded that there is nothing in the legislative history of either AB 1101 or the deliberations of the AB 1101 Task Force that would indicate that the Legislature intended to provide a scope of protection in subdivision (e)(2) that is different from the scope of protection in subdivision (e)(1). With that fact expressly recognized in proposed Rule 1.6, the Rule will give effect to the legislative intent and confusion and concern with the scope of protection provided under the Rule will be obviated.

5. Model Rule exceptions to confidentiality are inimical to California's strong policy favoring confidentiality. Soon after the financial debacles involving Enron, Global Crossing and WorldCom early this decade, the ABA adopted by a close margin controversial exceptions to confidentiality that permit a lawyer to reveal a client's confidential information to prevent or rectify a criminal act reasonably certain to result in financial injury or property loss to a third party. These provisions run counter to California's policy of providing assurance to clients that their secrets are safe, which encourages client candor in communicating with the lawyer and provides the lawyer with the information necessary to promote client compliance with the law. In addition, the Model Rule incorporates the concept of "implied authority," a dangerous catchall that threatens to swallow the duty of confidentiality. Accordingly, the Commission recommends rejection of Model Rule 1.6(b)(2) and (3), as well as the Model Rule's concept that the lawyer has "implied authority" to disclose and use confidential client information, even without the client's consent.
6. Minority. A minority of the Commission objects to several provisions of the proposed Rule. See Explanation of Changes for paragraphs (b)(3), (b)(4) and (b)(5).
7. Variation in Other Jurisdictions. Model Rule 1.6 has arguably been subject to more variation among the jurisdictions that have adopted it (or perhaps more accurately, have adapted it) than any other Model Rule, ranging from states that prohibit disclosures of any information except to prevent death or substantial bodily harm, to those that permit disclosure to prevent financial injury, or even some states that mandate disclosure to prevent death or substantial bodily harm, or even to prevent a criminal act likely to result in financial injury. See "Selected State Variations," Model Rule 1.6, from Gillers, Simon & Perlman, REGULATION OF LAWYERS: STATUTES AND STANDARDS (2009), attached.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(a) A lawyer shall not reveal information relating to the representation of a client unless the client gives informed consent, the disclosure is impliedly authorized in order to carry out the representation or the disclosure is permitted by paragraph (b).	(a) A lawyer shall not reveal information ~~relating to the representation of a client~~ protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) unless the client gives informed consent, ~~the disclosure is impliedly authorized in order to carry out the representation~~ or the disclosure is permitted by paragraph (b).	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 Paragraph (a) is based on both Model Rule 1.6(a) and Cal. rule 3-100(A). The first sentence is taken from Cal. rule 3-100(A), revised to conform to the syntax and structure of the Model Rule. The Model Rule's concept of "implied authorization" has been stricken. The Commission recommends its rejection because it is an exclusion from the general rule of confidentiality that would threaten to become a catchall exemption that swallows the rule of confidentiality.
(b) A lawyer may reveal information relating to the representation of a client to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary:	(b) A lawyer may, but is not required to, reveal information ~~relating to the representation of a client~~ protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) to the extent that the lawyer reasonably believes the disclosure is necessary:	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 The introductory clause of paragraph (b) is also based on both the introductory clause of Model Rule 1.6(b) and the first part of current rule 3-100(B). The language of current rule 3-100(B) restates section 6068(e)(2) verbatim. However, as explained in the Introduction, the Commission recommends substituting the term "information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)" for "confidential information relating to the representation of a client" as is provided in current rule 3-100(B). The remainder of current rule 3-100(B) is found in subparagraph (b)(1).

* Proposed Rule 1.6, ALT3, Draft 14 (6/28/10). Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(1) to prevent reasonably certain death or substantial bodily harm;	(1) to prevent a criminal act that the lawyer reasonably ~~certain~~ believes is likely to result in death of or substantial bodily harm to, an individual, as provided in paragraph (c);	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 See Explanation of Changes, introductory clause of proposed Rule 1.6(b), above. The language included in subparagraph (1) is taken verbatim from current rule 3-100, with the only change being the substitution of “lawyer” for “member.”
(2) to prevent the client from committing a crime or fraud that is reasonably certain to result in substantial injury to the financial interests or property of another and in furtherance of which the client has used or is using the lawyer's services;	~~(2) to prevent the client from committing a crime or fraud that is reasonably certain to result in substantial injury to the financial interests or property of another and in furtherance of which the client has used or is using the lawyer's services;~~	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 The Commission recommends rejection of Model Rule 1.6(b)(2) and (b)(3), two exceptions to confidentiality that the ABA adopted in 2003. Both sections, which would permit a lawyer to disclose client information relating to the representation to prevent or rectify fraud, are inimical to California's strong policy on lawyer-client confidentiality and, in the view of the Commission, misguided attempts to protect the public that ultimately are more harmful to the public.
(3) to prevent, mitigate or rectify substantial injury to the financial interests or property of another that is reasonably certain to result or has resulted from the client's commission of a crime or fraud in furtherance of which the client has used the lawyer's services;	~~(3) to prevent, mitigate or rectify substantial injury to the financial interests or property of another that is reasonably certain to result or has resulted from the client's commission of a crime or fraud in furtherance of which the client has used the lawyer's services;~~	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 See Explanation of Changes to Model Rule 1.6(b)(2).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(4) to secure legal advice about the lawyer's compliance with these Rules;	(4~~2~~) to secure legal advice about the lawyer's compliance with ~~these Rules~~the lawyer's professional obligations;	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 Proposed Rule 1.6(b)(2) is based on Model Rule 1.6(b)(4). The substitution of "the lawyer's professional obligations" for "these Rules" recognizes that, in California, a lawyer's duties to a client derive not only from the Rules of Professional Conduct, but also from statutes and case law.
(5) to establish a claim or defense on behalf of the lawyer in a controversy between the lawyer and the client, to establish a defense to a criminal charge or civil claim against the lawyer based upon conduct in which the client was involved, or to respond to allegations in any proceeding concerning the lawyer's representation of the client; or	(5~~3~~) to establish a claim or defense on behalf of the lawyer in a controversy between the lawyer and the client; relating to establish a defense to a criminal charge or civil claim against an issue of breach, by the lawyer based upon conduct in which or by the client was involved, or to respond to allegations in any proceeding concerning the lawyer's representation of a duty arising out of the lawyer-client relationship; ~~or~~	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 Proposed Rule 1.6(b)(3) is based on Model Rule 1.6(b)(5), which has been modified to track the language of Cal. Evidence Code § 958, which provides: "There is no privilege under this article as to a communication relevant to an issue of breach, by the lawyer or by the client, of a duty arising out of the lawyer-client relationship." The exception in the Evidence Code to the lawyer-client privilege for a breach of duty arising from the lawyer-client relationship is substantially narrower than the corresponding exception in Model Rule 1.6(b)(5), which would permit the lawyer to reveal confidential information not only in controversies between the lawyer and client, but also between the lawyer and a third person. The breadth of Model Rule 1.6(b)(5) runs counter to California confidentiality policy and the Commission recommends its rejection. Minority. A minority of the Commission opposes the inclusion of paragraph (b)(3). Proposed paragraph (b)(3) is based on an exception to the lawyer-client privilege found in Evidence Code section 958. However, the minority takes the position that exception applies only when a court makes that determination. The minority maintains that paragraph (b)(3) – uniquely among all of the statutory privilege exceptions – would strip the client of that impartial determination by allowing the lawyer to determine when to disclose information the lawyer is required to maintain under section 6068(e)(1).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(6) to comply with other law or a court order.	(64) to comply with ~~other law or a~~ court order; or	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 Although the Commission recommends adoption of that part of Model Rule 1.6(b)(6) that permits compliance with a court order, it does not recommend adoption of the “other law” part of that provision. That phrase is too indeterminate to provide guidance to lawyers about when they might be permitted to reveal confidential client information and risks the unjustified disclosure such information. Minority. A minority of the Commission objects to the inclusion of subparagraph (b)(4) in the Rule. The minority believes a lawyer's duty is to resist the court order (per Section 6068(e)(1)) “at every peril to himself or herself.” A lawyer may not acquiesce in a court order. Rather, the lawyer is required to resist the order. That is what People v. Kor, cited at page 24 of the spreadsheet, says. “At every peril” does not merely require the lawyer to assert claims that the order is not authorized by other law or that the information is protected from disclosure. It requires the lawyer not to disclose, on pain of contempt. That duty is not cast aside as lightly as the proposed rule and Comment 18 suggest.
	(5) to protect the interests of a client under the limited circumstances identified in Rule 1.14(b).	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 The Commission recommends adoption of proposed paragraph (b)(4), which refers lawyers to proposed Rule 1.14, which would permit a lawyer to reveal confidential information to the extent necessary to protect the interests of a client who has “significantly diminished capacity” and is “at risk of substantial physical, financial or other harm unless action is taken.” Minority. A minority of the Commission objects to proposed Rule 1.14, and thus to the inclusion of subparagraph (b)(5) in the Rule.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	(c) Further obligations under paragraph (b)(1). Before revealing information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) in order to prevent a criminal act as provided in paragraph (b)(1), a lawyer shall, if reasonable under the circumstances:	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 Proposed Rule 1.6(c) carries forward current rule 3-100(C). In addition to the substitution of the term “information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)(1)” for “confidential information,” see Explanation of Changes to paragraphs (a) and (b), the only changes made conform the rule to California rule style and substitute “lawyer” for “member.”
	(1) make a good faith effort to persuade the client: (i) not to commit or to continue the criminal act or (ii) to pursue a course of conduct that will prevent the threatened death or substantial bodily harm; or do both (i) and (ii); and	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 See Explanation of changes for introductory clause to paragraph (c).
	(2) inform the client, at an appropriate time, of the lawyer's ability or decision to reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) as provided in paragraph (b)(1).	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 See Explanation of changes for introductory clause to paragraph (c).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	(d) In revealing information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) as permitted by paragraph (b), the lawyer's disclosure must be no more than is necessary to prevent the criminal act, secure confidential legal advice, establish a claim or defense in a controversy between the lawyer and a client, protect the interests of the client, or to comply with a court order given the information known to the member at the time of the disclosure.	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 Proposed Rule 1.6(d) carries forward current rule 3-100(D). In addition to including within paragraph (d)'s scope the additional exceptions in the proposed Rule (i.e., subparagraphs (b)(2), (b)(3) and (b)(4)), the only changes made are the substitution of the defined term, "information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)," changes to conform the rule to California rule style, and the substitution of "lawyer" for "member."
	(e) A lawyer who does not reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) as permitted by paragraph (b) does not violate this Rule.	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 See Explanation of changes for introductory clause to paragraph (c).

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[1] This Rule governs the disclosure by a lawyer of information relating to the representation of a client during the lawyer's representation of the client. See Rule 1.18 for the lawyer's duties with respect to information provided to the lawyer by a prospective client, Rule 1.9(c)(2) for the lawyer's duty not to reveal information relating to the lawyer's prior representation of a former client and Rules 1.8(b) and 1.9(c)(1) for the lawyer's duties with respect to the use of such information to the disadvantage of clients and former clients.	[1] This Rule governs the disclosure by a lawyer of information ~~relating to the representation of a client~~ protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) during the lawyer's representation of the client. See Rule 1.18 for the lawyer's duties with respect to information provided to the lawyer by a prospective client, Rule 1.9(c)(2) for the lawyer's duty not to reveal information relating to the lawyer's prior representation of a former client, and Rules ~~1.8(b)~~1.8.2 and 1.9(c)(1) for the lawyer's duties with respect to the use of such information to the disadvantage of clients and former clients.	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 Comment [1] is based on MR 1.6, cmt. [2]. As explained in the Introduction and the Explanation to paragraphs (a) and (b) of the Rule, the term "information protected by Business & Professions Code section 6068(e)" has been substituted for "information relating to the representation of a client." The only other change is to substitute "1.8.2" for "1.8(b)," which conforms the cross-reference to the Commission's numbering convention for the 1.8 series of rules.
[2] A fundamental principle in the client-lawyer relationship is that, in the absence of the client's informed consent, the lawyer must not reveal information relating to the representation. See Rule 1.0(e) for the definition of informed consent. This contributes to the trust that is the hallmark of the client-lawyer relationship. The client is thereby encouraged to seek legal assistance and to	Policies Furthered by the Duty of Confidentiality [2] ~~A fundamental principle in the client-lawyer relationship is that, in the absence of the client's informed consent, the lawyer must not reveal information relating~~ Paragraph (a) relates to the representation. See Rule 1.0a lawyer's obligations under Business and Professions Code section	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 Comment [2] is based on current California rule 3-100, Discussion ¶. 1, which in turn is based on Model Rule 1.6, cmt. [1]. The changes made during the original drafting of rule 3-100 were intended to emphasize California's strong policy of protecting client confidentiality.

¹ Note: Rows that are not shaded contain comments that are derived from the comments to Model Rule 1.6. Rows that are shaded contain comments derived from the Discussion paragraphs to current Cal. rule 3-100. Therefore, the red-line comparisons in the non-shaded rows are to the Model Rule comment; the red-line comparisons in the shaded rows are to the Discussion paragraph from current rule 3-100.

However, Comment [2] carries forward Comment [1] to current rule 3-100, which in turn is based closely on MR 1.6, cmt. [2]. Therefore, redline comparisons for proposed Comment [2] are to BOTH the Model Rule comment and the California rule Discussion paragraph.

² Proposed Rule, Discussion Draft 14 (6/28/10).

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
communicate fully and frankly with the lawyer even as to embarrassing or legally damaging subject matter. The lawyer needs this information to represent the client effectively and, if necessary, to advise the client to refrain from wrongful conduct. Almost without exception, clients come to lawyers in order to determine their rights and what is, in the complex of laws and regulations, deemed to be legal and correct. Based upon experience, lawyers know that almost all clients follow the advice given, and the law is upheld.	~~6068(e)–for the definition(1), which provides it is a duty of informed consent~~ 6068(e)–for the definition(1), which provides it is a duty of informed consent lawyer: “To maintain inviolate the confidence, and at every peril to himself or herself to preserve the secrets, of his or her client.~~–This~~” A lawyer’s duty to preserve the confidentiality of client information involves public policies of paramount importance. (=In re Jordan (1974) 12 Cal.3d 575, 580 [116 Cal.Rptr. 371]. Preserving the confidentiality of client information contributes to the trust that is the hallmark of the ~~client-lawyer-client~~ client-lawyer-client relationship. The client is thereby encouraged to seek legal assistance and to communicate fully and frankly with the lawyer even as to embarrassing or ~~legally damaging subject matter~~ detrimental subjects. The lawyer needs this information to represent the client effectively and, if necessary, to advise the client to refrain from wrongful conduct. Almost without exception, clients come to lawyers in order to determine their rights and what is, in the complex of laws and regulations, deemed to be legal and correct. Based upon experience, lawyers know that almost all clients follow the advice given, and the law is upheld. Paragraph (a) thus recognizes a fundamental principle in the lawyer-client relationship, that, in the absence of the client’s informed consent, a lawyer must not reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e). See, e.g., Commercial Standard Title Co. v. Superior Court (1979) 92 Cal.App.3d 934, 945 [155 Cal.Rptr.393].	In addition, the Commission has substituted “lawyer-client” for “client-lawyer” throughout the proposed Rules to conform the term to the usage in the Business & Professions and Evidence Codes. The substitution of “detrimental subjects” for “legally damaging subject matter” conforms the language in this Comment to the definition of “ information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)(1)” that appears in Comment [3], which in turn is based on long-standing California authority concerning the scope of the terms “confidence” and “secrets” in Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(e). See also Explanation of Changes for paragraphs (a) and (b), which explain the Commission’s recommended use of the defined term, “information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)(1).”

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[1] Duty of confidentiality. Paragraph (A) relates to a member's obligations under Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (e)(1), which provides it is a duty of a member: "To maintain inviolate the confidence, and at every peril to himself or herself to preserve the secrets, of his or her client." A member's duty to preserve the confidentiality of client information involves public policies of paramount importance. (In Re Jordan (1974) 12 Cal.3d 575, 580 [116 Cal.Rptr. 371].) Preserving the confidentiality of client information contributes to the trust that is the hallmark of the client-lawyer relationship. The client is thereby encouraged to seek legal assistance and to communicate fully and frankly with the lawyer even as to embarrassing or legally damaging subject matter. The lawyer needs this information to represent the client effectively and, if necessary, to advise the client to refrain from wrongful conduct. Almost without exception, clients come to lawyers in order to determine their rights and what is, in the complex of laws and regulations, deemed to be legal and correct. Based upon experience, lawyers know that almost all clients follow the advice given, and the law is upheld. Paragraph (A) thus recognizes a fundamental principle in the client-lawyer relationship, that, in the absence of the client's informed consent, a member must not reveal information relating to the representation. (See, e.g., Commercial Standard Title Co. v. Superior Court (1979) 92 Cal.App.3d 934, 945 [155 Cal.Rptr.393].)	[1~~2~~] ~~Duty of confidentiality.~~ Paragraph (A~~a~~) relates to a ~~member's~~lawyer's obligations under Business and Professions Code section 6068, ~~subdivision~~ (e), which provides it is a duty of a ~~member~~lawyer: "To maintain inviolate the confidence, and at every peril to himself or herself to preserve the secrets, of his or her client." A ~~member's~~lawyer's duty to preserve the confidentiality of client information involves public policies of paramount importance. In Re Jordan (1974) 12 Cal.3d 575, 580 [116 Cal.Rptr. 371]. Preserving the confidentiality of client information contributes to the trust that is the hallmark of the ~~client~~-lawyer-client relationship. The client is thereby encouraged to seek legal assistance and to communicate fully and frankly with the lawyer even as to embarrassing or ~~legally damaging subject matter~~detrimental subjects. The lawyer needs this information to represent the client effectively and, if necessary, to advise the client to refrain from wrongful conduct. Almost without exception, clients come to lawyers in order to determine their rights and what is, in the complex of laws and regulations, deemed to be legal and correct. Based upon experience, lawyers know that almost all clients follow the advice given, and the law is upheld. Paragraph (A~~a~~) thus recognizes a fundamental principle in the ~~client~~-lawyer-client relationship, that, in the absence of the client's informed consent, a ~~member~~lawyer must not reveal information ~~relating to the representation~~protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e).	COMPARISON TO CAL. RULE 3-100 See Explanation of Changes in previous row.

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	See, e.g., Commercial Standard Title Co. v. Superior Court (1979) 92 Cal.App.3d 934, 945 [155 Cal.Rptr.393].
[3] The principle of client-lawyer confidentiality is given effect by related bodies of law: the attorney-client privilege, the work product doctrine and the rule of confidentiality established in professional ethics. The attorney-client privilege and work-product doctrine apply in judicial and other proceedings in which a lawyer may be called as a witness or otherwise required to produce evidence concerning a client. The rule of client-lawyer confidentiality applies in situations other than those where evidence is sought from the lawyer through compulsion of law. The confidentiality rule, for example, applies not only to matters communicated in confidence by the client but also to all information relating to the representation, whatever its source. A lawyer may not disclose such information except as authorized or required by the Rules of Professional Conduct or other law. See also Scope.	~~[3] The principle of client-lawyer confidentiality is given effect by related bodies of law: the attorney-client privilege, the work product doctrine and the rule of confidentiality established in professional ethics. The attorney-client privilege and work-product doctrine apply in judicial and other proceedings in which a lawyer may be called as a witness or otherwise required to produce evidence concerning a client. The rule of client-lawyer confidentiality applies in situations other than those where evidence is sought from the lawyer through compulsion of law. The confidentiality rule, for example, applies not only to matters communicated in confidence by the client but also to all information relating to the representation, whatever its source. A lawyer may not disclose such information except as authorized or required by the Rules of Professional Conduct or other law. See also Scope.~~	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 The Commission has substituted new proposed Comments [3] to [6] to define the term, "information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)." These comments use as their starting point California rule 3-100, Discussion ¶. 2, which in turn is based on Model Rule 1.6, cmt. [3]. See Explanation of Changes for Comment [3], below.
[2] Client-lawyer confidentiality encompasses the attorney-client privilege, the work-product doctrine and ethical standards of confidentiality. The	Information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e). ~~[23] Client-lawyer confidentiality encompasses the attorney-client privilegeAs used in this Rule, the work-product doctrine and ethical standards of~~	COMPARISON TO CAL. RULE 3-100 As noted, the Commission recommends substitution of new proposed Comments [3] to [6], using as their starting point California rule 3-100, Discussion ¶. 2, which in turn is based principle of client-lawyer confidentiality applies to information relating to the representation, whatever its source, and encompasses matters communicated in confidence by the client, and therefore protected by the attorney-client privilege, matters protected by the work product doctrine, and matters protected under ethical standards of confidentiality, all as established in law, rule and policy. (See In the Matter of Johnson (Rev. Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179; Goldstein v. Lees (1975) 46 Cal.3d 614, 621 [120 Cal. Rptr. 253].) The attorney-client privilege and work-product doctrine apply in judicial and other proceedings in which a member may be called as a witness or be otherwise compelled to produce evidence concerning a client. A member's ethical duty of confidentiality is not so limited in its scope of protection for the client-lawyer relationship of trust and prevents a member from revealing the client's confidential information even when not confronted with such compulsion. Thus, a member may not reveal such information except with the consent of the client or as authorized or required by the State Bar Act, these rules, or other law.	~~confidentiality. The principle of client-lawyer confidentiality applies to~~ "information ~~relating to~~ protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)" ~~consists of information gained by virtue of the representation of a client, whatever its source, and encompasses matters communicated in confidence by the client, and therefore~~ that (a) is protected by the attorney-lawyer-client privilege, matters protected by (b) is likely to be embarrassing or detrimental to the work-product doctrine client if disclosed, and matters protected under ethical standards or (c) the client has requested be kept confidential. Therefore, the lawyer's duty of confidentiality, all as established defined in law, rule Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) is broader than lawyer-client privilege. See In the Matter of Johnson (Rev. Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179; Goldstein v. Lees (1975) 46 Cal. App.3d 614, 621 [120 Cal. Rptr. 253]. ~~The attorney-client privilege and work-product doctrine apply in judicial and other proceedings in which a member may be called as a witness or be otherwise compelled to produce evidence concerning a client. A member's ethical duty of confidentiality is not so limited in its scope of protection for the client-lawyer relationship of trust and prevents a member from revealing the client's confidential information even when not confronted with such compulsion. Thus, a member may not reveal such information except with the consent of the client or as authorized or required by the State Bar Act, these rules, or other law.~~	loosely on Model Rule 1.6, cmt. [3]. The purpose of Comments [3] to [6] is to delimit the scope of a lawyer's duty of confidentiality, as well as provide a definition for "information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)". Because of California's strong policy of protecting client confidentiality and the apparent disjunction in language between subdivisions (1) and (2) of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(e), (see Explanation of Changes for proposed paragraphs (a) and (b)), the Commission views the expansion of rule 3-100, Discussion ¶. 2, as critical to providing guidance to lawyers in this important area and protection to clients.

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	Scope of the Lawyer-Client Privilege [4] The protection against compelled disclosure or compelled production that is afforded lawyer-client communications under the privilege is typically asserted in judicial and other proceedings in which a lawyer or client might be called as a witness or otherwise compelled to produce evidence. Because the lawyer-client privilege functions to limit the amount of evidence available to a tribunal, its protection is somewhat limited in scope.	COMPARISON TO CAL. RULE 3-100 See Explanation of Changes for proposed Comment [3].
	Scope of the Duty of Confidentiality [5] A lawyer's duty of confidentiality, on the other hand, is not so limited as the lawyer-client privilege. The duty protects the relationship of trust between a lawyer and client by preventing the lawyer from revealing the client's protected information, regardless of its source and even when not confronted with compulsion. As a result, any information the lawyer has learned during the representation, even if not relevant to the matter for which the lawyer was retained, is protected under the duty so long as the lawyer acquires the information by virtue of being in the lawyer-client relationship. Information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) is not concerned only with information that a lawyer might learn after a lawyer-client relationship has been established.	COMPARISON TO CAL. RULE 3-100 See Explanation of Changes for proposed Comment [3].

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	Information that a lawyer acquires about a client before the relationship is established, but which is relevant to the matter for which the lawyer is retained, is protected under the duty regardless of its source. The duty also applies to information a lawyer acquires during a lawyer-client consultation, whether from the client or the client's representative, even if a lawyer-client relationship does not result from the consultation. See Rule 1.18. Thus, a lawyer may not reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) except with the consent of the client or an authorized representative of the client, or as authorized by these Rules or the State Bar Act.
	Relationship of Confidentiality to Lawyer Work Product [6] "Information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)" does not ordinarily include (i) a lawyer's legal knowledge or legal research or (ii) information that is generally known in the local community or in the trade, field or profession to which the information relates. However, the fact that information can be discovered in a public record does not, by itself, render that information "generally known" and therefore outside the scope of this Rule. See In the Matter of Johnson (Rev. Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.	COMPARISON TO CAL. RULE 3-100 See Explanation of Changes for proposed Comment [3].

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[4] Paragraph (a) prohibits a lawyer from revealing information relating to the representation of a client. This prohibition also applies to disclosures by a lawyer that do not in themselves reveal protected information but could reasonably lead to the discovery of such information by a third person. A lawyer's use of a hypothetical to discuss issues relating to the representation is permissible so long as there is no reasonable likelihood that the listener will be able to ascertain the identity of the client or the situation involved.	[4~~7~~] Paragraph (a) prohibits a lawyer from revealing information ~~relating to the representation of a client~~ protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e). This prohibition also applies to disclosures by a lawyer that do not in themselves reveal protected information but could reasonably lead to the discovery of such information by a third person. A lawyer's use of a hypothetical to discuss issues relating to the client's representation is permissible so long as there is no reasonable likelihood that the listener will be able to ascertain the identity of the client or the situation involved.	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 Comment [4] is identical to Model Rule 1.6, cmt. [4], except for the substitution of "information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)," a defined term, for the Model Rule's "information relating to the representation," and the addition of "client's" to modify "representation" for clarification.
Authorized Disclosure [5] Except to the extent that the client's instructions or special circumstances limit that authority, a lawyer is impliedly authorized to make disclosures about a client when appropriate in carrying out the representation. In some situations, for example, a lawyer may be impliedly authorized to admit a fact that cannot properly be disputed or to make a disclosure that facilitates a satisfactory conclusion to a matter. Lawyers in a firm may, in the course of the firm's practice, disclose to each other information relating to a client of the firm, unless the client has instructed that particular information be confined to specified lawyers.	Authorized Disclosure [5~~8~~] ~~Except to the extent that the client's instructions or special circumstances limit that authority, a lawyer is impliedly authorized to make disclosures about a client when appropriate in carrying out the representation. In some situations, for example, a lawyer may be impliedly authorized to admit a fact that cannot properly be disputed or to make a disclosure that facilitates a satisfactory conclusion to a matter.~~ Lawyers in a firm may, in the course of the firm's practice, disclose to each other information relating to a client of the firm, unless the client has instructed that particular information be confined to specified lawyers.	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 Comment [8] is based on Model Rule 1.6, cmt. [5]. The first two sentences of the Model Rule comment have been deleted because the Commission has rejected the ABA's theory of implied authority with respect to confidentiality because it is an exclusion from the general rule of confidentiality that would threaten to become a catchall exemption that swallows the rule of confidentiality. See Explanation of Changes for paragraph (a).

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Disclosure Adverse to Client [6] Although the public interest is usually best served by a strict rule requiring lawyers to preserve the confidentiality of information relating to the representation of their clients, the confidentiality rule is subject to limited exceptions. Paragraph (b)(1) recognizes the overriding value of life and physical integrity and permits disclosure reasonably necessary to prevent reasonably certain death or substantial bodily harm. Such harm is reasonably certain to occur if it will be suffered imminently or if there is a present and substantial threat that a person will suffer such harm at a later date if the lawyer fails to take action necessary to eliminate the threat. Thus, a lawyer who knows that a client has accidentally discharged toxic waste into a town's water supply may reveal this information to the authorities if there is a present and substantial risk that a person who drinks the water will contract a life-threatening or debilitating disease and the lawyer's disclosure is necessary to eliminate the threat or reduce the number of victims.	Disclosure Adverse to Client as Permitted by Paragraph (b)(1) ~~[6] Although the public interest is usually best served by a strict rule requiring lawyers to preserve the confidentiality of information relating to the representation of their clients, the confidentiality rule is subject to limited exceptions. Paragraph (b)(1) recognizes the overriding value of life and physical integrity and permits disclosure reasonably necessary to prevent reasonably certain death or substantial bodily harm. Such harm is reasonably certain to occur if it will be suffered imminently or if there is a present and substantial threat that a person will suffer such harm at a later date if the lawyer fails to take action necessary to eliminate the threat. Thus, a lawyer who knows that a client has accidentally discharged toxic waste into a town's water supply may reveal this information to the authorities if there is a present and substantial risk that a person who drinks the water will contract a life-threatening or debilitating disease and the lawyer's disclosure is necessary to eliminate the threat or reduce the number of victims.~~	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 In place of Model Rule 1.6, cmt. [1], which is the Model Rule comment intended to provide guidance to lawyers with respect to Model Rule 1.6(b)(1), the Commission has substituted proposed Comments [9] to [18], which are carried over largely unchanged from current rule 3-100, Discussion ¶¶. 3 to 12. See Explanation of Changes for proposed Comment [9].
[3] Narrow exception to duty of confidentiality under this Rule. Notwithstanding the important public policies promoted by lawyers adhering to the core duty of confidentiality, the overriding value of life permits disclosures otherwise prohibited under	~~[39] Narrow exception to duty of confidentiality under this Rule. Notwithstanding the important public policies promoted by lawyers adhering to the core duty of confidentiality, the overriding value of life permits certain disclosures otherwise prohibited~~	COMPARISON TO CAL. RULE 3-100 As noted, the Commission has carried forward Discussion paragraphs 3 to 12 of current rule 3-100 largely unchanged. Assembly Bill 1101, which amended Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(e)

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Business & Professions Code section 6068(e), subdivision (1). Paragraph (B), which restates Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (e)(2), identifies a narrow confidentiality exception, absent the client's informed consent, when a member reasonably believes that disclosure is necessary to prevent a criminal act that the member reasonably believes is likely to result in the death of, or substantial bodily harm to an individual. Evidence Code section 956.5, which relates to the evidentiary attorney-client privilege, sets forth a similar express exception. Although a member is not permitted to reveal confidential information concerning a client's past, completed criminal acts, the policy favoring the preservation of human life that underlies this exception to the duty of confidentiality and the evidentiary privilege permits disclosure to prevent a future or ongoing criminal act.	under Business & Professions Code section 6068(e), ~~subdivision (1). Paragraph (B)(1), which restates is based on~~ Business and Professions Code section 6068, ~~subdivision (e)(2), identifies which narrowly permits a narrow confidentiality exception, absent the client's informed consent, when a member reasonably believes that disclosure is necessary~~ lawyer to prevent a criminal act that the member reasonably believes is likely to result in the death of, or substantial bodily harm to an individual disclose information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) even without client consent. Evidence Code section 956.5, which relates to the evidentiary ~~attorney~~ lawyer-client privilege, sets forth a similar express exception. Although a ~~member~~ lawyer is not permitted to reveal ~~confidential~~ protected information concerning a client's past, completed criminal acts, the policy favoring the preservation of human life that underlies this exception to the duty of confidentiality and the evidentiary privilege permits disclosure to prevent a future or ongoing criminal act.	to provide for an exception that would permit a lawyer to reveal confidential information to prevent a criminal act likely to result in death or substantial bodily harm, also provided in Section 3 of the Bill for the appointment of a task force "to make recommendations for a rule of professional conduct regarding professional responsibility issues related to the implementation of this act." The legislature also identified in Section 3 a series of issues for the Task Force to address: "(1) Whether an attorney must inform a client or a prospective client about the attorney's discretion to reveal the client's or prospective client's confidential information to the extent that the attorney reasonably believes that the disclosure is necessary to prevent a criminal act that the attorney reasonably believes is likely to result in the death of, or substantial bodily harm to, an individual. (2) Whether an attorney must attempt to dissuade the client from committing the perceived criminal conduct prior to revealing the client's confidential information, and how those conflicts might be avoided or minimized. (3) Whether conflict-of-interest issues between the attorney and client arise once the attorney elects to disclose the client's confidential information, and how those conflicts might be avoided or minimized. (4) Other similar issues that are directly related to the disclosure of confidential information permitted by this act." After reviewing rule 3-100, Discussion ¶¶. 3-12, the Commission determined first, that the Model Rule comment inadequately addressed the issues the Legislature had identified; (2) did not provide the guidance to lawyers found in the rule 3-100 Discussion; and (3) that few changes, other than those to conform to California rule style and numbering, were warranted. Consequently, the Discussion to current rule 3-100 remains largely intact. As previously noted, the Commission recommends the substitution of "information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)(1)" for "confidential information relating to the representation of a client," the term used in section 6068(e)(2). See Introduction and Explanation of Changes for paragraphs (a) and (b),

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[4] Member not subject to discipline for revealing confidential information as permitted under this Rule. Rule 3-100, which restates Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (e)(2), reflects a balancing between the interests of preserving client confidentiality and of preventing a criminal act that a member reasonably believes is likely to result in death or substantial bodily harm to an individual. A member who reveals information as permitted under this rule is not subject to discipline.	Lawyer Not Subject to Discipline for Revealing Protected Information as Permitted Under Paragraph (b)(1) ~~[4] Member not subject to discipline for revealing confidential information as permitted under this Rule. Rule 3-100, which restates Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (e)(2);~~ Paragraph (b)(1) reflects a balancing between the interests of preserving client confidentiality and of preventing a criminal act that a ~~member~~lawyer reasonably believes is likely to result in death or substantial bodily harm to an individual. A ~~member~~lawyer who reveals protected information as permitted under ~~this rule~~paragraph (b)(1) is not subject to discipline.	COMPARISON TO CAL. RULE 3-100 See Explanation of Changes for proposed Comment [9].

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[5] No duty to reveal confidential information. Neither Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (e)(2) nor this rule imposes an affirmative obligation on a member to reveal information in order to prevent harm. (See rule 1-100(A).) A member may decide not to reveal confidential information. Whether a member chooses to reveal confidential information as permitted under this rule is a matter for the individual member to decide, based on all the facts and circumstances, such as those discussed in paragraph [6] of this discussion.	No Duty to Reveal Information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) ~~[511] No duty to reveal confidential information.~~ Neither Business and Professions Code section 6068, ~~subdivision~~ (e)(2) nor ~~this rule~~ paragraph (b)(1) imposes an affirmative obligation on a ~~member~~ lawyer to reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) in order to prevent harm. ~~(See rule 1-100(A).) A member lawyer~~ may decide not to reveal ~~confidential~~ such information. Whether a ~~member lawyer~~ chooses to reveal ~~confidential~~ protected information as permitted under this ~~rule~~ Rule is a matter for the individual ~~member lawyer~~ to decide, based on all the facts and circumstances, such as those discussed in ~~paragraph~~ Comment [612] of this ~~discussion~~ Rule.	COMPARISON TO CAL. RULE 3-100 See Explanation of Changes for proposed Comment [9].
[6] Deciding to reveal confidential information as permitted under paragraph (B). Disclosure permitted under paragraph (B) is ordinarily a last resort, when no other available action is reasonably likely to prevent the criminal act. Prior to revealing information as permitted under paragraph (B), the member must, if reasonable under the circumstances, make a good faith effort to persuade	Deciding to Reveal Protected Information as Permitted Under Paragraph (b)(1) ~~[612] Deciding to reveal confidential information as permitted under paragraph (B).~~ Disclosure permitted under paragraph (~~B~~) (1) is ordinarily a last resort, when no other available action is reasonably likely to prevent the criminal act. Prior to revealing protected information as permitted under paragraph (~~B~~) (1), the ~~member lawyer~~ must, if reasonable under the circumstances, make a good	COMPARISON TO CAL. RULE 3-100 See Explanation of Changes for proposed Comment [9].

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
the client to take steps to avoid the criminal act or threatened harm. Among the factors to be considered in determining whether to disclose confidential information are the following: (1) the amount of time that the member has to make a decision about disclosure; (2) whether the client or a third party has made similar threats before and whether they have ever acted or attempted to act upon them; (3) whether the member believes the member's efforts to persuade the client or a third person not to engage in the criminal conduct have or have not been successful; (4) the extent of adverse effect to the client's rights under the Fifth, Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution and analogous rights and privacy rights under Article 1 of the Constitution of the State of California that may result from disclosure contemplated by the member; (5) the extent of other adverse effects to the client that may result from disclosure contemplated by the member; and (6) the nature and extent of information that	faith effort to persuade the client to take steps to avoid the criminal act or threatened harm. Among the factors to be considered in determining whether to disclose ~~confidential~~such information are the following: (1) the amount of time that the ~~member~~lawyer has to make a decision about disclosure; (2) whether the client or a third party has made similar threats before and whether they have ever acted or attempted to act upon them; (3) whether the ~~member~~lawyer believes the ~~member's~~lawyer's efforts to persuade the client or a third person not to engage in the criminal conduct have or have not been successful; (4) the extent of adverse effect to the client's rights under the Fifth, Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution and analogous rights and privacy rights under Article 1 of the Constitution of the State of California that may result from disclosure contemplated by the ~~member~~lawyer; (5) the extent of other adverse effects to the client that may result from disclosure

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
must be disclosed to prevent the criminal act or threatened harm. A member may also consider whether the prospective harm to the victim or victims is imminent in deciding whether to disclose the confidential information. However, the imminence of the harm is not a prerequisite to disclosure and a member may disclose the information without waiting until immediately before the harm is likely to occur.	contemplated by the ~~member~~lawyer; and (6) the nature and extent of protected information that must be disclosed to prevent the criminal act or threatened harm. A ~~member~~lawyer may also consider whether the prospective harm to the victim or victims is imminent in deciding whether to disclose the ~~confidential~~protected information. However, the imminence of the harm is not a prerequisite to disclosure, and a ~~member~~lawyer may disclose the protected information without waiting until immediately before the harm is likely to occur.
[7] Counseling client or third person not to commit a criminal act reasonably likely to result in death of substantial bodily harm. Subparagraph (C)(1) provides that before a member may reveal confidential information, the member must, if reasonable under the circumstances, make a good faith effort to persuade the client not to commit or to continue the criminal act, or to persuade the client to otherwise pursue a course of conduct that will prevent the threatened death or substantial bodily harm, or if necessary, do both. The interests protected by such counseling is the client's interest	Counseling Client or Third Person Not to Commit a Criminal Act Reasonably Likely to Result in Death of Substantial Bodily Harm ~~[7]13 Counseling client or third person not to commit a criminal act reasonably likely to result in death of substantial bodily harm.~~ SubparagraphParagraph (C)(1) provides that, before a ~~member~~lawyer may reveal ~~confidential~~ information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)(1), the ~~member~~lawyer must, if reasonable under the circumstances, make a good faith effort to persuade the client not to commit or to continue the criminal act, or to persuade the client to otherwise pursue a course of conduct that will prevent the threatened death or substantial bodily	COMPARISON TO CAL. RULE 3-100 See Explanation of Changes for proposed Comment [9].

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
in limiting disclosure of confidential information and in taking responsible action to deal with situations attributable to the client. If a client, whether in response to the member's counseling or otherwise, takes corrective action - such as by ceasing the criminal act before harm is caused - the option for permissive disclosure by the member would cease as the threat posed by the criminal act would no longer be present. When the actor is a nonclient or when the act is deliberate or malicious, the member who contemplates making adverse disclosure of confidential information may reasonably conclude that the compelling interests of the member or others in their own personal safety preclude personal contact with the actor. Before counseling an actor who is a nonclient, the member should, if reasonable under the circumstances, first advise the client of the member's intended course of action. If a client or another person has already acted but the intended harm has not yet occurred, the member should consider, if reasonable under the circumstances, efforts to persuade the client or third person to warn the victim or consider other appropriate action to prevent the harm. Even when the member has concluded that paragraph (B) does not permit the member to reveal confidential information, the member nevertheless is permitted to counsel the client as to why it may be in the client's best interest to consent to the attorney's disclosure of that information.	harm, including persuading the client to take action to prevent a third person from committing or continuing a criminal act. If necessary, the client may be persuaded to do both. The interests protected by such counseling ~~is~~are the client's ~~interest~~interests in limiting disclosure of ~~confidential~~protected information and in taking responsible action to deal with situations attributable to the client. If a client, whether in response to the ~~member's~~lawyer's counseling or otherwise, takes corrective action – such as by ceasing the client's own criminal act or by dissuading a third person from committing or continuing a criminal act before harm is caused – the option for permissive disclosure by the ~~member~~lawyer would cease ~~as~~because the threat posed by the criminal act would no longer be present. When the actor is a nonclient or when the act is deliberate or malicious, the ~~member~~lawyer who contemplates making adverse disclosure of ~~confidential~~protected information may reasonably conclude that the compelling interests of the ~~member~~lawyer or others in their own personal safety preclude personal contact with the actor. Before counseling an actor who is a nonclient, the ~~member~~lawyer should, if reasonable under the circumstances, first advise the client of the ~~member's~~lawyer's intended course of action. If a client or another person has already acted but the intended harm has not yet occurred, the ~~member~~lawyer should consider, if reasonable under the circumstances, efforts to persuade the client or third person to warn the victim or consider other appropriate action to prevent the harm. Even when the ~~member~~lawyer has concluded that paragraph (B)(1) does not permit the ~~member~~lawyer to reveal confidentialprotected information, the ~~member~~lawyer nevertheless is permitted to counsel the client as to why it ~~may~~might be in the client's best interest to consent to the ~~attorney's~~lawyer's disclosure of that information.

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[9] Informing client of member's ability or decision to reveal confidential information under subparagraph (C)(2). A member is required to keep a client reasonably informed about significant developments regarding the employment or representation. Rule 3-500; Business and Professions Code, section 6068, subdivision (m). Paragraph (C)(2), however, recognizes that under certain circumstances, informing a client of the member's ability or decision to reveal confidential information under paragraph (B) would likely increase the risk of death or substantial bodily harm, not only to the originally-intended victims of the criminal act, but also to the client or members of the client's family, or to the member or the member's family or associates. Therefore, paragraph (C)(2) requires a member to inform the client of the member's ability or decision to reveal confidential information as provided in paragraph (B) only if it is	Requirement under Paragraph (c)(2) to Inform Client of Lawyer's Ability or Decision to Reveal Protected Information ~~[9]14~~ ~~Informing client of member's ability or decision to reveal confidential information under subparagraph (C)(2).~~ A ~~member~~lawyer is required to keep a client reasonably informed about significant developments regarding the employment or representation. Rule ~~3-500~~1.4; Business and Professions Code, section 6068, ~~subdivision~~(m). Paragraph (C)(2), however, recognizes that under certain circumstances, informing a client of the ~~member's~~lawyer's ability or decision to reveal confidentialprotected information under paragraph (B)(1) would likely increase the risk of death or substantial bodily harm, not only to the originally-intended victims of the criminal act, but also to the client or members of the client's family, or to the ~~member~~lawyer or the ~~member's~~lawyer's family or associates. Therefore, paragraph (C)(2) requires a ~~member~~lawyer to inform the client of the ~~member's~~lawyer's ability or decision to reveal	COMPARISON TO CAL. RULE 3-100 See Explanation of Changes for proposed Comment [9]. Note also that the Commission has recommended reversing the order of current rule 3-100, Discussion ¶¶. 8 and 9, to better track the order of the Rule paragraphs.

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
reasonable to do so under the circumstances. Paragraph (C)(2) further recognizes that the appropriate time for the member to inform the client may vary depending upon the circumstances. (See paragraph [10] of this discussion.) Among the factors to be considered in determining an appropriate time, if any, to inform a client are: (1) whether the client is an experienced user of legal services; (2) the frequency of the member's contact with the client; (3) the nature and length of the professional relationship with the client; (4) whether the member and client have discussed the member's duty of confidentiality or any exceptions to that duty; (5) the likelihood that the client's matter will involve information within paragraph (B); (6) the member's belief, if applicable, that so informing the client is likely to increase the likelihood that a criminal act likely to result in the death of, or substantial bodily harm to, an individual; and (7) the member's belief, if applicable, that good faith efforts to persuade a client not to	~~confidential~~protected information as provided in paragraph ~~(Bb)(1)~~ only if it is reasonable to do so under the circumstances. Paragraph ~~(Cc)~~(2) further recognizes that the appropriate time for the ~~member~~lawyer to inform the client may vary depending upon the circumstances. ~~{See paragraph comment [10] of this discussion.}~~ Among the factors to be considered in determining an appropriate time, if any, to inform a client are: (1) whether the client is an experienced user of legal services; (2) the frequency of the ~~member's~~lawyer's contact with the client; (3) the nature and length of the professional relationship with the client; (4) whether the ~~member~~lawyer and client have discussed the ~~member's~~lawyer's duty of confidentiality or any exceptions to that duty; (5) the likelihood that the client's matter will involve information within paragraph ~~(Bb)(1)~~; (6) the ~~member's~~lawyer's belief, if applicable, that so informing the client is likely to increase the likelihood that a criminal act likely to result in the death of, or substantial bodily harm to, an individual; and act on a threat have failed.	(7) the ~~member's~~lawyer's belief, if applicable, that good faith efforts to persuade a client not to act on a threat have failed.

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[8] Disclosure of confidential information must be no more than is reasonably necessary to prevent the criminal act. Under paragraph (D), disclosure of confidential information, when made, must be no more extensive than the member reasonably believes necessary to prevent the criminal act. Disclosure should allow access to the confidential information to only those persons who the member reasonably believes can act to prevent the harm. Under some circumstances, a member may determine that the best course to pursue is to make an anonymous disclosure to the potential victim or relevant law-enforcement authorities. What particular measures are reasonable depends on the circumstances known to the member. Relevant circumstances include the time available, whether the victim might be unaware of the threat, the member's prior course of dealings with the client, and the extent of the adverse effect on the client that may result from the disclosure contemplated by the member.	Disclosure of Protected Information as Permitted by Paragraph (b)(1) Must Be No More Than is Reasonably Necessary to Prevent the Criminal Act ~~[815] Disclosure of confidential information must be no more than is reasonably necessary to prevent the criminal act.~~ Under Paragraph (d) requires that disclosure of ~~confidential-protected~~ information as permitted by paragraph (b)(1), when made, must be no more extensive than the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to prevent the criminal act. Disclosure should allow access to the ~~confidential-protected~~ information to only those persons who the ~~member-lawyer~~ reasonably believes can act to prevent the harm. Under some circumstances, a ~~member-lawyer~~ may determine that the best course to pursue is to make an anonymous disclosure to the potential victim or relevant law-enforcement authorities. What particular measures are reasonable depends on the circumstances known to the ~~member-lawyer~~. Relevant circumstances include the time available, whether the victim might be unaware of the threat, the lawyer's prior course of dealings with the client, and the extent of the adverse effect on the client that may result from the disclosure contemplated by the ~~member-lawyer~~.	COMPARISON TO CAL. RULE 3-100 See Explanation of Changes for proposed Comments [9] and [14].

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[10] Avoiding a chilling effect on the lawyer-client relationship. The foregoing flexible approach to the member's informing a client of his or her ability or decision to reveal confidential information recognizes the concern that informing a client about limits on confidentiality may have a chilling effect on client communication. (See Discussion paragraph [1].) To avoid that chilling effect, one member may choose to inform the client of the member's ability to reveal information as early as the outset of the representation, while another member may choose to inform a client only at a point when that client has imparted information that may fall under paragraph (B), or even choose not to inform a client until such time as the member attempts to counsel the client as contemplated in Discussion paragraph [7]. In each situation, the member will have discharged properly the requirement under subparagraph (C)(2), and will not be subject to discipline.	Avoiding a Chilling Effect on the Lawyer-Client Relationship ~~[10]~~ ~~Avoiding a chilling effect on the lawyer-client relationship.~~ The foregoing flexible approach to ~~the member's~~ a lawyer informing a client of his or her ability or decision to reveal ~~confidential~~ protected information recognizes the concern that informing a client about limits on confidentiality may have a chilling effect on client communication. ~~(See Discussion paragraph comment [12].)~~ To avoid that chilling effect, one ~~member~~ lawyer may choose to inform the client of the ~~member's~~ lawyer's ability to reveal protected information as early as the outset of the representation, while another ~~member~~ lawyer may choose to inform a client only at a point when that client has imparted information that ~~may fall under~~ comes within paragraph ~~(B)~~ (b)(1), or even choose not to inform a client until ~~such time as~~ the ~~member~~ lawyer attempts to counsel the client ~~as contemplated in Discussion paragraph~~ under Comment [7]~~[13]~~. In each situation, the ~~member~~ lawyer will have ~~discharged properly~~ satisfied the ~~requirement~~ lawyer's obligation under ~~subparagraph~~ paragraph ~~(C)~~ (c)(2), and will not be subject to discipline.	COMPARISON TO CAL. RULE 3-100 See Explanation of Changes for proposed Comment [9].

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[11] Informing client that disclosure has been made; termination of the lawyer-client relationship. When a member has revealed confidential information under paragraph (B), in all but extraordinary cases the relationship between member and client will have deteriorated so as to make the member's representation of the client impossible. Therefore, the member is required to seek to withdraw from the representation (see rule 3-700(B)), unless the member is able to obtain the client's informed consent to the member's continued representation. The member must inform the client of the fact of the member's disclosure unless the member has a compelling interest in not informing the client, such as to protect the member, the member's family or a third person from the risk of death or substantial bodily harm.	Informing Client that Disclosure Has Been Made; Termination of the Lawyer-Client Relationship ~~[11]~~ ~~Informing client that disclosure has been made; termination of the lawyer-client relationship.~~ When a ~~member~~lawyer has revealed ~~confidential~~protected information under paragraph ~~(B)~~(1), in all but extraordinary cases the relationship between ~~member~~lawyer and client ~~that~~is based in mutual trust and confidence will have deteriorated so as to make the ~~member's~~lawyer's representation of the client impossible. Therefore, ~~when the member~~relationship has deteriorated because of the lawyer's disclosure, the lawyer is required to seek to withdraw from the representation ~~(, see rule 3-700(B))~~Rule 1.16, unless the ~~member is able to obtain the client's~~client has given his or her informed consent to the ~~member's~~lawyer's continued representation. The ~~member~~lawyer normally must inform the client of the fact of the ~~member's~~lawyer's disclosure—~~unless~~. If the ~~member~~lawyer has a compelling ~~interest in~~reason for not informing the client, such as to protect the ~~member~~lawyer, the ~~member's~~lawyer's family or a third person from the risk of death or substantial bodily harm, the lawyer must withdraw from the representation. See Rule 1.16.	COMPARISON TO CAL. RULE 3-100 See Explanation of Changes for proposed Comment [9].

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[12] Other consequences of the member's disclosure. Depending upon the circumstances of a member's disclosure of confidential information, there may be other important issues that a member must address. For example, if a member will be called as a witness in the client's matter, then rule 5-210 should be considered. Similarly, the member should consider his or her duties of loyalty and competency (rule 3-110).	Other Consequences of the Lawyer's Disclosure ~~[1218] Other consequences of the member's disclosure.~~ Depending ~~upon~~ on the circumstances of a ~~member's~~ lawyer's disclosure of ~~confidential~~ protected information as permitted by this Rule, there may be other important issues that a ~~member~~ lawyer must address. For example, ~~if a member will be called as a witness~~ lawyer who is likely to testify in ~~the client's~~ a matter, ~~then rule 5-210 should be considered~~ involving the client must comply with Rule 3.7. Similarly, the ~~member should~~ lawyer must also consider ~~his or her duties~~ the lawyer's duty of ~~loyalty~~ competence (Rule ~~1.1~~ 1.1) and ~~competency~~ whether the lawyer has a conflict of interest in continuing to represent the client (~~rule 3-110~~ Rule 1.7).	COMPARISON TO CAL. RULE 3-100 See Explanation of Changes for proposed Comment [9].
[7] Paragraph (b)(2) is a limited exception to the rule of confidentiality that permits the lawyer to reveal information to the extent necessary to enable affected persons or appropriate authorities to prevent the client from committing a crime or fraud, as defined in Rule 1.0(d), that is reasonably certain to result in substantial injury to the financial or property interests of another and in furtherance of which the client has used or is using the lawyer's services. Such a serious abuse of the client-lawyer relationship by the client forfeits the protection of this Rule. The client can, of course, prevent such	~~[7] Paragraph (b)(2) is a limited exception to the rule of confidentiality that permits the lawyer to reveal information to the extent necessary to enable affected persons or appropriate authorities to prevent the client from committing a crime or fraud, as defined in Rule 1.0(d), that is reasonably certain to result in substantial injury to the financial or property interests of another and in furtherance of which the client has used or is using the lawyer's services. Such a serious abuse of the client-lawyer relationship by the client forfeits the protection of this Rule. The client can, of course, prevent such~~	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 Because the Commission has recommended that Model Rule 1.6(b)(2) be stricken because it is inimical to California's strong policy on lawyer-client confidentiality, the Commission also recommends deletion of Model Rule 1.6, cmt. [7]. See Explanation of Changes for Model Rule 1.6(b)(2).

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
disclosure by refraining from the wrongful conduct. Although paragraph (b)(2) does not require the lawyer to reveal the client's misconduct, the lawyer may not counsel or assist the client in conduct the lawyer knows is criminal or fraudulent. See Rule 1.2(d). See also Rule 1.16 with respect to the lawyer's obligation or right to withdraw from the representation of the client in such circumstances, and Rule 1.13(c) which permits the lawyer, where the client is an organization, to reveal information relating to the representation in limited circumstances.	~~disclosure by refraining from the wrongful conduct. Although paragraph (b)(2) does not require the lawyer to reveal the client's misconduct, the lawyer may not counsel or assist the client in conduct the lawyer knows is criminal or fraudulent. See Rule 1.2(d). See also Rule 1.16 with respect to the lawyer's obligation or right to withdraw from the representation of the client in such circumstances, and Rule 1.13(c) which permits the lawyer, where the client is an organization, to reveal information relating to the representation in limited circumstances.~~
[8] Paragraph (b)(3) addresses the situation in which the lawyer does not learn of the client's crime or fraud until after it has been consummated. Although the client no longer has the option of preventing disclosure by refraining from the wrongful conduct, there will be situations in which the loss suffered by the affected person can be prevented, rectified or mitigated. In such situations, the lawyer may disclose information relating to the representation to the extent necessary to enable the affected persons to prevent or mitigate reasonably certain losses or to attempt to recoup their losses. Paragraph (b)(3) does not apply when a person who has committed a crime or fraud thereafter employs a lawyer for representation concerning that offense.	~~[8] Paragraph (b)(3) addresses the situation in which the lawyer does not learn of the client's crime or fraud until after it has been consummated. Although the client no longer has the option of preventing disclosure by refraining from the wrongful conduct, there will be situations in which the loss suffered by the affected person can be prevented, rectified or mitigated. In such situations, the lawyer may disclose information relating to the representation to the extent necessary to enable the affected persons to prevent or mitigate reasonably certain losses or to attempt to recoup their losses. Paragraph (b)(3) does not apply when a person who has committed a crime or fraud thereafter employs a lawyer for representation concerning that offense.~~	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 Because the Commission has recommended that Model Rule 1.6(b)(3) be stricken because it is inimical to California's strong policy on lawyer-client confidentiality, the Commission also recommends deletion of Model Rule 1.6, cmt. [8]. See Explanation of Changes for Model Rule 1.6(b)(2).

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[9] A lawyer's confidentiality obligations do not preclude a lawyer from securing confidential legal advice about the lawyer's personal responsibility to comply with these Rules. In most situations, disclosing information to secure such advice will be impliedly authorized for the lawyer to carry out the representation. Even when the disclosure is not impliedly authorized, paragraph (b)(4) permits such disclosure because of the importance of a lawyer's compliance with the Rules of Professional Conduct.	Disclosure as Permitted by Paragraphs (b)(2) through (b)(4). ~~[9] A lawyer's confidentiality obligations do not preclude a lawyer from securing confidential legal advice about the lawyer's personal responsibility to comply with these Rules. In most situations, disclosing information to secure such advice will be impliedly authorized for the lawyer to carry out the representation. Even when the disclosure is not impliedly authorized, paragraph (b)(4) permits such disclosure because of the importance of a lawyer's compliance with the Rules of Professional Conduct.~~	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 The Commission recommends that Model Rule 1.6, cmt. [9], concerning implied authorization, be stricken for the same reasons it has recommended the deletion of the first two sentences of Model Rule 1.6, cmt. [5]. See Explanation of Changes for deleted Model Rule 1.6, Comment [5].
[10]Where a legal claim or disciplinary charge alleges complicity of the lawyer in a client's conduct or other misconduct of the lawyer involving representation of the client, the lawyer may respond to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to establish a defense. The same is true with respect to a claim involving the conduct or representation of a former client. Such a charge can arise in a civil, criminal, disciplinary or other proceeding and can be based on a wrong allegedly committed by the lawyer against the client or on a wrong alleged by a third person, for example, a person claiming to have been defrauded by the lawyer and client acting together. The lawyer's right to respond arises when an assertion of such complicity has been made. Paragraph (b)(5) does	~~[10]~~19 ~~Where~~If a legal claim by a client or ~~disciplinary charge~~the client's representative alleges ~~complicity~~a breach of duty by the lawyer ~~in a client's conduct~~involving representation of the client or ~~other~~a disciplinary charge filed by or with the cooperation of the client or the client's representative alleges misconduct of the lawyer involving representation of the client, paragraph (b)(3) permits the lawyer ~~may~~to respond only to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to establish a defense. The same is true with respect to a claim involving ~~the~~ conduct or representation of a former client. ~~Such a charge can arise in a civil, criminal, disciplinary or other proceeding and can be based on a wrong allegedly committed by the lawyer against the client or on a wrong alleged by a~~	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 Comment [19] is based on Model Rule 1.6, cmt. [10]. The Model Rule comment has been revised to conform the comment to the more limited scope of proposed paragraph (b)(3), which is based on the limited exception in Evidence Code § 958. See Explanation of Changes for proposed paragraph (b)(3).

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
not require the lawyer to await the commencement of an action or proceeding that charges such complicity, so that the defense may be established by responding directly to a third party who has made such an assertion. The right to defend also applies, of course, where a proceeding has been commenced.	~~third person, for example, a person claiming to have been defrauded by the lawyer and client acting together. The lawyer's right to respond arises when an assertion of such complicity has been made. Paragraph (b)(5) does not require the lawyer to await the commencement of an action or proceeding that charges such complicity, so that the defense may be established by responding directly to a third party who has made such an assertion. The right to defend also applies, of course, where a proceeding has been commenced.~~
[11]A lawyer entitled to a fee is permitted by paragraph (b)(5) to prove the services rendered in an action to collect it. This aspect of the rule expresses the principle that the beneficiary of a fiduciary relationship may not exploit it to the detriment of the fiduciary.	~~[11]~~^[20] A lawyer entitled to a fee is permitted by paragraph (b)(~~5~~³) to prove the services rendered in an action to collect it. This aspect of the ~~rule~~^{Rule} expresses the principle that the beneficiary of a fiduciary relationship may not exploit it to the detriment of the fiduciary.	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 Comment [20] is identical to Model Rule 1.6, cmt. [11], except that “(b)(3)” has been substituted for the cross reference to “(b)(5),” and “Rule” substituted for “rule” to conform to California rule style.
[12]Other law may require that a lawyer disclose information about a client. Whether such a law supersedes Rule 1.6 is a question of law beyond the scope of these Rules. When disclosure of information relating to the representation appears to be required by other law, the lawyer must discuss the matter with the client to the extent required by Rule 1.4. If, however, the other law supersedes this Rule and requires disclosure, paragraph (b)(6) permits the lawyer to make such disclosures as are necessary to comply with the law.	~~[12]Other law may require that a lawyer disclose information about a client. Whether such a law supersedes Rule 1.6 is a question of law beyond the scope of these Rules. When disclosure of information relating to the representation appears to be required by other law, the lawyer must discuss the matter with the client to the extent required by Rule 1.4. If, however, the other law supersedes this Rule and requires disclosure, paragraph (b)(6) permits the lawyer to make such disclosures as are necessary to comply with the law.~~	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 Because the Commission has recommended striking that part of Model Rule 1.6(b)(6) that permits disclosure if permitted by other law, see Explanation of Changes for paragraph (b)(6), it recommends the deletion of MR 1.6, cmt. [12].

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[13]A lawyer may be ordered to reveal information relating to the representation of a client by a court or by another tribunal or governmental entity claiming authority pursuant to other law to compel the disclosure. Absent informed consent of the client to do otherwise, the lawyer should assert on behalf of the client all nonfrivolous claims that the order is not authorized by other law or that the information sought is protected against disclosure by the attorney-client privilege or other applicable law. In the event of an adverse ruling, the lawyer must consult with the client about the possibility of appeal to the extent required by Rule 1.4. Unless review is sought, however, paragraph (b)(6) permits the lawyer to comply with the court's order.	[13~~21~~] A lawyer may be ordered to reveal information ~~relating to the representation of a client~~protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) by a court or by another tribunal or governmental entity claiming authority pursuant to other law to compel the disclosure. Absent informed consent of the client to do otherwise, the lawyer ~~should~~must assert on behalf of the client all nonfrivolous claims that the order is not authorized by other law or that the information sought is protected against disclosure by the ~~attorney~~lawyer-client privilege or other applicable law. See, e.g., People v. Kor (1954) 129 Cal. App. 2d 436. In the event of an adverse ruling, the lawyer must consult with the client ~~about the possibility of appeal~~ to the extent required by Rule 1.4 about the possibility of appeal. Unless review is sought, however, paragraph (b)(~~6~~4) permits the lawyer to comply with the court's order.	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 Comment [21] is based on Model Rule 1.6, cmt. [13]. The phrase “must” has been substituted for “should” to emphasize the lawyer's duty under this Rule to protect the client's confidential information. The citation to People v. Kor, a seminal California Court of Appeal case on the lawyer's duty of confidentiality to the client, has been added to provided guidance.
[14]Paragraph (b) permits disclosure only to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes the disclosure is necessary to accomplish one of the purposes specified. Where practicable, the lawyer should first seek to persuade the client to take suitable action to obviate the need for disclosure. In any case, a disclosure adverse to the client's interest should be no greater than the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to accomplish the purpose. If the disclosure will be made in connection with a judicial	[14~~22~~] Paragraph (~~b~~d) permits disclosure as permitted by paragraphs (b)(2) through (b)(5) only to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes the disclosure is necessary to accomplish one of the purposes specified. Where practicable, the lawyer should first seek to persuade the client to take suitable action to obviate the need for disclosure. In any case, a disclosure adverse to the client's interest should be no greater than the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to accomplish the	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 Comment [22] is based on Model Rule 1.6, cmt. [14]. The clause, “as permitted by paragraphs (b)(2) through (b)(5)” has been added to emphasize that this Comment applies to the exceptions stated in those subparagraphs only. Proposed Comment [15], which provides guidance specific to the confidentiality exception in subparagraph (b)(1), is applicable to that paragraph.

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
proceeding, the disclosure should be made in a manner that limits access to the information to the tribunal or other persons having a need to know it and appropriate protective orders or other arrangements should be sought by the lawyer to the fullest extent practicable.	purpose. If the disclosure will be made in connection with a judicial proceeding, the disclosure should be made in a manner that limits access to the protected information to the tribunal or other persons having a need to know it and appropriate protective orders or other arrangements should be sought by the lawyer to the fullest extent practicable.
[15] Paragraph (b) permits but does not require the disclosure of information relating to a client's representation to accomplish the purposes specified in paragraphs (b)(1) through (b)(6). In exercising the discretion conferred by this Rule, the lawyer may consider such factors as the nature of the lawyer's relationship with the client and with those who might be injured by the client, the lawyer's own involvement in the transaction and factors that may extenuate the conduct in question. A lawyer's decision not to disclose as permitted by paragraph (b) does not violate this Rule. Disclosure may be required, however, by other Rules. Some Rules require disclosure only if such disclosure would be permitted by paragraph (b). See Rules 1.2(d), 4.1(b), 8.1 and 8.3. Rule 3.3, on the other hand, requires disclosure in some circumstances regardless of whether such disclosure is permitted by this Rule. See Rule 3.3(c).	~~[15] [23] Paragraph (b) permits but does not require the disclosure of information relating to a client's representation protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) to accomplish the purposes specified in paragraphs (b)(12) through (b)(65). In exercising the discretion conferred by this Rule, the lawyer may consider such factors as the nature of the lawyer's relationship with the client and with those who might be injured by the client, the lawyer's own involvement in the transaction and factors that may extenuate the conduct in question. A lawyer's decision not to disclose as permitted by paragraph (b) does not violate this Rule. Disclosure may be required, however, by other Rules. Some Rules require disclosure only if such disclosure would be permitted by paragraph (b). See Rules 1.2(d), 4.1(b), 8.1 and 8.3. Rule 3.3, on the other hand, requires disclosure in some circumstances regardless of whether such disclosure is permitted by this Rule. See Rule 3.3(c).~~	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 Comment [23] is based on Model Rule 1.6, cmt. [15]. The phrase, "(b)(2) through (b)(5)" has been substituted for "(b)(1) through (b)(6)" to conform to the structure of the proposed Rule and to emphasize that this Comment applies to the exceptions stated in those subparagraphs only. Proposed Comment [11], which provides guidance specific to the confidentiality exception in subparagraph (b)(1), is applicable to that paragraph. The remainder of the Model Rule comment has been deleted because the points made are better presented in the Discussion paragraphs of current rule 3-100 that have been carried forward. See Comments [9]-[18] and Explanations thereto.

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Acting Competently to Preserve Confidentiality [16]A lawyer must act competently to safeguard information relating to the representation of a client against inadvertent or unauthorized disclosure by the lawyer or other persons who are participating in the representation of the client or who are subject to the lawyer's supervision. See Rules 1.1, 5.1 and 5.3.	Acting Competently to Preserve Confidentiality ~~[16]~~²⁴ A lawyer must act competently to safeguard information ~~relating to the representation of a client~~ protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) against inadvertent or unauthorized disclosure by the lawyer or other persons who are participating in the representation of the client or who are subject to the lawyer's supervision. See Rules 1.1, 5.1 and 5.3.	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 Comment [24] is identical to Model Rule 1.6, cmt. [16], except for the substitution of the defined term, "information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)(1)". See Introduction and Explanation of Changes for paragraphs (a) and (b).
[17]When transmitting a communication that includes information relating to the representation of a client, the lawyer must take reasonable precautions to prevent the information from coming into the hands of unintended recipients. This duty, however, does not require that the lawyer use special security measures if the method of communication affords a reasonable expectation of privacy. Special circumstances, however, may warrant special precautions. Factors to be considered in determining the reasonableness of the lawyer's expectation of confidentiality include the sensitivity of the information and the extent to which the privacy of the communication is protected by law or by a confidentiality agreement. A client may require the lawyer to implement special security measures not required by this Rule or may give informed consent to the use of a means of communication that would otherwise be	~~[17]~~²⁵ When transmitting a communication that includes information ~~relating to the representation of a client~~ protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e), the lawyer must take reasonable precautions to prevent the information from coming into the hands of unintended recipients. This duty, however, does not require that the lawyer use special security measures if the method of communication affords a reasonable expectation of privacy. Special circumstances, however, may warrant special precautions. Factors to be considered in determining the reasonableness of the lawyer's expectation of confidentiality include the sensitivity of the information and the extent to which the privacy of the communication is protected by law or by a confidentiality agreement. A client may require the lawyer to implement special security measures not required by this	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 Comment [25] is identical to Model Rule 1.6, cmt. [17], except for the substitution of the defined term, "information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)(1)". See Introduction and Explanation of Changes for paragraphs (a) and (b).

ABA Model Rule 1.6/Cal. Rule 3-100 Confidentiality of Information Comment¹	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information Comment²	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
prohibited by this Rule.	Rule or may give informed consent to the use of a means of communication that would otherwise be prohibited by this Rule.
[13] Other exceptions to confidentiality under California law. Rule 3-100 is not intended to augment, diminish, or preclude reliance upon, any other exceptions to the duty to preserve the confidentiality of client information recognized under California law. (Added by order of the Supreme Court, operative July 1, 2004.)	~~[13] Other exceptions to confidentiality under California law. Rule 3-100 is not intended to augment, diminish, or preclude reliance upon, any other exceptions to the duty to preserve the confidentiality of client information recognized under California law. (Added by order of the Supreme Court, operative July 1, 2004.)~~	COMPARISON TO CAL. RULE 3-100 Discussion ¶. [13] to current rule 3-100 has been deleted as superfluous, as proposed Rule 1.6 is a comprehensive statement of the exceptions to confidentiality in California.
Former Client [18] The duty of confidentiality continues after the client-lawyer relationship has terminated. See Rule 1.9(c)(2). See Rule 1.9(c)(1) for the prohibition against using such information to the disadvantage of the former client.	Former Client ~~[18]~~^[26] The duty of confidentiality continues after the ~~client~~-lawyer-~~client~~ relationship has terminated. See Rule 1.9(c)(2). See Rule 1.9(c)(1) for the prohibition against using such information to the disadvantage of the former client.	COMPARISON TO MODEL RULE 1.6 Comment [26] is nearly identical to Model Rule 1.6, cmt. [18], the only change being to change “client-lawyer” to “lawyer-client” to conform with the convention used in the Bus. & Prof. and Evid. Codes.
	Government Lawyers [27] This Rule applies to lawyers representing governmental organizations. See Rule 1.13, Comment [15].	Comment [27] has no counterpart in the Model Rule. It has been added to provide a cross-reference to government lawyers seeking to determine the applicability of government employee whistle blower statutes to government lawyers.

Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information

(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to the Public Comment Draft)

- (a) A lawyer shall not reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) unless the client gives informed consent or the disclosure is permitted by paragraph (b).
- (b) A lawyer may, but is not required to, reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) to the extent that the lawyer reasonably believes the disclosure is necessary:
 - (1) to prevent a criminal act that the lawyer reasonably believes is likely to result in death of, or substantial bodily harm to, an individual, as provided in paragraph (c);
 - (2) to secure legal advice about the lawyer's compliance with the lawyer's professional obligations;
 - (3) to establish a claim or defense on behalf of the lawyer in a controversy between the lawyer and the client relating to an issue of breach, by the lawyer or by the client, of a duty arising out of the lawyer-client relationship;
 - (4) to comply with a court order; or
 - (5) to protect the interests of a client under the limited circumstances identified in Rule 1.14(b).
- (c) Further obligations under paragraph (b)(1). Before revealing information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) in order to prevent a criminal act as provided in paragraph (b)(1), a lawyer shall, if reasonable under the circumstances:
 - (1) make a good faith effort to persuade the client: (i) not to commit or to continue the criminal act or (ii) to pursue a course of conduct that will prevent the threatened death or substantial bodily harm; or do both (i) and (ii); and
 - (2) inform the client, at an appropriate time, of the lawyer's ability or decision to reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) as provided in paragraph (b)(1).
- (d) In revealing information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) as permitted by paragraph (b), the lawyer's disclosure must be no more than is necessary to prevent the criminal act, secure confidential legal advice, establish a claim or defense in a controversy between the lawyer and a client, protect the interests of the client, or to comply with a court order given the information known to the lawyer at the time of the disclosure.
- (e) A lawyer who does not reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) as permitted by paragraph (b) does not violate this Rule.

Comment

- [1] This Rule governs the disclosure by a lawyer of information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) during the lawyer's representation of the client. See Rule 1.18 for the lawyer's duties with respect to information provided to the lawyer by a prospective client, Rule 1.9(c)(2) for the lawyer's duty not to reveal information relating to the lawyer's prior representation of a former client, and Rules 1.8.2 and 1.9(c)(1) for the lawyer's duties with respect to the use of such information to the disadvantage of clients and former clients.

Policies Furthered by the Duty of Confidentiality

- [2] Paragraph (a) relates to a lawyer's obligations under Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)(1), which provides it is a duty of a lawyer: "To maintain inviolate the confidence, and at every peril to himself or herself to preserve the secrets, of his or her client." A lawyer's duty to preserve the confidentiality of client information involves public policies of paramount importance. In re Jordan (1974) 12 Cal.3d 575, 580 [116 Cal.Rptr. 371]. Preserving the confidentiality of client information contributes to the trust that is the hallmark of the lawyer-client relationship. The client is thereby encouraged to seek legal assistance and to communicate fully and frankly with the lawyer even as to embarrassing or detrimental subjects. The lawyer needs this information to represent the client effectively and, if necessary, to advise the client to refrain from wrongful conduct. Almost without exception, clients come to lawyers in order to determine their rights and what is, in the complex of laws and regulations, deemed to be legal and correct. Based upon experience, lawyers know that almost all clients follow the advice given, and the law is upheld. Paragraph (a) thus recognizes a fundamental principle in the lawyer-client relationship, that, in the absence of the client's informed consent, a lawyer must not reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e). (See, e.g., Commercial Standard Title Co. v. Superior Court (1979) 92 Cal.App.3d 934, 945 [155 Cal.Rptr.393].)

Information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e).

- [3] As used in this Rule, "information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)" consists of information gained by virtue of the representation of a client, whatever its source, that (a) is protected by the lawyer-client privilege, (b) is likely to be embarrassing or detrimental to the client if disclosed, or (c) the client has requested be kept confidential. Therefore, the lawyer's duty of confidentiality as defined in Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) is broader than lawyer-client privilege. (See In the Matter of Johnson (Rev. Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179; Goldstein v. Lees (1975) 46 Cal.App.3d 614, 621 [120 Cal. Rptr. 253].)

Scope of the Lawyer-Client Privilege

- [4] The protection against compelled disclosure or compelled production that is afforded lawyer-client communications under the privilege is typically asserted in judicial and other proceedings in which a lawyer or client might be called as a witness or otherwise compelled to produce evidence. Because the lawyer-client privilege functions to limit the amount of evidence available to a tribunal, its protection is somewhat limited in scope.

Scope of the Duty of Confidentiality

- [5] A lawyer's duty of confidentiality, on the other hand, is not so limited as the lawyer-client privilege. The duty protects the relationship of trust between a lawyer and client by preventing the lawyer from revealing the client's protected information, regardless of its source and even when not confronted with compulsion. As a result, any information the lawyer has learned during the representation, even if not relevant to the matter for which the lawyer was retained, is protected under the duty so long as the lawyer acquires the information by virtue of being in the lawyer-client relationship. Information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) is not concerned only with information that a lawyer might learn after a lawyer-client relationship has been established. Information that a lawyer acquires about a client before the relationship is established, but which is relevant to the matter for which the lawyer is retained, is protected under the duty regardless of its source. The duty also applies to information a lawyer acquires during a lawyer-client consultation, whether from the client or the client's representative, even if a lawyer-client relationship does not result from the consultation. See Rule 1.18. Thus, a lawyer may not reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) except with the consent of the client or an authorized representative of the client, or as authorized by these Rules or the State Bar Act.

Relationship of Confidentiality to Lawyer Work Product

- [6] "Information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)" does not ordinarily include (i) a lawyer's legal knowledge or legal research or (ii) information that is generally known in the local community or in the trade, field or profession to which the information relates. However, the fact that information can be discovered in a public record does not, by itself, render that information "generally known" and therefore outside the scope of this Rule. ~~(See In the Matter of Johnson (Rev. Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.)~~
- [7] Paragraph (a) prohibits a lawyer from revealing information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e). This prohibition also applies to disclosures by a lawyer that do not in themselves reveal protected information but could reasonably lead to the discovery of such information by a third person. A lawyer's use of a hypothetical to discuss issues relating to the client's representation is permissible so long as there is no reasonable likelihood that the listener will be able to ascertain the identity of the client or the situation involved.

Authorized Disclosure

- [8] Lawyers in a firm may, in the course of the firm's practice, disclose to each other information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) that is related to a client of the firm, unless the client has instructed that particular information be confined to specified lawyers.

Disclosure Adverse to Client as Permitted by Paragraph (b)(1)

- [9] Notwithstanding the important public policies promoted by the duty of confidentiality, the overriding value of life permits certain disclosures otherwise prohibited under Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)(1). Paragraph (b)(1) is based on Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)(2), which narrowly permits a lawyer to disclose information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) even without client consent. Evidence Code section 956.5, which relates to the evidentiary lawyer-client privilege, sets forth a similar express exception. Although a lawyer is not permitted to reveal protected information concerning a client's past, completed criminal acts, the policy favoring the preservation of human life that underlies this exception to the duty of confidentiality and the evidentiary privilege permits disclosure to prevent a future or ongoing criminal act.

Lawyer Not Subject to Discipline for Revealing Protected Information as Permitted Under Paragraph (b)(1)

- [10] Paragraph (b)(1) reflects a balancing between the interests of preserving client confidentiality and of preventing a criminal act that a lawyer reasonably believes is likely to result in death or substantial bodily harm to an individual. A lawyer who reveals protected information as permitted under paragraph (b)(1) is not subject to discipline.

No Duty to Reveal Information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)

[11] Neither Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)(2) nor paragraph (b)(1) imposes an affirmative obligation on a lawyer to reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) in order to prevent harm. A lawyer may decide not to reveal such information. Whether a lawyer chooses to reveal protected information as permitted under this Rule is a matter for the individual lawyer to decide, based on all the facts and circumstances, such as those discussed in Comment [12] ~~of this Rule.~~

Deciding to Reveal Protected Information as Permitted Under Paragraph (b)(1)

[12] Disclosure permitted under paragraph (b)(1) is ordinarily a last resort, when no other available action is reasonably likely to prevent the criminal act. Prior to revealing protected information as permitted under paragraph (b)(1), the lawyer must, if reasonable under the circumstances, make a good faith effort to persuade the client to take steps to avoid the criminal act or threatened harm. Among the factors to be considered in determining whether to disclose such information are the following:

- (1) the amount of time that the lawyer has to make a decision about disclosure;
- (2) whether the client or a third party has made similar threats before and whether they have ever acted or attempted to act upon them;
- (3) whether the lawyer believes the lawyer's efforts to persuade the client or a third person not to engage in the criminal conduct have or have not been successful;

- (4) the extent of adverse effect to the client's rights under the Fifth, Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution and analogous rights and privacy rights under Article 1 of the Constitution of the State of California that may result from disclosure contemplated by the lawyer;
- (5) the extent of other adverse effects to the client that may result from disclosure contemplated by the lawyer; and
- (6) the nature and extent of protected information that must be disclosed to prevent the criminal act or threatened harm.

A lawyer may also consider whether the prospective harm to the victim or victims is imminent in deciding whether to disclose the protected information. However, the imminence of the harm is not a prerequisite to disclosure, and a lawyer may disclose the protected information without waiting until immediately before the harm is likely to occur.

Counseling Client or Third Person Not to Commit a Criminal Act Reasonably Likely to Result in Death of Substantial Bodily Harm

[13] Paragraph (c)(1) provides that, before a lawyer may reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e), the lawyer must, if reasonable under the circumstances, make a good faith effort to persuade the client not to commit or to continue the criminal act, or to persuade the client to otherwise pursue a course of conduct that will prevent the threatened death or substantial bodily harm, including persuading the client to take action to prevent a third person from committing or continuing a criminal act. If necessary, the client may be persuaded to do both. The interests protected by such counseling are the client's interests in limiting disclosure of protected information and in taking responsible action to deal with situations attributable to the client. If a client, whether in response to the lawyer's counseling or otherwise, takes corrective action – such as by ceasing the client's own criminal act or by dissuading a third person from committing or continuing a criminal act before harm is caused – the option for permissive disclosure by the lawyer would cease because the threat posed by the criminal act would no longer be present. When the actor is a nonclient or when the act is deliberate or malicious, the lawyer who contemplates making adverse disclosure of protected information may reasonably conclude that the compelling interests of the lawyer or others in their own personal safety preclude personal contact with the actor. Before counseling an actor who is a nonclient, the lawyer should, if reasonable under the circumstances, first advise the client of the lawyer's intended course of action. If a client or another person has already acted but the intended harm has not yet occurred, the lawyer should consider, if reasonable under the circumstances, efforts to persuade the client or third person to warn the victim or consider other appropriate action to prevent the harm. Even when the lawyer has concluded that paragraph (b)(1) does not permit the lawyer to reveal protected information, the lawyer nevertheless is permitted to counsel the client as to why it might be in the client's best interest to consent to the lawyer's disclosure of that information.

Requirement under Paragraph (c)(2) to Inform Client of Lawyer's Ability or Decision to Reveal Protected Information

[14] A lawyer is required to keep a client reasonably informed about significant developments regarding the employment or representation. Rule 1.4 and Business and Professions Code, section 6068(m). Paragraph (c)(2), however, recognizes that under certain circumstances, informing a client of the lawyer's ability or decision to reveal protected information under paragraph (b)(1) would likely increase the risk of death or substantial bodily harm, not only to the originally-intended victims of the criminal act, but also to the client or members of the client's family, or to the lawyer or the lawyer's family or associates. Therefore, paragraph (c)(2) requires a lawyer to inform the client of the lawyer's ability or decision to reveal protected information as provided in paragraph (b)(1) only if it is reasonable to do so under the circumstances. Paragraph (c)(2) further recognizes that the appropriate time for the lawyer to inform the client may vary depending upon the circumstances. See Comment [16]. Among the factors to be considered in determining an appropriate time, if any, to inform a client are:

- (1) whether the client is an experienced user of legal services;
- (2) the frequency of the lawyer's contact with the client;
- (3) the nature and length of the professional relationship with the client;
- (4) whether the lawyer and client have discussed the lawyer's duty of confidentiality or any exceptions to that duty;
- (5) the likelihood that the client's matter will involve information within paragraph (b)(1);
- (6) the lawyer's belief, if applicable, that so informing the client is likely to increase the likelihood that a criminal act likely to result in the death of, or substantial bodily harm to, an individual; and
- (7) the lawyer's belief, if applicable, that good faith efforts to persuade a client not to act on a threat have failed.

Disclosure of Protected Information as Permitted by Paragraph (b)(1) Must Be No More Than is Reasonably Necessary to Prevent the Criminal Act

[15] Paragraph (d) requires that disclosure of protected information as permitted by paragraph (b)(1), when made, must be no more extensive than the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to prevent the criminal act. Disclosure should allow access to the protected information to only those persons who the lawyer reasonably believes can act to prevent the harm. Under some circumstances, a lawyer may determine that the best course to pursue is to make an anonymous disclosure to the potential victim or relevant law-enforcement authorities. What particular measures are reasonable depends on the circumstances known to the lawyer. Relevant circumstances include the time available, whether the victim might be unaware of the threat, the lawyer's prior course of dealings with the client, and the extent of the adverse effect on the client that may result from the disclosure contemplated by the lawyer.

Avoiding a Chilling Effect on the Lawyer-Client Relationship

- [16] The foregoing flexible approach to a lawyer informing a client of his or her ability or decision to reveal protected information recognizes the concern that informing a client about limits on confidentiality may have a chilling effect on client communication. See Comment [2]. To avoid that chilling effect, one lawyer may choose to inform the client of the lawyer's ability to reveal protected information as early as the outset of the representation, while another lawyer may choose to inform a client only at a point when that client has imparted information that comes within paragraph (b)(1), or even choose not to inform a client until the lawyer attempts to counsel the client under Comment [13]. In each situation, the lawyer will have satisfied the lawyer's obligation under paragraph (c)(2), and will not be subject to discipline.

Informing Client that Disclosure Has Been Made; Termination of the Lawyer-Client Relationship

- [17] When a lawyer has revealed protected information under paragraph (b)(1), in all but extraordinary cases the relationship between lawyer and client that is based in mutual trust and confidence will have deteriorated so as to make the lawyer's representation of the client impossible. Therefore, when the relationship has deteriorated because of the lawyer's disclosure, the lawyer is required to seek to withdraw from the representation, see Rule 1.16, unless the client has given his or her informed consent to the lawyer's continued representation. The lawyer normally must inform the client of the fact of the lawyer's disclosure. If the lawyer has a compelling reason for not informing the client, such as to protect the lawyer, the lawyer's family or a third person from the risk of death or substantial bodily harm, the lawyer must withdraw from the representation. See Rule 1.16.

Other Consequences of the Lawyer's Disclosure

- [18] Depending on the circumstances of a lawyer's disclosure of protected information as permitted by this Rule, there may be other important issues that a lawyer must address. For example, a lawyer who is likely to testify in a matter involving the client must comply with Rule 3.7. Similarly, the lawyer must also consider the lawyer's duty of competence (Rule 1.1) and whether the lawyer has a conflict of interest in continuing to represent the client (Rule 1.7).

Disclosure as Permitted by Paragraphs (b)(2) through (b)(5)

- [19] If a legal claim by a client or the client's representative alleges a breach of duty by the lawyer involving representation of the client or a disciplinary charge filed by or with the cooperation of the client or the client's representative alleges misconduct of the lawyer involving representation of the client, paragraph (b)(3) permits the lawyer to respond only to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to establish a defense. The same is true with respect to a claim involving conduct or representation of a former client.

- [20] A lawyer entitled to a fee is permitted by paragraph (b)(3) to prove the services rendered in an action to collect it. This aspect of the Rule expresses the principle that the beneficiary of a fiduciary relationship may not exploit it to the detriment of the fiduciary.
- [21] A lawyer may be ordered to reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) by a court or by another tribunal or governmental entity claiming authority pursuant to other law to compel the disclosure. Absent informed consent of the client to do otherwise, the lawyer must assert on behalf of the client all nonfrivolous claims that the order is not authorized by other law or that the information sought is protected against disclosure by the lawyer-client privilege or other applicable law. See, e.g., People v. Kor (1954) 129 Cal. App. 2d 436 [277 P.2d 94]. In the event of an adverse ruling, the lawyer must consult with the client to the extent required by Rule 1.4 about the possibility of appeal. Unless review is sought, however, paragraph (b)(4) permits the lawyer to comply with the court's order.
- [22] Paragraph (d) permits disclosure as permitted by paragraphs (b)(2) through (b)(5) only to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes the disclosure is necessary to accomplish one of the purposes specified. Where practicable, the lawyer should first seek to persuade the client to take suitable action to obviate the need for disclosure. In any case, a disclosure adverse to the client's interest should be no greater than the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to accomplish the purpose. If the disclosure will be made in connection with a judicial proceeding, the disclosure should be made in a manner that limits access to the protected information to the tribunal or other persons having a need to know it and appropriate protective orders or other arrangements should be sought by the lawyer to the fullest extent practicable.

- [23] Paragraph (b) permits but does not require the disclosure of information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) to accomplish the purposes specified in paragraphs (b)(2) through (b)(5).

Acting Competently to Preserve Confidentiality

- [24] A lawyer must act competently to safeguard information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) against inadvertent or unauthorized disclosure by the lawyer or other persons who are participating in the representation of the client or who are subject to the lawyer's supervision. See Rules 1.1, 5.1 and 5.3.
- [25] When transmitting a communication that includes information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e), the lawyer must take reasonable precautions to prevent the information from coming into the hands of unintended recipients. This duty, however, does not require that the lawyer use special security measures if the method of communication affords a reasonable expectation of privacy. Special circumstances, however, may warrant special precautions. Factors to be considered in determining the reasonableness of the lawyer's expectation of confidentiality include the sensitivity of the information and the extent to which the privacy of the communication is protected by law or by a confidentiality agreement. A client may require the lawyer to implement special security measures not required by this Rule or may give informed consent to the use of a means of communication that would otherwise be prohibited by this Rule.

Former Client

- [26] The duty of confidentiality continues after the lawyer-client relationship has terminated. See Rule 1.9(c)(2). See Rule 1.9(c)(1) for the prohibition against using such information to the disadvantage of the former client.

Government Lawyers

- [27] This Rule applies to lawyers representing governmental organizations. See Rule 1.13, Comment [15].

Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information

(Commission's Proposed Rule – Clean Version)

- (a) A lawyer shall not reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) unless the client gives informed consent or the disclosure is permitted by paragraph (b).
- (b) A lawyer may, but is not required to, reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) to the extent that the lawyer reasonably believes the disclosure is necessary:
 - (1) to prevent a criminal act that the lawyer reasonably believes is likely to result in death of, or substantial bodily harm to, an individual, as provided in paragraph (c);
 - (2) to secure legal advice about the lawyer's compliance with the lawyer's professional obligations;
 - (3) to establish a claim or defense on behalf of the lawyer in a controversy between the lawyer and the client relating to an issue of breach, by the lawyer or by the client, of a duty arising out of the lawyer-client relationship;
 - (4) to comply with a court order; or
 - (5) to protect the interests of a client under the limited circumstances identified in Rule 1.14(b).
- (c) Further obligations under paragraph (b)(1). Before revealing information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) in order to prevent a criminal act as provided in paragraph (b)(1), a lawyer shall, if reasonable under the circumstances:
 - (1) make a good faith effort to persuade the client: (i) not to commit or to continue the criminal act or (ii) to pursue a course of conduct that will prevent the threatened death or substantial bodily harm; or do both (i) and (ii); and
 - (2) inform the client, at an appropriate time, of the lawyer's ability or decision to reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) as provided in paragraph (b)(1).
- (d) In revealing information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) as permitted by paragraph (b), the lawyer's disclosure must be no more than is necessary to prevent the criminal act, secure confidential legal advice, establish a claim or defense in a controversy between the lawyer and a client, protect the interests of the client, or to comply with a court order given the information known to the lawyer at the time of the disclosure.
- (e) A lawyer who does not reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) as permitted by paragraph (b) does not violate this Rule.

Comment

- [1] This Rule governs the disclosure by a lawyer of information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) during the lawyer's representation of the client. See Rule 1.18 for the lawyer's duties with respect to information provided to the lawyer by a prospective client, Rule 1.9(c)(2) for the lawyer's duty not to reveal information relating to the lawyer's prior representation of a former client, and Rules 1.8.2 and 1.9(c)(1) for the lawyer's duties with respect to the use of such information to the disadvantage of clients and former clients.

Policies Furthered by the Duty of Confidentiality

- [2] Paragraph (a) relates to a lawyer's obligations under Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)(1), which provides it is a duty of a lawyer: "To maintain inviolate the confidence, and at every peril to himself or herself to preserve the secrets, of his or her client." A lawyer's duty to preserve the confidentiality of client information involves public policies of paramount importance. In re Jordan (1974) 12 Cal.3d 575, 580 [116 Cal.Rptr. 371]. Preserving the confidentiality of client information contributes to the trust that is the hallmark of the lawyer-client relationship. The client is thereby encouraged to seek legal assistance and to communicate fully and frankly with the lawyer even as to embarrassing or detrimental subjects. The lawyer needs this information to represent the client effectively and, if necessary, to advise the client to refrain from wrongful conduct. Almost without exception, clients come to lawyers in order to determine their rights and what is, in the complex of laws and regulations, deemed to be legal and correct. Based upon experience, lawyers know that almost all clients follow the advice given, and the law is upheld. Paragraph (a) thus recognizes a fundamental principle in the lawyer-client relationship, that, in the absence of the client's informed consent, a lawyer must not reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e). See, e.g., Commercial Standard Title Co. v. Superior Court (1979) 92 Cal.App.3d 934, 945 [155 Cal.Rptr.393].

Information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e).

- [3] As used in this Rule, "information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)" consists of information gained by virtue of the representation of a client, whatever its source, that (a) is protected by the lawyer-client privilege, (b) is likely to be embarrassing or detrimental to the client if disclosed, or (c) the client has requested be kept confidential. Therefore, the lawyer's duty of confidentiality as defined in Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) is broader than lawyer-client privilege. See In the Matter of Johnson (Rev. Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179; Goldstein v. Lees (1975) 46 Cal.App.3d 614, 621 [120 Cal. Rptr. 253].

Scope of the Lawyer-Client Privilege

- [4] The protection against compelled disclosure or compelled production that is afforded lawyer-client communications under the privilege is typically asserted in judicial and other proceedings in which a lawyer or client might be called as a witness or otherwise compelled to produce evidence. Because the lawyer-client privilege functions to limit the amount of evidence available to a tribunal, its protection is somewhat limited in scope.

Scope of the Duty of Confidentiality

- [5] A lawyer's duty of confidentiality, on the other hand, is not so limited as the lawyer-client privilege. The duty protects the relationship of trust between a lawyer and client by preventing the lawyer from revealing the client's protected information, regardless of its source and even when not confronted with compulsion. As a result, any information the lawyer has learned during the representation, even if not relevant to the matter for which the lawyer was retained, is protected under the duty so long as the lawyer acquires the information by virtue of being in the lawyer-client relationship. Information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) is not concerned only with information that a lawyer might learn after a lawyer-client relationship has been established. Information that a lawyer acquires about a client before the relationship is established, but which is relevant to the matter for which the lawyer is retained, is protected under the duty regardless of its source. The duty also applies to information a lawyer acquires during a lawyer-client consultation, whether from the client or the client's representative, even if a lawyer-client relationship does not result from the consultation. See Rule 1.18. Thus, a lawyer may not reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) except with the consent of the client or an authorized representative of the client, or as authorized by these Rules or the State Bar Act.

Relationship of Confidentiality to Lawyer Work Product

- [6] "Information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)" does not ordinarily include (i) a lawyer's legal knowledge or legal research or (ii) information that is generally known in the local community or in the trade, field or profession to which the information relates. However, the fact that information can be discovered in a public record does not, by itself, render that information "generally known" and therefore outside the scope of this Rule. See In the Matter of Johnson (Rev. Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.
- [7] Paragraph (a) prohibits a lawyer from revealing information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e). This prohibition also applies to disclosures by a lawyer that do not in themselves reveal protected information but could reasonably lead to the discovery of such information by a third person. A lawyer's use of a hypothetical to discuss issues relating to the client's representation is permissible so long as there is no reasonable likelihood that the listener will be able to ascertain the identity of the client or the situation involved.

Authorized Disclosure

- [8] Lawyers in a firm may, in the course of the firm's practice, disclose to each other information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) that is related to a client of the firm, unless the client has instructed that particular information be confined to specified lawyers.

Disclosure Adverse to Client as Permitted by Paragraph (b)(1)

- [9] Notwithstanding the important public policies promoted by the duty of confidentiality, the overriding value of life permits certain disclosures otherwise prohibited under Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)(1). Paragraph (b)(1) is based on Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)(2), which narrowly permits a lawyer to disclose information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) even without client consent. Evidence Code section 956.5, which relates to the evidentiary lawyer-client privilege, sets forth a similar express exception. Although a lawyer is not permitted to reveal protected information concerning a client's past, completed criminal acts, the policy favoring the preservation of human life that underlies this exception to the duty of confidentiality and the evidentiary privilege permits disclosure to prevent a future or ongoing criminal act.

Lawyer Not Subject to Discipline for Revealing Protected Information as Permitted Under Paragraph (b)(1)

- [10] Paragraph (b)(1) reflects a balancing between the interests of preserving client confidentiality and of preventing a criminal act that a lawyer reasonably believes is likely to result in death or substantial bodily harm to an individual. A lawyer who reveals protected information as permitted under paragraph (b)(1) is not subject to discipline.

No Duty to Reveal Information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)

[11] Neither Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)(2) nor paragraph (b)(1) imposes an affirmative obligation on a lawyer to reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) in order to prevent harm. A lawyer may decide not to reveal such information. Whether a lawyer chooses to reveal protected information as permitted under this Rule is a matter for the individual lawyer to decide, based on all the facts and circumstances, such as those discussed in Comment [12].

Deciding to Reveal Protected Information as Permitted Under Paragraph (b)(1)

[12] Disclosure permitted under paragraph (b)(1) is ordinarily a last resort, when no other available action is reasonably likely to prevent the criminal act. Prior to revealing protected information as permitted under paragraph (b)(1), the lawyer must, if reasonable under the circumstances, make a good faith effort to persuade the client to take steps to avoid the criminal act or threatened harm. Among the factors to be considered in determining whether to disclose such information are the following:

(1) the amount of time that the lawyer has to make a decision about disclosure;

- (2) whether the client or a third party has made similar threats before and whether they have ever acted or attempted to act upon them;
- (3) whether the lawyer believes the lawyer's efforts to persuade the client or a third person not to engage in the criminal conduct have or have not been successful;
- (4) the extent of adverse effect to the client's rights under the Fifth, Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution and analogous rights and privacy rights under Article 1 of the Constitution of the State of California that may result from disclosure contemplated by the lawyer;
- (5) the extent of other adverse effects to the client that may result from disclosure contemplated by the lawyer; and
- (6) the nature and extent of protected information that must be disclosed to prevent the criminal act or threatened harm.

A lawyer may also consider whether the prospective harm to the victim or victims is imminent in deciding whether to disclose the protected information. However, the imminence of the harm is not a prerequisite to disclosure, and a lawyer may disclose the protected information without waiting until immediately before the harm is likely to occur.

Counseling Client or Third Person Not to Commit a Criminal Act Reasonably Likely to Result in Death of Substantial Bodily Harm

[13] Paragraph (c)(1) provides that, before a lawyer may reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e), the lawyer must, if reasonable under the circumstances, make a good faith effort to persuade the client not to commit or to continue the criminal act, or to persuade the client to otherwise pursue a course of conduct that will prevent the threatened death or substantial bodily harm, including persuading the client to take action to prevent a third person from committing or continuing a criminal act. If necessary, the client may be persuaded to do both. The interests protected by such counseling are the client's interests in limiting disclosure of protected information and in taking responsible action to deal with situations attributable to the client. If a client, whether in response to the lawyer's counseling or otherwise, takes corrective action – such as by ceasing the client's own criminal act or by dissuading a third person from committing or continuing a criminal act before harm is caused – the option for permissive disclosure by the lawyer would cease because the threat posed by the criminal act would no longer be present. When the actor is a nonclient or when the act is deliberate or malicious, the lawyer who contemplates making adverse disclosure of protected information may reasonably conclude that the compelling interests of the lawyer or others in their own personal safety preclude personal contact with the actor. Before counseling an actor who is a nonclient, the lawyer should, if reasonable under the circumstances, first advise the client of the lawyer's intended course of action. If a client or another person has already acted but the intended harm has not yet occurred, the lawyer should consider, if reasonable under the circumstances, efforts to persuade the client or third person to warn the victim or consider other appropriate action to prevent the harm. Even when the lawyer has concluded that paragraph (b)(1) does not permit the lawyer to reveal protected information, the lawyer nevertheless is permitted to counsel the client as to why it might be in the client's best interest to consent to the lawyer's disclosure of that information.

Requirement under Paragraph (c)(2) to Inform Client of Lawyer's Ability or Decision to Reveal Protected Information

[14] A lawyer is required to keep a client reasonably informed about significant developments regarding the employment or representation.

Rule 1.4 and Business and Professions Code section 6068(m). Paragraph (c)(2), however, recognizes that under certain circumstances, informing a client of the lawyer's ability or decision to reveal protected information under paragraph (b)(1) would likely increase the risk of death or substantial bodily harm, not only to the originally-intended victims of the criminal act, but also to the client or members of the client's family, or to the lawyer or the lawyer's family or associates. Therefore, paragraph (c)(2) requires a lawyer to inform the client of the lawyer's ability or decision to reveal protected information as provided in paragraph (b)(1) only if it is reasonable to do so under the circumstances. Paragraph (c)(2) further recognizes that the appropriate time for the lawyer to inform the client may vary depending upon the circumstances. See Comment [16]. Among the factors to be considered in determining an appropriate time, if any, to inform a client are:

- (1) whether the client is an experienced user of legal services;
- (2) the frequency of the lawyer's contact with the client;
- (3) the nature and length of the professional relationship with the client;
- (4) whether the lawyer and client have discussed the lawyer's duty of confidentiality or any exceptions to that duty;
- (5) the likelihood that the client's matter will involve information within paragraph (b)(1);
- (6) the lawyer's belief, if applicable, that so informing the client is likely to increase the likelihood that a criminal act likely to result in the death of, or substantial bodily harm to, an individual; and

- (7) the lawyer's belief, if applicable, that good faith efforts to persuade a client not to act on a threat have failed.

Disclosure of Protected Information as Permitted by Paragraph (b)(1) Must Be No More Than is Reasonably Necessary to Prevent the Criminal Act

- [15] Paragraph (d) requires that disclosure of protected information as permitted by paragraph (b)(1), when made, must be no more extensive than the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to prevent the criminal act. Disclosure should allow access to the protected information to only those persons who the lawyer reasonably believes can act to prevent the harm. Under some circumstances, a lawyer may determine that the best course to pursue is to make an anonymous disclosure to the potential victim or relevant law-enforcement authorities. What particular measures are reasonable depends on the circumstances known to the lawyer. Relevant circumstances include the time available, whether the victim might be unaware of the threat, the lawyer's prior course of dealings with the client, and the extent of the adverse effect on the client that may result from the disclosure contemplated by the lawyer.

Avoiding a Chilling Effect on the Lawyer-Client Relationship

- [16] The foregoing flexible approach to a lawyer informing a client of his or her ability or decision to reveal protected information recognizes the concern that informing a client about limits on confidentiality may have a chilling effect on client communication. See Comment [2]. To avoid that chilling effect, one lawyer may choose to inform the client of the lawyer's ability to reveal protected information as early as the outset of the representation, while another lawyer may choose to inform a client only at a point when that client has imparted information that comes within paragraph (b)(1), or even choose not to inform a client until the lawyer attempts to counsel the client under Comment [13]. In each situation, the lawyer will have satisfied the lawyer's obligation under paragraph (c)(2), and will not be subject to discipline.

Informing Client that Disclosure Has Been Made; Termination of the Lawyer-Client Relationship

- [17] When a lawyer has revealed protected information under paragraph (b)(1), in all but extraordinary cases the relationship between lawyer and client that is based in mutual trust and confidence will have deteriorated so as to make the lawyer's representation of the client impossible. Therefore, when the relationship has deteriorated because of the lawyer's disclosure, the lawyer is required to seek to withdraw from the representation, see Rule 1.16, unless the client has given his or her informed consent to the lawyer's continued representation. The lawyer normally must inform the client of the fact of the lawyer's disclosure. If the lawyer has a compelling reason for not informing the client, such as to protect the lawyer, the lawyer's family or a third person from the risk of death or substantial bodily harm, the lawyer must withdraw from the representation. See Rule 1.16.

Other Consequences of the Lawyer's Disclosure

- [18] Depending on the circumstances of a lawyer's disclosure of protected information as permitted by this Rule, there may be other important issues that a lawyer must address. For example, a lawyer who is likely to testify in a matter involving the client must comply with Rule 3.7. Similarly, the lawyer must also consider the lawyer's duty of competence (Rule 1.1) and whether the lawyer has a conflict of interest in continuing to represent the client (Rule 1.7).

Disclosure as Permitted by Paragraphs (b)(2) through (b)(5)

- [19] If a legal claim by a client or the client's representative alleges a breach of duty by the lawyer involving representation of the client or a disciplinary charge filed by or with the cooperation of the client or the client's representative alleges misconduct of the lawyer involving representation of the client, paragraph (b)(3) permits the lawyer to respond only to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to establish a defense. The same is true with respect to a claim involving conduct or representation of a former client.
- [20] A lawyer entitled to a fee is permitted by paragraph (b)(3) to prove the services rendered in an action to collect it. This aspect of the Rule expresses the principle that the beneficiary of a fiduciary relationship may not exploit it to the detriment of the fiduciary.
- [21] A lawyer may be ordered to reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) by a court or by another tribunal or governmental entity claiming authority pursuant to other law to compel the disclosure. Absent informed consent of the client to do otherwise, the lawyer must assert on behalf of the client all nonfrivolous claims that the order is not authorized by other law or that the information sought is protected against disclosure by the lawyer-client privilege or other applicable law. See, e.g., People v. Kor (1954) 129 Cal. App. 2d 436 [277 P.2d 94]. In the event of an adverse ruling, the lawyer must consult with the client to the extent required by Rule 1.4 about the possibility of appeal. Unless review is sought, however, paragraph (b)(4) permits the lawyer to comply with the court's order.
- [22] Paragraph (d) permits disclosure as permitted by paragraphs (b)(2) through (b)(5) only to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes the disclosure is necessary to accomplish one of the purposes specified.

Where practicable, the lawyer should first seek to persuade the client to take suitable action to obviate the need for disclosure. In any case, a disclosure adverse to the client's interest should be no greater than the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to accomplish the purpose. If the disclosure will be made in connection with a judicial proceeding, the disclosure should be made in a manner that limits access to the protected information to the tribunal or other persons having a need to know it and appropriate protective orders or other arrangements should be sought by the lawyer to the fullest extent practicable.

- [23] Paragraph (b) permits but does not require the disclosure of information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) to accomplish the purposes specified in paragraphs (b)(2) through (b)(5).

Acting Competently to Preserve Confidentiality

- [24] A lawyer must act competently to safeguard information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) against inadvertent or unauthorized disclosure by the lawyer or other persons who are participating in the representation of the client or who are subject to the lawyer's supervision. See Rules 1.1, 5.1 and 5.3.
- [25] When transmitting a communication that includes information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e), the lawyer must take reasonable precautions to prevent the information from coming into the hands of unintended recipients. This duty, however, does not require that the lawyer use special security measures if the method of communication affords a reasonable expectation of privacy. Special circumstances, however, may warrant special precautions. Factors to be considered in determining the reasonableness of the lawyer's expectation of confidentiality include the sensitivity of the information and the extent to which the privacy of the communication is protected by law or by a confidentiality agreement. A client may require the lawyer to implement special security measures not required by this Rule or may give informed consent to the use of a means of communication that would otherwise be prohibited by this Rule.

Former Client

- [26] The duty of confidentiality continues after the lawyer-client relationship has terminated. See Rule 1.9(c)(2). See Rule 1.9(c)(1) for the prohibition against using such information to the disadvantage of the former client.

Government Lawyers

- [27] This Rule applies to lawyers representing governmental organizations. See Rule 1.13, Comment [15].

Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information [3-100, B&P 6068(e)]. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 7 Agree = 2 Disagree = 0 Modify = 5 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
1	Alex, Glenn C.	M	No		Not all governmental agencies in California are subject to "whistleblower" statutes, and even where these statutes do apply to public agency employees generally, the State Bar has declined, so far, to sanction a whistleblower exception to attorney confidentiality requirements. In the public interest, the Rule should be augmented to allow public attorneys to reveal confidential information as a matter of conscience where the attorney concludes that there are no other reasonable, effective means of protecting the public interest.	The Commission does not recommend the adoption of a government lawyer "whistle blower" exception in the proposed Rules. Previous attempts to effectuate such an exception by the State Bar, in cooperation with the legislature, and by the Legislature, have failed. The rejection of this proposed exception by two separate branches of government, the Court and the Executive, indicates that the policies underlying lawyer-client privilege and confidentiality trump the policies favoring such an exception. First, an attempt by the State Bar to include such an exception was rejected by the Supreme Court, which stated: "The State Bar Board of Governors' request to adopt amendments to the Rules of Professional Conduct, rule 3-600, is denied because the proposed modifications conflict with B & P Code section 6068(e)." See Supreme Court Order re Request for Rule Change filed by the State Bar, Case No. S104682 (2/27/02), available at: http://appellatecases.courtinfo.ca.gov/search/case/dockets.cfm?dist=0&doc_id=1836361&doc_no=S104682 [last visited 5/22/10] The Supreme Court's statement indicates that such an exception cannot be accomplished without a

¹ A = AGREE with proposed Rule

D = DISAGREE with proposed Rule

M = AGREE ONLY IF MODIFIED

NI = NOT INDICATED

Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information [3-100, B&P 6068(e)]. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 7 Agree = 2 Disagree = 0 Modify = 5 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
						concomitant amendment of Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(e) by the Legislature. Second, two subsequent attempts by the Legislature to amend section 6068(e) to provide for a government lawyer “whistle blower” exception resulted in vetoes by two different governors. See Veto Message of Gov. Gray Davis re AB 363 (9/30/02),² available at: http://www.leginfo.ca.gov/pub/01-02/bill/asm/ab_0351-0400/ab_363_vt_20020930.html [last visited 5/22/10] See also Veto Message of Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger re AB 2713 (9/28/04),³ available at:

² In his veto message, Gov. Davis stated:

I am returning Assembly Bill 363 without my signature.

While this bill is well intended, it chips away at the attorney-client relationship which is intended to foster candor between an attorney and client. It is critical that clients know they can disclose in confidence so they can receive appropriate advice from counsel.

The effective operation of our legal system depends on the fundamental duty of confidentiality owed by lawyers to their clients. For these reasons, I must return this bill without my signature.

³ In his veto message, Gov. Schwarzenegger stated:

I am returning Assembly Bill 2713 without my signature.

Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information [3-100, B&P 6068(e)]. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 7 Agree = 2 Disagree = 0 Modify = 5 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
						http://www.leginfo.ca.gov/pub/03-04/bill/asm/ab_2701-2750/ab_2713_vt_20040928.html [last visited 5/22/10] Notwithstanding the foregoing, the Commission has provided some guidance in this area in proposed Rule 1.13, Comment [15], which provides: [15] Although this Rule does not authorize a governmental organization's lawyer to act as a whistle-blower in violation of Rule 1.6 or Business and Professions Code section 6068(e), a governmental organization has the option of establishing internal organizational rules and procedures that identify an official, agency, organization, or other person to serve as the designated recipient of whistle-blower reports from the organization's lawyers.

This is a well-intended bill and I applaud the efforts to expose wrongdoing within government. However, this bill would condone violations of the attorney-client privilege, which is the cornerstone of our legal system. This bill will have a chilling effect on when government officials would have an attorney present when making decisions. It is an attorneys duty to advise the governmental officials when they are about to engage in illegal activity. This bill will ensure that advice is not conveyed in every situation and therefore it is too broad to affect the intended purposes.

Existing law already addresses the most egregious situations, which is the only time the attorney-client relationship should be breached. It is critical to evaluate the recent changes to the law as it relates to the attorney-client privilege prior to further eroding this important legal principle.

For the reasons stated I am unable to support this measure.

Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information [3-100, B&P 6068(e)]. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 7 Agree = 2 Disagree = 0 Modify = 5 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
2	COPRAC	A	Yes		COPRAC supports the adoption of Proposed Rule 1.6 and the Comments to the Rule.	No response required.
3	Hazard, Geoffrey, Deborah Rhode and Zitrin, Richard (on behalf of law professors)	NI	Yes		The commenter notes that this rule is based on the statutory modification to Bus. & Profs. Code § 6068(e) of 2004 and that the Board of Governors should take care to ensure that the Commission has not overstepped the bounds created by the legislature in drafting the original exceptions to confidentiality.	Although the comment is directed to the Board of the Governors, the Commission notes that the exceptions to confidentiality in paragraph (b) are either expressly provided for in Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(e) or are settled in California law. More important, the Commission believes that that the proposed rule not only is within the Commission's charge, but also it is ultimately within the purview of the Supreme Court to determine whether the rule should be adopted.
4	Office of Chief Trial Counsel ("OCTC")	M	Yes		1. OCTC remains concerned that this proposed rule might create confusion and enforcement problems as Business & Professions Code section 6068(e) already addresses the issues raised in proposed rule 1.6. (We have already expressed in this letter our concern with the definition in rule 1.0 (e)(2).) If California is to have a rule to cover this issue, OCTC suggests that paragraph (a) use the same terms as Business & Professions Code section 6068(e)(1) to ensure that the rule is not interpreted to change the duty of an attorney to preserve the confidences and secrets of a client as provided in Business & Professions Code section 6068(e). For the same reason, OCTC believes that paragraph (a) should refer to all of Business & Professions Code section	1. The Commission uses the language of 6068(e) by reference by using the defined term, "information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)." The Commission has deleted the reference to subdivision (1) of 6068(e).

Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information [3-100, B&P 6068(e)]. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 7 Agree = 2 Disagree = 0 Modify = 5 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					6068(e) including (e)(2)'s statement when an attorney may reveal the information ordinarily protected under section (e)(1). 2. OCTC is further concerned that subparagraph (b)(1) does not address what happens if any further changes are adopted to Business & Professions Code section 6068(e). 3. OCTC still agrees with the concerns of the Minority of the Commission that paragraph (b)(3) permits disclosure to establish a claim or defense on behalf of the lawyer without a court determination. We believe a court, not an attorney, should make this determination. This will also aid in the enforcement of violations of this paragraph. 4. OCTC continues to disagree with the removal from subparagraph (b)(4) of the term "other law" and agrees with the Model Rules that this term should be included in this	2. The Commission has not made any change. First, there is no guarantee that the Legislature would place exceptions to § 6068(e)(1) in § 6068(e) or even in § 6068. In the past, proposed exceptions have appeared in different-numbered sections of the State Bar Act. Second, the experience of AB 1101, which resulted in the exception for death and substantial bodily harm that is in current rule 3-100 indicates that the Legislature is unlikely to enact any exceptions that would become operative before the Supreme Court has had an opportunity to approve a parallel rule. 3. Please see response to SDCBA, below. The provision is narrowly drafted and revisions to Comment [19] emphasize that a lawyer may reveal information only to the extent that it is necessary to establish a claim or defense. As the lawyer will be revealing such information only before a tribunal in which the lawyer-client controversy plays out, the necessary protections should be present. 4. the Commission notes that including the "other law" exception would effectively permit disclosures under stricken MR 1.6(b)(2) and (3), at least for publicly-traded companies under the Sarbanes-Oxley Act.

Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information [3-100, B&P 6068(e)]. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 7 Agree = 2 Disagree = 0 Modify = 5 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					paragraph. OCTC does not believe that the term "other law" is too vague or imprecise. It simply provides that if there is other law preventing or permitting disclosure, it will be complied with. It should be followed in California's rule. In fact, other proposed rules use similar terms. (See e.g. proposed rule 1.11 (a) [Except as law may otherwise expressly permit].) There are statutes that require certain disclosures and the rules should not encourage disobedience of those statutes. OCTC agrees that the term "court order" should be in this paragraph. 5. As to paragraph (b)(5), OCTC refers to its discussion of proposed rule 1.14(b). 6. OCTC has concerns about subparagraph (e). It appears subparagraph (e) is an attempt to carry forward the concept in Business & Professions Code section 6068(e)(2) that an attorney may but is not required to reveal some information. The problem is that proposed subparagraph (e) is too broad. It covers all of proposed subparagraph (b), but that would include that an attorney could not be disciplined for disobeying a law or court order to reveal the information. (See our	No response necessary. 5. See response to Rule 1.14 comment. 6. The Commission does not believe any change need be made to paragraph (e), which provides only that "[a] lawyer who does not reveal confidential information as permitted by paragraph (b) does not violate this Rule." If, after an appeal, an appellate court has determined that the lawyer must disclose what the lawyer has argued is protected under Rule 1.6, the court in effect is stating that the information is not protected under the Rule, and so the lawyer cannot rely on the rule to oppose disclosure. Regardless, refusal to disclose should not subject a discussion of paragraph (b)(4).) Although the Commission states this paragraph is just what current rule 3-100(E) states, proposed subparagraph (b)'s language is broader than current rule 3-100(B). Proposed subparagraph (e), unlike current rule 3-100, includes allowing an attorney to refuse to reveal confidences required by a court order, apparently even after all the appeals and writs have been completed. This paragraph needs clarification and it should be a violation to disobey a court order or law. 7. The Comments are more appropriate for treatises, law review articles, and ethics opinions. We are particularly concerned that the first sentence of Comment [1] implies that OCTC can only discipline under this rule and not under Business & Professions Code section 6068(e). If that is what is meant, OCTC strongly disagrees. It should also be noted that by creating a rule that covers the subject of section 6068(e) the Commission may be eliminating the good faith defense that might exist to a violation of section 6068(e). As already discussed, the good faith defense generally applies to the Business & Professions Code and not to the Rules of Professional Conduct.	lawyer to discipline under a Rule that only permits disclosure. Further, the lawyer otherwise would be subject to discipline under other provisions of the State Bar Act. 7. As the Commission has noted with respect to other rules, the Comments to this Rule, many of which have simply been carried from current rule 3-100, provide important clarification of the Rule and guidance to lawyers in fulfilling this important duty. The Commission also wants to clarify that it did not "create" this Rule. The Rule carries forward rule 3-100, which is a creation of AB 1101 (2003-2004), and represents a cooperative undertaking among the three branches of government to provide guidance in this important area of attorney-client interaction. There should be no misunderstanding that it is the exclusive source of duties – or discipline – for lawyers.

Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information [3-100, B&P 6068(e)]. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 7 Agree = 2 Disagree = 0 Modify = 5 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response

Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information [3-100, B&P 6068(e)]. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 7 Agree = 2 Disagree = 0 Modify = 5 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					8. OCTC finds the first sentence of Comment 3 too narrow and may exclude information protected by section 6068(e). OCTC would strike that first sentence and only keep the second sentence. 9. OCTC finds Comment 9 confusing. It states that the overriding value of life permits disclosure otherwise protected by Business & Professions Code section 6068(e)(1), but Business & Professions Code section 6068(e)(2) already provides for this. More importantly, OCTC does not think the rules should or can be adding Comments that are explaining a statute passed by the Legislature. OCTC recommends that this Comment be stricken. 10. Comment [15] is overly narrow and seems to imply that the rule of limited disclosure applies only to prevent criminal conduct. If that is what is meant, OCTC strongly disagrees and believes that such an interpretation is contrary to established law. OCTC would strike the Comment or significantly modify it.	8. The Commission disagrees. The sentence is the classic definition of confidential information that has been used in California for decades. 9. The Commission has not made any changes. The specific comment to which OCTC refers, Cmt. [9], is in the Discussion to current rule 3-100 (¶. 3). The drafting of rule 3-100 was a cooperative venture among the Legislature, the Supreme Court, and the State Bar, as provided in AB 1101, which expressly provided for the appointment of a task force by the State Bar President in consultation with the Supreme Court "to make recommendations for a rule of professional conduct regarding professional responsibility issues related to the implementation of this act." In addition, the bill identified a number of issues that should be addressed in the rule, which are the subject of the Comments [9] to [18] of the proposed Rule. 10. The Commission has not made the suggested change. Comment [15] concerns only subparagraph (b)(1), which itself is limited to preventing criminal conduct.

Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information [3-100, B&P 6068(e)]. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 7 Agree = 2 Disagree = 0 Modify = 5 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					11. Comment [19] could result in a claim that, in an investigation commenced under the State Bar's own authority and not the result of a client's complaint, the respondent does not have to provide certain information. It does not explain what it means by cooperation. What if OCTC subpoenas the client or the client consents? 12. OCTC is concerned that Comments [21] and [23] appear to allow a lawyer to disobey a court order to disclose information. As previously discussed, OCTC disagrees with that this position.	11. The Commission notes that Comment [19] provides only that a lawyer may disclose information without the client's permission in order to defend himself or herself against the client's allegations. Neither paragraph (b)(3) nor Comment [19] is intended to provide OCTC with the ability to force a lawyer to breach his or her duty of confidentiality without the client's permission. 12. The Commission disagrees with this assessment. The last sentence of Comment [21] provides: "Unless review is sought, however, paragraph (b)(4) permits the lawyer to comply with the court's order." See response concerning paragraph (e), at RRC Response, ¶. 6, above.
5	San Diego County Bar Association ("SDCBA") Legal Ethics Committee	M	Yes	1.6(a)	The Commission's proposal to define information protected from disclosure by Section 6068(e)(1) as "confidential information relating to the representation" could be read to weaken California's traditional protection of client confidences. The wording proposed by the minority is preferable and clearer: The information protected from disclosure by section 6068(e)(1) is referred to as "confidential information" in this Rule.	The Commission changed the defined term from "confidential information relating to the representation" to "information protected from disclosure by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)" to assuage concerns that Rule 1.6 might be viewed as narrowing the protections afforded to client information under section 6068(e).

Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information [3-100, B&P 6068(e)]. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 7 Agree = 2 Disagree = 0 Modify = 5 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				1.6(b)(3)	This paragraph, although intended by the Commission to track Cal. Evid. Code Section 958, in fact goes far beyond the statutory exception. The exception set forth in 958 applies only when a court determines that the exception applies. By contrast, proposed Rule 1.6(b)(3) would allow each individual attorney to make that determination. This determination is better left to an impartial court. Nonetheless, in the interest of uniformity, our recommendation is to replace proposed Rule 1.6(b)(3) with the provision of the ABA Model Rules, set forth in 1.6(b)(5).	The Commission did not make the suggested change. The Model Rule permits a lawyer to disclose confidential information not only in disputes with the client, but also in actions filed against the lawyer by third parties. The Commission does not understand how the Model Rule is narrower than proposed Rule 1.6(b)(3), which permits a lawyer to disclose confidential information only in controversies with the client. Further, the Model Rule does not provide for the intervention of "an impartial court," which appears to be the fault SDCBA finds with the Commission's proposal.
6	Santa Clara County Bar Association	M	Yes	MR 1.6(b)(2), (3)	We oppose the revisions proposes by the RRC in completely deleting subsection (b)(2) and (3) regarding a crime or fraud involving a substantial financial/economic injury to another. The SCCBA recognizes that adopting the ABA Model Rule including subsection (b)(2) and (3) would create another exception to the attorney-client confidentiality. However, the SCCBA believes that the crime/fraud exception is a vital one, constrained in its scope and permissive in its application.	The Commission did not make the suggested change. As noted in the Introduction to the Rule, MR 1.6(b)(2) and (3) are inimical to California's settled policy favoring strong confidentiality to better enable a lawyer to provide competent representation and compliance with the law: These provisions run counter to California's policy of providing assurance to clients that their secrets are safe, which encourages client candor in communicating with the lawyer and provides the lawyer with the information necessary to promote client compliance with the law.

Rule 1.6 Confidentiality of Information [3-100, B&P 6068(e)]. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 7 Agree = 2 Disagree = 0 Modify = 5 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
7	Santos, Patrick T.	M	No		Commenter attached his 49-page Law Review Comment advocating for the adoption of an exception to Proposed Rule 1.6 in the case of wrongful incarceration, noting that currently Massachusetts is the only state which has a rule like it and the ABA is currently considering a counterpart.	The Commission recommends against the commenter's suggested adoption of an exception to confidentiality in proposed Rule 1.6 in situations involving wrongful incarceration. First, such an exception would undermine the policy underlying confidentiality of encouraging clients to be fully candid with a lawyer to enable lawyer to represent the client effectively. Second, as the commenter notes, only one state provides for such an exception, and the Model Rules have not been amended to include one. Finally, unlike the other exceptions the Commission has recommended in proposed Rule 1.6(b), an exception for wrongful incarceration is neither provided in Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068, nor well-settled in California decisional law.

Rule 1.6: Confidentiality of Information

STATE VARIATIONS

(The following is an excerpt from Regulation of Lawyers: Statutes and Standards (2010 Ed.)
by Steven Gillers, Roy D. Simon and Andrew M. Perlman.)

Alaska, Arkansas, Connecticut, Illinois, Maine, Maryland, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, and Utah permit a lawyer to reveal information necessary to prevent the client from committing a criminal act “likely to result in substantial injury to the financial interest or property of another” (or words to that effect). Of these, Alaska, Arkansas, Connecticut, Illinois, Maine, Maryland, New Mexico, North Dakota, and Utah also permit revelation when the client’s act is only fraudulent, but not criminal. New Jersey, Vermont, and Wisconsin go one step further, imposing a duty to reveal the information under these circumstances.

Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Kansas, Michigan, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, South Carolina, Washington, and Wyoming essentially retain the formulation of DR 4-101(C)(3) of the ABA Model Code of Professional Responsibility — they all permit a lawyer to reveal “the intention of a client to commit a crime” (or words to that effect).

Arizona, Connecticut, Florida, Illinois, Nevada, New Jersey, North Dakota, Texas, Vermont, and Wisconsin mandate disclosure of information to prevent the client from committing serious violent crimes. However, mandatory disclosure applies in North Dakota only if the harm is “imminent,” and Florida’s provision applies to all crimes, not just violent ones.

Alaska: In the rules effective April 15, 2009, Alaska adds Rule 1.6(b)(1)(C), which permits disclosures in order to “prevent the wrongful execution or incarceration of another.” Alaska also adds Rule 1.6(c), which requires a lawyer to take reasonable precautions to guard against the inadvertent or unauthorized disclosure of a client’s confidential information.

Arizona: Rule 1.6(d)(5) applies only to “other law or a final order of a court or tribunal of competent jurisdiction directing the lawyer to disclose such information.” Arizona also has an unusual statute governing the attorney-client privilege for corporations and other entities — see the Arizona entry in the Selected State Variations following ABA Model Rule 1.13.

Arkansas. Rule 1.6(c) contains a noisy withdrawal provision, which states as follows: “Neither this Rule nor Rule 1.8(b) nor Rule 1.16(d) prevents the lawyer from giving notice of the fact of withdrawal, and the lawyer may also withdraw or disaffirm any opinion, document, affirmation or the like.”

California: California Business & Professions Code §6068(e)(1) provides that it is the duty of an attorney “[t]o maintain inviolate the confidence, and at every peril to himself or herself to preserve the secrets, of his or her client.” However, §6068(e)(2) provides that an attorney “may, but is not required to, reveal confidential information relating to the representation of a client to the extent that the attorney reasonably believes the disclosure is necessary to prevent a criminal act that the attorney reasonably believes is likely to result in death of, or substantial bodily harm to, an individual.” In addition, Rule 3-100 of the California Rules of Professional Conduct provides as follows:

(A) A member shall not reveal information protected from disclosure by Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (e)(1) without the informed consent of the client, or as provided in paragraph (B) of this rule.

(B) A member may, but is not required to, reveal confidential information relating to the representation of a client to the extent that the member reasonably believes the disclosure is necessary to prevent a criminal act that the member reasonably believes is likely to result in death of, or substantial bodily harm to, an individual.

(C) Before revealing confidential information to prevent a criminal act as provided in paragraph (B), a member shall, if reasonable under the circumstances:

(1) make a good faith effort to persuade the client: (i) not to commit or to continue the criminal act or (ii) to pursue a course of conduct that will prevent the threatened death or substantial bodily harm; or do both (i) and (ii); and

(2) inform the client, at an appropriate time, of the member’s ability or decision to reveal information as provided in paragraph (B).

(D) In revealing confidential information as provided in paragraph (B), the member's disclosure must be no more than is necessary to prevent the criminal act, given the information known to the member at the time of the disclosure.

(E) A member who does not reveal information permitted by paragraph (B) does not violate this rule.

District of Columbia: Rule 1.6 combines language from the ABA Model Code and the ABA Model Rules plus other language unique to D.C. Rule 1.6(c)(2) permits a lawyer to reveal client confidences "to prevent the bribery or intimidation of witnesses, jurors, court officials, or other persons who are involved in proceedings before a tribunal if the lawyer reasonably believes" such acts will likely occur without revelation. Rule 1.6(d) is substantially the same as Model Rule 1.6(b)(2) and (3), although differently phrased. Rule 1.6(h) applies the obligations of the Rule "to confidences and secrets learned prior to becoming a lawyer in the course of providing assistance to another lawyer."

Florida: Rule 1.6 provides that a lawyer "shall reveal" information the lawyer believes "necessary (1) to prevent a client from committing a crime or (2) to prevent a death or substantial bodily harm to another." In addition, Florida Rule 1.6(c) permits a lawyer to reveal information necessary "(1) to serve the client's interest unless it is information the client specifically requires not to be disclosed . . . or (5) to comply with the Rules of Professional Conduct." Florida also adds Rule 1.6(d): "When required by a tribunal to reveal such information, a lawyer may first exhaust all appellate remedies." Finally, Florida adds Rule 1.6(e), which provides that "[w]hen disclosure is mandated or permitted, the lawyer shall disclose no more information than is required to meet the requirements or accomplish the purposes of this rule."

Georgia: Rule 1.6(a) combines language from ABA Model Rule 1.6 and DR 4-101(A) of the ABA Model Code of Professional Responsibility, as follows:

(a) A lawyer shall maintain in confidence all information gained in the professional relationship with a client, including information which the client has requested to be held inviolate or the disclosure of which would be embarrassing or would likely be detrimental to the client, unless the client consents after consultation, except for disclosures that are impliedly authorized in order to carry out the representation, or are required by these rules or other law, or by order of the Court.

Georgia's Rule 1.6(b)(1) permits a lawyer to reveal protected information which the lawyer reasonably believes necessary “(i) to avoid or prevent harm or substantial financial loss to another as a result of client criminal conduct or third party criminal conduct clearly in violation of the law” or “(ii) to prevent serious injury or death not otherwise covered” by subparagraph (i). Georgia adds the following Rules 1.6(b)(2)-(3) and (c), (d), and (e):

(2) In a situation described in Subsection (1), if the client has acted at the time the lawyer learns of the threat of harm or loss to a victim, use or disclosure is permissible only if the harm or loss has not yet occurred.

(3) Before using or disclosing information pursuant to Subsection (1), if feasible, the lawyer must make a good faith effort to persuade the client either not to act or, if the client has already acted, to warn the victim.

(c) The lawyer may, where the law does not otherwise require, reveal information to which the duty of confidentiality does not apply under paragraph (b) without being subjected to disciplinary proceedings.

(d) The lawyer shall reveal information under paragraph (b) as the applicable law requires.

(e) The duty of confidentiality shall continue after the client-lawyer relationship has terminated.

Illinois: In the rules effective January 1, 2010, Illinois adds Rule 1.6(c) and (d):

(c) A lawyer shall reveal information relating to the representation of a client to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to prevent reasonably certain death or substantial bodily harm.

(d) Information received by a lawyer participating in a meeting or proceeding with a trained intervener or panel of trained interveners of an approved lawyers’ assistance program, or in an intermediary program approved by a circuit court in which nondisciplinary complaints against judges or lawyers can be referred, shall be considered information relating to the representation of a client for purposes of these Rules.

Maine: Before making a disclosure under Rule 1.6(b), lawyers must try to convince the client not to engage in the conduct that will produce the applicable harm. Moreover, Rule 1.6(d) and Comment 2 explain that the rule applies only to a client’s confidences and secrets, not to the broader range of information (i.e., “all information relating to the representation of the client”) described in the Model Rule.

Massachusetts: Rule 1.6(b) provides as follows:

A lawyer may reveal, and to the extent required by Rule 3.3, Rule 4.1(b), or Rule 8.3 must reveal, such information:

(1) to prevent the commission of a criminal or fraudulent act that the lawyer reasonably believes is likely to result in death or substantial bodily harm, or in substantial injury to the financial interests or property of another, or to prevent the wrongful execution or incarceration of another; . . . or

(3) to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to rectify client fraud in which the lawyer's services have been used, subject to Rule 3.3 (e) . . .

(Massachusetts was the first state to adopt an exception for preventing the wrongful execution or incarceration of another.)

Michigan essentially retains the language of DR 4-101 of the ABA Model Code of Professional Responsibility but deletes the self-defense exception in

DR 4-101(C)(4). Michigan also adds Rule 1.6(c)(3), which allows a lawyer to reveal "confidences and secrets to the extent reasonably necessary to rectify the consequences of a client's illegal or fraudulent act in the furtherance of which the lawyer's services have been used."

Minnesota: Rule 1.6(b) provides, in relevant part, as follows:

(b) A lawyer may reveal information relating to the representation of a client if:

(1) the client gives informed consent;

(2) the information is not protected by the attorney-client privilege under applicable law, the client has not requested that the information be held inviolate, and the lawyer reasonably believes the disclosure would not be embarrassing or likely detrimental to the client;

(3) the lawyer reasonably believes the disclosure is impliedly authorized in order to carry out the representation; . . .

(10) the lawyer reasonably believes the disclosure is necessary to inform the Office of Lawyers Professional Responsibility of knowledge of another lawyer's violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct that raises a substantial question as to that lawyer's honesty, trustworthiness, or fitness as a lawyer in other respects. See Rule 8.3.

Missouri: Missouri omits ABA Model Rules 1.6(b)(2) and (b)(3).

New Hampshire: Rule 1.6(b)(1) also permits disclosure to prevent the client from committing "a criminal act that the lawyer believes is likely to result in substantial injury to the financial interest or property of another," without any requirement that the client is using or has used the lawyer's services. New Hampshire omits ABA Model Rule 1.6(b)(3).

New Jersey: Rule 1.6(b) requires a lawyer to reveal confidential information "to the proper authorities . . . to prevent the client or another person (1) from committing a criminal, illegal or fraudulent act . . . likely to result in death or substantial bodily harm or substantial injury to the financial interest or property of another" or "(2) from committing a criminal, illegal or fraudulent act that the lawyer reasonably believes is likely to perpetrate a fraud upon a tribunal." Rule 1.6(c) permits a lawyer to reveal information as well "to the person threatened to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes is necessary to protect that person from death, substantial bodily harm, substantial financial injury, or substantial property loss."

New York: In the rules effective April 1, 2009, Rule 1.6 contains numerous variations as well as many new comments. For example, Rule 1.6(a) offers an elaborate definition of "confidential information," which provides as follows:

"Confidential information" consists of information gained during or relating to the representation of a client, whatever its source, that is (a) protected by the attorney-client privilege, (b) likely to be embarrassing or detrimental to the client if disclosed, or (c) information that the client has requested be kept confidential. "Confidential information" does not ordinarily include (i) a lawyer's legal knowledge or legal research or (ii) information that is generally known in the local community or in the trade, field or profession to which the information relates.

Comment 4A elaborates on this definition as follows:

Information relates to the representation if it has any possible relevance to the representation or is received because of the representation. The accumulation of legal knowledge or legal research that a lawyer acquires through practice ordinarily is not client information protected by this Rule. However, in some circumstances, including where the client and the lawyer have so agreed, a client may have a proprietary interest in a particular product of the lawyer's research. Information that is generally known in the local community or in the trade, field or profession to which the information relates is also not protected, unless the client and the lawyer have otherwise agreed. Information that is in the public domain is not protected unless the information is difficult or expensive to discover. For example, a public record is confidential information when it may be obtained only through great effort or by means of a Freedom of Information request or other process.

Drawing on DR 4-101(B) of the old Model Code, Rule 1.6(a) provides that a disclosure of confidential information violates the rule only when the disclosure occurs "knowingly."

Rule 1.6(b) does not permit disclosures to prevent or rectify financial injuries, but it adds to the Model Rule by permitting disclosures when the lawyer reasonably believes necessary:

(3) to withdraw a written or oral opinion or representation previously given by the lawyer and reasonably believed by the lawyer still to be relied upon by a third person, where the lawyer has discovered that the opinion or representation was based on materially inaccurate information or is being used to further a crime or fraud; ...

Comment 6A offers a list of factors for lawyers to consider when deciding whether to disclose information under Rule 1.6(b), including:

(i) the seriousness of the potential injury to others if the prospective harm or crime occurs, (ii) the likelihood that it will occur and its imminence, (iii) the apparent absence of any other feasible way to prevent the potential injury, (iv) the extent to which the client may be using the lawyer's services in bringing about the harm or crime, (v) the circumstances under which the lawyer acquired the information of the client's intent or prospective course of action, and (vi) any other aggravating or extenuating circumstances. In any case, disclosure adverse to the client's interest should be no greater than the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to prevent the threatened harm or crime. When a lawyer learns that a client intends to pursue or is pursuing a course of conduct that would permit disclosure under paragraphs (b)(1), (b)(2) or (b)(3), the lawyer's initial duty, where practicable, is to remonstrate with the client. In the rare situation in which the client is reluctant to accept the lawyer's advice, the lawyer's threat of disclosure is a measure of last resort that may persuade the client. When the lawyer reasonably believes that the client will carry out the threatened harm or crime, the lawyer may disclose confidential information when permitted by paragraphs (b)(1), (b)(2) or (b)(3). A lawyer's permissible disclosure under paragraph (b) does not waive the client's attorney-client privilege; neither the lawyer nor the client may be forced to testify about communications protected by the privilege, unless a tribunal or body with authority to compel testimony makes a determination that the crime-fraud exception to the privilege, or some other exception, has been satisfied by a party to the proceeding. For a lawyer's duties when representing an organizational client engaged in wrongdoing, see Rule 1.13(b).

Rule 1.6(c) is nearly identical to DR 4-101(D) of the old Model Code.

North Carolina combines modified language from ABA Model Rule 1.6 with language from DR 4-101 of the old ABA Model Code of Professional Responsibility. For example, North Carolina's equivalent to ABA Model Rules 1.6(b)(2) and (b)(3) provides simply that a lawyer may reveal confidential information to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary "to prevent, mitigate, or rectify the consequences of a client's criminal or fraudulent act in the commission of which the lawyer's services were used." North Carolina also adds a Rule 1.6(c), which provides that the duty of confidentiality "encompasses information received by a lawyer then acting as an agent of a lawyers' or judges' assistance program approved by the North Carolina State Bar or the North Carolina Supreme Court regarding another lawyer or judge seeking assistance or to whom assistance is being offered."

Ohio: Rule 1.6(b) permits a lawyer "to reveal the intention of the client or other person to commit a crime and the information necessary to prevent the crime," or to reveal confidential information "to mitigate substantial injury to the financial interests or property of another that has resulted from the client's commission of an illegal or fraudulent act, in furtherance of which the client has used the lawyer's services." Ohio omits ABA Model Rule 1.6(b)(2).

Oklahoma: Rule 1.6(b)(2) permits revelation only if "the lawyer has first made reasonable efforts to contact the client so that the client can rectify such criminal or fraudulent act, but the lawyer has been unable to do so, or the lawyer has contacted the client and called upon the client to rectify such criminal or fraudulent act and the client has refused or has been unable to do so."

Oregon: Rule 1.0(f) defines "information relating to the representation" as denoting "both information protected by the attorney-client privilege under applicable law, and other information gained in a current or former professional relationship that the client has requested be held inviolate or the disclosure of which would be embarrassing or would be likely to be detrimental to the client." In addition, Oregon permits a lawyer to disclose "the intention of the lawyer's client to commit a crime and the information necessary to prevent the crime." Also, Oregon Rule 1.6(b)(6) permits disclosure of specified information in discussions preliminary to the sale of a law practice under Rule 1.17, but states: "A potential purchasing lawyer shall have the same responsibilities as the selling lawyer to preserve confidences and secrets of such clients whether or not the sale of the practice closes or the client ultimately consents to representation by the purchasing lawyer."

Pennsylvania adds a Rule 1.6(d) that states: "The duty not to reveal information relating to representation of a client continues after the client-lawyer relationship has terminated." In addition, a lawyer may reveal information relating to the representation of a client that the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to "effectuate the sale of a law practice consistent with Rule 1.17."

Tennessee: Rule 1.6(b)(1) permits a lawyer to reveal client confidences "to prevent the client or another person from committing a crime, including a crime that is reasonably certain to result in substantial injury to the financial interest or property of another," unless Rule 3.3 forbids revelation. Rule 1.6(c) provides that a lawyer "shall" reveal information relating to the representation of a client to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes disclosure is necessary:

- (1) to prevent reasonably certain death or substantial bodily harm;

- (2) to comply with an order of a tribunal requiring disclosure, but only if ordered to do so by the tribunal after the lawyer has asserted on behalf of the client all non-frivolous claims that the information sought by the tribunal is protected against disclosure by the attorney-client privilege or other applicable law; or

(3) to comply with Rules 3.3, 4.1, or other law.

Texas: Rule 1.02(d)-(e) provides:

(d) When a lawyer has confidential information clearly establishing that a client is likely to commit a criminal or fraudulent act that is likely to result in substantial injury to the financial interests or property of another, the lawyer shall promptly make reasonable efforts under the circumstances to dissuade the client from committing the crime or fraud.

(e) When a lawyer has confidential information clearly establishing that the lawyer's client has committed a criminal or fraudulent act in the commission of which the lawyer's services have been used, the lawyer shall make reasonable efforts under the circumstances to persuade the client to take corrective action.

Texas Rule 1.05 divides "confidential information" into two categories — "privileged information," which means information protected by the attorney-client privilege, and "unprivileged client information," which "means all information relating to a client or furnished by the client, other than privileged information, acquired by the lawyer in the course of or by reason of the representation of the client." A lawyer "may reveal confidential information" in eight instances, including when "the lawyer has reason to believe it is necessary to do so in order to prevent the client from committing a criminal or fraudulent act," and to "the extent revelation reasonably appears necessary to rectify the consequences of a client's criminal or fraudulent act in the commission of which the lawyer's services had been used." Rules 1.05(c)(7) and (8).

Vermont: In the rules effective September 1, 2009, Rule 1.6 imposes a duty to disclose confidential information "(1) to prevent the client or another person from committing a criminal act that the lawyer reasonably believes is likely to result in the death of, or substantial bodily harm to, a person other than the person committing the act; or (2) to prevent the client from committing a crime or fraud that is reasonably certain to result in substantial injury to the financial interests or property of another and in furtherance of which the client has used or is using the lawyer's services; or (3) to prevent, mitigate or rectify substantial injury to the financial interests or property of another that is reasonably certain to result or has resulted from the client's commission of a crime or fraud in furtherance of which the client has used the lawyer's services."

Virginia: Rule 1.6(a) contains the Code's definitions of "confidence" and "secret" without using these terms. A lawyer may reveal a client confidence "which clearly establishes that the client has, in the course of the representation, perpetrated upon a third party a fraud related to the subject matter of the representation." Rule 1.6(b)(3). The lawyer must "promptly" reveal "the intention of a client, as stated by the client, to commit a crime and the information necessary to prevent the crime," but if feasible must first give the client the opportunity to desist and must advise the client of the lawyer's obligation. If "the crime involves perjury by the client," the lawyer must advise the client that he or she "shall seek to withdraw as counsel." Rule 1.6(c)(1). Rule 1.6(c)(2) also requires the lawyer to promptly reveal "information which clearly establishes that the client has, in the course of the representation, perpetrated a fraud related to the subject matter of the representation upon a tribunal." Information is clearly established when "the client acknowledges to the attorney that the client has perpetrated a fraud."

Proposed Rule 1.7 [3-310]

“Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients”

(ALT1, Draft # 3.1, 7/1/10)

Summary: Proposed Rule 1.7 is based on Model Rule 1.7 and states the basic conflict of interest standard for a lawyer in dealing with current clients. Provisions of the Rule are incorporated by reference in several other conflicts rules, including proposed Rule 1.9, which defines a lawyer’s duties to former clients, proposed Rule 1.10, which sets forth the principle of imputation of conflicts, and proposed Rule 1.11, which concerns special conflicts of interest involving former and current government lawyers. Several changes were made to Comment [22] following the second round of public comment to clarify the limited situation in which an open-ended waiver might be considered in compliance with the Rule.

Comparison with ABA Counterpart

Rule

Comment

- ☒ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
- ☐ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
- ☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
- ☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

- ☒ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
- ☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
- ☒ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
- ☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

Primary Factors Considered

- ☒ Existing California Law

Rules

RPC 3-310

Statute

Bus. & Prof. Code § 6131.

Case law

- ☐ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

- ☐ Other Primary Factor(s)

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(13 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 13 due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Less than Six Members Opposing Public Comment Distribution ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 7
Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 4
Abstain 0

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by consensus ☐

Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

Minority/Position Included on Model Rule Comparison Chart: ☒ Yes ☐ No

☐ No Known Stakeholders

☒ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

Representatives of a large law firm urged the adoption of a provision concerning advance waivers of conflicts and several firms urged the adoption of a provision that would address “unforeseeable” (or “thrust upon”) conflicts. See “Public Comment” in Introduction.

☒ Very Controversial – Explanation:

A minority of the Commission favors retaining the current California Rule approach. See Introduction. In addition, concerns have been expressed over the inclusion of Comment [22], regarding advance waivers of conflicts.

☐ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

☐ Not Controversial

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.7* Conflict of Interest: Current Clients

July 2010

(Draft rule following consideration of second round of public comment)

INTRODUCTION:

Proposed Rule 1.7, which is based on Model Rule 1.7, is the basic conflicts of interest rule. It addresses conflicts of interest in the representation of current clients, and it is the point of reference for several other conflicts rules, including possible conflicts of interest that might arise because of continuing duties to former clients (Rule 1.9) and conflicts of interest affecting current and former government lawyers (Rule 1.11). In consideration of the public comment and concerns expressed by the Board committee at its November 2009 meeting and the interjurisdictional implications of national practices, the Commission agrees with the Model Rule's identification of situations that create potential or actual conflicts of interest for a lawyer in representing current clients. The Commission recommends that the Board continue to reject the initial public comment version of the Rule (which carries forward current California Rule 3-310's "checklist" approach to conflicts) and for the most part adopt the Model Rule. The Commission has concluded that the format and certain of substantive elements of the Model Rule, as supplemented by language and law developed in California case law, statutes and regulations, will act to protect vital client interests. Specifically, the Commission recommends the nearly verbatim adoption of the black letter of the Model Rule, with the only change being the substitution of the heightened California "informed written consent" standard for the Model Rule's less client protective "informed consent, confirmed in writing." The Commission also recommends the adoption of the structure and order of the Model Rule comment, with a number of changes made for clarification and to provide better guidance for lawyers to apply the Rule and be in compliance with their professional obligations.

The Commission notes that few issues face lawyers more often than conflicts of interest. Thus, public policy strongly favors having a consistent rule on conflicts that is coherent, complete and is in accord with California law and with the rules in other jurisdictions. Most jurisdictions, including California, recognize that a conflict on interest exists where the particular circumstances present a significant risk that the lawyer's representation of a client will be materially and adversely affected by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client, a former client, or to a third party or by the lawyer's own interests. Restatement Third, The Law Governing Lawyers, section 121 (ALI 2000); Sharp v. Next Entertainment, Inc. (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 275, 282. Model Rule 1.7(a) correctly reflects that standard. The standard articulated in the Model Rule has been developed through case law and is the standard adopted in the rules of most jurisdictions. The Commission has recommended following the Model Rule when it comes to former client conflicts. Similarly, there is no good reason for departing from the widely accepted rule on current client conflicts.

* Proposed Rule 1.7, ALT1, XDRAFT 3.1 (7/1/10).

The Commission also notes that current California Rule 3-310 has a complex structure that is confusing to lawyers and difficult to understand and apply. Model Rule 1.7 is more concise and covers the same ground as the current California rule with more clarity. Moreover, although the current rule might be drafted with more specificity, it does not cover all conflict situations. While the checklist approach of the current rule might appear preferable in concept, it misses the mark in terms of comprehensiveness. For example, current rule 3-310(B)(2) is limited to a lawyer's relationships with a "party or witness" rather than duties to any third party that would materially and adversely affect the lawyer's independent judgment and loyalty to the client. Current rule (B)(3) is limited to relationships with a third person where the third person, rather than the client, would be "affected substantially by resolution of the matter." The paragraph provides no protection where the lawyer's duties to the third person will materially limit the client's representation. Proposed Rule 1.7(a)(2), which is identical to the Model Rule, provides a more coherent and complete standard that requires client consent where there is a significant risk that a lawyer's ability to consider, recommend or carry out an appropriate course of action for the client will be materially limited as a result of the lawyer's other responsibilities or interests. See proposed Rule 1.7, Comments [7B] and [8]. This is an objective and enforceable standard by which to assess the effect on the risk of adversity and materiality on the representation. See Rest. Section 121, Comment c.; and see, e.g., Fiandaca v. Cunningham (1st Cir.1987) 827 F.2d 825. The Commission takes the position that lawyers in California should have the same consistent and accepted standard as lawyers in other jurisdictions for determining the existence of a concurrent conflict of interest.

Moreover, the Commission has not completely discarded the current rule. Instead, it has recommended including in the Comment language from the current black letter rule (that was carried forward in the public comment version of the Rule), as well as language from State Bar ethics opinions, to help lawyers analyze actual and potential conflict situations. The Commission's approach thus provides the more comprehensive Model Rule standard and the specific guidance the minority claims is present in the current rule and public comment version but is lacking in the proposed Rule.

Minority. A minority of the Commission has submitted a dissent to the Commission’s decision to recommend adoption of a Rule patterned on Model Rule 1.7. The minority takes the position that “[t]his represents a sea change that will radically reduce client protection.” The full minority dissent, together with the minority’s proposed Rule draft which the minority states addresses the concerns expressed at the Board Committee’s meeting in November 2009, is attached below following the Rule & Comment Comparison Chart.

Public Comment. The Commission received a substantial amount of public comment, much of it addressed to Comment [31] (now renumbered Comment [22] as in Model Rule 1.7), concerning advance waivers of conflicts of interest, and much of it opposing the proposed comment. The proposed comment uses Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [22] as its starting point, but has been heavily edited to make it more specific and less discursive in order to provide better guidance to lawyers. The Commission carefully considered the opposing viewpoints but ultimately concluded that omitting Comment [31] would not add to lawyers’ understanding of this important subject, and recommends that it be adopted. Instead, the Commission has made a number of revisions that are intended to more explicitly state the requirements for obtaining client consent, thereby enhancing client protection. The Commission also made several changes to Comment [22] following the second round of public comment to clarify the limited situation in which an open-ended waiver might be considered in compliance with the Rule.

The following statement was included In the Introduction that was circulated with the second round of public comment: “The Commission Chair encourages public comment on the specific issue of whether Rule 1.7 as recommended by the Commission and adopted by the Board is preferable to Rule 1.7 as drafted by the minority.” Comment was received from eight individuals or groups. None expressed a preference for the rule proposed by the minority.

Variations in other jurisdictions: All other jurisdictions have rules based on the Model Rule format but with a number of variations. Some of these correspond to aspects of the proposed Rule. For example, Maine’s Rule requires disclosure of the lawyer’s own relationships and interests along the lines of proposed paragraph (d). The District of Columbia has added paragraph (b)(4), which also is along the lines of proposed paragraph (d), and its Comment section, which uses the 1983 version of the Model Rule as its starting point, diverges markedly from either the 1983 or the 2002 version of the Model Rule. Alaska has defined client to exclude class members (see proposed Comment [34]). Florida and Ohio also have added a provision regarding a lawyer’s relationship with another lawyer in a matter that is along the lines of California’s rule 3-320 (proposed Rule 1.8.11). Idaho includes a brief reference to a lawyer’s personal interests and family relationships that is a highly diluted version of proposed paragraph (d) and of proposed Rule 1.8.11. North Dakota and Ohio also add Rule references to the lawyer’s personal interests, but overlook the lawyer’s personal relationships.

Proposed Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients
Minority Position Against Adoption of Proposed Rule 1.7(a)(2)
Minority Dissent

Rule 1.7(a)(2) represents a sea change that will radically reduce client protection. Here is one of many possible examples: Imagine a situation in which a lawyer represents a client in a lawsuit, and one of the other parties is the lawyer's oldest friend, brother-in-law or lover, or someone to whom the lawyer owes money. Under the current California rules, the lawyer is absolutely prohibited from accepting that representation without first fully disclosing the facts to the client. This disclosure puts the client in complete control of the situation, by requiring the lawyer to disclose the relationship and its impact on the representation and allowing the client to decide whether to accept the lawyer, and if so with what limitations and protections. Under the proposed rule, it is highly unpredictable whether the client will receive this information. To the extent the disclosure occurs at all, it frequently will be too late to avoid injury to the client.

Paragraph 1.7(a)(2) states:

(a) Except as provided in paragraph (b), a lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation involves a concurrent conflict of interest. A concurrent conflict of interest exists if:

(2) There is a significant risk that the representation of one or more clients will be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client, a former client or a third person or by a personal interest of the lawyer.

Rule 1.7(a)(2) adopts an ABA Model Rule formula that focuses on the likelihood that a conflict of interest will affect a representation enough to hurt a client. Rule 1.7(a)(2) applies only when there is a "significant risk" that the circumstance will "materially limit" the lawyer's representation of a client. "Significant risk" and "materially limited" are not defined. There is no uniform standard for their application nationally.

The terminology focuses not on what is reasonably possible but on what is very likely or predictable. The difference is important for client protection. Requiring informed written consent as early in the representation as possible not only informs clients about potential problems but also allows lawyers and clients to structure the engagement to avoid those problems. The current California rule provides that client protection by requiring informed written consent in defined situations that are the most frequent sources of conflicts of interest. The Model Rule delays the requirement until the risk of client injury becomes significant, which in many cases will occur when it is too late to avoid injury to the client. Because the "significant risk" standard focuses on the predictability of the harm, it will be extremely difficult, if not impossible, for the State Bar to enforce a preventative standard, which the current California rule affords.

There cannot be any question that allowing a lawyer to defer disclosure until the risk of client harm becomes significant will reduce the likelihood that the lawyer will make what the minority believes should be an absolutely required disclosure. There also cannot be any question that the lawyer's assessment of the risk often will be influenced by the lawyer's own financial interest and other personal concerns. There also cannot be any question that the proposed rule would alter the nature of the lawyer-client relationship by placing the lawyer in charge of the relationship, depriving the client of protection and control that the client should have.

In addition, Rule 1.7(a)(2) will upset twenty years of California jurisprudence involving conflicts of interest and will require years of litigation to resolve at the expense of clients. While creating new avenues of litigation may be a boon for the legal community, clients will bear the cost of that litigation, which would become necessary only because of the sea change this Rule will create.

To assist the Board its deliberations on Rule 1.7, the minority are providing the following draft that was previously circulated for public comment. The minority has revised the draft Rule in response to the comments the Commission received.

RULE 1.7 MINORITY DRAFT RULE

Rule 1.7: Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients

- (a) Representation of directly adverse clients. A lawyer shall not, without the informed written consent of each client
 - (1) accept or continue representation of a client if the representation will be directly adverse to another client the lawyer currently represents in another matter; or
 - (2) while representing a client, accept in another matter the representation of a person or organization who is directly adverse to the client in the matter in which the lawyer represents the client.
- (b) Representation of multiple clients in one matter. A lawyer shall not, without the informed written consent of each client:
 - (1) Accept or continue representation of more than one client in a matter in which the interests of the clients potentially conflict; or
 - (2) Accept or continue representation of more than one client in a matter in which the interests of the clients actually conflict.
- (c) Personal relationships and interests. A lawyer shall not accept or continue representation of a client without providing written disclosure to the client where:

- (1) the lawyer has a legal, business, financial, professional, or personal relationship with a party or witness in the same matter; or
- (2) the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that:
 - (a) the lawyer previously had a legal, business, financial, professional, or personal relationship with a party or witness in the same matter; and
 - (b) the previous relationship would substantially affect the lawyer's representation; or
- (3) the lawyer has or had a legal, business, financial, professional, or personal relationship with another person or entity and the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that either the relationship or the person or entity would be affected substantially by resolution of the matter; or
- (4) the lawyer has or had a legal, business, financial, or professional interest in the subject matter of the representation

(d) Relationships with another Lawyer. A lawyer shall not accept or continue representation of a client without the client's informed written consent where the lawyer knows that:

- (1) a lawyer or law firm representing a party or witness in the matter has a lawyer-client relationship with the lawyer, the lawyer's law firm, or another lawyer in the lawyer's law firm; or
- (2) a lawyer representing a party or witness in the matter is a spouse, parent or sibling of the lawyer, or has a cohabitational or intimate personal relationship with the lawyer or with another lawyer in the lawyer's law firm.

Comment

General Principles Applicable to All Conflicts Rules (Rules 1.7, 1.8 series, and 1.9)

[1] This rule and the other conflict rules seek to protect a lawyer's ability to carry out the lawyer's basic fiduciary duties to each client. For the purpose of considering whether the lawyer's duties to a client or other person could impair the lawyer's ability to fulfill the lawyer's duties to another client, a lawyer should consider all of the following: (1) the duty of undivided loyalty (including the duty to handle client funds and property as directed by the client); (2) the duty to exercise independent professional judgment for the client's benefit, not influenced by the lawyer's duties to or relationships with others, and not influenced by the lawyer's own interests; (3) the duty to maintain the confidentiality of client information; (4) the duty to make full and candid disclosure to the client of all information and developments material to the client's understanding of the representation and its control and direction of the lawyer; and (5) the duty to represent the client competently within the bounds of the law. See Rule 1.2(a) regarding the allocation of authority between lawyer and client.

[2] The first step in a lawyer's conflict analysis is to identify his or her client(s) in a current matter or potential client(s) in a new matter. In considering his or her ability to fulfill the foregoing duties, a lawyer should also be mindful of the scope of each relevant representation of a client or proposed representation of a potential client. Only then can the lawyer determine whether a conflict rule prohibits the representation, or permits the representation subject to a disclosure to the client or the informed written consent of the client or a former client. Determining whether a conflict exists may also require the lawyer to consult sources of law other than these Rules.

[3] This rule describes a lawyer's duties to current clients. Additional specific rules regarding current clients are set out in Rules 1.8.1 to [1.8.12]. For conflicts duties to former clients, see Rule 1.9. For conflicts of interest involving prospective clients, see Rule 1.18. For definitions of "informed consent" and "written," see Rule 1.0.1(e) and (b). See also Comments [26] – [30] to this Rule.

Lawyer Acting in Dual Roles

[4] A lawyer might owe fiduciary duties in capacities other than as a lawyer that could conflict with the duties the lawyer owes to clients or former clients, such as fiduciary duties arising from a lawyer's service as a trustee, executor, or corporate director. (See, e.g., William H. Raley Co, Inc. v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal.App.3d 1042 [197 Cal.Rptr. 232].)

Paragraph (a): Representation Adverse to Current Client

[5] A lawyer owes a duty of undivided loyalty to each current client, which prevents a lawyer from represent one client against another. These situations also may involve a conflict between a lawyers duty to inform one of the clients about information that the lawyer owes a duty to the other client to keep confidential. Paragraph (a) identifies two scenarios. Paragraph (a) (1) prevents a lawyer from representing a client against another current client of the lawyer, without first obtaining both clients' informed written consent. Paragraph (a)(2) provides that while a lawyer represents a client in a matter directly adverse to a non-client, the lawyer cannot take on the representation of the non-client in another matter without first obtaining both clients' informed written consent.

[5a] Paragraph (a)(1) encompasses those situations in which a lawyer is asked to act as an advocate or counselor in a matter against a person or organization the lawyer represents in another matter, even when the matters are wholly unrelated. For example, under paragraph (a)(1), a lawyer cannot accept or continue to representation A against B, if B is a client of the firm when the adverse representation arises. Paragraph (a)(1) applies equally in transactional and litigation matters. For example, a lawyer may not represent the seller of a business in negotiations when the lawyer represents the buyer in another matter, even if unrelated, without the informed written consent of each client. Paragraph (a)(1) would apply even if the parties to the transaction expect to, or are, working cooperatively toward a goal of common interest to them. (If a lawyer proposes to represent two or more parties concerning the same negotiation or lawsuit, the situation should be analyzed under paragraph (b), not paragraph (a). As an example, if a lawyer proposes to represent two parties concerning a transaction between them, the lawyer should consult paragraph (b).)

[6] Paragraph (a)(1) applies only to engagements in which the lawyer's work in a matter is directly adverse to a current client in any matter. The term "direct adversity" reflects a balancing of competing interests. The primary interest is to prohibit a lawyer from taking actions "adverse" to his or her client and thus inconsistent with the client's reasonable expectation that the lawyer will be loyal to the client. The word "direct" limits the scope of the rule to take into account the public policy favoring the right to select counsel of one's choice and the reality that the conflicts rules, if construed overly broadly, could become unworkable. As a consequence of this balancing and the variety of situations in which the issue can arise, there is no single definition of when a lawyer's actions are directly adverse to a current client for purposes of this Rule.

[7] Generally speaking, a lawyer's work on a matter will not be directly adverse to a person if that person is not a party to the matter, even if the non-party's interests could be affected adversely by the outcome of the matter. However, in some situations, a lawyer's work could be directly adverse to a non-party if that non-party is an identifiable target of a litigation or non-litigation representation, or a competitor for a particular transaction (as would occur, for example, if one client were in competition with another of the lawyer's clients on other matters to purchase or lease an asset or to acquire an exclusive license). Similarly, direct adversity can arise when a lawyer cross-examines a non-party witness who is the lawyer's client in another matter, if the examination is likely to harm or embarrass the witness. (See Hernandez v. Paicius (2003) 109 Cal.App.4th 452, 463-469 [134 Cal.Rptr.2d 756, 764-767].)

[8] Not all representations that might be harmful to the interests of a client create direct adversity governed by paragraph (a)(1). The following are among the instances that ordinarily would not constitute direct adversity: (1) the representation of business competitors in different matters, even if a positive outcome for one might strengthen its competitive position against the other; (2) a representation adverse to a non-client where another client of the lawyer is interested in the financial welfare or the profitability of the non-client, as might occur, e.g., if a client is the landlord of, or a lender to, the non-client; (3) working for an outcome in litigation that would establish precedent economically harmful to another current client who is not a party to the litigation; (4) representing clients having antagonistic positions on the same legal question that has arisen in different cases, unless doing so would interfere with the lawyer's ability to represent either client competently, as might occur, e.g., if the lawyer were advocating inconsistent positions in front of the same tribunal; and (5) representing two clients who have a dispute with one another if the lawyer's work for each client concerns matters other than the dispute.

[8A] Paragraph (a)(2) applies in a situation where a lawyer represents A in a matter against B, a non-client, and while that matter is pending, B seeks to hire the lawyer to represent B in another matter. If B were to seek to retain the lawyer in a matter directly adverse to A, then paragraph (a)(1) would apply, not paragraph (a)(2). As with paragraph (a)(1), paragraph (a)(2) applies to both litigation and transactional matters. The same considerations that determine whether a representation is directly adverse under paragraph (a)(1) apply to paragraph (a)(2).

[8B] Relevant considerations under paragraphs (a)(1) and (a)(2) include (i) whether the lawyer can faithfully represent and exercise independent judgment on behalf of client A in the matter adverse to B in light of the lawyer's representation of B, (ii) whether the lawyer's representation of A against B would undermine B's trust in the lawyer-client relationship, and (iii) whether the lawyer would be placed in a situation where the lawyer receives confidential information in connection with representing B that the lawyer has a duty to reveal to A, such that the lawyer could not fulfill the duty to inform A without breaching the lawyer's duty to B to not reveal the information.

[9] If a conflict under paragraph (a) arises during a representation, the lawyer must in all events continue to protect the confidentiality of information of each affected client and former client. Regarding former clients, see Rule 1.9(c).

Paragraph (b): Representation of multiple clients in a matter

[10] When a lawyer represents multiple clients in a single matter, the lawyer's duties to one of the clients often can interfere with the full performance of the duties the lawyer owes to the other clients. As a result, paragraph (b) applies when a lawyer represents multiple clients in a single matter, as when multiple clients intend to work cooperatively as co-plaintiffs or co-defendants in a single litigation, or as co-participants to a transaction or other common enterprise. Examples of a transaction or common enterprise include the formation of a business organization for multiple investors, the preparation of an ante-nuptial agreement for both parties, and the preparation of a post-nuptial agreement, a trust or wills, and the resolution of an "uncontested" marital dissolution, for both spouses. In some situations, the employment of a single counsel might have benefits of convenience, economy or strategy, but paragraph (b) requires the lawyer to make disclosure to, and to obtain informed written consent from, each client whenever the lawyer knows or reasonably should know it is reasonably possible that the lawyer's performance of the lawyer's duties to one of the joint clients will or does interfere with the lawyer's performance of the duties owed to another of the joint clients. See Comment [36] with respect to the application of paragraph (b) to an insurer's appointment of counsel to defend an insured.

[11] The following are examples of actual conflicts in representing multiple clients in a single matter: (1) the lawyer receives conflicting instructions from the clients and the lawyer cannot follow one client's instructions without violating another client's instruction; (2) the clients have inconsistent interests or objectives so that it becomes impossible for the lawyer to advance one client's interests or objectives without detrimentally affecting another client's interests or objectives; (3) the clients have antagonistic positions and the lawyer's duty requires the lawyer to advise each client about how to advance that client's position relative to the other's position, because the lawyer cannot be expected to exercise independent judgment in that circumstance; (4) the clients have inconsistent expectations of confidentiality because one client expects the lawyer to keep secret information that is material to the matter; (5) the lawyer has a preexisting relationship with one client that affects the lawyer's independent professional judgment on behalf of the other client(s); and (6) the clients make inconsistent demands for the original file.

[12] A lawyer's representation of two or more clients in a single matter can create potential confidentiality issues on which the lawyer must obtain each client's informed written consent under paragraph (b). First, although each client's communications with the lawyer are protected as to third persons by the lawyer's duty of confidentiality and the lawyer-client privilege, the communications might not be privileged in a civil dispute between the joint clients. (See Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)(1), Rule 1.6, and Evidence Code sections 952 and 962.) Second, because the lawyer is obligated to make disclosures to each jointly represented client to the full extent required by Rule 1.4, and because the lawyer may not favor one joint client over any other, each joint client normally should expect that its communications with the lawyer will be shared with other jointly represented clients.

[13] If a lawyer obtains the consent of multiple clients to the lawyer's representation of them in a matter notwithstanding the existence of a potential conflict under paragraph (b)(1), the lawyer must obtain a new, informed written consent from each client pursuant to paragraph (b)(2) if a potential conflict becomes an actual conflict. Likewise, if a previously unanticipated or unidentified potential or actual conflict arises, the lawyer then must obtain consent of each client in the matter under paragraph (b)(1). Clients may provide such consents in advance of the conflict arising, subject to the criteria set forth below in Comment [31].

[14] Even if the clients have a dispute about one aspect of the matter, there often remain issues about which they have aligned interests. In litigation, for instance, joint clients might have an interest in presenting a unified front to the opposing party and in reducing their litigation expenses, but have an actual conflict about allocation of the proceeds of the litigation (for plaintiffs) or of liability (for defendants). A lawyer might be able to benefit the clients by representing them on issues on which they have aligned interests while excluding from the scope of the representation the areas in which they have a dispute or different interests, subject to the informed written consent requirements of paragraph (b). See Rule 1.2 (c) (limiting the scope of representation).

[15] A client, who has consented to a joint representation under paragraph (b), may terminate the lawyer's representation at any time with or without a reason. If a jointly represented client terminates the lawyer-client relationship, the lawyer may not continue to represent the other jointly represented client or clients if the continued representation would be directly adverse to the client who terminated the representation unless the client terminating the representation consents or previously did so.

[16] Reserved.

Paragraph (c): Lawyer Relationships and Interests

[17] A lawyer's personal relationships and interests might interfere with the lawyer's full performance of the duties owed to a client. As result, paragraph (c) requires a lawyer to obtain a client's informed written consent when the lawyer has any of certain present or past relationships with others. The purpose of this requirement is to permit the client or potential client to make a more informed decision about whether and on what conditions to retain, or continue to retain, the lawyer. Paragraph (c) applies in litigation and in non-litigation representations.

[18] A lawyer also should not allow his or her own interests to have an adverse effect on the representation of a client. Paragraph (c)(4) requires a lawyer to obtain the client's informed written consent when the lawyer has an interest in the subject matter of the representation. Examples of this include the following: (1) a lawyer would have a legal interest if the lawyer is a party to a contract being litigated; (2) a lawyer would have a business and financial interest if the lawyer represents a client in litigation with a corporation in which the lawyer is a shareholder; and (3) a lawyer would have a professional interest if the lawyer represents a landlord in lease negotiations with a professional organization of which the lawyer is a member. Some situations might come within more than one of the paragraph (c) categories, such as when the subject of a representation might raise questions about the lawyer's own conduct, including questions about the correctness of the lawyer's earlier advice to the client; this situation would be governed by paragraph (c)(4) unless the lawyer and client have agreed to take a common position, as might occur, for example, in response to a motion for discovery sanctions. See Rules 1.8.1 through 1.8.12 for additional rules pertaining to other personal interest conflicts, including business transactions with clients, and Rule 3.7 concerning lawyer as witness.

[19] When a lawyer owns an interest in a publicly-traded investment vehicle, such as a mutual fund, paragraph (c)(4) does not require the lawyer to investigate whether the investment vehicle owns an interest in parties to a matter. However, if the lawyer knows that a publicly-traded investment vehicle in which the lawyer owns an interest owns an interest in a party to the matter, the lawyer must disclose the interest to the client and obtain the client's informed written consent to the lawyer's continued representation of the client.

[20] Paragraph (c)(4) requires a lawyer to obtain the informed written consent of the lawyer's client if the lawyer has been having, or when the lawyer decides to have, substantive discussions concerning possible employment with an opponent of the lawyer's client or with a lawyer or law firm representing the opponent.

[21] Paragraph (c) applies only to a lawyer's own relationships and interests, except: (1) when the lawyer knows that another lawyer in the same firm as the lawyer has or had a relationship with another party or witness, or has or had an interest in the subject matter of the representation. See also Rule 1.10 (personal interest conflicts under Rule 1.7 ordinarily are not imputed to other lawyers in a law firm).

[22] Paragraph (c) requires informed written consent only from current clients. Rule 1.9 specifies when a lawyer must obtain informed written consent from a former client.

[23] Paragraph (a)(1) applies, rather than paragraph (c)(1) or (c)(3), whenever a representation is directly adverse to another current client of the lawyer. (See Comment [5] to this Rule.)

Prohibited and Required Representations

[24] There are some situations governed by this Rule for which a lawyer cannot obtain effective client consent. These include at least the following: (1) when the lawyer cannot provide competent representation to each affected client (See Rule 1.8.8(a)); (2) when the lawyer cannot make an adequate disclosure, for example, because of confidentiality obligations to another client or former client (See Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)(1) and Rule 1.6); (3) when the representation would involve the assertion of a claim by one client against another client, where the lawyer is asked to represent both clients in that matter. (See Woods v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal.App.3d 931 [107 Cal.Rptr. 185] ["the attorney of a family-owned business, corporate or otherwise, should not represent one owner against the other in a [marital] dissolution action"]; Klemm v. Superior Court (1977) 75 Cal.App.3d 893, 898 [142 Cal.Rptr. 509] [attorney may not represent parties at hearing or trial when those parties' interests in the matter are in actual conflict]; and Forrest v. Baeza (1997) 58 Cal.App.4th 65 [67 Cal.Rptr.2d 857] [attorney may not represent both a closely-held corporation and directors/shareholders who are accused of wrongdoing or whose interests are otherwise adverse to the corporation]); and (4) when the person who grants consent lacks capacity or authority. (See Civil Code section 38; and see Rule 1.14 regarding clients with diminished capacity.)

[25] If a lawyer seeks permission from a tribunal to terminate a representation and that permission is denied, the lawyer is obligated to continue the representation even if the representation creates a conflict to which not all affected clients have given consent, and even if the lawyer has a conflict to which client consent is not available. (See Rule 1.16(c).)

Disclosure and Informed Written Consent

[26] Informed written consent requires the lawyer to disclose in writing to each affected client the relevant circumstances and the actual and reasonably foreseeable adverse consequences to the client or former client. See Rule 1.0.1(e) (informed written consent). The facts and explanation the lawyer must disclose will depend on the nature of the potential or actual conflict and the nature of the risks involved for the client or potential client. When undertaking the representation of multiple clients in a single matter, the information must include the implications of the joint representation, including possible effects on loyalty, and the confidentiality and lawyer-client privilege issues described in Comment [12] to this Rule.

[27] The requirement of a writing does not supplant the need in most cases for the lawyer to talk with the client, to explain the risks and advantages, if any, of representation burdened with a conflict of interest, as well as reasonably available alternatives, and to afford the client a reasonable opportunity to consider the risks and alternatives and to raise questions and concerns. Rather, the writing is required in order to impress upon clients the seriousness of the decision the client is being asked to make and to avoid disputes or ambiguities that might later occur in the absence of a writing.

[28] A disclosure and an informed written consent are sufficient for purposes of this Rule only for so long as the material facts and circumstances remain unchanged. With any material change, the lawyer may not continue the representation without making a new written disclosure to each affected client and obtaining a new written consent.

[29] If the lawyer is required by this Rule or another Rule to make a disclosure, but the lawyer cannot do so without violating a duty of confidentiality, then the lawyer may not accept or continue the representation for which the disclosure would be required. (See, e.g., Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)(1), Rule 1.6.) A lawyer might be prevented from making a required disclosure because of a duty of confidentiality to former, current or potential clients, because of other fiduciary relationships such as service on a board directors, or because of contractual or court-ordered restrictions.

[30] In some situations, Rule 1.13(g) limits who has authority to grant consent on behalf of an organization.

Consent to Future Conflict

[31] Lawyers may ask clients to give advance consent to conflicts that might arise in the future, but a client's consent must be "informed" to comply with this Rule. A lawyer would have a conflict of interest in accepting or continuing a representation under a consent that does not comply with this Rule. Determining whether a client's advance consent is "informed," and thus complies with this Rule, is a fact-specific inquiry that will depend first on the factors discussed in Comment [26] (informed written consent). However, an advance consent can comply with this Rule even where the lawyer cannot provide all the information and explanation Comments [26] ordinarily requires. A lawyer's disclosure to a client must include: (i) a disclosure to the extent known of facts and reasonably foreseeable consequences; and (ii) an explanation that the lawyer is requesting the client to consent to a possible future conflict that would involve future facts and circumstances that to a degree cannot be known when the consent is requested. The lawyer also must disclose to the client whether the consent permits the lawyer to be adverse to the client on any matter in the future, whether the consent permits the lawyer to be adverse to the client in the current or in future litigation, and whether there will be any limits on the scope of the consent. Whether an advance consent complies with this Rule ordinarily also can depend on such things as the following: (1) the comprehensiveness of the lawyer's explanation of the types of future conflicts that might arise and of the actual and reasonably foreseeable adverse consequences to the client; (2) the client's degree of experience as a user of the legal services, including experience with the type of legal services involved in the current representation; (3) whether the client has consented to the use of an adequate ethics screen and whether the screen was timely and effectively instituted and fully maintained; (4) whether before giving consent the client either was represented by an independent lawyer of the client's choice, or was advised in writing by the lawyer to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client's choice and was given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice; (5) whether the consent is limited to future conflicts unrelated to the subject of the representation; and (6) the client's ability to understand the nature and extent of the advance consent. A client's ability to understand the nature and extent of the advance consent might depend on factors such as the client's education and language skills. An advance consent normally will comply with this Rule if it is limited to a particular type of conflict with which the client already is familiar. An advance consent normally will not comply with this Rule if it is so general and open-ended that it would be unlikely that the client understood the potential adverse consequences of granting consent. However, even a general and open-ended advance consent can be in compliance when given by an experienced user of the type of legal services involved that was independently represented regarding the consent or was advised in writing by the lawyer to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client's choice and was given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice. In any case, advance consent will not be in compliance in the circumstances described in Comment[24] (prohibited representations). See Rule 1.0.1(e) (informed consent) and 1.0.1 (e-1) (informed written consent). A lawyer who obtains from a client an advance consent that complies with this Rule will have all the duties of a lawyer to that client except as expressly limited by the consent. A lawyer cannot obtain an advance consent to incompetent representation. See Rule 1.8.8.

Representation of a Class

[32] This Rule applies to a lawyer's representation of named class representatives in a class action, whether or not the class has been certified. For purposes of this Rule, an unnamed member of a plaintiff or a defendant class is not, by reason of that status, a client of a lawyer who represents or seeks to represent the class. Thus, the lawyer does not need to obtain the consent of an unnamed class member before representing a client who is adverse to that person in an unrelated matter. Similarly, a lawyer seeking to represent a party opposing a class action does not need the consent of any unnamed class member whom the lawyer represents in an unrelated matter in order to do so. A lawyer representing a class or proposed class may owe civil duties to unnamed class members, and this Comment is not intended to alter those civil duties in any respect.

Organizational Clients

[33] A lawyer who represents an organization does not, by virtue of that representation alone, represent any constituent of the organization. (See Rule 1.13(a).) The lawyer for an organization also does not, by virtue of that representation alone, represent any affiliated organization, such as a subsidiary or organization under common ownership. The lawyer nevertheless could be barred under case law from accepting a representation adverse to an affiliate of an organizational client, even in a matter unrelated to the lawyer's representation of the client, under certain circumstances.

[34] A lawyer for a corporation who also is a member of its board of directors (or a lawyer for another type of organization who has corresponding fiduciary duties to it) should determine whether it is reasonably foreseeable that the responsibilities of the two roles might conflict, for example, because, as its lawyer, he or she might be called on to advise the corporation on matters involving actions of the directors. The lawyer should consider such things as the frequency with which these situations might arise, the potential materiality of the conflict to the lawyer's performance of his or her duties as a lawyer, and the possibility of the corporation obtaining legal advice from another lawyer in these situations. If there is material risk that the dual role will compromise the lawyer's ability to perform any of his or her duties to the client, the lawyer should not serve as a director or should cease to act as the corporation's lawyer. The lawyer should advise the other members of the board whenever matters discussed at board meetings while the lawyer is present in the capacity of director might not be protected by the attorney-client privilege, and that conflict of interest considerations might require the lawyer to withdraw as a director or might require the lawyer and the lawyer's firm to decline representation of the corporation in a matter.

Insurance Defense

[35] In State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company v. Federal Insurance Company (1999) 72 Cal.App.4th 1422 [86 Cal.Rptr.2d 20], the court held that the predecessor to paragraph (c) was violated when a lawyer, retained by an insurer to defend one suit against an insured, filed a direct action against the same insurer in an unrelated action without securing the insurer's consent. Notwithstanding State Farm, paragraphs (a) and (c) do not apply to the relationship between an insurer and a lawyer when, in each matter, the insurer's interest is only as an indemnity provider and not as a direct party to the action.

[36] Paragraph (b) is not intended to modify the tripartite relationship among a lawyer, an insurer, and an insured that is created when the insurer appoints the lawyer to represent the insured under the contract between the insurer and the insured. Although the lawyer's appointment by the insurer makes the insurer and the insured the lawyer's joint clients in the matter, the appointment does not by itself create a potential conflict of interest for the lawyer under paragraph (b).

Public Service

[37] For special rules governing membership in a legal service organization, see Rule 6.3; for participation in law related activities affecting client interests, see Rule 6.4; and for work in conjunction with certain limited legal services programs, see Rule 6.5.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(a) Except as provided in paragraph (b), a lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation involves a concurrent conflict of interest. A concurrent conflict of interest exists if: (1) the representation of one client will be directly adverse to another client; or (2) there is a significant risk that the representation of one or more clients will be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client, a former client or a third person or by a personal interest of the lawyer.	(a) Except as provided in paragraph (b), a lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation involves a concurrent conflict of interest. A concurrent conflict of interest exists if: (1) the representation of one client will be directly adverse to another client; or (2) there is a significant risk that the representation of one or more clients will be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client, a former client or a third person or by a personal interest of the lawyer.	Paragraph (a) is identical to Model Rule 1.7(a).

* Proposed Rule 1.7, ALT1, Draft 3.1 (7/1/10). Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(b) Notwithstanding the existence of a concurrent conflict of interest under paragraph (a), a lawyer may represent a client if: (1) the lawyer reasonably believes that the lawyer will be able to provide competent and diligent representation to each affected client; (2) the representation is not prohibited by law; (3) the representation does not involve the assertion of a claim by one client against another client represented by the lawyer in the same litigation or other proceeding before a tribunal; and (4) each affected client gives informed consent, confirmed in writing.	(b) Notwithstanding the existence of a concurrent conflict of interest under paragraph (a), a lawyer may represent a client if: (1) the lawyer reasonably believes that the lawyer will be able to provide competent and diligent representation to each affected client; (2) the representation is not prohibited by law; (3) the representation does not involve the assertion of a claim by one client against another client represented by the lawyer in the same litigation or other proceeding before a tribunal; and (4) each affected client gives informed written consent, ~~confirmed in writing.~~	Paragraph (b) is identical to Model Rule 1.7(b), except that California's heightened "informed written consent" standard has been substituted for the Model Rule's "consent, confirmed in writing" standard.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
General Principles [1] Loyalty and independent judgment are essential elements in the lawyer's relationship to a client. Concurrent conflicts of interest can arise from the lawyer's responsibilities to another client, a former client or a third person or from the lawyer's own interests. For specific Rules regarding certain concurrent conflicts of interest, see Rule 1.8. For former client conflicts of interest, see Rule 1.9. For conflicts of interest involving prospective clients, see Rule 1.18. For definitions of "informed consent" and "confirmed in writing," see Rule 1.0(e) and (b).	General Principles [1] Undivided Loyalty and independent professional judgment are essential elements in the lawyer's relationship to a client. Concurrent conflicts of interest can arise from the lawyer's responsibilities to another client, a former client or a third person or from the lawyer's own interests. See Comments [6]-[7], [8], [9], [10]-[12]. This Rule and the other conflict rules (1.8 through 1.8.11, 1.9, 1.10, 1.11, 1.18) seek to protect a lawyer's ability to carry out the lawyer's basic fiduciary duties to each client. In addition to the duty of undivided loyalty and the duty to exercise independent professional judgment, the conflict rules are also concerned with (1) the duty to maintain confidential client information; (2) the duty to disclose to the client all material information and significant developments; and (3) the duty to represent the client competently and diligently within the bounds of the law. See Rule 1.2(a) regarding the allocation of authority between lawyer and client. For specific ~~Rules~~rules regarding certain concurrent conflicts of interest, see ~~Rule 1.8~~Rules 1.8.1 through 1.8.11. For former client conflicts of interest, see Rule 1.9. For conflicts of interest involving prospective clients, see Rule 1.18. For definitions of "informed consent" and "~~confirmed in writing~~informed written consent," see Rule 1.0.1(e) and (~~be-1~~), and Comments [6] and [7] to that Rule.	Comment [1] is based on Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [1], with the beginning and end of the Comment nearly identical to the Model Rule. Although there is no counterpart for it in the Model Rule, the Commission recommends including the middle section of the Comment, which identifies other duties besides loyalty and independent judgment, that factor into conflicts analysis. As Rule 1.7 is the first of four rules concerning conflicts, its placement in the first comment of the first rule in the series is appropriate. In addition to the middle section, the Commission recommends substituting "undivided loyalty" and "independent professional judgment" for the corresponding "loyalty" and "independent judgment," respectively. California case law repeatedly refers to a lawyer's "duty of undivided loyalty" and the term "independent professional judgment" is used throughout the proposed Rules. In the third sentence and last part of the Comment, the term "Rules 1.8.1 through 1.8.11" has been substituted for "Rule 1.8" because the the Board has adopted, the Commission's recommended numbering convention of assigning each counterpart provision to Model Rule 1.8 a separate rule number and title ("1.8.x"). The Commission recommended the foregoing approach because Model Rule 1.8 is largely a collection of unrelated provisions and the Commission's approach provides ease of reference and indexing. Finally, California's heightened "informed written consent" standard is substituted for the Model Rules "consent, confirmed in writing."

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[2] Resolution of a conflict of interest problem under this Rule requires the lawyer to: 1) clearly identify the client or clients; 2) determine whether a conflict of interest exists; 3) decide whether the representation may be undertaken despite the existence of a conflict, i.e., whether the conflict is consentable; and 4) if so, consult with the clients affected under paragraph (a) and obtain their informed consent, confirmed in writing. The clients affected under paragraph (a) include both of the clients referred to in paragraph (a)(1) and the one or more clients whose representation might be materially limited under paragraph (a)(2).	[2] Resolution of a conflict of interest ~~problem~~ under this Rule requires the lawyer to: (1) clearly identify the client or clients; (2) determine the scope of each relevant representation of a client or proposed representation of a client; (3) determine whether a conflict of interest exists; ~~3(4)~~ decide whether the representation may be undertaken despite the existence of a conflict, i.e., whether lawyer has the ability to obtain the client's consent to the conflict-~~is consentable~~; and ~~4(5)~~ if so, consult with the clients affected under paragraph (a) and obtain their informed written consent, ~~confirmed in writing~~. The clients affected under paragraph (a) include both of the clients referred to in paragraph (a)(1) and the one or more clients whose representation might be materially limited under paragraph (a)(2).	Comment [2] is based on Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [2], the principal change being to include an additional factor in the analysis, i.e., the scope of the representation or proposed representation. This factor has particular relevance in light of the Board's Resolution on limited scope representation. The term "consentable" has been replaced throughout the Rule because that term is not a word. The Commission has substituted language to identify the concept that "consentable" presumably is intended to communicate, i.e., the lawyer's ability to obtain the client's consent to the conflict. See also Explanation of Changes for Comments [14]-[17A]. Finally, California's heightened "informed written consent" standard is substituted for the Model Rules "consent, confirmed in writing."
[3] A conflict of interest may exist before representation is undertaken, in which event the representation must be declined, unless the lawyer obtains the informed consent of each client under the conditions of paragraph (b). To determine whether a conflict of interest exists, a lawyer should adopt reasonable procedures, appropriate for the size and type of firm and practice, to determine in both litigation and non-litigation matters the persons and issues involved. See also Comment to Rule 5.1. Ignorance caused by a failure to institute such procedures will not excuse a lawyer's violation of this Rule. As to whether a client-lawyer relationship	[3] A conflict of interest may exist before representation is undertaken, in which event the representation must be declined, unless the lawyer obtains the informed written consent of each client under the conditions of paragraph (b). To determine whether a conflict of interest exists, a lawyer should adopt reasonable procedures, appropriate for the size and type of firm and practice, to determine in both litigation and non-litigation matters the persons and issues involved. See also Comment to Rule 5.1. Ignorance caused by a failure to institute such procedures will not excuse a lawyer's violation of this Rule. ~~As to whether~~ Whether a client-lawyer-client	Comment [3] is based on Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [3]. The word "written" has been added to track California's heightened consent standard. The last sentence of the Comment has been revised for two reasons. First, the Commission has not recommended adoption of the specific provisions referred to in the Model Rule comment. Second, and more importantly, the question of whether an attorney-client relationship has been formed or is continuing often requires a complex analysis that is not easily susceptible to a simple rule. See, e.g., State Bar Formal Ethics Opn. 2003-161. Finally, "lawyer-client" is substituted for "client-lawyer" throughout the Rules to better track the phraseology in the Business &

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
exists or, having once been established, is continuing, see Comment to Rule 1.3 and Scope.	relationship exists or, having once been established, is continuing, ~~see Comment to Rule 1.3 and Scope~~ is beyond the scope of these Rules.	Profession and Evidence Codes.
[4] If a conflict arises after representation has been undertaken, the lawyer ordinarily must withdraw from the representation, unless the lawyer has obtained the informed consent of the client under the conditions of paragraph (b). See Rule 1.16. Where more than one client is involved, whether the lawyer may continue to represent any of the clients is determined both by the lawyer's ability to comply with duties owed to the former client and by the lawyer's ability to represent adequately the remaining client or clients, given the lawyer's duties to the former client. See Rule 1.9. See also Comments [5] and [29].	[4] If a conflict arises after representation has been undertaken, the lawyer ordinarily must withdraw from the representation, unless the lawyer has obtained the informed written consent of the client under the conditions of paragraph (b). See Rule 1.16. Where more than one client is involved, whether the lawyer may continue to represent any of the clients is determined both by the lawyer's ability to comply with duties owed to ~~the~~ a client who becomes a former client and by the lawyer's ability to represent adequately the remaining client or clients, given the lawyer's duties to the former client. See Rule 1.9. See also ~~Comments [5] and~~ Comment [29].	Comment [4] is based on Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [4]. The word "written" has been added to track California's heightened consent standard. The second sentence has been revised for clarification; no change in meaning is intended. Finally, the reference to Comment [5], concerning "thrust upon" or "unforeseeable conflicts," has been stricken because the Commission does not recommend adoption of that Comment.
[5] Unforeseeable developments, such as changes in corporate and other organizational affiliations or the addition or realignment of parties in litigation, might create conflicts in the midst of a representation, as when a company sued by the lawyer on behalf of one client is bought by another client represented by the lawyer in an unrelated matter. Depending on the circumstances, the lawyer may have the option to withdraw from one of the representations in order to avoid the conflict. The	[5] ~~[RESERVED]—Unforeseeable developments, such as changes in corporate and other organizational affiliations or the addition or realignment of parties in litigation, might create conflicts in the midst of a representation, as when a company sued by the lawyer on behalf of one client is bought by another client represented by the lawyer in an unrelated matter. Depending on the circumstances, the lawyer may have the option to withdraw from one of the representations in order to~~	The Commission does not recommend adoption of Comment [5], concerning "thrust upon" or "unforeseeable conflicts," because the Commission is not aware of any California authority on this issue. The Commission determined that the development of the law in this area is better left to development by the courts.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
lawyer must seek court approval where necessary and take steps to minimize harm to the clients. See Rule 1.16. The lawyer must continue to protect the confidences of the client from whose representation the lawyer has withdrawn. See Rule 1.9(c).	~~avoid the conflict. The lawyer must seek court approval where necessary and take steps to minimize harm to the clients. See Rule 1.16. The lawyer must continue to protect the confidences of the client from whose representation the lawyer has withdrawn. See Rule 1.9(c).~~
Identifying Conflicts of Interest: Directly Adverse [6] Loyalty to a current client prohibits undertaking representation directly adverse to that client without that client's informed consent. Thus, absent consent, a lawyer may not act as an advocate in one matter against a person the lawyer represents in some other matter, even when the matters are wholly unrelated. The client as to whom the representation is directly adverse is likely to feel betrayed, and the resulting damage to the client-lawyer relationship is likely to impair the lawyer's ability to represent the client effectively. In addition, the client on whose behalf the adverse representation is undertaken reasonably may fear that the lawyer will pursue that client's case less effectively out of deference to the other client, i.e., that the representation may be materially limited by the lawyer's interest in retaining the current client. Similarly, a directly adverse conflict may arise when a lawyer is required to cross-examine a client who appears as a witness in a lawsuit involving another client, as when the testimony will be damaging to the client who is	Paragraph (a)(1): Identifying Conflicts of Interest: Directly Adverse [6] ~~Loyalty~~The duty of undivided loyalty to a current client prohibits undertaking representation directly adverse to that client without that client's informed written consent. Thus, absent consent, a lawyer may not act as an advocate in one matter against a person the lawyer represents in some other matter, even when the matters are wholly unrelated. The client as to whom the representation is directly adverse is likely to feel betrayed, and the resulting damage to the ~~client-lawyer-client~~ relationship is likely to impair the lawyer's ability to represent the client effectively. In addition, the client on whose behalf the adverse representation is undertaken reasonably may fear that the lawyer will pursue that client's case less effectively out of deference to the other client, i.e., that the representation may be materially limited by the lawyer's interest in retaining the current client. Thus, a directly adverse conflict arises, for example, when a lawyer accepts representation of a client that is directly adverse to another client the lawyer currently represents in	The Commission recommends adding "Paragraph (a)(1)" to the title of this section of the Comment to call readers' attention to its applicability to that provision of the Rule. The Commission recommends substituting "undivided loyalty" "loyalty" because California case law repeatedly refers to a lawyer's "duty of undivided loyalty". The word "written" has been added to track California's heightened consent standard. The term "lawyer-client" is substituted for "client-lawyer" throughout the Rules to better track the phraseology in the Business & Profession and Evidence Codes. A middle section has been added to (i) include the holding of a seminal California Supreme Court case, Flatt v. Superior Court, involving a directly adverse conflict; and (ii) carry forward another example of direct adversity from current rule 3-310(C)(3). The Commission also recommends substituting for the Model Rule's sentence concerning a lawyer cross-examining a client a different sentence that more accurately reflects California law. See, e.g., Hernandez v. Paicius (2003) 109 Cal.App.4th 452, 134

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
represented in the lawsuit. On the other hand, simultaneous representation in unrelated matters of clients whose interests are only economically adverse, such as representation of competing economic enterprises in unrelated litigation, does not ordinarily constitute a conflict of interest and thus may not require consent of the respective clients.	another matter. See Flatt v. Superior Court (1994) 9 Cal.4th 275. Similarly, a directly adverse conflict under paragraph (a)(1) occurs when a lawyer, while representing a client, accepts in another matter the representation of a person or organization who, in the first matter, is directly adverse to the lawyer's client. Similarly, a directly adverse conflict when a lawyer is required to cross-examine a client who appears as a witness in a lawsuit involving another client, as when the testimony will be damaging to the client who is represented in the lawsuit. Similarly, direct adversity can arise when a lawyer cross-examines a non-party witness who is the lawyer's client in another matter, if the examination is likely to harm or embarrass the witness. On the other hand, simultaneous representation in unrelated matters of clients whose interests are only economically adverse, such as representation of competing economic enterprises in unrelated litigation, does not ordinarily constitute a conflict of interest and thus may not require consent of the respective clients. Other instances that ordinarily would not constitute direct adversity include: (1) a representation adverse to a non-client where another client of the lawyer is interested in the financial welfare or the profitability of the non-client, as might occur, for example, if a client is the landlord of, or a lender to, the non-client; (2) working for an outcome in litigation that would establish precedent economically harmful to another current client who is not a party to the litigation; (3) representing two clients who have a dispute with one another if the lawyer's work for each client concerns	Cal.Rptr.2d 756, disapproved on other grounds in People v. Freeman (2010) 47 Cal.4th 993, 103 Cal.Rptr.3d 723, 733 n.4. Finally, the Commission has recommended including the section at the end of the Comment which provides numerous other examples of situations that would not constitute "direct adversity". The Commission believes that including these examples will assist lawyers in identifying those situations in which they are required to obtain a client's informed written consent, enhancing both the administration of justice and client protection.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	matters other than the dispute; (4) representing clients having antagonistic positions on the same legal question that has arisen in different cases, unless doing so would interfere with the lawyer's ability to represent either client competently, as might occur, e.g., if the lawyer were advocating inconsistent positions in front of the same tribunal. See Comments [14]-[17A]).
[7] Directly adverse conflicts can also arise in transactional matters. For example, if a lawyer is asked to represent the seller of a business in negotiations with a buyer represented by the lawyer, not in the same transaction but in another, unrelated matter, the lawyer could not undertake the representation without the informed consent of each client.	[7] Directly adverse conflicts can also arise in transactional matters. For example, if a lawyer is asked to represent the seller of a business in negotiations with a buyer represented by the lawyer, not in the same transaction but in another, unrelated matter, the lawyer could not undertake the representation without the informed written consent of each client. Paragraph (a)(1) applies even if the parties to the transaction have a common interest or contemplate working cooperatively toward a common goal.	Comment [7] is based on Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [7]. The word "written" has been added to track California's heightened consent standard. The last sentence has been added to emphasize that paragraph (a)(1) applies (and thus informed written consent of each affected client must be obtained) even if the parties on different sides of a transaction have a common goal or interest.
	[7A]If a lawyer proposes to represent two or more parties on the same side of a negotiation or lawsuit, the situation is analyzed under paragraph (a)(2), not paragraph (a)(1). See Comments [29]-[33].	Comment [7A] has no counterpart in the Model Rule. It has been added to direct the reader's attention to paragraph (a)(2) and related comments when the lawyer seeks to represent two or more parties on the same side of a matter.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Identifying Conflicts of Interest: Material Limitation	Paragraph (a)(2): Identifying Conflicts of Interest: Material Limitation [7B]Conflicts of interest that create a significant risk that a lawyer's representation of one or more clients will be materially limited as provided in paragraph (a)(2) can arise from: (1) duties owed a former client or a third person (see Comment [9]); (2) a lawyer's personal interests (see Comments [10]-[12]); or (3) a lawyer's joint representation of two or more clients in the same matter (see Comments [29]-[33]).	The Commission recommends adding "Paragraph (a)(2)" to the title of this section of the Comment to call readers' attention to its applicability to that provision of the Rule. Comment [7B] has no counterpart in the Model Rule. It has been added to call readers' attention to the fact that several kinds of distinctly different situations require analysis under paragraph (a)(2), and directs the reader to the specific sections of the Comment that concern those situations. Comment [7B] acts as a "bridge" to the sections that elaborate and clarify paragraph (a)(2) and Comment [8].
[8] Even where there is no direct adverseness, a conflict of interest exists if there is a significant risk that a lawyer's ability to consider, recommend or carry out an appropriate course of action for the client will be materially limited as a result of the lawyer's other responsibilities or interests. For example, a lawyer asked to represent several individuals seeking to form a joint venture is likely to be materially limited in the lawyer's ability to recommend or advocate all possible positions that each might take because of the lawyer's duty of loyalty to the others. The conflict in effect forecloses alternatives that would otherwise be available to the client. The mere possibility of subsequent harm does not itself require disclosure and consent. The critical questions are the likelihood that a difference in interests will eventuate and, if it does, whether it will materially interfere with the lawyer's independent	[8] Even where there is no direct ~~adverseness~~ adversity, a conflict of interest exists if there is a significant risk that a lawyer's ability to consider, recommend or carry out an appropriate course of action for the client will be materially limited as a result of the lawyer's other responsibilities or interests. For example, a lawyer asked to represent two or more clients in the same matter, such as several individuals seeking to form a joint venture, is likely to be materially limited in the lawyer's ability to recommend or advocate all possible positions that each might take because of the lawyer's duty of loyalty to the ~~others~~ other clients. The conflict in effect forecloses alternatives that would otherwise be available to each of the client ~~clients~~. The mere possibility of subsequent harm does not itself require disclosure and informed written consent. The critical questions are the likelihood that a difference in	Comment [8] is based on Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [8]. The word "adversity" has been substituted for "adverseness" because the former is the term more commonly used in California case law. A number of clarifying changes have been made to the Model Rule comment and "informed written" has been added to modify "consent" to reflect California's heightened consent standard. A cross-reference to Comments [29]-[33] is provided to direct the reader to the Comments clarifying a lawyer's duties when jointly representing clients. Finally, a lengthy section, derived from the black letter of current rules 3-310(B) and 3-320, has been added to elaborate on the kinds of relationships or situations that can require compliance with paragraph (a)(2).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
professional judgment in considering alternatives or foreclose courses of action that reasonably should be pursued on behalf of the client.	interests exists or will eventuate and, if it does, whether it will materially interfere with the lawyer's independent professional judgment in considering alternatives or foreclose courses of ~~action~~actions that reasonably should be pursued on behalf of ~~the~~each client. See Comments [29]-[33]. Depending on the circumstances, various relationships a lawyer has may likewise create a significant risk that the lawyer's representation will be materially limited, for example, where (1) the lawyer has a legal, business, financial, professional, or personal relationship with a party or witness in the same matter; (2) the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that: (i) the lawyer previously had a legal, business, financial, professional, or personal relationship with a party or witness in the same matter, and (ii) the previous relationship would substantially affect the lawyer's representation; (3) the lawyer has or had a legal, business, financial, professional, or personal relationship with another person or entity and the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that either the relationship or the person or entity would be affected substantially by resolution of the matter; (4) a lawyer or law firm representing a party or witness in the matter has a lawyer-client relationship with the lawyer, the lawyer's law firm, or another lawyer in the lawyer's law firm; and (5) a lawyer representing a party or witness in the matter is a spouse, parent or sibling of the lawyer, or has an intimate personal relationship with the lawyer or with another lawyer in the lawyer's law firm.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Lawyer's Responsibilities to Former Clients and Other Third Persons [9] In addition to conflicts with other current clients, a lawyer's duties of loyalty and independence may be materially limited by responsibilities to former clients under Rule 1.9 or by the lawyer's responsibilities to other persons, such as fiduciary duties arising from a lawyer's service as a trustee, executor or corporate director.	Lawyer's Responsibilities to Former Clients and Other Third Persons [9] ~~In addition to conflicts with other current clients,~~ a lawyer's duties of undivided loyalty and independence of professional judgment may be materially limited by responsibilities to former clients under Rule 1.9 or by the lawyer's responsibilities to other persons, such as fiduciary duties arising from a lawyer's service as a trustee, executor or corporate director. See, e.g., William H. Raley Co., Inc. v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal.App.3d 1042 [197 Cal.Rptr. 232].	Comment [9] is based on Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [9]. See Explanation of Changes for Comment [1]. The Comment also includes a citation to an important California Court of Appeal case.
Personal Interest Conflicts [10]The lawyer's own interests should not be permitted to have an adverse effect on representation of a client. For example, if the probity of a lawyer's own conduct in a transaction is in serious question, it may be difficult or impossible for the lawyer to give a client detached advice. Similarly, when a lawyer has discussions concerning possible employment with an opponent of the lawyer's client, or with a law firm representing the opponent, such discussions could materially limit the lawyer's representation of the client. In addition, a lawyer may not allow related business interests to affect representation, for example, by referring clients to an enterprise in which the lawyer has an undisclosed	Personal Interest Conflicts [10]The lawyer's own interests should not be permitted to have an adverse effect on the representation of a client. For example, if the probity of a lawyer's own conduct in a transaction is in serious question, it may be difficult or impossible for the lawyer to give ~~at~~the client detached advice. A lawyer's legal, business, professional or financial interest in the subject matter of the representation might also give rise to a conflict under paragraph (a)(2), where, for example, (1) the lawyer is a party to a contract being litigated; (2) the lawyer represents a client in litigation with a corporation in which the lawyer is a shareholder; or (3) the lawyer represents a landlord in lease negotiations with a	Comment [10] is based on Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [10]. A middle section has been added to provide specific examples of the kinds of personal interest relationships that can require compliance with paragraph (a)(2). As to the substitution of "1.8.1 through 1.8.11," see Explanation of Changes for Comment [1]. A reference to Rule 3.7 has also been added to call lawyers' attention to the fact that that specific rule might be applicable and not paragraph (a)(2).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
financial interest. See Rule 1.8 for specific Rules pertaining to a number of personal interest conflicts, including business transactions with clients. See also Rule 1.10 (personal interest conflicts under Rule 1.7 ordinarily are not imputed to other lawyers in a law firm).	professional organization of which the lawyer is a member. Similarly, when a lawyer has discussions concerning possible employment with an opponent of the lawyer's client, or with a law firm representing the opponent, such discussions could materially limit the lawyer's representation of the client. In addition, a lawyer may not allow related business interests to affect representation, for example, by referring clients to an enterprise in which the lawyer has an undisclosed financial interest. See ~~Rule 1.8~~Rules 1.8.1 through 1.8.11 for specific ~~Rules~~rules pertaining to a number of personal interest conflicts, including business transactions with clients. See also Rule 3.7 concerning a lawyer as witness and Rule 1.10 (personal interest conflicts under Rule 1.7 ordinarily are not imputed to other lawyers in a law firm).
[11]When lawyers representing different clients in the same matter or in substantially related matters are closely related by blood or marriage, there may be a significant risk that client confidences will be revealed and that the lawyer's family relationship will interfere with both loyalty and independent professional judgment. As a result, each client is entitled to know of the existence and implications of the relationship between the lawyers before the lawyer agrees to undertake the representation. Thus, a lawyer related to another lawyer, e.g., as parent, child, sibling or spouse, ordinarily may not represent a client in a matter where that lawyer is representing another party, unless each client gives informed	[11]When lawyers representing different clients in the same matter or in substantially related matters are closely related by blood or marriage, or when there is an intimate personal relationship between the lawyers, there may be a significant risk that client confidences will be revealed and that the lawyer's family relationship will interfere with both loyalty and independent professional judgment. As a result, each client is entitled to know of the existence and implications of the relationship between the lawyers before the lawyer agrees to undertake the representation. Thus, a lawyer who is related to another lawyer, e.g., as parent, child, sibling or spouse, or who is in an intimate personal	Comment [11] is based on Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [11]. The addition of "intimate personal relationship" has been added to track language used in other California statutes and rules requiring disclosure and/or consent in fiduciary relationships. The word "written" has been added to track California's heightened consent standard. The term "prohibition on representation" has been substituted for "disqualification" because this Rule applies in transactional situations as well as litigation. See Comments [26]-[27], below.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
consent. The disqualification arising from a close family relationship is personal and ordinarily is not imputed to members of firms with whom the lawyers are associated. See Rule 1.10.	relationship with another lawyer, ordinarily may not represent a client in a matter where that lawyer is representing another party, unless each client gives informed written consent. The ~~disqualification~~prohibition on representation arising from a close family relationship is personal and ordinarily is not imputed to members of firms with whom the lawyers are associated. See Rule 1.10.
[12]A lawyer is prohibited from engaging in sexual relationships with a client unless the sexual relationship predates the formation of the client-lawyer relationship. See Rule 1.8(j).	[12]A lawyer is prohibited from engaging in sexual relationships with a client unless the sexual relationship predates the formation of the ~~client-lawyer~~client relationship. See Rule ~~1.8(j)~~1.8.10.	Comment [12] is identical to Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [12], except that "lawyer-client" has been substituted for "client-lawyer" and "Rule 1.8.10" has been substituted for "1.8(j)," the Model Rule counterpart for proposed Rule 1.8.10.
Interest of Person Paying for a Lawyer's Service [13]A lawyer may be paid from a source other than the client, including a co-client, if the client is informed of that fact and consents and the arrangement does not compromise the lawyer's duty of loyalty or independent judgment to the client. See Rule 1.8(f). If acceptance of the payment from any other source presents a significant risk that the lawyer's representation of the client will be materially limited by the lawyer's own interest in accommodating the person paying the lawyer's fee or by the lawyer's responsibilities to a payer who is also a co-client, then the lawyer must comply with the requirements of paragraph (b) before accepting the representation, including determining whether	Interest of Person Paying for a Lawyer's Service [13]A lawyer may be paid from a source other than the client, including a co-client, if the client ~~is~~gives informed ~~of that fact and consents~~written consent and the arrangement does not compromise the lawyer's duty of loyalty or independent judgment to the client. See Rule ~~1.8(f)~~1.8.6. If acceptance of the payment from any other source presents a significant risk that the lawyer's representation of the client will be materially limited by the lawyer's own interest in accommodating the person paying the lawyer's fee or by the lawyer's responsibilities to a ~~payer~~payor who is also a co-client, then the lawyer must comply with the requirements of paragraph (b) before accepting the representation, including	Comment [13] is based on Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [13]. The term "written consent" has been added to track California's heightened consent standard. "Rule 1.8.6" has been substituted for "1.8(f)" because that is the rule number assigned the counterpart to Model Rule 1.8(f). "Payor" is the term traditionally used in California Rules. For an explanation of the language substituted for "consentable," see Explanation of Changes for Comment [2].

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
the conflict is consentable and, if so, that the client has adequate information about the material risks of the representation.	determining whether the ~~conflict~~ is consentable ~~lawyer has the ability to obtain the client's consent to the representation~~ and, if so, ~~that~~ whether the client has adequate information about the material risks of the representation. See Comments [14]-[17A].
Prohibited Representations [14] Ordinarily, clients may consent to representation notwithstanding a conflict. However, as indicated in paragraph (b), some conflicts are nonconsentable, meaning that the lawyer involved cannot properly ask for such agreement or provide representation on the basis of the client's consent. When the lawyer is representing more than one client, the question of consentability must be resolved as to each client.	Prohibited Representations [14] Ordinarily, clients may consent to representation notwithstanding a conflict. However, as indicated in paragraph (b), in some ~~conflicts are nonconsentable, meaning that the~~ situations a lawyer ~~involved~~ cannot properly ask for such agreement or provide representation on the basis of the client's consent. When the lawyer is representing more than one client, the question of ~~consentability~~ consent must be resolved as to each client.	Comment [14] is based on Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [14]. For an explanation of the language substituted for "consentable," see Explanation of Changes for Comment [2].
[15] Consentability is typically determined by considering whether the interests of the clients will be adequately protected if the clients are permitted to give their informed consent to representation burdened by a conflict of interest. Thus, under paragraph (b)(1), representation is prohibited if in the circumstances the lawyer cannot reasonably conclude that the lawyer will be able to provide competent and diligent representation. See Rule 1.1 (competence) and Rule 1.3 (diligence).	[15] ~~Consentability~~ A lawyer's ability to obtain consent is typically determined by considering whether the interests of the clients will be adequately protected if the clients are permitted to give their informed written consent to representation burdened by a conflict of interest. Thus, under paragraph (b)(1), representation is prohibited if in the circumstances the lawyer cannot reasonably conclude that the lawyer will be able to provide competent and diligent representation. See Rule 1.1-~~(competence)~~ and Rule 1.3-(diligence).	Comment [15] is based on Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [15]. For an explanation of the language substituted for "consentable," see Explanation of Changes for Comment [2]. The word "written" has been added to track California's heightened consent standard. The cross-reference to Rule 1.3 (diligence) has been stricken because the Commission has recommended and the Board adopted the inclusion of the concept of diligence in Rule 1.1.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[16] Paragraph (b)(2) describes conflicts that are nonconsentable because the representation is prohibited by applicable law. For example, in some states substantive law provides that the same lawyer may not represent more than one defendant in a capital case, even with the consent of the clients, and under federal criminal statutes certain representations by a former government lawyer are prohibited, despite the informed consent of the former client. In addition, decisional law in some states limits the ability of a governmental client, such as a municipality, to consent to a conflict of interest.	[16] Paragraph (b)(2) describes conflicts ~~that are nonconsentable~~ to which a client cannot consent because the representation is prohibited by applicable law. For example, ~~in some states substantive law provides that the same lawyer may not represent more than one defendant in a capital case, even with the consent of the clients, and under federal criminal statutes~~ certain representations by a former government lawyer are also prohibited, despite the informed consent of the former client. ~~In addition~~ See, decisional law in some states limits the ability of a governmental client e.g., such as a municipality, to consent to a conflict of interest Business & Professions Code section 6131.	Comment [16] is based on Model Rule, cmt. [16]. For an explanation of the language substituted for “consentable,” see Explanation of Changes for Comment [2]. Most of the remainder of the Model Rule language has been stricken because it is simply generally guidance on what might be the law in some jurisdictions. It has been replaced by a specific example of a representation prohibited by California statutory law.
[17] Paragraph (b)(3) describes conflicts that are nonconsentable because of the institutional interest in vigorous development of each client's position when the clients are aligned directly against each other in the same litigation or other proceeding before a tribunal. Whether clients are aligned directly against each other within the meaning of this paragraph requires examination of the context of the proceeding. Although this paragraph does not preclude a lawyer's multiple representation of adverse parties to a mediation (because mediation is not a proceeding before a “tribunal” under Rule 1.0(m)), such representation may be precluded by paragraph (b)(1).	[17] Paragraph (b)(3) describes conflicts ~~that are nonconsentable~~ for which client consent cannot be obtained because of the ~~institutional interest~~ interests of the legal system in vigorous development of each client's position when the clients are aligned directly against each other in the same litigation or other proceeding before a tribunal. Whether clients are aligned directly against each other within the meaning of this paragraph requires examination of the context of the proceeding. See, e.g., Woods v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal.App.3d 931 [107 Cal.Rptr. 185] (the lawyer of a family-owned business organization should not represent one owner against the other in a marital dissolution action); Klemm v. Superior Court (1977) 75	Comment [17] is based on Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [17]. For an explanation of the language substituted for “consentable,” see Explanation of Changes for Comment [2]. The phrase “interests of the legal system” has been substituted for “institutional interest” to clarify what is intended and also to better track the language adopted in proposed Rule 1.0(a)(3), which states a purpose of the Rules is “To protect the integrity of the legal system and to promote the administration of justice.” A middle section has been added to the Comment to provide two specific examples from California case law. See also Forrest v. Baeza (1997) 58 Cal.App.4th 65 [67 Cal.Rptr.2d 857] [lawyer may not represent both a closely-held corporation and

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	Cal.App.3d 893, 898 [142 Cal.Rptr. 509] (a lawyer may not represent parties at hearing or trial when those parties' interests in the matter are in actual conflict). Although ~~this~~ paragraph (b)(3) does not preclude a lawyer's multiple representation of adverse parties to a mediation (because mediation is not a proceeding before a "tribunal" under Rule 1.0(m)), such representation may be precluded by paragraph (b)(1).	directors/shareholders who are accused of wrongdoing or whose interests are otherwise adverse to the corporation)).
	[17A] Under paragraph (b)(4), a lawyer must obtain the informed written consent of each affected client before accepting or continuing a representation that is prohibited under paragraph (a). If the lawyer cannot make the disclosure requisite to obtaining informed written consent, (see Rules 1.0.1(e) and 1.0.1(e-1)), without violating the lawyer's duty of confidentiality, then the lawyer may not accept or continue the representation for which the disclosure would be required. See Rule 1.6 and Business and Professions Code section 6068(e). A lawyer might also be prevented from making a required disclosure because of a duty of confidentiality to former, current or potential clients, because of other fiduciary relationships such as service on a board of directors, or because of contractual or court-ordered restrictions. In addition, effective client consent cannot be obtained when the person who grants consent lacks capacity or authority. See Civil Code section 38; and see Rule 1.14 regarding clients with diminished capacity.	Paragraph [17A] has no counterpart in the Model Rule. It has been added because there are two other important situations in which a lawyer is not able to obtain consent to a conflict: (i) when the lawyer is precluded by confidentiality obligations from providing sufficient disclosure to support informed consent; or (ii) the client lacks capacity or authority to give consent. Although the Model Rule addresses the former concept in Comment [19] to that Rule, the Commission concluded it was better placed in this section on "Prohibited Representations," with a cross-reference in Comment [19] to Comment [17A].

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Informed Consent [18] Informed consent requires that each affected client be aware of the relevant circumstances and of the material and reasonably foreseeable ways that the conflict could have adverse effects on the interests of that client. See Rule 1.0(e) (informed consent). The information required depends on the nature of the conflict and the nature of the risks involved. When representation of multiple clients in a single matter is undertaken, the information must include the implications of the common representation, including possible effects on loyalty, confidentiality and the attorney-client privilege and the advantages and risks involved. See Comments [30] and [31] (effect of common representation on confidentiality).	Disclosure and Informed Written Consent [18] Informed written consent requires that the lawyer communicate in writing to each affected client ~~be aware of~~ the relevant circumstances and ~~of~~ the ~~material~~actual and reasonably foreseeable ~~ways that adverse consequences of the conflict could have adverse effects on the client's~~ interests ~~of and the lawyer's representation and that the client thereafter gives his or her consent in writing~~. See ~~Rule 1.0~~Rules 1.0.1(e) (informed consent) and 1.0.1(e-1) (informed written consent) and Comments [6] and [7] to that Rule. The information required depends on the nature of the conflict and the nature of the risks involved. When representation of multiple clients in a single matter is undertaken, the information must include the implications of the ~~common~~joint representation, including possible effects on loyalty, confidentiality and the ~~attorney~~lawyer-client privilege and the advantages and risks involved. See ~~Comments~~Comment ~~[30] and [31]~~ (effect of ~~common~~joint representation on confidentiality).	Comment [18] contains the same concept as Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [18], but has been substantially revised to incorporate the different protocol required for California's heightened "informed written consent" standard. The word "joint" has been substituted for "common," as the former term is used in California case law. The cross-reference to Comment [31] has been stricken because the Commission does not recommend adoption of that Comment.
[19] Under some circumstances it may be impossible to make the disclosure necessary to obtain consent. For example, when the lawyer represents different clients in related matters and one of the clients refuses to consent to the disclosure necessary to permit the other client to make an informed decision, the lawyer cannot properly ask the latter to consent.	[19] Under some circumstances it may be impossible to make the disclosure necessary to obtain consent. See Comments [14]-[17A].~~For example, when the lawyer represents different clients in related matters and one of the clients refuses to consent to the disclosure necessary to permit the other client to make an informed decision, the lawyer cannot~~	Comment [19] retains only the first sentence of Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [19]. See Explanation of Changes for Comment [17A].

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
In some cases the alternative to common representation can be that each party may have to obtain separate representation with the possibility of incurring additional costs. These costs, along with the benefits of securing separate representation, are factors that may be considered by the affected client in determining whether common representation is in the client's interests.	~~properly ask the latter to consent. In some cases the alternative to common representation can be that each party may have to obtain separate representation with the possibility of incurring additional costs. These costs, along with the benefits of securing separate representation, are factors that may be considered by the affected client in determining whether common representation is in the client's interests.~~
Consent Confirmed in Writing [20] Paragraph (b) requires the lawyer to obtain the informed consent of the client, confirmed in writing. Such a writing may consist of a document executed by the client or one that the lawyer promptly records and transmits to the client following an oral consent. See Rule 1.0(b). See also Rule 1.0(n) (writing includes electronic transmission). If it is not feasible to obtain or transmit the writing at the time the client gives informed consent, then the lawyer must obtain or transmit it within a reasonable time thereafter. See Rule 1.0(b). The requirement of a writing does not supplant the need in most cases for the lawyer to talk with the client, to explain the risks and advantages, if any, of representation burdened with a conflict of interest, as well as reasonably available alternatives, and to afford the client a reasonable opportunity to consider the risks and alternatives and to raise questions and concerns. Rather, the writing is required in order to impress upon clients the	~~Consent Confirmed in Writing~~ [20] Paragraph (b) requires the lawyer to obtain the informed consent of the client, ~~confirmed~~ in writing. ~~Such a writing may consist of a document executed by the client or one that the lawyer promptly records and transmits to the client following an oral consent.~~ See Rule 1.0. ~~1(b). See also Rule 1.0(n)~~ (writing includes electronic transmission). ~~If it is not feasible to obtain or transmit the writing at the time the client gives informed consent, then the lawyer must obtain or transmit it within a reasonable time thereafter. See Rule 1.0(b).~~ The requirement of a ~~writing~~ written disclosure, (see Comment [18]), does not supplant the need in most cases for the lawyer to talk with the client, to explain the risks and advantages, if any, of representation burdened with a conflict of interest, as well as reasonably available alternatives, and to afford the client a reasonable opportunity to consider the risks and alternatives and to raise questions and concerns. Rather, the writing is required in order to impress upon	The heading has been deleted because California does not follow the Model Rules' less-protective standard. Comment [20] is based loosely on Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [20]. Most of the first part of the Model Rule comment has been stricken because the Commission determined that California's more robust consent protocol should be described in the first comment to this section on informed written consent (Comments [18]-[20].) However, the Commission recommends adoption of the last part of the Model Rule comment because it provides valuable guidance.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
seriousness of the decision the client is being asked to make and to avoid disputes or ambiguities that might later occur in the absence of a writing.	clients the seriousness of the decision the client is being asked to make and to avoid disputes or ambiguities that might later occur in the absence of a writing.
	Duration of Consent [20A] A disclosure and an informed written consent are sufficient for purposes of this Rule only for so long as the relevant facts and circumstances remain unchanged. With any material change, the lawyer may not continue the representation without making a new written disclosure to each affected client and obtaining a new written consent.	Comment [20A] has no counterpart in the Model Rule. It provides a critical reminder that a consent conforms to the Rule only so long as there is no material change in the facts and circumstances on which the consent is based.
Revoking Consent [21]A client who has given consent to a conflict may revoke the consent and, like any other client, may terminate the lawyer's representation at any time. Whether revoking consent to the client's own representation precludes the lawyer from continuing to represent other clients depends on the circumstances, including the nature of the conflict, whether the client revoked consent because of a material change in circumstances, the reasonable expectations of the other client and whether material detriment to the other clients or the lawyer would result.	Revoking Consent [21]A client who has given consent to a conflict may revoke the consent and, like any other client, may terminate the lawyer's representation of that client at any time. Whether revoking consent to the client's own representation precludes the lawyer from continuing to represent other clients depends on the circumstances, including the nature of the conflict, whether the client revoked consent because of a material change in circumstances, the reasonable expectations of the other client~~and~~, whether material detriment to the other clients or the lawyer would result, and the lawyer's confidentiality obligations to the client revoking consent.	Comment [21] is nearly identical to Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [21], with two clarifying changes.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Consent to Future Conflict [22]Whether a lawyer may properly request a client to waive conflicts that might arise in the future is subject to the test of paragraph (b). The effectiveness of such waivers is generally determined by the extent to which the client reasonably understands the material risks that the waiver entails. The more comprehensive the explanation of the types of future representations that might arise and the actual and reasonably foreseeable adverse consequences of those representations, the greater the likelihood that the client will have the requisite understanding. Thus, if the client agrees to consent to a particular type of conflict with which the client is already familiar, then the consent ordinarily will be effective with regard to that type of conflict. If the consent is general and open-ended, then the consent ordinarily will be ineffective, because it is not reasonably likely that the client will have understood the material risks involved. On the other hand, if the client is an experienced user of the legal services involved and is reasonably informed regarding the risk that a conflict may arise, such consent is more likely to be effective, particularly if, e.g., the client is independently represented by other counsel in giving consent and the consent is limited to future conflicts unrelated to the subject of the representation. In any case, advance consent cannot be effective if the circumstances that materialize in the future are such	Consent to Future Conflict ~~[22]Whether a lawyer may properly request a client to waive conflicts that might arise in the future is subject to the test of paragraph (b). The effectiveness of such waivers is generally determined by the extent to which the client reasonably understands the material risks that the waiver entails. The more comprehensive the explanation of the types of future representations that might arise and the actual and reasonably foreseeable adverse consequences of those representations, the greater the likelihood that the client will have the requisite understanding. Thus, if the client agrees to consent to a particular type of conflict with which the client is already familiar, then the consent ordinarily will be effective with regard to that type of conflict. If the consent is general and open-ended, then the consent ordinarily will be ineffective, because it is not reasonably likely that the client will have understood the material risks involved. On the other hand, if the client is an experienced user of the legal services involved and is reasonably informed regarding the risk that a conflict may arise, such consent is more likely to be effective, particularly if, e.g., the client is independently represented by other counsel in giving consent and the consent is limited to future conflicts unrelated to the subject of the representation. In any case, advance consent cannot be effective if the circumstances that materialize in the future are such~~	Comment [22] shares much with the substance of Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [22]. However, the proposed Comment has been heavily edited to make it more specific and less discursive in order to provide better guidance to lawyers. It was further edited after Board members expressed concerns about the Comment's discussion of advance waivers. The changes are intended to more explicitly state the requirements for obtaining client consent, thereby enhancing client protection.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
as would make the conflict nonconsentable under paragraph (b).	~~paragraph (b).~~^[22] Lawyers may ask clients to give advance consent to conflicts that might arise in the future, but a client's consent must be "informed" to comply with this Rule. A lawyer would have a conflict of interest in accepting or continuing a representation under a consent that does not comply with this Rule. Determining whether a client's advance consent is "informed," and thus complies with this Rule, is a fact-specific inquiry that will depend first on the factors discussed in Comments [18]-[20] (informed written consent). However, an advance consent can comply with this Rule even where the lawyer cannot provide all the information and explanation Comments [18]-[20] ordinarily requires. A lawyer's disclosure to a client must include: (i) a disclosure to the extent known of facts and reasonably foreseeable consequences; and (ii) an explanation that the lawyer is requesting the client to consent to a possible future conflict that would involve future facts and circumstances that to a degree cannot be known when the consent is requested. The lawyer also must disclose to the client whether the consent permits the lawyer to be adverse to the client on any matter in the future, whether the consent permits the lawyer to be adverse to the client in the current or in future litigation, and whether there will be any limits on the scope of the consent. Whether an advance consent complies with this Rule ordinarily also can depend on factors such as the following: (1) the comprehensiveness of the lawyer's explanation of the types of future conflicts that might arise and of the actual and reasonably foreseeable adverse consequences to the client; (2) the client's degree of experience as a user of the legal services, including experience with the type of legal services involved in the current representation; (3) whether the client has consented to the use of an adequate ethics screen and whether the screen was timely and effectively instituted and fully maintained; (4) whether before giving consent the client either was represented by an independent lawyer of the client's choice, or was advised in writing by the lawyer to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client's choice and was given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice; (5) whether the consent is limited to future conflicts unrelated to the subject of the representation; and (6) the client's ability to understand the nature and extent of the advance consent. A client's ability to understand the nature and extent of the advance consent might depend on factors such as the client's education, language skills, and the client's familiarity with the particular type of conflict that is the subject of the consent. An advance consent normally will not comply with this Rule if it is so general and open-ended that it would be unlikely that the client understood the potential adverse consequences of granting consent. However, depending upon the extent to which the other enumerated factors set forth above are present, even a general and open-ended advance consent can be in compliance when: the consent was given by an experienced user of the type of legal services involved; and the client was independently represented regarding the consent or was advised in writing by the lawyer to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client's choice and was given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice. In any case, advance consent will not be in compliance in the circumstances described in Comments [14]-[17A] (prohibited representations). See Rule 1.0.1(e) (informed consent) and 1.0.1 (e-1) (informed written consent). A lawyer who obtains from a client an advance consent that complies with this Rule will have all the duties of a lawyer to that client except as expressly limited by the consent. A lawyer cannot obtain an advance consent to incompetent representation. See Rule 1.8.8.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Conflicts in Litigation [23]Paragraph (b)(3) prohibits representation of opposing parties in the same litigation, regardless of the clients' consent. On the other hand, simultaneous representation of parties whose interests in litigation may conflict, such as coplaintiffs or codefendants, is governed by paragraph (a)(2). A conflict may exist by reason of substantial discrepancy in the parties' testimony, incompatibility in positions in relation to an opposing party or the fact that there are substantially different possibilities of settlement of the claims or liabilities in question. Such conflicts can arise in criminal cases as well as civil. The potential for conflict of interest in representing multiple defendants in a criminal case is so grave that ordinarily a lawyer should decline to represent more than one codefendant. On the other hand, common representation of persons having	Conflicts in Litigation [23]Paragraph (b)(3) prohibits representation of opposing parties in the same litigation, regardless of the clients' consent. On the other hand, simultaneous representation of parties whose interests in litigation may conflict, such as coplaintiffs or codefendants, is governed by paragraph (a)(2). A conflict may exist by reason of substantial discrepancy in the parties' testimony, incompatibility in positions in relation to an opposing party or the fact that there are substantially different possibilities of settlement of the claims or liabilities in question. Such conflicts can arise in criminal cases as well as civil. The potential for conflict of interest in representing multiple defendants in a criminal case is so grave that ordinarily a lawyer should decline to represent more than one codefendant. On the other hand, ~~common~~joint representation of persons having	Comment [23] is nearly identical to Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [23], except that the word "joint" has been substituted for "common," as the former term is used in California case law, two other non-substantive word changes were made.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
similar interests in civil litigation is proper if the requirements of paragraph (b) are met.	similar interests in civil litigation is ~~proper~~permitted if the requirements of paragraph (b) are ~~met~~satisfied.
[24] Ordinarily a lawyer may take inconsistent legal positions in different tribunals at different times on behalf of different clients. The mere fact that advocating a legal position on behalf of one client might create precedent adverse to the interests of a client represented by the lawyer in an unrelated matter does not create a conflict of interest. A conflict of interest exists, however, if there is a significant risk that a lawyer's action on behalf of one client will materially limit the lawyer's effectiveness in representing another client in a different case; for example, when a decision favoring one client will create a precedent likely to seriously weaken the position taken on behalf of the other client. Factors relevant in determining whether the clients need to be advised of the risk include: where the cases are pending, whether the issue is substantive or procedural, the temporal relationship between the matters, the significance of the issue to the immediate and long-term interests of the clients involved and the clients' reasonable expectations in retaining the lawyer. If there is significant risk of material limitation, then absent informed consent of the affected clients, the lawyer must refuse one of the representations or withdraw from one or both matters.	[24] Ordinarily a lawyer may take inconsistent legal positions in different tribunals at different times on behalf of different clients. The mere fact that advocating a legal position on behalf of one client might create precedent adverse to the interests of a client represented by the lawyer in an unrelated matter does not create a conflict of interest. A conflict of interest exists, however, if there is a significant risk that a lawyer's action on behalf of one client will materially limit the lawyer's effectiveness in representing another client in a different case; for example, when a decision favoring one client will create a precedent likely to seriously weaken the position taken on behalf of the other client. Factors relevant in determining whether the clients need to be ~~advised~~informed of the risk include: where the cases are pending, whether the issue is substantive or procedural, the temporal relationship between the matters, the significance of the issue to the immediate and long-term interests of the clients involved and the clients' reasonable expectations in retaining the lawyer. If there is significant risk of material limitation, then absent informed written consent of the affected clients, the lawyer must refuse one of the representations or withdraw from one or both matters to the extent permitted by Rule 1.16.	Comment [24] is based on Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [24]. The word "informed" was substituted for "advised" to track the language in the definition of "informed consent," Rule 1.0.1(e). The word "written" has been added to track California's heightened consent standard. Finally, a cross-reference to Rule 1.16 has been added to point the reader to the Rule governing termination of a representation.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	[24A] If permission from a tribunal to terminate a representation is denied, the lawyer is obligated to continue the representation notwithstanding the provisions of this Rule. See Rule 1.16(c).	Comment [24] has no counterpart in the Model Rule. It has been added in recognition that, notwithstanding this Rule, a court has inherent authority to control the conduct of persons appearing before it.
[25] When a lawyer represents or seeks to represent a class of plaintiffs or defendants in a class-action lawsuit, unnamed members of the class are ordinarily not considered to be clients of the lawyer for purposes of applying paragraph (a)(1) of this Rule. Thus, the lawyer does not typically need to get the consent of such a person before representing a client suing the person in an unrelated matter. Similarly, a lawyer seeking to represent an opponent in a class action does not typically need the consent of an unnamed member of the class whom the lawyer represents in an unrelated matter.	[25] ~~When~~ This Rule applies to a lawyer's representation of named class representatives in a class action, whether or not the class has been certified. For purposes of this Rule, an unnamed member of a plaintiff or a defendant class is not, by reason of that status, a client of a lawyer who represents or seeks to represent ~~a class of plaintiffs or defendants in a class-action lawsuit, unnamed members of the class are ordinarily not considered to be clients of the lawyer for purposes of applying paragraph (a)(1) of this Rule.~~ Thus, the lawyer does not typically need to get the consent of ~~such a person~~ an unnamed class member before representing a client ~~suing the~~ who is adverse to that person in an unrelated matter. Similarly, a lawyer seeking to represent an opponent in a class action does not typically need the consent of an unnamed member of the class whom the lawyer represents in an unrelated matter. A lawyer representing a class or proposed class may owe civil duties to unnamed class members, and this Comment is not intended to alter those civil duties in any respect.	Comment [25] is based on Model Rule, cmt. [25]. Several clarifying changes have been made.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Nonlitigation Conflicts [26] Conflicts of interest under paragraphs (a)(1) and (a)(2) arise in contexts other than litigation. For a discussion of directly adverse conflicts in transactional matters, see Comment [7]. Relevant factors in determining whether there is significant potential for material limitation include the duration and intimacy of the lawyer's relationship with the client or clients involved, the functions being performed by the lawyer, the likelihood that disagreements will arise and the likely prejudice to the client from the conflict. The question is often one of proximity and degree. See Comment [8].	Nonlitigation Conflicts [26] Conflicts of interest under paragraphs (a)(1) and (a)(2) arise in contexts other than litigation. For a discussion of directly adverse conflicts in transactional matters that are prohibited by paragraph (a)(1), see Comment [7]. Relevant factors in determining whether there is significant ~~potential~~risk for material limitation as provided in paragraph (a)(2) include the duration and intimacy of the lawyer's relationship with the client or clients involved, the functions being performed by the lawyer, the likelihood that disagreements will arise and the likely prejudice to the client from the conflict. The question is often one of proximity and degree. See Comment [8].	Comment [26] is based on Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [26]. References to specific sections of the Rule have been added for clarification.
[27] For example, conflict questions may arise in estate planning and estate administration. A lawyer may be called upon to prepare wills for several family members, such as husband and wife, and, depending upon the circumstances, a conflict of interest may be present. In estate administration the identity of the client may be unclear under the law of a particular jurisdiction. Under one view, the client is the fiduciary; under another view the client is the estate or trust, including its beneficiaries. In order to comply with conflict of interest rules, the lawyer should make clear the lawyer's relationship to the parties involved.	[27] For example, conflict questions may arise in estate planning and estate administration. A lawyer may be called upon to prepare wills for several family members, such as husband and wife, and, depending upon the circumstances, a conflict of interest may be present. ~~In estate administration the identity of the client may be unclear under the law of a particular jurisdiction. Under one view, the client is the fiduciary; under another view the client is the estate or trust, including its beneficiaries. In order to comply with conflict of interest rules, the lawyer should make clear the lawyer's relationship to the parties involved.~~	Comment [27] is identical to the first two sentences of Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [27]. The balance of the Comment has been stricken as a potentially misleading statement of California law.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[28]Whether a conflict is consentable depends on the circumstances. For example, a lawyer may not represent multiple parties to a negotiation whose interests are fundamentally antagonistic to each other, but common representation is permissible where the clients are generally aligned in interest even though there is some difference in interest among them. Thus, a lawyer may seek to establish or adjust a relationship between clients on an amicable and mutually advantageous basis; for example, in helping to organize a business in which two or more clients are entrepreneurs, working out the financial reorganization of an enterprise in which two or more clients have an interest or arranging a property distribution in settlement of an estate. The lawyer seeks to resolve potentially adverse interests by developing the parties' mutual interests. Otherwise, each party might have to obtain separate representation, with the possibility of incurring additional cost, complication or even litigation. Given these and other relevant factors, the clients may prefer that the lawyer act for all of them.	~~[28][RESERVED] Whether a conflict is consentable depends on the circumstances. For example, a lawyer may not represent multiple parties to a negotiation whose interests are fundamentally antagonistic to each other, but common representation is permissible where the clients are generally aligned in interest even though there is some difference in interest among them. Thus, a lawyer may seek to establish or adjust a relationship between clients on an amicable and mutually advantageous basis; for example, in helping to organize a business in which two or more clients are entrepreneurs, working out the financial reorganization of an enterprise in which two or more clients have an interest or arranging a property distribution in settlement of an estate. The lawyer seeks to resolve potentially adverse interests by developing the parties' mutual interests. Otherwise, each party might have to obtain separate representation, with the possibility of incurring additional cost, complication or even litigation. Given these and other relevant factors, the clients may prefer that the lawyer act for all of them.~~	The Commission is recommending that Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [28] not be adopted because it is an inaccurate statement of California law.
Special Considerations in Common Representation [29]In considering whether to represent multiple clients in the same matter, a lawyer should be mindful that if the common representation fails	Special Considerations in ~~Common~~Joint Representation [29]When a lawyer represents multiple clients in a single matter, the lawyer's duties to one of the clients can interfere with the performance of the lawyer's	The heading for this section has been changed, with the word "joint" substituted for "common," as the former term is used in California case law. The same change has been made throughout this section of the Comment. Comment [29] is based on Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [29]. The first

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
because the potentially adverse interests cannot be reconciled, the result can be additional cost, embarrassment and recrimination. Ordinarily, the lawyer will be forced to withdraw from representing all of the clients if the common representation fails. In some situations, the risk of failure is so great that multiple representation is plainly impossible. For example, a lawyer cannot undertake common representation of clients where contentious litigation or negotiations between them are imminent or contemplated. Moreover, because the lawyer is required to be impartial between commonly represented clients, representation of multiple clients is improper when it is unlikely that impartiality can be maintained. Generally, if the relationship between the parties has already assumed antagonism, the possibility that the clients' interests can be adequately served by common representation is not very good. Other relevant factors are whether the lawyer subsequently will represent both parties on a continuing basis and whether the situation involves creating or terminating a relationship between the parties.	duties to the other clients. In considering whether to represent multiple clients in the same matter, a lawyer should be mindful that if the ~~common~~joint representation fails because the potentially adverse interests cannot be reconciled, the result can be additional cost, embarrassment and recrimination. Ordinarily, the lawyer will be forced to withdraw from representing all of the clients if the ~~common~~joint representation fails. In some situations, the risk of failure is so great that multiple representation is plainly impossible. For example, a lawyer cannot undertake ~~common~~joint representation of clients where contentious litigation or negotiations between them are imminent or contemplated. ~~Moreover, because the lawyer is required to be impartial between commonly represented clients, representation of multiple clients is improper when it is unlikely that impartiality can be maintained.~~ Generally, if the relationship between the parties has already assumed antagonism, the possibility that the clients' interests can be adequately served by ~~very good~~likely. Other relevant factors ~~are~~include whether the lawyer subsequently will represent both parties on a continuing basis and whether the situation involves creating or terminating a relationship between the parties.	sentence has been added to identify the basic concern underlying a lawyer's acceptance of a joint representation. The sentence beginning with "Moreover" has been deleted because it is a misleading statement of the duty of loyalty. Two grammatical changes have been made in the last and next-to-last sentence.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	[29A] Examples of conflicts that arise under paragraph (a)(2) from representing multiple clients in the same matter and that will likely preclude a lawyer from accepting or continuing a joint representation unless the lawyer complies with paragraph (b) include the following situations: (1) the lawyer receives conflicting instructions from the clients and the lawyer cannot follow one client's instructions without violating another client's instruction; (2) the clients have inconsistent interests or objectives so that it becomes impossible for the lawyer to advance one client's interests or objectives without detrimentally affecting another client's interests or objectives; (3) the clients have antagonistic positions and the lawyer is obligated to advise each client about how to advance that client's position relative to the other's position; (4) the clients have inconsistent expectations of confidentiality because one client expects the lawyer to keep secret information that is material to the matter; (5) the lawyer has a preexisting relationship with one client that affects the lawyer's independent professional judgment on behalf of the other client(s); (6) the clients make inconsistent demands for the original file.	Comment [29A] has no counterpart in the Model Rule. The substance of this comment derives from State Bar Formal Ethics Opn. 1998-153, which described the kinds of conflict situations that might exist or arise in a joint representation. The Commission concluded that including a description of these comments would provide valuable guidance and better enable lawyers to identify representations that present a serious risk of a conflict.
[30]A particularly important factor in determining the appropriateness of common representation is the effect on client-lawyer confidentiality and the attorney-client privilege. With regard to the attorney-client privilege, the prevailing rule is that, as between	[30]A particularly important factor in determining the appropriateness of ~~common~~joint representation is the effect on ~~client~~-lawyer-client confidentiality and the ~~attorney~~lawyer-client privilege. With regard to the ~~attorney~~lawyer-client privilege, although each	Comment [30] is based on Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [30]. It has been revised to include a discussion of specific California law, and also to clarify a lawyer's confidentiality duties in joint representations under California law.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
commonly represented clients, the privilege does not attach. Hence, it must be assumed that if litigation eventuates between the clients, the privilege will not protect any such communications, and the clients should be so advised.	client's communications with the prevailing rule is that lawyer are protected as to third persons, as between ~~commonly~~jointly represented clients, the privilege does not attach. Hence, it must be assumed that if litigation ~~eventuates~~results between the joint clients, the privilege will not protect any such communications. See Evidence Code sections 952 and 962. In addition, because of the clients lawyer's obligations under Rule 1.4, the lawyer must inform each jointly represented client in writing of that fact and also that the client should normally expect that his or her communications with the lawyer will be so advised shared with other jointly-represented clients. See also Comments [18]-[20].
[31]As to the duty of confidentiality, continued common representation will almost certainly be inadequate if one client asks the lawyer not to disclose to the other client information relevant to the common representation. This is so because the lawyer has an equal duty of loyalty to each client, and each client has the right to be informed of anything bearing on the representation that might affect that client's interests and the right to expect that the lawyer will use that information to that client's benefit. See Rule 1.4. The lawyer should, at the outset of the common representation and as part of the process of obtaining each client's informed consent, advise each client that information will be shared and that the lawyer will have to withdraw if one client decides that some matter material to the	~~[31][RESERVED] As to the duty of confidentiality, continued common representation will almost certainly be inadequate if one client asks the lawyer not to disclose to the other client information relevant to the common representation. This is so because the lawyer has an equal duty of loyalty to each client, and each client has the right to be informed of anything bearing on the representation that might affect that client's interests and the right to expect that the lawyer will use that information to that client's benefit. See Rule 1.4. The lawyer should, at the outset of the common representation and as part of the process of obtaining each client's informed consent, advise each client that information will be shared and that the lawyer will have to withdraw if one client decides that some matter material to the~~	The Commission recommends that Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [30] not be adopted as duplicative of other Comments. See, e.g., Comment [17A].

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
representation should be kept from the other. In limited circumstances, it may be appropriate for the lawyer to proceed with the representation when the clients have agreed, after being properly informed, that the lawyer will keep certain information confidential. For example, the lawyer may reasonably conclude that failure to disclose one client's trade secrets to another client will not adversely affect representation involving a joint venture between the clients and agree to keep that information confidential with the informed consent of both clients.	~~representation should be kept from the other. In limited circumstances, it may be appropriate for the lawyer to proceed with the representation when the clients have agreed, after being properly informed, that the lawyer will keep certain information confidential. For example, the lawyer may reasonably conclude that failure to disclose one client's trade secrets to another client will not adversely affect representation involving a joint venture between the clients and agree to keep that information confidential with the informed consent of both clients.~~
[32]When seeking to establish or adjust a relationship between clients, the lawyer should make clear that the lawyer's role is not that of partisanship normally expected in other circumstances and, thus, that the clients may be required to assume greater responsibility for decisions than when each client is separately represented. Any limitations on the scope of the representation made necessary as a result of the common representation should be fully explained to the clients at the outset of the representation. See Rule 1.2(c).	[32]When seeking to establish or adjust a relationship between clients, the lawyer should make clear that the lawyer's role is not that of partisanship normally expected in other circumstances and, thus, that the clients may be required to assume greater responsibility for decisions than when each client is separately represented. Any limitations on the scope of the representation made necessary as a result of the ~~common~~joint representation should be fully explained to the clients at the outset of the representation. See Rule 1.2(c).	Comment [32] is identical to Model Rule, cmt. [30], except that it substitutes "joint" for "common."
[33]Subject to the above limitations, each client in the common representation has the right to loyal and diligent representation and the protection of Rule 1.9 concerning the obligations to a former client. The client also has the right to discharge the lawyer as stated in Rule 1.16.	[33]Subject to the above limitations, each client in the ~~common~~joint representation has the right to ~~loyal and diligent representation~~the lawyer's undivided loyalty and the protection of Rule 1.9 concerning the obligations to a former client. The client also has the right to discharge the lawyer as stated in Rule 1.16.	Comment [33] is based on Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [33], with "joint" substituted for "common" and the emphasis placed on the duty of undivided loyalty.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Organizational Clients [34]A lawyer who represents a corporation or other organization does not, by virtue of that representation, necessarily represent any constituent or affiliated organization, such as a parent or subsidiary. See Rule 1.13(a). Thus, the lawyer for an organization is not barred from accepting representation adverse to an affiliate in an unrelated matter, unless the circumstances are such that the affiliate should also be considered a client of the lawyer, there is an understanding between the lawyer and the organizational client that the lawyer will avoid representation adverse to the client's affiliates, or the lawyer's obligations to either the organizational client or the new client are likely to limit materially the lawyer's representation of the other client.	Organizational Clients [34]A lawyer who represents a corporation or other organization does not, by virtue of that representation, necessarily represent any constituent or affiliated organization, such as a parent or subsidiary. See Rule 1.13(a). Thus, the lawyer for an organization is not barred from accepting representation adverse to an affiliate in an unrelated matter, unless the circumstances are such that the affiliate should also be considered a client of the lawyer, there is an understanding between the lawyer and the organizational client that the lawyer will avoid representation adverse to the client's affiliates, or the lawyer's obligations to either the organizational client or the new client are likely to limit materially the lawyer's representation of the other client.	Comment [34] is identical to Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [34].
[35]A lawyer for a corporation or other organization who is also a member of its board of directors should determine whether the responsibilities of the two roles may conflict. The lawyer may be called on to advise the corporation in matters involving actions of the directors. Consideration should be given to the frequency with which such situations may arise, the potential intensity of the conflict, the effect of the lawyer's resignation from the board and the possibility of the corporation's obtaining legal advice from another lawyer in such situations. If there is material risk that the dual role will compromise the lawyer's independence of professional judgment, the	[35]A lawyer for a corporation ~~or other organization~~ who is also a member of its board of directors (or a lawyer for another type of organization who has corresponding fiduciary duties to it) should determine whether the responsibilities of the two roles may conflict. The lawyer may be called on to advise the corporation in matters involving actions of the directors. Consideration should be given to the frequency with which such situations may arise, the potential intensity of the conflict, the effect of the lawyer's resignation from the board and the possibility of the corporation's obtaining legal advice from another lawyer in such situations. If there is	Comment [35] is identical to Model Rule 1.7, cmt. [35], except that a parenthetical has been added in place of the phrase "or other organization" to clarify it is the fiduciary duties the lawyer might owe the organization that should be the focus of the lawyer's analysis.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
lawyer should not serve as a director or should cease to act as the corporation's lawyer when conflicts of interest arise. The lawyer should advise the other members of the board that in some circumstances matters discussed at board meetings while the lawyer is present in the capacity of director might not be protected by the attorney-client privilege and that conflict of interest considerations might require the lawyer's recusal as a director or might require the lawyer and the lawyer's firm to decline representation of the corporation in a matter.	material risk that the dual role will compromise the lawyer's independence of professional judgment, the lawyer should not serve as a director or should cease to act as the corporation's lawyer when conflicts of interest arise. The lawyer should advise the other members of the board that in some circumstances matters discussed at board meetings while the lawyer is present in the capacity of director might not be protected by the ~~attorney~~lawyer-client privilege and that conflict of interest considerations might require the lawyer's recusal as a director or might require the lawyer and the lawyer's firm to decline representation of the corporation in a matter.
	Insurance Defense [36]In State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company v. Federal Insurance Company (1999) 72 Cal.App.4th 1422 [86 Cal.Rptr.2d 20], the court held that the predecessor to paragraph (a) was violated when a lawyer, retained by an insurer to defend one suit against an insured, filed a direct action against the same insurer in an unrelated action without securing the insurer's consent. Notwithstanding State Farm, paragraph (a) does not apply to the relationship between an insurer and a lawyer when, in each matter, the insurer's interest is only as an indemnity provider and not as a direct party to the action.	Comment [36] has no counterpart in the Model Rule. It carries forward verbatim current rule 3-310, Discussion ¶. 9, which was inserted following lengthy deliberations among stakeholders pursuant to legislation (Assembly Bill 2069).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interest: Current Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	[37] Paragraph (a)(2) is not intended to modify the tripartite relationship among a lawyer, an insurer, and an insured that is created when the insurer appoints the lawyer to represent the insured under the contract between the insurer and the insured. Although the lawyer's appointment by the insurer makes the insurer and the insured the lawyer's joint clients in the matter, the appointment does not by itself create a significant risk that the representation of the insured, insurer, or both will be materially limited under paragraph (a)(2).	Comment [37] has no counterpart in the Model Rule. It carries forward current rule 3-310, Discussion ¶. 11, as revised.
	Public Service [38] For special rules governing membership in a legal service organization, see Rule 6.3; for participation in law related activities affecting client interests, see Rule 6.4; and for work in conjunction with certain limited legal services programs, see Rule 6.5.	Comment [38] has no counterpart in the Model Rule. It has been added to the Rule to call the reader's attention to the fact that special rules govern certain kinds of work in which a lawyer might engage when performing public service.

Rule 1.7 Conflict of Interest: Current Clients
(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to the Public Comment Draft)

- (a) Except as provided in paragraph (b), a lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation involves a concurrent conflict of interest. A concurrent conflict of interest exists if:
- (1) the representation of one client will be directly adverse to another client; or
 - (2) there is a significant risk that the representation of one or more clients will be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client, a former client or a third person or by a personal interest of the lawyer.
- (b) Notwithstanding the existence of a concurrent conflict of interest under paragraph (a), a lawyer may represent a client if:
- (1) the lawyer reasonably believes that the lawyer will be able to provide competent and diligent representation to each affected client;
 - (2) the representation is not prohibited by law;
 - (3) the representation does not involve the assertion of a claim by one client against another client represented by the lawyer in the same litigation or other proceeding before a tribunal; and
 - (4) each affected client gives informed written consent.

Comment

General Principles

[1] Undivided Loyalty and independent professional judgment are essential elements in the lawyer's relationship to a client. Concurrent conflicts of interest can arise from the lawyer's responsibilities to another client, a former client or a third person or from the lawyer's own interests. See Comments [6]-[7], [8], [9], [10]-[12]. This Rule and the other conflict rules (1.8 through 1.8.11, 1.9, 1.10, 1.11, 1.18) seek to protect a lawyer's ability to carry out the lawyer's basic fiduciary duties to each client. In addition to the duty of undivided loyalty and the duty to exercise independent professional judgment, the conflict rules are also concerned with (1) the duty to maintain confidential client information; (2) the duty to disclose to the client all material information and significant developments; and (3) the duty to represent the client competently and diligently within the bounds of the law. See Rule 1.2(a) regarding the allocation of authority between lawyer and client. For specific rules regarding certain concurrent conflicts of interest, see Rules 1.8.1 through 1.8.11. For former client conflicts of interest, see Rule 1.9. For conflicts of interest involving prospective clients, see Rule 1.18. For definitions of "informed consent" and "informed written consent," see Rule 1.0.1(e) and (e-1), and Comments [6] and [7] to that Rule.

[2] Resolution of a conflict of interest under this Rule requires the lawyer to: (1) clearly identify the client or clients; (2) determine the scope of each relevant representation of a client or proposed representation of a client; (3) determine whether a conflict of interest exists; (4) decide whether the representation may be undertaken despite the existence of a conflict, i.e., whether lawyer has the ability to obtain the client's consent to the conflict; and

(5) if so, consult with the clients affected under paragraph (a) and obtain their informed written consent. The clients affected under paragraph (a) include both of the clients referred to in paragraph (a)(1) and the one or more clients whose representation might be materially limited under paragraph (a)(2).

[3] A conflict of interest may exist before representation is undertaken, in which event the representation must be declined, unless the lawyer obtains the informed written consent of each client under the conditions of paragraph (b). To determine whether a conflict of interest exists, a lawyer should adopt reasonable procedures, appropriate for the size and type of firm and practice, to determine in both litigation and non-litigation matters the persons and issues involved. See also Comment to Rule 5.1. Ignorance caused by a failure to institute such procedures will not excuse a lawyer's violation of this Rule. Whether a lawyer-client relationship exists or, having once been established, is continuing, is beyond the scope of these Rules.

[4] If a conflict arises after representation has been undertaken, the lawyer ordinarily must withdraw from the representation, unless the lawyer has obtained the informed written consent of the client under the conditions of paragraph (b). See Rule 1.16. Where more than one client is involved, whether the lawyer may continue to represent any of the clients is determined both by the lawyer's ability to comply with duties owed to a client who becomes a former client and by the lawyer's ability to represent adequately the remaining client or clients, given the lawyer's duties to the former client. See Rule 1.9. See also Comment [29].

[5] [RESERVED]

Paragraph (a)(1): Identifying Conflicts of Interest: Directly Adverse

[6] The duty of undivided loyalty to a current client prohibits undertaking representation directly adverse to that client without that client's informed written consent. Thus, absent consent, a lawyer may not act as an advocate in one matter against a person the lawyer represents in some other matter, even when the matters are wholly unrelated. The client as to whom the representation is directly adverse is likely to feel betrayed, and the resulting damage to the lawyer-client relationship is likely to impair the lawyer's ability to represent the client effectively. In addition, the client on whose behalf the adverse representation is undertaken reasonably may fear that the lawyer will pursue that client's case less effectively out of deference to the other client, i.e., that the representation may be materially limited by the lawyer's interest in retaining the current client. Thus, a directly adverse conflict arises, for example, when a lawyer accepts representation of a client that is directly adverse to another client the lawyer currently represents in another matter. See Flatt v. Superior Court (1994) 9 Cal.4th 275 [36 Cal.Rptr.2d 537]. Similarly, a directly adverse conflict under paragraph (a)(1) occurs when a lawyer, while representing a client, accepts in another matter the representation of a person or organization who, in the first matter, is directly adverse to the lawyer's client. ~~A directly adverse conflict may also arise when a lawyer is required to cross-examine a client who appears as a witness in a lawsuit involving another client.~~ Similarly, direct adversity can arise when a lawyer cross-examines a non-party witness who is the lawyer's client in another matter, if the examination is likely to harm or embarrass the witness. On the other hand, simultaneous representation in unrelated matters of clients whose interests are only economically adverse, such as representation of competing economic enterprises in unrelated litigation, does not ordinarily constitute a conflict of interest and thus may not require consent of the respective clients. Other instances that ordinarily would not constitute direct adversity include: (1) a representation adverse to a non-client where another client of the lawyer is interested in the financial welfare or the profitability of the non-client, as might occur, for example, if a client is the landlord of, or a lender to, the non-client; (2) working for an outcome in litigation that would establish precedent economically harmful to another current client who is not a party to the litigation; (3) representing two clients who have a dispute with one another if the lawyer's work for each client concerns matters other than the dispute; (4) representing clients having antagonistic positions on the same legal question that has arisen in different cases, unless doing so would interfere with the lawyer's ability to represent either client competently, as might occur, e.g., if the lawyer were advocating inconsistent positions in front of the same tribunal. See Comments [14]-[17A].

[7] Directly adverse conflicts can also arise in transactional matters. For example, if a lawyer is asked to represent the seller of a business in negotiations with a buyer represented by the lawyer, not in the same transaction but in another, unrelated matter, the lawyer could not undertake the representation without the informed written consent of each client. Paragraph (a)(1) applies even if the parties to the transaction have a common interest or contemplate working cooperatively toward a common goal.

[7A] If a lawyer proposes to represent two or more parties on the same side of a negotiation or lawsuit, the situation is analyzed under paragraph (a)(2), not paragraph (a)(1). See Comments [29]-[33].

Paragraph (a)(2): Identifying Conflicts of Interest: Material Limitation

[7B] Conflicts of interest that create a significant risk that a lawyer's representation of one or more clients will be materially limited as provided in paragraph (a)(2) can arise from: (1) duties owed a former client or a third person (see Comment [9]); (2) a lawyer's personal interests (see Comments [10]-[12]); or (3) a lawyer's joint representation of two or more clients in the same matter (see Comments [29]-[33]).

[8] Even where there is no direct adversity, a conflict of interest exists if there is a significant risk that a lawyer's ability to consider, recommend or carry out an appropriate course of action for the client will be materially limited as a result of the lawyer's other responsibilities or interests. For example, a lawyer asked to represent two or more clients in the same matter, such as several individuals seeking to form a joint venture, is likely to be materially limited in the lawyer's ability to recommend or advocate all possible positions that each might take because of the lawyer's duty of loyalty to the other clients. The conflict in effect forecloses alternatives that would otherwise be available to each of the clients. The mere possibility of subsequent harm does not itself require disclosure and informed written consent. The critical questions are the likelihood that a difference in interests exists or will eventuate and, if it does, whether it will materially interfere with the lawyer's independent professional judgment in considering alternatives or foreclose courses of actions that reasonably should be pursued on behalf of each client. See Comments [29]-[33]. Depending on the circumstances, various relationships a lawyer has may likewise create a significant risk that the lawyer's representation will be materially limited, for example, where (1) the lawyer has a legal, business, financial, professional, or personal relationship with a party or witness in the same matter; (2) the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that: (i) the lawyer previously had a legal, business, financial, professional, or personal relationship with a party or witness in the same matter, and (ii) the previous relationship would substantially affect the lawyer's representation; (3) the lawyer has or had a legal, business, financial, professional, or personal relationship with another person or entity and the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that either the relationship or the person or entity would be affected substantially by resolution of the matter; (4) a lawyer or law firm representing a party or witness in the matter has a lawyer-client relationship with the lawyer, the lawyer's law firm, or another lawyer in the lawyer's law firm; and (5) a lawyer representing a party or witness in the matter is a spouse, parent or sibling of the lawyer, or has an intimate personal relationship with the lawyer or with another lawyer in the lawyer's law firm.

Lawyer's Responsibilities to Former Clients and Other Third Persons

[9] A lawyer's duties of undivided loyalty and independence of professional judgment may be materially limited by responsibilities to former clients under Rule 1.9 or by the lawyer's responsibilities to other persons, such as fiduciary duties arising from a lawyer's service as a trustee, executor or corporate director. See, e.g., William H. Raley Co, Inc. v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal.App.3d 1042 [197 Cal.Rptr. 232].

Personal Interest Conflicts

[10] The lawyer's own interests should not be permitted to have an adverse effect on the representation of a client. For example, if the probity of a lawyer's own conduct in a transaction is in serious question, it may be difficult or impossible for the lawyer to give the client detached advice. A lawyer's legal, business, professional or financial interest in the subject matter of the representation might also give rise to a conflict under paragraph (a)(2), where, for example, (1) the lawyer is a party to a contract being litigated; (2) the lawyer represents a client in litigation with a corporation in which the lawyer is a shareholder; or (3) the lawyer represents a landlord in lease negotiations with a professional organization of which the lawyer is a member. Similarly, when a lawyer has discussions concerning possible employment with an opponent of the lawyer's client, or with a law firm representing the opponent, such discussions could materially limit the lawyer's representation of the client. In addition, a lawyer may not allow related business interests to affect representation, for example, by referring clients to an enterprise in which the lawyer has an undisclosed financial interest. See Rules 1.8.1 through 1.8.11 for specific rules pertaining to a number of personal interest conflicts, including business transactions with clients. See also Rule 3.7 concerning a lawyer as witness and Rule 1.10 (personal interest conflicts under Rule 1.7 ordinarily are not imputed to other lawyers in a law firm).

[11] When lawyers representing different clients in the same matter or in substantially related matters are closely related by blood or marriage, or when there is an intimate personal relationship between the lawyers, there may be a significant risk that client confidences will be revealed and that the lawyer's family relationship will interfere with both loyalty and independent professional judgment. As a result, each client is entitled to know of the existence and implications of the relationship between the lawyers before the lawyer agrees to undertake the representation. Thus, a lawyer who is related to another lawyer, e.g., as parent, child, sibling or spouse, or who is in an intimate personal relationship with another lawyer, ordinarily may not represent a client in a matter where that lawyer is representing another party, unless each client gives informed written consent. The prohibition on representation arising from a close family relationship is personal and ordinarily is not imputed to members of firms with whom the lawyers are associated. See Rule 1.10.

[12] A lawyer is prohibited from engaging in sexual relationships with a client unless the sexual relationship predates the formation of the lawyer-client relationship. See Rule 1.8.10.

Interest of Person Paying for a Lawyer's Service

[13] A lawyer may be paid from a source other than the client, including a co-client, if the client gives informed written consent and the arrangement does not compromise the lawyer's duty of loyalty or independent judgment to the client. See Rule 1.8.6. If acceptance of the payment from any other source presents a significant risk that the lawyer's representation of the client will be materially limited by the lawyer's own interest in accommodating the person paying the lawyer's fee or by the lawyer's responsibilities to a payor who is also a co-client, then the lawyer must comply with the requirements of paragraph (b) before accepting the representation, including determining whether the lawyer has the ability to obtain the client's consent to the representation and, if so, whether the client has adequate information about the material risks of the representation. See Comments [14]-[17A].

Prohibited Representations

[14] Ordinarily, clients may consent to representation notwithstanding a conflict. However, as indicated in paragraph (b), in some situations a lawyer cannot properly ask for such agreement or provide representation on the basis of the client's consent. When the lawyer is representing more than one client, the question of consent must be resolved as to each client.

[15] A lawyer's ability to obtain consent is typically determined by considering whether the interests of the clients will be adequately protected if the clients are permitted to give their informed written consent to representation burdened by a conflict of interest. Thus, under paragraph (b)(1), representation is prohibited if in the circumstances the lawyer cannot reasonably conclude that the lawyer will be able to provide competent and diligent representation. See Rule 1.1.

[16] Paragraph (b)(2) describes conflicts to which a client cannot consent because the representation is prohibited by applicable law. For example, certain representations by a former government lawyer are also prohibited, despite the informed consent of the former client. See, e.g., Business and Professions Code section 6131.

[17] Paragraph (b)(3) describes conflicts for which client consent cannot be obtained because of the interests of the legal system in vigorous development of each client's position when the clients are aligned directly against each other in the same litigation or other proceeding before a tribunal. Whether clients are aligned directly against each other within the meaning of this paragraph requires examination of the context of the proceeding. See, e.g., Woods v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal.App.3d 931 [107 Cal.Rptr. 185] (the lawyer of a family-owned business organization should not represent one owner against the other in a marital dissolution action); Klemm v. Superior Court (1977) 75 Cal.App.3d 893, 898 [142 Cal.Rptr. 509] (a lawyer may not represent parties at hearing or trial when those parties' interests in the matter are in actual conflict). Although paragraph (b)(3) does not preclude a lawyer's multiple representation of adverse parties to a mediation (because mediation is not a proceeding before a "tribunal" under Rule 1.0.1(m)), such representation may be precluded by paragraph (b)(1).

[17A] Under paragraph (b)(4), a lawyer must obtain the informed written consent of each affected client before accepting or continuing a representation that is prohibited under paragraph (a). If the lawyer cannot make the disclosure requisite to obtaining informed written consent, (see Rules 1.0.1(e) and 1.0.1(e-1)), without violating the lawyer's duty of confidentiality, then the lawyer may not accept or continue the representation for which the disclosure would be required. See Rule 1.6 and Business and Professions Code section 6068(e). A lawyer might also be prevented from making a required disclosure because of a duty of confidentiality to former, current or potential clients, because of other fiduciary relationships such as service on a board directors, or because of contractual or court-ordered restrictions. In addition, effective client consent cannot be obtained when the person who grants consent lacks capacity or authority. See Civil Code section 38; and see Rule 1.14 regarding clients with diminished capacity.

Disclosure and Informed Written Consent

[18] Informed written consent requires that the lawyer communicate in writing to each affected client the relevant circumstances and the actual and reasonably foreseeable adverse consequences of the conflict on the client's interests and the lawyer's representation and that the client thereafter gives his or her consent in writing. See Rules 1.0.1(e) (informed consent) and 1.0.1(e-1) (informed written consent) and Comments [6] and [7] to that Rule. The information required depends on the nature of the conflict and the nature of the risks involved. When representation of multiple clients in a single matter is undertaken, the information must include the implications of the joint representation, including possible effects on loyalty, confidentiality and the lawyer-client privilege and the advantages and risks involved. See Comment [30] (effect of joint representation on confidentiality).

[19] Under some circumstances it may be impossible to make the disclosure necessary to obtain consent. See Comments [14]-[17A].

[20] Paragraph (b) requires the lawyer to obtain the informed consent of the client in writing. See Rule 1.0.1(n) (writing includes electronic transmission). The requirement of a written disclosure, (see Comment [18]), does not supplant the need in most cases for the lawyer to talk with the client, to explain the risks and advantages, if any, of representation burdened with a conflict of interest, as well as reasonably available alternatives, and to afford the client a reasonable opportunity to consider the risks and alternatives and to raise questions and concerns. Rather, the writing is required in order to impress upon clients the seriousness of the decision the client is being asked to make and to avoid disputes or ambiguities that might later occur in the absence of a writing.

Duration of Consent

[20A] A disclosure and an informed written consent are sufficient for purposes of this Rule only for so long as the relevant facts and circumstances remain unchanged. With any material change, the lawyer may not continue the representation without making a new written disclosure to each affected client and obtaining a new written consent.

Revoking Consent

[21] A client who has given consent to a conflict may revoke the consent and, like any other client, may terminate the lawyer's representation of that client at any time. Whether revoking consent to the client's own representation precludes the lawyer from continuing to represent other clients depends on the circumstances, including the nature of the conflict, whether the client revoked consent because of a material change in circumstances, the reasonable expectations of the other client, whether material detriment to the other clients or the lawyer would result, and the lawyer's confidentiality obligations to the client revoking consent.

Consent to Future Conflict

[22] Lawyers may ask clients to give advance consent to conflicts that might arise in the future, but a client's consent must be "informed" to comply with this Rule. A lawyer would have a conflict of interest in accepting or continuing a representation under a consent that does not comply with this Rule. Determining whether a client's advance consent is "informed," and thus complies with this Rule, is a fact-specific inquiry that will depend first on the factors discussed in Comments [18]-[20] (informed written consent). However, an advance consent can comply with this Rule even where the lawyer cannot provide all the information and explanation Comments [18]-[20] ordinarily requires. A lawyer's disclosure to a client must include: (i) a disclosure to the extent known of facts and reasonably foreseeable consequences; and (ii) an explanation that the lawyer is requesting the client to consent to a possible future conflict that would involve future facts and circumstances that to a degree cannot be known when the consent is requested. The lawyer also must disclose to the client whether the consent permits the lawyer to be adverse to the client on any matter in the future, whether the consent permits the lawyer to be adverse to the client in the current or in future litigation, and whether there will be any limits on the scope of the consent. Whether an advance consent complies with this Rule ordinarily also can depend on factors such ~~things~~ as the following: (1) the comprehensiveness of the lawyer's explanation of the types of future conflicts that might arise and of the actual and reasonably foreseeable adverse consequences to the client; (2) the client's degree of experience as a user of the legal services, including experience with the type of legal services involved in the current representation; (3) whether the client has consented to the use of an adequate ethics screen and whether the screen was timely and effectively instituted and fully maintained; (4) whether before giving consent the client either was represented by an independent lawyer of the client's choice, or was advised in writing by the lawyer to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client's choice and was given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice; (5) whether the consent is limited to future conflicts unrelated to the subject of the representation; and (6) the client's ability to understand the nature and extent of the advance consent. A client's ability to understand the nature and extent of the advance consent might depend on factors such as the client's education, ~~and language skills.~~ ~~An advance consent normally will comply with this Rule if it is limited to a~~ and the client's familiarity with the particular type of conflict ~~with which the client already is familiar that is the subject of the consent.~~ An advance consent normally will not comply with this Rule if it is so general and open-ended that it would be unlikely that the client understood the potential adverse consequences of granting consent. However, depending upon the extent to which the other enumerated factors set forth above are present, even a general and open-ended advance consent can be in compliance when: the consent was given by an experienced user of the type of legal services involved; and that the client was independently represented regarding the consent or was advised in writing by the lawyer to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client's choice and was given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice. In any case, advance consent will not be in compliance in the circumstances described in Comments [14]-[17A] (prohibited representations). See Rule 1.0.1(e) (informed consent) and 1.0.1 (e-1) (informed written consent). A lawyer who obtains from a client an advance consent that complies with this Rule will have all the duties of a lawyer to that client except as expressly limited by the consent. A lawyer cannot obtain an advance consent to incompetent representation. See Rule 1.8.8.

Conflicts in Litigation

[23] Paragraph (b)(3) prohibits representation of opposing parties in the same litigation, regardless of the clients' consent. On the other hand, simultaneous representation of parties whose interests in litigation may conflict, such as co-plaintiffs or co-defendants, is governed by paragraph (a)(2). A conflict may exist by reason of substantial discrepancy in the parties' testimony, incompatibility in positions in relation to an opposing party or the fact that there are substantially different possibilities of settlement of the claims or liabilities in question. Such conflicts can arise in criminal cases as well as civil. The potential for conflict of interest in representing multiple defendants in a criminal case is so grave that ordinarily a lawyer should decline to represent more than one codefendant. On the other hand, joint representation of persons having similar interests in civil litigation is permitted if the requirements of paragraph (b) are satisfied.

[24] Ordinarily a lawyer may take inconsistent legal positions in different tribunals at different times on behalf of different clients. The mere fact that advocating a legal position on behalf of one client might create precedent adverse to the interests of a client represented by the lawyer in an unrelated matter does not create a conflict of interest. A conflict of interest exists, however, if there is a significant risk that a lawyer's action on behalf of one client will materially limit the lawyer's effectiveness in representing another client in a different case; for example, when a decision favoring one client will create a precedent likely to seriously weaken the position taken on behalf of the other client. Factors relevant in determining whether the clients need to be informed of the risk include: where the cases are pending, whether the issue is substantive or procedural, the temporal relationship between the matters, the significance of the issue to the immediate and long-term interests of the clients involved and the clients' reasonable expectations in retaining the lawyer. If there is significant risk of material limitation, then absent informed written consent of the affected clients, the lawyer must refuse one of the representations or withdraw from one or both matters to the extent permitted by Rule 1.16.

[24A] If permission from a tribunal to terminate a representation is denied, the lawyer is obligated to continue the representation notwithstanding the provisions of this Rule. See Rule 1.16(c).

[25] This Rule applies to a lawyer's representation of named class representatives in a class action, whether or not the class has been certified. For purposes of this Rule, an unnamed member of a plaintiff or a defendant class is not, by reason of that status, a client of a lawyer who represents or seeks to represent the class. Thus, the lawyer does not typically need to get the consent of an unnamed class member before representing a client who is adverse to that person in an unrelated matter. Similarly, a lawyer seeking to represent an opponent in a class action does not typically need the consent of an unnamed member of the class whom the lawyer represents in an unrelated matter. A lawyer representing a class or proposed class may owe civil duties to unnamed class members, and this Comment is not intended to alter those civil duties in any respect.

Nonlitigation Conflicts

[26] Conflicts of interest under paragraphs (a)(1) and (a)(2) arise in contexts other than litigation. For a discussion of directly adverse conflicts in transactional matters that are prohibited by paragraph (a)(1), see Comment [7]. Relevant factors in determining whether there is significant risk for material limitation as provided in paragraph (a)(2) include the duration and intimacy of the lawyer's relationship with the client or clients involved, the functions being performed by the lawyer, the likelihood that disagreements will arise and the likely prejudice to the client from the conflict. The question is often one of proximity and degree. See Comment [8].

[27] For example, conflict questions may arise in estate planning and estate administration. A lawyer may be called upon to prepare wills for several family members, such as husband and wife, and, depending upon the circumstances, a conflict of interest may be present.

[28] [RESERVED]

Special Considerations in Joint Representation

[29] When a lawyer represents multiple clients in a single matter, the lawyer's duties to one of the clients can interfere with the performance of the lawyer's duties to the other clients. In considering whether to represent multiple clients in the same matter, a lawyer should be mindful that if the joint representation fails because the potentially adverse interests cannot be reconciled, the result can be additional cost, embarrassment and recrimination. Ordinarily, the lawyer will be forced to withdraw from representing all of the clients if the joint representation fails. In some situations, the risk of failure is so great that multiple representation is plainly impossible. For example, a lawyer cannot undertake joint representation of clients where contentious litigation or negotiations between them are imminent or contemplated. Generally, if the relationship between the parties has already assumed antagonism, the possibility that the clients' interests can be adequately served by joint representation is not likely. Other relevant factors include whether the lawyer subsequently will represent both parties on a continuing basis and whether the situation involves creating or terminating a relationship between the parties.

[29A] Examples of conflicts that arise under paragraph (a)(2) from representing multiple clients in the same matter and that will likely preclude a lawyer from accepting or continuing a joint representation unless the lawyer complies with paragraph (b) include the following situations: (1) the lawyer receives conflicting instructions from the clients and the lawyer cannot follow one client's instructions without violating another client's instruction; (2) the clients have inconsistent interests or objectives so that it becomes impossible for the lawyer to advance one client's interests or objectives without detrimentally affecting another client's interests or objectives; (3) the clients have antagonistic positions and the lawyer is obligated to advise each client about how to advance that client's position relative to the other's position; (4) the clients have inconsistent expectations of confidentiality because one client expects the lawyer to keep secret information that is material to the matter; (5) the lawyer has a preexisting relationship with one client that affects the lawyer's independent professional judgment on behalf of the other client(s); (6) the clients make inconsistent demands for the original file.

[30] A particularly important factor in determining the appropriateness of joint representation is the effect on lawyer-client confidentiality and the lawyer-client privilege. With regard to the lawyer-client privilege, although each client's communications with the lawyer are protected as to third persons, as between jointly represented clients, the privilege does not attach. Hence, it must be assumed that if litigation results between the joint clients, the privilege will not protect any such communications. See Evidence Code sections 952 and 962. In addition, because of the lawyer's obligations under Rule 1.4, the lawyer must inform each jointly represented client in writing of that fact and also that the client should normally expect that his or her communications with the lawyer will be shared with other jointly-represented clients. See also Comments [18]-[20].

[31] [RESERVED]

[32] When seeking to establish or adjust a relationship between clients, the lawyer should make clear that the lawyer's role is not that of partisanship normally expected in other circumstances and, thus, that the clients may be required to assume greater responsibility for decisions than when each client is separately represented. Any limitations on the scope of the representation made necessary as a result of the joint representation should be fully explained to the clients at the outset of the representation. See Rule 1.2(c).

[33] Subject to the above limitations, each client in the joint representation has the right to the lawyer's undivided loyalty and the protection of Rule 1.9 concerning the obligations to a former client. The client also has the right to discharge the lawyer as stated in Rule 1.16.

Organizational Clients

[34] A lawyer who represents a corporation or other organization does not, by virtue of that representation, necessarily represent any constituent or affiliated organization, such as a parent or subsidiary. See Rule 1.13(a).

Thus, the lawyer for an organization is not barred from accepting representation adverse to an affiliate in an unrelated matter, unless the circumstances are such that the affiliate should also be considered a client of the lawyer, there is an understanding between the lawyer and the organizational client that the lawyer will avoid representation adverse to the client's affiliates, or the lawyer's obligations to either the organizational client or the new client are likely to limit materially the lawyer's representation of the other client.

[35] A lawyer for a corporation who is also a member of its board of directors (or a lawyer for another type of organization who has corresponding fiduciary duties to it) should determine whether the responsibilities of the two roles may conflict. The lawyer may be called on to advise the corporation in matters involving actions of the directors. Consideration should be given to the frequency with which such situations may arise, the potential intensity of the conflict, the effect of the lawyer's resignation from the board and the possibility of the corporation's obtaining legal advice from another lawyer in such situations. If there is material risk that the dual role will compromise the lawyer's independence of professional judgment, the lawyer should not serve as a director or should cease to act as the corporation's lawyer when conflicts of interest arise. The lawyer should advise the other members of the board that in some circumstances matters discussed at board meetings while the lawyer is present in the capacity of director might not be protected by the lawyer-client privilege and that conflict of interest considerations might require the lawyer's recusal as a director or might require the lawyer and the lawyer's firm to decline representation of the corporation in a matter.

Insurance Defense

[36] In State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company v. Federal Insurance Company (1999) 72 Cal.App.4th 1422 [86 Cal.Rptr.2d 20], the court held that the predecessor to paragraph (a) was violated when a lawyer, retained by an insurer to defend one suit against an insured, filed a direct action against the same insurer in an unrelated action without securing the insurer's consent. Notwithstanding State Farm, paragraph (a) does not apply to the relationship between an insurer and a lawyer when, in each matter, the insurer's interest is only as an indemnity provider and not as a direct party to the action.

[37] Paragraph (a)(2) is not intended to modify the tripartite relationship among a lawyer, an insurer, and an insured that is created when the insurer appoints the lawyer to represent the insured under the contract between the insurer and the insured. Although the lawyer's appointment by the insurer makes the insurer and the insured the lawyer's joint clients in the matter, the appointment does not by itself create a significant risk that the representation of the insured, insurer, or both will be materially limited under paragraph (a)(2).

Public Service

[38] For special rules governing membership in a legal service organization, see Rule 6.3; for participation in law related activities affecting client interests, see Rule 6.4; and for work in conjunction with certain limited legal services programs, see Rule 6.5.

Rule 1.7 Conflict of Interest: Current Clients
(Commission's Proposed Rule – Clean Version)

- (a) Except as provided in paragraph (b), a lawyer shall not represent a client if the representation involves a concurrent conflict of interest. A concurrent conflict of interest exists if:
- (1) the representation of one client will be directly adverse to another client; or
 - (2) there is a significant risk that the representation of one or more clients will be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to another client, a former client or a third person or by a personal interest of the lawyer.
- (b) Notwithstanding the existence of a concurrent conflict of interest under paragraph (a), a lawyer may represent a client if:
- (1) the lawyer reasonably believes that the lawyer will be able to provide competent and diligent representation to each affected client;
 - (2) the representation is not prohibited by law;
 - (3) the representation does not involve the assertion of a claim by one client against another client represented by the lawyer in the same litigation or other proceeding before a tribunal; and
 - (4) each affected client gives informed written consent.

COMMENT

General Principles

[1] Undivided Loyalty and independent professional judgment are essential elements in the lawyer's relationship to a client. Concurrent conflicts of interest can arise from the lawyer's responsibilities to another client, a former client or a third person or from the lawyer's own interests. See Comments [6]-[7], [8], [9], [10]-[12]. This Rule and the other conflict rules (1.8 through 1.8.11, 1.9, 1.10, 1.11, 1.18) seek to protect a lawyer's ability to carry out the lawyer's basic fiduciary duties to each client. In addition to the duty of undivided loyalty and the duty to exercise independent professional judgment, the conflict rules are also concerned with (1) the duty to maintain confidential client information; (2) the duty to disclose to the client all material information and significant developments; and (3) the duty to represent the client competently and diligently within the bounds of the law. See Rule 1.2(a) regarding the allocation of authority between lawyer and client. For specific rules regarding certain concurrent conflicts of interest, see Rules 1.8.1 through 1.8.11. For former client conflicts of interest, see Rule 1.9. For conflicts of interest involving prospective clients, see Rule 1.18. For definitions of "informed consent" and "informed written consent," see Rule 1.0.1(e) and (e-1), and Comments [6] and [7] to that Rule.

[2] Resolution of a conflict of interest under this Rule requires the lawyer to: (1) clearly identify the client or clients; (2) determine the scope of each relevant representation of a client or proposed representation of a client; (3) determine whether a conflict of interest exists; (4) decide whether the representation may be undertaken despite the existence of a conflict, i.e., whether lawyer has the ability to obtain the client's consent to the conflict; and

(5) if so, consult with the clients affected under paragraph (a) and obtain their informed written consent. The clients affected under paragraph (a) include both of the clients referred to in paragraph (a)(1) and the one or more clients whose representation might be materially limited under paragraph (a)(2).

[3] A conflict of interest may exist before representation is undertaken, in which event the representation must be declined, unless the lawyer obtains the informed written consent of each client under the conditions of paragraph (b). To determine whether a conflict of interest exists, a lawyer should adopt reasonable procedures, appropriate for the size and type of firm and practice, to determine in both litigation and non-litigation matters the persons and issues involved. See also Comment to Rule 5.1. Ignorance caused by a failure to institute such procedures will not excuse a lawyer's violation of this Rule. Whether a lawyer-client relationship exists or, having once been established, is continuing, is beyond the scope of these Rules.

[4] If a conflict arises after representation has been undertaken, the lawyer ordinarily must withdraw from the representation, unless the lawyer has obtained the informed written consent of the client under the conditions of paragraph (b). See Rule 1.16. Where more than one client is involved, whether the lawyer may continue to represent any of the clients is determined both by the lawyer's ability to comply with duties owed to a client who becomes a former client and by the lawyer's ability to represent adequately the remaining client or clients, given the lawyer's duties to the former client. See Rule 1.9. See also Comment [29].

[5] [RESERVED]

Paragraph (a)(1): Identifying Conflicts of Interest: Directly Adverse

[6] The duty of undivided loyalty to a current client prohibits undertaking representation directly adverse to that client without that client's informed written consent. Thus, absent consent, a lawyer may not act as an advocate

in one matter against a person the lawyer represents in some other matter, even when the matters are wholly unrelated. The client as to whom the representation is directly adverse is likely to feel betrayed, and the resulting damage to the lawyer-client relationship is likely to impair the lawyer's ability to represent the client effectively. In addition, the client on whose behalf the adverse representation is undertaken reasonably may fear that the lawyer will pursue that client's case less effectively out of deference to the other client, i.e., that the representation may be materially limited by the lawyer's interest in retaining the current client. Thus, a directly adverse conflict arises, for example, when a lawyer accepts representation of a client that is directly adverse to another client the lawyer currently represents in another matter. See Flatt v. Superior Court (1994) 9 Cal.4th 275 [36 Cal.Rptr.2d 537]. Similarly, a directly adverse conflict under paragraph (a)(1) occurs when a lawyer, while representing a client, accepts in another matter the representation of a person or organization who, in the first matter, is directly adverse to the lawyer's client. Similarly, direct adversity can arise when a lawyer cross-examines a non-party witness who is the lawyer's client in another matter, if the examination is likely to harm or embarrass the witness. On the other hand, simultaneous representation in unrelated matters of clients whose interests are only economically adverse, such as representation of competing economic enterprises in unrelated litigation, does not ordinarily constitute a conflict of interest and thus may not require consent of the respective clients. Other instances that ordinarily would not constitute direct adversity include: (1) a representation adverse to a non-client where another client of the lawyer is interested in the financial welfare or the profitability of the non-client, as might occur, for example, if a client is the landlord of, or a lender to, the non-client; (2) working for an outcome in litigation that would establish precedent economically harmful to another current client who is not a party to the litigation; (3) representing two clients who have a dispute with one another if the lawyer's work for each client concerns matters other than the dispute; (4) representing clients having antagonistic positions on the same legal question that has arisen in different cases, unless doing so would interfere with the lawyer's ability to represent either client competently, as might occur, e.g., if the lawyer were advocating inconsistent positions in front of the same tribunal. See Comments [14]-[17A].

[7] Directly adverse conflicts can also arise in transactional matters. For example, if a lawyer is asked to represent the seller of a business in negotiations with a buyer represented by the lawyer, not in the same transaction but in another, unrelated matter, the lawyer could not undertake the representation without the informed written consent of each client. Paragraph (a)(1) applies even if the parties to the transaction have a common interest or contemplate working cooperatively toward a common goal.

[7A] If a lawyer proposes to represent two or more parties on the same side of a negotiation or lawsuit, the situation is analyzed under paragraph (a)(2), not paragraph (a)(1). See Comments [29]-[33].

Paragraph (a)(2): Identifying Conflicts of Interest: Material Limitation

[7B] Conflicts of interest that create a significant risk that a lawyer's representation of one or more clients will be materially limited as provided in paragraph (a)(2) can arise from: (1) duties owed a former client or a third person (see Comment [9]); (2) a lawyer's personal interests (see Comments [10]-[12]); or (3) a lawyer's joint representation of two or more clients in the same matter (see Comments [29]-[33]).

[8] Even where there is no direct adversity, a conflict of interest exists if there is a significant risk that a lawyer's ability to consider, recommend or carry out an appropriate course of action for the client will be materially limited as a result of the lawyer's other responsibilities or interests. For example, a lawyer asked to represent two or more clients in the same matter, such as several individuals seeking to form a joint venture, is likely to be materially limited in the lawyer's ability to recommend or advocate all possible positions that each might take because of the lawyer's duty of loyalty to the other clients. The conflict in effect forecloses alternatives that would otherwise be available to each of the clients. The mere possibility of subsequent harm does not itself require disclosure and informed written consent. The critical questions are the likelihood that a difference in interests exists or will eventuate and, if it does, whether it will materially interfere with the lawyer's independent professional judgment in considering alternatives or foreclose courses of actions that reasonably should be pursued on behalf of each client. See Comments [29]-[33]. Depending on the circumstances, various relationships a lawyer has may likewise create a significant risk that the lawyer's representation will be materially limited, for example, where (1) the lawyer has a legal, business, financial, professional, or personal relationship with a party or witness in the same matter; (2) the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that: (i) the lawyer previously had a legal, business, financial, professional, or personal relationship with a party or witness in the same matter, and (ii) the previous relationship would substantially affect the lawyer's representation; (3) the lawyer has or had a legal, business, financial, professional, or personal relationship with another person or entity and the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that either the relationship or the person or entity would be affected substantially by resolution of the matter; (4) a lawyer or law firm representing a party or witness in the matter has a lawyer-client relationship with the lawyer, the lawyer's law firm, or another lawyer in the lawyer's law firm; and (5) a lawyer representing a party or witness in the matter is a spouse, parent or sibling of the lawyer, or has an intimate personal relationship with the lawyer or with another lawyer in the lawyer's law firm.

Lawyer's Responsibilities to Former Clients and Other Third Persons

[9] A lawyer's duties of undivided loyalty and independence of professional judgment may be materially limited by responsibilities to former clients under Rule 1.9 or by the lawyer's responsibilities to other persons, such as fiduciary duties arising from a lawyer's service as a trustee, executor or corporate director. See, e.g., William H. Raley Co., Inc. v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal.App.3d 1042 [197 Cal.Rptr. 232].

Personal Interest Conflicts

[10] The lawyer's own interests should not be permitted to have an adverse effect on the representation of a client. For example, if the probity of a lawyer's own conduct in a transaction is in serious question, it may be difficult or impossible for the lawyer to give the client detached advice. A lawyer's legal, business, professional or financial interest in the subject matter of the representation might also give rise to a conflict under paragraph (a)(2), where, for example, (1) the lawyer is a party to a contract being litigated; (2) the lawyer represents a client in litigation with a corporation in which the lawyer is a shareholder; or (3) the lawyer represents a landlord in lease negotiations with a professional organization of which the lawyer is a member. Similarly, when a lawyer has discussions concerning possible employment with an opponent of the lawyer's client, or with a law firm representing the opponent, such discussions could materially limit the lawyer's representation of the client. In addition, a lawyer may not allow related business interests to affect representation, for example, by referring clients to an enterprise in which the lawyer has an undisclosed financial interest. See Rules 1.8.1 through 1.8.11 for specific rules pertaining to a number of personal interest conflicts, including business transactions with clients. See also Rule 3.7 concerning a lawyer as witness and Rule 1.10 (personal interest conflicts under Rule 1.7 ordinarily are not imputed to other lawyers in a law firm).

[11] When lawyers representing different clients in the same matter or in substantially related matters are closely related by blood or marriage, or when there is an intimate personal relationship between the lawyers, there may be a significant risk that client confidences will be revealed and that the lawyer's family relationship will interfere with both loyalty and independent professional judgment. As a result, each client is entitled to know of the existence and implications of the relationship between the lawyers before the lawyer agrees to undertake the representation. Thus, a lawyer who is related to another lawyer, e.g., as parent, child, sibling or spouse, or who is in an intimate personal relationship with another lawyer, ordinarily may not represent a client in a matter where that lawyer is representing another party, unless each client gives informed written consent. The prohibition on representation arising from a close family relationship is personal and ordinarily is not imputed to members of firms with whom the lawyers are associated. See Rule 1.10.

[12] A lawyer is prohibited from engaging in sexual relationships with a client unless the sexual relationship predates the formation of the lawyer-client relationship. See Rule 1.8.10.

Interest of Person Paying for a Lawyer's Service

[13] A lawyer may be paid from a source other than the client, including a co-client, if the client gives informed written consent and the arrangement does not compromise the lawyer's duty of loyalty or independent judgment to the client. See Rule 1.8.6. If acceptance of the payment from any other source presents a significant risk that the lawyer's representation of the client will be materially limited by the lawyer's own interest in accommodating the person paying the lawyer's fee or by the lawyer's responsibilities to a payor who is also a co-client, then the lawyer must comply with the requirements of paragraph (b) before accepting the representation, including determining whether the lawyer has the ability to obtain the client's consent to the representation and, if so, whether the client has adequate information about the material risks of the representation. See Comments [14]-[17A].

Prohibited Representations

[14] Ordinarily, clients may consent to representation notwithstanding a conflict. However, as indicated in paragraph (b), in some situations a lawyer cannot properly ask for such agreement or provide representation on the basis of the client's consent. When the lawyer is representing more than one client, the question of consent must be resolved as to each client.

[15] A lawyer's ability to obtain consent is typically determined by considering whether the interests of the clients will be adequately protected if the clients are permitted to give their informed written consent to representation burdened by a conflict of interest. Thus, under paragraph (b)(1), representation is prohibited if in the circumstances the lawyer cannot reasonably conclude that the lawyer will be able to provide competent and diligent representation. See Rule 1.1.

[16] Paragraph (b)(2) describes conflicts to which a client cannot consent because the representation is prohibited by applicable law. For example, certain representations by a former government lawyer are also prohibited, despite the informed consent of the former client. See, e.g., Business and Professions Code section 6131.

[17] Paragraph (b)(3) describes conflicts for which client consent cannot be obtained because of the interests of the legal system in vigorous development of each client's position when the clients are aligned directly against each other in the same litigation or other proceeding before a tribunal. Whether clients are aligned directly against each other within the meaning of this paragraph requires examination of the context of the proceeding. See, e.g., Woods v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal.App.3d 931 [107 Cal.Rptr. 185] (the lawyer of a family-owned business organization should not represent one owner against the other in a marital dissolution action); Klemm v. Superior Court (1977) 75 Cal.App.3d 893, 898 [142 Cal.Rptr. 509] (a lawyer may not represent parties at hearing or trial when those parties' interests in the matter are in actual conflict). Although paragraph (b)(3) does not preclude a lawyer's multiple representation of adverse parties to a mediation (because mediation is not a proceeding before a "tribunal" under Rule 1.0.1(m)), such representation may be precluded by paragraph (b)(1).

[17A] Under paragraph (b)(4), a lawyer must obtain the informed written consent of each affected client before accepting or continuing a representation that is prohibited under paragraph (a). If the lawyer cannot make the disclosure requisite to obtaining informed written consent, (see Rules 1.0.1(e) and 1.0.1(e-1)), without violating the lawyer's duty of confidentiality, then the lawyer may not accept or continue the representation for which the disclosure would be required. See Rule 1.6 and Business and Professions Code section 6068(e). A lawyer might also be prevented from making a required disclosure because of a duty of confidentiality to former, current or potential clients, because of other fiduciary relationships such as service on a board of directors, or because of contractual or court-ordered restrictions. In addition, effective client consent cannot be obtained when the person who grants consent lacks capacity or authority. See Civil Code section 38; and see Rule 1.14 regarding clients with diminished capacity.

Disclosure and Informed Written Consent

[18] Informed written consent requires that the lawyer communicate in writing to each affected client the relevant circumstances and the actual and reasonably foreseeable adverse consequences of the conflict on the client's interests and the lawyer's representation and that the client thereafter gives his or her consent in writing. See Rules 1.0.1(e) (informed consent) and 1.0.1(e-1) (informed written consent) and Comments [6] and [7] to that Rule. The information required depends on the nature of the conflict and the nature of the risks involved. When representation of multiple clients in a single matter is undertaken, the information must include the implications of the joint representation, including possible effects on loyalty, confidentiality and the lawyer-client privilege and the advantages and risks involved. See Comment [30] (effect of joint representation on confidentiality).

[19] Under some circumstances it may be impossible to make the disclosure necessary to obtain consent. See Comments [14]-[17A].

[20] Paragraph (b) requires the lawyer to obtain the informed consent of the client in writing. See Rule 1.0.1(n) (writing includes electronic transmission). The requirement of a written disclosure, (see Comment [18]), does not supplant the need in most cases for the lawyer to talk with the client, to explain the risks and advantages, if any, of representation burdened with a conflict of interest, as well as reasonably available alternatives, and to afford the client a reasonable opportunity to consider the risks and alternatives and to raise questions and concerns. Rather, the writing is required in order to impress upon clients the seriousness of the decision the client is being asked to make and to avoid disputes or ambiguities that might later occur in the absence of a writing.

Duration of Consent

[20A] A disclosure and an informed written consent are sufficient for purposes of this Rule only for so long as the relevant facts and circumstances remain unchanged. With any material change, the lawyer may not continue the representation without making a new written disclosure to each affected client and obtaining a new written consent.

Revoking Consent

[21] A client who has given consent to a conflict may revoke the consent and, like any other client, may terminate the lawyer's representation of that client at any time. Whether revoking consent to the client's own representation precludes the lawyer from continuing to represent other clients depends on the circumstances, including the nature of the conflict, whether the client revoked consent because of a material change in circumstances, the reasonable expectations of the other client, whether material detriment to the other clients or the lawyer would result, and the lawyer's confidentiality obligations to the client revoking consent.

Consent to Future Conflict

[22] Lawyers may ask clients to give advance consent to conflicts that might arise in the future, but a client's consent must be "informed" to comply with this Rule. A lawyer would have a conflict of interest in accepting or continuing a representation under a consent that does not comply with this Rule. Determining whether a client's advance consent is "informed," and thus complies with this Rule, is a fact-specific inquiry that will depend first on the factors discussed in Comments [18]-[20] (informed written consent). However, an advance consent can comply with this Rule even where the lawyer cannot provide all the information and explanation Comments [18]-[20] ordinarily requires. A lawyer's disclosure to a client must include: (i) a disclosure to the extent known of facts and reasonably foreseeable consequences; and (ii) an explanation that the lawyer is requesting the client to consent to a possible future conflict that would involve future facts and circumstances that to a degree cannot be known when the consent is requested. The lawyer also must disclose to the client whether the consent permits the lawyer to be adverse to the client on any matter in the future, whether the consent permits the lawyer to be adverse to the client in the current or in future litigation, and whether there will be any limits on the scope of the consent. Whether an advance consent complies with this Rule ordinarily also can depend on factors such as the following: (1) the comprehensiveness of the lawyer's explanation of the types of future conflicts that might arise and of the actual and reasonably foreseeable adverse consequences to the client; (2) the client's degree of experience as a user of the legal services, including experience with the type of legal services involved in the current representation; (3) whether the client has consented to the use of an adequate ethics screen and whether the screen was timely and effectively instituted and fully maintained; (4) whether before giving consent the client either was represented by an independent lawyer of the client's choice, or was advised in writing by the lawyer to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client's choice and was given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice; (5) whether the consent is limited to future conflicts unrelated to the subject of the representation; and (6) the client's ability to understand the nature and extent of the advance consent. A client's ability to understand the nature and extent of the advance consent might depend on factors such as the client's education, language skills, and the client's familiarity with the particular type of conflict that is the subject of the consent. An advance consent normally will not comply with this Rule if it is so general and open-ended that it would be unlikely that the client understood the potential adverse consequences of granting consent. However, depending upon the extent to which the other enumerated factors set forth above are present, even a general and open-ended advance consent can be in compliance when: the consent was given by an experienced user of the type of legal services involved; and the client was independently represented regarding the consent or was advised in writing by the lawyer to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client's choice and was given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice. In any case, advance consent will not be in compliance in the circumstances described in Comments [14]-[17A] (prohibited representations). See Rule 1.0.1(e) (informed consent) and 1.0.1 (e-1) (informed written consent). A lawyer who obtains from a client an advance consent that complies with this Rule will have all the duties of a lawyer to that client except as expressly limited by the consent. A lawyer cannot obtain an advance consent to incompetent representation. See Rule 1.8.8.

Conflicts in Litigation

[23] Paragraph (b)(3) prohibits representation of opposing parties in the same litigation, regardless of the clients' consent. On the other hand, simultaneous representation of parties whose interests in litigation may conflict, such as co-plaintiffs or co-defendants, is governed by paragraph (a)(2). A conflict may exist by reason of substantial discrepancy in the parties' testimony, incompatibility in positions in relation to an opposing party or the fact that there are substantially different possibilities of settlement of the claims or liabilities in question. Such conflicts can arise in criminal cases as well as civil. The potential for conflict of interest in representing multiple defendants in a criminal case is so grave that ordinarily a lawyer should decline to represent more than one codefendant. On the other hand, joint representation of persons having similar interests in civil litigation is permitted if the requirements of paragraph (b) are satisfied.

[24] Ordinarily a lawyer may take inconsistent legal positions in different tribunals at different times on behalf of different clients. The mere fact that advocating a legal position on behalf of one client might create precedent adverse to the interests of a client represented by the lawyer in an unrelated matter does not create a conflict of interest. A conflict of interest exists, however, if there is a significant risk that a lawyer's action on behalf of one client will materially limit the lawyer's effectiveness in representing another client in a different case; for example, when a decision favoring one client will create a precedent likely to seriously weaken the position taken on behalf of the other client. Factors relevant in determining whether the clients need to be informed of the risk include: where the cases are pending, whether the issue is substantive or procedural, the temporal relationship between the matters, the significance of the issue to the immediate and long-term interests of the clients involved and the clients' reasonable expectations in retaining the lawyer. If there is significant risk of material limitation, then absent informed written consent of the affected clients, the lawyer must refuse one of the representations or withdraw from one or both matters to the extent permitted by Rule 1.16.

[24A] If permission from a tribunal to terminate a representation is denied, the lawyer is obligated to continue the representation notwithstanding the provisions of this Rule. See Rule 1.16(c).

[25] This Rule applies to a lawyer's representation of named class representatives in a class action, whether or not the class has been certified. For purposes of this Rule, an unnamed member of a plaintiff or a defendant class is not, by reason of that status, a client of a lawyer who represents or seeks to represent the class. Thus, the lawyer does not typically need to get the consent of an unnamed class member before representing a client who is adverse to that person in an unrelated matter. Similarly, a lawyer seeking to represent an opponent in a class action does not typically need the consent of an unnamed member of the class whom the lawyer represents in an unrelated matter. A lawyer representing a class or proposed class may owe civil duties to unnamed class members, and this Comment is not intended to alter those civil duties in any respect.

Nonlitigation Conflicts

[26] Conflicts of interest under paragraphs (a)(1) and (a)(2) arise in contexts other than litigation. For a discussion of directly adverse conflicts in transactional matters that are prohibited by paragraph (a)(1), see Comment [7]. Relevant factors in determining whether there is significant risk for material limitation as provided in paragraph (a)(2) include the duration and intimacy of the lawyer's relationship with the client or clients involved, the functions being performed by the lawyer, the likelihood that disagreements will arise and the likely prejudice to the client from the conflict. The question is often one of proximity and degree. See Comment [8].

[27] For example, conflict questions may arise in estate planning and estate administration. A lawyer may be called upon to prepare wills for several family members, such as husband and wife, and, depending upon the circumstances, a conflict of interest may be present.

[28] [RESERVED]

Special Considerations in Joint Representation

[29] When a lawyer represents multiple clients in a single matter, the lawyer's duties to one of the clients can interfere with the performance of the lawyer's duties to the other clients. In considering whether to represent multiple clients in the same matter, a lawyer should be mindful that if the joint representation fails because the potentially adverse interests cannot be reconciled, the result can be additional cost, embarrassment and recrimination. Ordinarily, the lawyer will be forced to withdraw from representing all of the clients if the joint representation fails. In some situations, the risk of failure is so great that multiple representation is plainly impossible. For example, a lawyer cannot undertake joint representation of clients where contentious litigation or negotiations between them are imminent or contemplated. Generally, if the relationship between the parties has already assumed antagonism, the possibility that the clients' interests can be adequately served by joint representation is not likely. Other relevant factors include whether the lawyer subsequently will represent both parties on a continuing basis and whether the situation involves creating or terminating a relationship between the parties.

[29A] Examples of conflicts that arise under paragraph (a)(2) from representing multiple clients in the same matter and that will likely preclude a lawyer from accepting or continuing a joint representation unless the lawyer complies with paragraph (b) include the following situations: (1) the lawyer receives conflicting instructions from the clients and the lawyer cannot follow one client's instructions without violating another client's instruction; (2) the clients have inconsistent interests or objectives so that it becomes impossible for the lawyer to advance one client's interests or objectives without detrimentally affecting another client's interests or objectives; (3) the clients have antagonistic positions and the lawyer is obligated to advise each client about how to advance that client's position relative to the other's position; (4) the clients have inconsistent expectations of confidentiality because one client expects the lawyer to keep secret information that is material to the matter; (5) the lawyer has a preexisting relationship with one client that affects the lawyer's independent professional judgment on behalf of the other client(s); (6) the clients make inconsistent demands for the original file.

[30] A particularly important factor in determining the appropriateness of joint representation is the effect on lawyer-client confidentiality and the lawyer-client privilege. With regard to the lawyer-client privilege, although each client's communications with the lawyer are protected as to third persons, as between jointly represented clients, the privilege does not attach. Hence, it must be assumed that if litigation results between the joint clients, the privilege will not protect any such communications. See Evidence Code sections 952 and 962. In addition, because of the lawyer's obligations under Rule 1.4, the lawyer must inform each jointly represented client in writing of that fact and also that the client should normally expect that his or her communications with the lawyer will be shared with other jointly-represented clients. See also Comments [18]-[20].

[31] [RESERVED]

[32] When seeking to establish or adjust a relationship between clients, the lawyer should make clear that the lawyer's role is not that of partisanship normally expected in other circumstances and, thus, that the clients may be required to assume greater responsibility for decisions than when each client is separately represented. Any limitations on the scope of the representation made necessary as a result of the joint representation should be fully explained to the clients at the outset of the representation. See Rule 1.2(c).

[33] Subject to the above limitations, each client in the joint representation has the right to the lawyer's undivided loyalty and the protection of Rule 1.9 concerning the obligations to a former client. The client also has the right to discharge the lawyer as stated in Rule 1.16.

Organizational Clients

[34] A lawyer who represents a corporation or other organization does not, by virtue of that representation, necessarily represent any constituent or affiliated organization, such as a parent or subsidiary. See Rule 1.13(a). Thus, the lawyer for an organization is not barred from accepting representation adverse to an affiliate in an unrelated matter, unless the circumstances are such that the affiliate should also be considered a client of the lawyer, there is an understanding between the lawyer and the organizational client that the lawyer will avoid representation adverse to the client's affiliates, or the lawyer's obligations to either the organizational client or the new client are likely to limit materially the lawyer's representation of the other client.

[35] A lawyer for a corporation who is also a member of its board of directors (or a lawyer for another type of organization who has corresponding fiduciary duties to it) should determine whether the responsibilities of the two roles may conflict. The lawyer may be called on to advise the corporation in matters involving actions of the directors. Consideration should be given to the frequency with which such situations may arise, the potential intensity of the conflict, the effect of the lawyer's resignation from the board and the possibility of the corporation's obtaining legal advice from another lawyer in such situations. If there is material risk that the dual role will compromise the lawyer's independence of professional judgment, the lawyer should not serve as a director or should cease to act as the corporation's lawyer when conflicts of interest arise. The lawyer should advise the other members of the board that in some circumstances matters discussed at board meetings while the lawyer is present in the capacity of director might not be protected by the lawyer-client privilege and that conflict of interest considerations might require the lawyer's recusal as a director or might require the lawyer and the lawyer's firm to decline representation of the corporation in a matter.

Insurance Defense

[36] In State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company v. Federal Insurance Company (1999) 72 Cal.App.4th 1422 [86 Cal.Rptr.2d 20], the court held that the predecessor to paragraph (a) was violated when a lawyer, retained by an insurer to defend one suit against an insured, filed a direct action against the same insurer in an unrelated action without securing the insurer's consent. Notwithstanding State Farm, paragraph (a) does not apply to the relationship between an insurer and a lawyer when, in each matter, the insurer's interest is only as an indemnity provider and not as a direct party to the action.

[37] Paragraph (a)(2) is not intended to modify the tripartite relationship among a lawyer, an insurer, and an insured that is created when the insurer appoints the lawyer to represent the insured under the contract between the insurer and the insured. Although the lawyer's appointment by the insurer makes the insurer and the insured the lawyer's joint clients in the matter, the appointment does not by itself create a significant risk that the representation of the insured, insurer, or both will be materially limited under paragraph (a)(2).

Public Service

[38] For special rules governing membership in a legal service organization, see Rule 6.3; for participation in law related activities affecting client interests, see Rule 6.4; and for work in conjunction with certain limited legal services programs, see Rule 6.5.

Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interests: Current Clients.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 8 Agree = 1
Disagree = 1
Modify = 4
NI = 2

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
1	Alex, Glenn C.	M	No	Comment [29A]	Governmental attorneys employed by one public agency, are sometimes asked or expected by their employer to provide advice, often transactional or other non-litigation advice, on a long-term, or continuing basis to one or more other , especially small, agencies that lack or cannot afford their own counsel—a city and a port district or a redevelopment agency, a county and a resource conservation district, two or more different boards that may have overlapping subject or geographical jurisdiction. In these situations, potential or actual conflicts of interest may arise at any time, at the very least risking material limitation on the scope of the representation to one entity or the other. The conflict issues are not always foreseeable before they arise or before one entity or the other has confided in the attorney. Under the Rule, an attorney may sometimes proceed, but only upon obtaining the informed consent of both entities. Yet an “informed” consent by the two entities in advance, pertaining to a contemplated, general course of conduct for the indefinite future, is almost a contradiction, and difficult to invent. While the draft Comments do mention conflicting instructions	The Commission recommends no change to Rule 1.7 in response this comment. The Rules generally apply to governmental lawyers as they do to all other lawyers. See People ex rel. Deukmejian v. Brown (1981) 29 Cal.3d 150. This is true both in general and with respect to the challenging topic of a client's advance consent to a future conflict of interest (see proposed Comment [22], which has been the subject of numerous comments to the Commission). Even if otherwise warranted, the Commission does not believe it is possible to draft an exception to address this specific concern that reliably could cover the wide variety of governmental relationships and representations. Any exception should come within a specific factual setting, either by the consent of the clients involved or by a court ruling. Also, the potential problem can arise outside of the governmental context, for example, where a client directs one of its lawyers to provide legal advice to a joint venture in which the client is involved.

¹ A = AGREE with proposed Rule D = DISAGREE with proposed Rule M = AGREE ONLY IF MODIFIED NI = NOT INDICATED

Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interests: Current Clients.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 8 Agree = 1
Disagree = 1
Modify = 4
NI = 2

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					and inconsistent interests (see draft Comment [29A],² for example), they do not adequately address potential conflicts that can arise at any time during the long-term assignment of a public attorney to also provide advice to a second, non-employing entity. As a practical matter, to allow the provision of adequate legal services to small public agencies, I suggest a limited exception to the client-consent requirement, allowing the public attorney to inform the two agencies in writing generally about the types of conflicts that could arise. The Rule could also specify that it is not meant to apply to non-litigation representation of public agencies.	This suggestion apparently is intended to permit governmental lawyers to accept conflicting representations by providing information that falls short of the standard needed to obtain a client's informed consent (as defined in Rule 1.0.1(e)). The Commission does not agree that this would be appropriate in any situation. There are two additional problems with this proposal: (1) there does not seem to be any workable definition of a "small public agency" and (2) it is not in the interest of governmental lawyers or their clients to suggest through a dilution of standards that governmental lawyers are in any sense secondary to other lawyers. The Commission believes that conflicts of interest are no less important in non-litigation situations as they can involve a client's most important values and interests and can lead to or be intertwined with litigation.

² Although the commenter referred to Comment [29], the specific comment referenced is draft Comment [29A].

Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interests: Current Clients.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 8 Agree = 1
Disagree = 1
Modify = 4
NI = 2

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
2	COPRAC	A	Yes		We fully support the rule as drafted as a significant improvement of the prior draft and over the current Rule 3-310. Adopting a rule that is fundamentally consistent with the ABA Model Rule will benefit firms and practitioners who are dealing with conflicts of interest across jurisdictions by providing uniformity. We understand the concerns of the dissent, but do not agree that the proposed rule will reduce client protection. We believe the key terminology in the rule, along with the extensive comments, are adequately explained to enable the practitioner to understand and apply the rule.	No response required.
3	Hazard, Geoffrey, Deborah Rhode & Richard Zitrin (on behalf of law professors)	M	Yes		We commend the Commission for adopting the ABA version of Model Rule 1.7 after much back and forth debate. This letter does not address the issue of whether Comment [22] of Rule 1.7, on advanced waivers, is or is not appropriate. The June 2008 Letter from Ethics Professors addressed this issue, and opposed the adoption of the Comment paragraph, then enumerated ¶ 33. The comments are extensive and complex. While the Commission's history shows that earlier comments came about as the product	No response required. The Commission previously replied to the earlier comment letter and will not repeat its reply here, which the Commission believes remains correct. Also see the Responses to the SDCBA and to OCTC in this chart. The Commission believes the Comments provide much helpful guidance to lawyers and to courts and should be retained. The Comments are the product

Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interests: Current Clients.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 8 Agree = 1
Disagree = 1
Modify = 4
NI = 2

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					of much discussion and deliberation, the ultimate comments as revised were not as carefully vetted. Accordingly, we encourage the Board to carefully review these comments and re-refer to the Commission those comments that are unclear, overly dense, puzzling, or otherwise lacking. We believe more study of the verbiage of these comments, including some simplification, would be helpful to guide the average practitioner, and would ensure clarity and harmony between the rule and the comments.	of extensive drafting effort, including a careful review of the Model Rule Comments and of the countless changes in the Model Rule Comments in other jurisdictions. The Commission makes these recommendations only after consideration of public comment that itself led to numerous changes in the Comments.
4	MacNaughton, Richard		No	Comment generally	Unlike Los Angeles County, where there is the District Attorney and County Counsel, there is only one City Attorney for the City of Los Angeles. There are members of the City Council and other city officials (attached two articles and provided an example in his letter) who engage in questionable and illegal conduct. It strikes me that the City Attorney has an inherent conflict of interest. For example, the City Attorney has to provide legal advice to members of the City Council, and the City, and defend them both when sued. The City Attorney has a serious conflict of interest in investigating and/or prosecuting his own clients. If a City Council member is engaged in a fraud or wrongdoing, how does the City Attorney investigate the City Council	The Commission recognizes that city attorneys sometimes face challenging conflict of interest issues. See, e.g., Cal. State Bar Opn. 2001-156. However, the Commission is unable to see what Comment might be added to Rule 1.7 to provide additional guidance in this area. The Commission proposes no change as a result of this comment.

Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interests: Current Clients.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 8 Agree = 1
Disagree = 1
Modify = 4
NI = 2

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					member? That leaves the public with no one to protect their interests. It seems to me that the structure of the City Attorney's Office conflicts with the Rules of Professional Conduct, but the Rules do not address this conflict. I do not expect you to deal with any specifics of any case. I mention the examples to highlight the type of conflict that seems to be inherent in the City Attorney's Office. If my observation is correct, it seems that the State Bar should have some Comment in the new Rules.
5	Office of Chief Trial Counsel	D	Yes		1. OCTC believes this rule is an improvement from the original proposal, but still has significant concerns about the rule and especially its 38 Comments. It says that there are too many Comments and many are too long and incorporate other Proposed Rules and Comments, making this rule overly complicated and confusing. This rule is simple: an attorney shall not without informed written consent represent a client when to do so will involve a conflict of interest with another current client or the lawyer's personal interests (or other fiduciary duties). The Proposed Rule and its Comments, however, make complex this simple proposition. 2. The Proposed Rule's use of the term "directly adverse" is vague, ambiguous, and	1. The Commission respectfully disagrees that conflicts of interest are simple. It further believes that attempting to state conflicts principles as generalities would leave lawyers without guidance, which would leave lawyers and their clients less protected. 2. This comment provides a good example of the complexity of conflicts of interest. Removing

Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interests: Current Clients.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 8
Agree = 1
Disagree = 1
Modify = 4
NI = 2

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comments [6] & [7]	potentially too limiting and confusing. We believe that the term “directly adverse” will be subject to a great deal of interpretation and, therefore, litigation. The use of the modifier “directly” may pose problems for the lawyer trying to comply with the rule. Lawyers may not understand the distinction between an “adverse” as opposed to “directly adverse” interest and may, therefore, fail to seek the appropriate client consent. The use of the term “directly” may also pose problems for OCTC, the State Bar Court, and the Supreme Court as they attempt to evaluate possible violations on the Proposed Rule. Using the term “adverse” without the modifier “directly” may be clearer, less ambiguous and more appropriate. 3. OCTC recognizes that the Commission has tried to explain the term “directly adverse” in Comments [6] and [7]. However, those Comments may not provide adequate guidance in distinguishing the difference, if any, between “adverse” and “directly adverse” interests and may, instead, add to the problems with enforcement of the rule. If the word “directly” is stricken from the Proposed Rule, then Comments [6] and [7] should also be deleted.	“directly” as requested would cause paragraph (a) to apply to all degrees and kinds of adversity, including economic adversity. This would mean, as an example, that a lawyer would violate paragraph (a) by representing a client who is suing another client’s tenant and whose success might injure the economic interests of the other client. It is essential that the Rule not permit this interpretation. 3. The Commission agrees that that Comment [6] can be shortened and has edited it accordingly. It does not believe that material change to Comment [7] is possible without affecting its accuracy or utility.

Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interests: Current Clients.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 8 Agree = 1
Disagree = 1
Modify = 4
NI = 2

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comment [6]	4. Comment [6] defines an attorney's cross-examination of his or her own client, even if the client is not a party to the particular action, as directly adverse. OCTC understands that the cross-examination of one's own client is an example of an adverse situation, but, contrary to this Comment, it does not seem directly adverse where the cross-examination does not affect the client in the representation for which the client hired the attorney. If a client is not a party to the action, then one must examine the client's reasonable expectations, as well as the impact of such cross-examination on the client's interests and on the attorney's duty of loyalty and confidentiality to that client. Such analysis is necessary regardless of whether the modifier "directly" is included in the Proposed Rule.	4. The Commission disagrees. A lawyer's violation of the duty of loyalty does not depend on whether the lawyer's conduct affects the quality of the lawyer's representation of the client. The Commission has slightly revised Comment [6] to clarify this.
				Comment [6]	5. OCTC recommends striking the second sentence of Comment [6] because, if a client is adversely affected by an attorney's work on the matter, even if the client is not a party to the matter, it may still raise the issue of whether the attorney adhered to his or her duty of undivided loyalty and, if not, create a direct conflict of interest.	5. The Commission disagrees and has added a new second sentence to Comment [6] to clarify this.
				Comment [7]	6. OCTC recommends striking the modifier directly before adverse in Comment [7].	6. See the second paragraph of the RRC Response to the OCTC comments.

Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interests: Current Clients.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 8 Agree = 1
Disagree = 1
Modify = 4
NI = 2

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comment [8]	7. Comment [8] is too long and confusing. OCTC recommends striking sentences 2-4. 8. Sentence 5 is placing in a Comment an expanded version of the current version of 3-310(C). If the Commission wants to state that this rule is not intended to change the Current Rule, it should just state that. If it believes the language in the Comment is preferable to the language in the Proposed Rule, it should adopt the language in the Comment as the rule. It, however, should not attempt to do so by a Comment.	7. Sentences two - four are borrowed from the Model Rule Comment with some sharpening of language and are important in understanding the "material limitation" standard. However, the Commission has added additional language that makes the Comment excessively long, and it therefore has broken out the additional language as a separate Comment [8A]. 8. The Commission is not able to follow this comment and therefore has made no change on its account.
				Comment [9]	9. Comment [9] appears unnecessary in light of Proposed Rule 1.9 and the language in Proposed Rule 1.7(a)(2). If the Commission is concerned about a conflict of interest created by an attorney's other fiduciary duties (such as when he or she is acting as trustee, executor or corporate director), it should include in 1.7(a)(2) after the words "representation of one or more clients" words	9. The Commission believes that this topic is better handled by the Comment discussion and citation rather than in Rule format and has made no change.

Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interests: Current Clients.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 8 Agree = 1
Disagree = 1
Modify = 4
NI = 2

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comment [10]	such as “or the attorney’s duties as a fiduciary to others.” 10. Comment [10] is unnecessary in light of Proposed Rule 1.7(a)(2).	10. The Commission believes this is an important part of the needed explanation of “material limitation” and has made not change.
				Comment [12]	11. Comment [12] is unnecessary in light of Proposed Rule 1.8.10.	11. This is a cross-reference to Rule 1.8.10. The Commission believes that cross-references of this kind are important in such a long and complex body of rules and has not made the requested changed.
				Comment [13]	12. Comment [13] is unnecessary in light of Proposed Rule 1.8.6.	12. The Commission disagrees and has made no change. Rule 1.8.6 addresses the fact of payment by someone other than the client, and Rule 1.7 addresses the lawyer’s potential conflict. The two are complementary.
				Comment [34]	13. Comment [34] seems unnecessary in light of Proposed Rule 1.13(a).	13. The Commission disagrees and has made no change. The first sentence is a cross-reference to Rule 1.13, provided for guidance, and the balance is an explanation not found in Rule 1.13.
				Comment [38]	14. Comment [38] seems unnecessary in light of Proposed Rules 6.3 and 6.4.	14. This Comment provides helpful cross-references. The Commission has retained them as previously explained.

Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interests: Current Clients.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 8 Agree = 1
Disagree = 1
Modify = 4
NI = 2

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comments [14]-[17A]	15. Comments [14]-[17A] could be reduced and the language tightened.	15. These Comments provide important guidance on the Rule, and the Commission does not believe they can be materially shortened.
				Comments [23]-[25]	16. Comments [23]-[25] are too long and confusing.	16. See the preceding RRC Response.
				Comments [26]-[27]	17. Comments [26]-[27] are too long and confusing.	17. See the preceding RRC Response.
				Comments [29]-[29A]	18. Comments [29]-[29A] are too long and confusing.	18. See the preceding RRC Response.
				Comments [32]-[33]	19. Comments [32]-[33] are too long and confusing.	19. See the preceding RRC Response.
					Many of these Comments seem unnecessary or duplicative of other Comments. They should be reduced and tightened up.
				Comment [19]	20. Comment [19] is confusing and could send the wrong signal to attorneys that they may fail to make the disclosure necessary to obtain consent. If the attorney cannot make the disclosure necessary to obtain consent, the attorney should not represent the client. Further, if the drafters reduce and tighten the language in Comments [14]-[17A], then the reference to Comments [14]-[17A] in Comment [19] could be stricken.	20. This comment seems to be that the Commission should add a statement that a lawyer who cannot make the disclosure needed to obtain consent cannot accept the representation. The Commission believes the Rule and Comment already say this, and that there is not valid reason to lengthen the Comment by saying so again.

Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interests: Current Clients.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 8
Agree = 1
Disagree = 1
Modify = 4
NI = 2

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comment [20]	21. OCTC recommends striking the first sentence of Comment [20], but supports the rest of the Comment.	21. The Commission is unable to understand this comment, which might have intended to reference a different paragraph, and accordingly has made no change.
				Comment [1]	22. Comment [1] lists the duties the conflict rules are concerned with. It could be understood to suggest that, if one concern exists and another does not, there may or may not be a conflict. If should be amended to explain whether any one of these factors require finding a conflict. In addition, it cites several conflict rules, including 1.8. This could be confusing because technically there is no Rule 1.8, but several separate rules under the 1.8 category. (See Rule 1.8.1 through 1.8.11.)	22. The Commission disagrees. The sentence the commenter objects to refers to the “conflicts rules” in the plural, meaning that collectively the conflicts rules are concerned with the described duties. One would not have to violate every conflict rule to have a conflict of interest, so the Commission has made no change. The Commission agrees that the reference to Rule 1.8 is incorrect and has changed it.
				Comment [30]	23. OCTC believes Comment [30] is an improvement and concurs that Rule 1.4 requires the attorney to advise the clients of the potential adverse consequences of joint representation. However, Comment [30] does not specifically require this in order to have informed consent.	23. OCTC recommends that, in order for a lawyer to obtain informed consent to a joint representation that presents a potential conflict of interest, the lawyer be obligated to disclose the confidentiality issues discussed in Comment [30]. The Commission has not made this change because it is not prepared to say that this should be an absolute requirement in all such representations. It is satisfied, as stated in Comment [30] that this is a “particularly important factor”, and that consultation with the client is required under Rule 1.4.

Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interests: Current Clients.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 8 Agree = 1
Disagree = 1
Modify = 4
NI = 2

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comment [22]	24. Comment [22] is too long and confusing. There are no reported disciplinary cases on advanced waivers. Some civil courts have held that an attorney may have an advanced conflict waiver, but those have been in very limited situations. OCTC is concerned that clients, particularly unsophisticated clients, may not fully understand the ramifications of a conflict that has not yet arisen. Under these circumstances, an advanced waiver could easily be abused. Furthermore, even the attorney cannot fully understand or be able to adequately explain the ramifications of a potential conflict. For these reasons, OCTC recommends that advanced conflict waivers be prohibited.	24. Advanced waivers are permitted by several reported appellate decisions, and the Commission does not believe that it cannot outlaw them as requested by OCTC (nor does the Commission believe this would be appropriate). The Commission received extensive public comment for and against Comment [22] and believes that the current proposal provides important guidance to lawyers.
6	Paulsen, Bradley		No	1.7(a)(2) 1.7(b)(4)	The commenter has submitted a lengthy letter with attachments complaining about the conduct of certain plaintiffs' lawyers in the construction industry are violating the law and certain Rules of Professional Conduct in soliciting client homeowners. The commenter specifically refers to certain Rules of Professional Conduct, including proposed Rule 1.7(a)(2) and 1.7(b)(4), and asserts that the subject lawyers are in violation of these provisions. The commenter, however, does not suggest any revisions to the identified paragraphs of the Rule, instead noting that	The Commission has considered the commenter's submission and determined that his concerns lie not with the substance of the Rules, but rather with their enforcement, which is beyond the purview of the Commission's charge.

Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interests: Current Clients.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 8
Agree = 1
Disagree = 1
Modify = 4
NI = 2

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					"random review and/or inspections are needed from the State Bar on attorney actions and processes used in lawsuits and SB 800 claims."
7	San Diego County Bar Association	M	Yes	Comments [22] and [25] [formerly numbered Comments [33] and [34] in the initial public comment draft (3/1/08)]	Delete Comment [34]³ regarding class representation because it should be addressed in a separate rule on class representation. Delete fourth sentence from the end of Comment [33]⁴ regarding advance consent because it does not accurately state the status of current law.	The Commission carefully considered the possible adoption of a separate rule on class actions (although there is no such Model Rule) but voted against doing so, in part because the topic is too extensive and varied to be handled in a rule format, and in part because of the ability to address some class action issues in existing rules. Doing so provides valuable guidance within the context of rules that apply – or do not apply - in class actions. This has been done in Comment [34] (now numbered Comment [25]). Also see Rule 1.4, Comment [4], Rule 1.8.7, Comment [1], and Rule 7.2, Comment [4]. The Commission reconsidered the fourth sentence from the end of Comment [33] (now numbered Comment [22]) (stating: "An advance consent normally will comply with this Rule if it is limited to a particular type of conflict with which the client already is familiar.") and has concluded that it is an accurate statement of the law. Nevertheless, the ³ The subject comment was numbered Comment [34] in the initial public comment draft (3/1/08). It is now numbered Comment [25] in the current draft.

⁴ The subject comment was numbered Comment [33] in the initial public comment draft (3/1/08). It is now numbered Comment [22] in the current draft.

Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interests: Current Clients.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 8 Agree = 1
Disagree = 1
Modify = 4
NI = 2

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
						Commission has revised Comment [22] to clarify with even more precision the factors to be considered in determining whether an "open-ended" consent complies with the Rule.
8	Senator, Stuart N. (Alston & Baird LLP, Duane Morris LLP, Morgan Lewis & Bockius LLP, and Munger Tolles & Olson LLP)	M	Yes	ABA Comment [5]	The commenters urge the adoption of Comment 5 to the ABA Model Rule 1.7, regarding "thrust upon" or "unforeseeable" conflicts because Comment 5 would provide guidance for attorneys who are faced with conflicts that arise during the course of a representation and that were unforeseeable at the outset. Thrust upon conflicts often are discussed in the case of changing corporate ownership, e.g., the firm's client's adversary is acquired by another client of the firm during litigation, such as in the context of third-party discovery. The adoption of Comment 5 would provide some guidance as to how the firm should handle this and other thrust-upon, unforeseeable conflicts by providing that the attorney may have the option of withdrawing from one of the representations to avoid the conflict of interest. Because Comment 5 provides that the lawyer must maintain and protect the confidences of the client from whose representation the lawyer has withdrawn, there are no confidentiality issues. The comment essentially adopts the "thrust	The Commission disagrees with the commenters and did not add the additional requested Comment provision. The Commission concluded that there is such a large variety of thrust-upon conflict situations that might present themselves, likely including circumstances that the Commission cannot predict, that the development of rules in this area is better left to the developments of case law.

Rule 1.7 Conflicts of Interests: Current Clients. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 8 Agree = 1 Disagree = 1 Modify = 4 NI = 2
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					upon defense" established by case law from other jurisdictions. Under that case law, when a conflict arises through no fault of the attorney, the attorney may withdraw from one representation so as to convert the current client into a former client and avoid compromising the duty of loyalty. See Gould, Inc. v. Mitsui Min. & Smelting Co. , 738 F. Supp. 1121 (N.D. Ohio, 1999).

Rule 1.7: Conflict of Interest: Current Clients

STATE VARIATIONS

(The following is an excerpt from Regulation of Lawyers: Statutes and Standards (2010 Ed.)
by Steven Gillers, Roy D. Simon and Andrew M. Perlman.)

California: Rule 3-310 (Avoiding the Representation of Adverse Interests) requires written informed consent to the conflicts it describes. This rule incorporates in one place principles spread across several rules in the ABA Model Rules, including current and former client conflicts and conflicts arising from the payment of a fee by a nonclient.

Section 2860 of the California Civil Code, adopted after the important decision in San Diego Credit Union v. Cumis, 208 Cal. Rptr. 494 (Ct. App. 1984), seeks to reconcile the multiple interests at stake when an insurance company has a duty to defend an insured whose interests might not be congruent with those of the insurer. The first paragraph of §2860 provides as follows:

(a) If the provisions of a policy of insurance impose a duty to defend upon an insurer and a conflict of interest arises which creates a duty on the part of the insurer to provide independent counsel to the insured, the insurer shall provide independent counsel to represent the insured unless, at the time the insured is informed that a possible conflict may arise or does exist, the insured expressly waives, in writing, the right to independent counsel. An insurance contract may contain a provision which sets forth the method of selecting that counsel consistent with this section.

District of Columbia: Rule 1.7 differs significantly from the ABA Model Rule in its language but addresses the same current client conflicts. A unique provision is Rule 1.7(d), which in certain (but not all) instances allows a lawyer to continue with a conflicted representation when the conflict arises after the lawyer has begun work on a matter, but only if the conflict was “not reasonably foreseeable at the outset of a representation.”

Florida adds Rule 1.7(d) (identical to the 1983 version of ABA Model Rule 1.8(i), now Comment 11 to ABA Model Rule 1.7), which provides:

A lawyer related to another lawyer as parent, child, sibling, or spouse shall not represent a client in a representation directly adverse to a person who the lawyer knows is represented by the other lawyer except upon consent by the client after consultation regarding the relationship.

Florida also adds Rule 1.7(e), which requires a lawyer representing “an insured client at the expense of the insurer . . . to ascertain whether the lawyer will be representing both the insurer and the insured as clients, or only the insured, and to inform both the insured and the insurer regarding the scope of the representation.”

Georgia has a unique version of Rule 1.7 that draws heavily on the Restatement of the Law Governing Lawyers. Georgia Rule 1.7 provides, in full, as follows:

(a) A lawyer shall not represent or continue to represent a client if there is a significant risk that the lawyer’s own interests or the lawyer’s duties to another client, a former client, or a third person will materially and adversely affect the representation of the client, except as permitted in (b).

(b) If client consent is permissible a lawyer may represent a client notwithstanding a significant risk of material and adverse effect if each affected or former client consents, preferably in writing, to the representation after:

(1) consultation with the lawyer,

(2) having received in writing reasonable and adequate information about the material risks of the representation, and

(3) having been given the opportunity to consult with independent counsel.

(c) Client consent is not permissible if the representation:

(1) is prohibited by law or these rules;

(2) includes the assertion of a claim by one client against another client represented by the lawyer in the same or substantially related proceeding; or

(3) involves circumstances rendering it reasonably unlikely that the lawyer will be able to provide adequate representation to one or more of the affected clients.

Illinois: In the rules effective January 1, 2010, Illinois deletes the requirement that a client's consent to a conflict of interest be confirmed in writing.

Massachusetts retains the original 1983 version of ABA Model Rule 1.7, and the Comment to Massachusetts Rule 1.7 differs substantially from the Comment to ABA Model Rule 1.7. Among other things, the Massachusetts Comment addresses the situation of the lawyer who represents one member of a corporate family while opposing another member of the family, the issue of confidentiality and privilege in multiple representation, and the responsibilities of lawyers who represent classes. Comment 6 states that "a lawyer should not accept referrals from a referral source...if the lawyer's desire to continue to receive referrals from that source or the lawyer's relationship to that source would or would reasonably be viewed as discouraging the lawyer from representing the client zealously."

New Jersey: Rule 1.7(b)(1), the counterpart to ABA Model Rule 1.7(b)(4), contains a proviso to the effect "that a public entity cannot consent to any such representation." In addition, New Jersey adds a sentence from the original 1983 version of ABA Model Rule 1.7

requiring the lawyer, when representing multiple clients in a single matter, to explain "the advantages and risks involved" in common representation.

With respect to mortgage transactions, New Jersey has an unusual conflict of interest statute, N.J.S.A. §46:10A-6(b), which provides as follows:

If a lender makes a written offer to a borrower to make a loan secured by real property located in this State, the lender shall disclose, in writing, prominently and in bold type, to the borrower before the acceptance of the offer by the borrower, that the interests of the borrower and lender are or may be different and may conflict, and that the lender's attorney represents only the lender and not the borrower and the borrower is, therefore, advised to employ an attorney of the borrower's choice licensed to practice law in this State to represent the interests of the borrower.

New York: In the rules effective April 1, 2009, Rule 1.7(a) draws, in part, on DR 5-101(A) and 5-105(A)-(B) of the old Model Code, providing as follows:

(a) Except as provided in paragraph (b), a lawyer shall not represent a client if a reasonable lawyer would conclude that either:

(1) the representation will involve the lawyer in representing differing interests; or

(2) there is a significant risk that the lawyer's professional judgment on behalf of a client will be adversely affected by the lawyer's own financial, business, property or other personal interests.

The comments to the rule offer more detail than the Model Rule comments in several respects. For example, Comments 22 and 22A describe advance waivers of conflicts in detail, and Comments 34, 34A, and 34B all address conflicts involving a client's corporate affiliates.

Pennsylvania: Rule 1.7 tracks ABA Model Rule 1.7, except that Pennsylvania Rule 1.7(b)(4) does not require that client consent be "confirmed in writing."

Texas: Rule 1.06 provides as follows:

(a) A lawyer shall not represent opposing parties to the same litigation.

(b) In other situations and except to the extent permitted by paragraph (c), a lawyer shall not represent a person if the representation of that person:

(1) involves a substantially related matter in which that person's interests are materially and directly adverse to the interests of another client of the lawyer or the lawyer's firm; or

(2) reasonably appears to be or becomes adversely limited by the lawyer's or law firm's responsibilities to another client or to a third person or by the lawyer's or law firm's own interests.

(c) A lawyer may represent a client in the circumstances described in (b) if:

(1) the lawyer reasonably believes the representation of each client will not be materially affected; and

(2) each affected or potentially affected client consents to such representation after full disclosure of the existence, nature, implications, and possible adverse consequences of the common representation and the advantages involved, if any.

(d) A lawyer who has represented multiple parties in a matter shall not thereafter represent any of such parties in a dispute among the parties arising out of the matter, unless prior consent is obtained from all such parties to the dispute.

(e) If a lawyer has accepted representation in violation of this Rule, or if multiple representation properly accepted becomes improper under this Rule, the lawyer shall promptly withdraw from one or more representations to the extent necessary for any remaining representation not to be in violation of these Rules.

(f) If a lawyer would be prohibited by this Rule from engaging in particular conduct, no other lawyer while a member or associated with that lawyer's firm may engage in that conduct.

The Texas rule thus allows a lawyer to oppose a current client in a matter not "substantially related" to matters being handled for that client. However, in In re Dresser Industries, Inc., 972 F.2d 540 (5th Cir. 1992), the Fifth Circuit refused to apply Texas Rule 1.06, stating that conflicts of interest in federal litigation are governed by "national standards," including ABA Model Rule 1.7 and the Restatement of the Law Governing Lawyers.

Washington: For consent to a conflict to be valid, Rule 1.7(b)(4) requires that each affected client gives informed consent, confirmed in writing "(following authorization from the other client to make any required disclosures)."

Proposed Rule 1.8.1 [3-300]

“Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client”

(XDraft #16, 7/1/10)

Summary: Proposed Rule 1.8.1 sets forth a lawyer’s duties when entering into a business transaction with a client or acquiring an adverse pecuniary interest. It largely tracks Model Rule 1.8(a), but retains concepts found in current California rule 3-300. Some revisions were made to the Rule comment following the second round of public comment to clarify the applicability of the Rule.

Comparison with ABA Counterpart
Rule	Comment
☒ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule	☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule	☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart	☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

Primary Factors Considered

☒ Existing California Law

Rules

RPC 3-300

Statute

Case law

☐ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

☐ Other Primary Factor(s)

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(13 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 13 due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Less than Six Members Opposing Adoption of the Rule ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 7
Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 1
Abstain 1

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by consensus ☐

Minority/Position Included on Model Rule Comparison Chart: ☒ Yes ☐ No

Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

☐ No Known Stakeholders

☒ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

OCTC has taken the position that modification of lawyer-client fee agreements are subject to the Rule. See also Public Comment Chart for commenters who agree with OCTC's

☒ Very Controversial – Explanation:

1. Whether modification to lawyer-client fee agreements are subject to the Rule.
 2. Whether a lawyer subject to the Rule is required to provide legal advice to the client with respect to the transaction or acquisition when the client is represented by independent counsel.

See Introduction and Explanation for the resolution of these two issues.

☐ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

☐ Not Controversial

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.8.1* Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client

July 2010

(Draft rule revised following consideration of second round of public comment.)

INTRODUCTION:

Proposed Rule 1.8.1 would replace current California Rule 3-300, which is similar to Model Rule 1.8(a). Proposed Rule 1.8.1 tracks Model Rule 1.8(a) with some exceptions. The proposed Rule differs from the Model Rule in that it clarifies that all of the Rule's requirements apply to both business transactions with a client and the lawyer's acquisition of an adverse pecuniary interest. The proposed Rule retains the current California Rule requirement that the lawyer affirmatively advise the client to seek the advice of independent counsel in place of the less client protective Model Rule requirement that the lawyer advise the client of the "desirability" of seeking independent counsel. The proposed Rule incorporates a concept found in the Model Rule Comment that the lawyer is not required to advise the client to seek the advice of independent counsel when the client is already represented by independent counsel.

The proposed Rule contains a more expansive Comment than the Model Rule. The proposed Rule Comment discusses the scope of the proposed Rule, the full disclosure and consent requirements and the client's opportunity to consult with independent counsel.

The Comment to the Proposed Rule addresses two issues that were the subject of considerable public comment: (1) responsibility for the disclosure requirements of the Rule when the client is actually represented by independent counsel; and (2) applicability of the Rule to fee agreement modifications. As explained below, on the latter issue, the Board of Governors adopted a recommendation of a minority of the Commission that limits the applicability of Rule 1.8.1 to modifications that confer on a lawyer an ownership, possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client; and added a new paragraph (g) to Rule 1.5 (Fees for Legal Services) which prohibits a lawyer from making a material modification that is adverse to a client's interests unless: (i) the client is represented by an independent lawyer regarding the modification; or (ii) the lawyer advises the client in writing to seek the advice of an independent lawyer and is provided a reasonable opportunity to do so.

* Proposed Rule 1.8.1, XDraft 16 (7/1/10).

Modifications to Agreements by which the Lawyer is Retained by a Client. The Discussion in Current California Rule 3-300 states that the current California Rule does not apply to an agreement by which the lawyer is retained by the client, unless the agreement confers on the lawyer an ownership, possessory, security or other adverse pecuniary interest. Comment [5] expands on the Discussion in the current California Rule by adding that the Rule also does not apply to modifications to such agreements by which the client retains the lawyer unless the modification confers on the lawyer an ownership, possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client. The reference was added because (i) the Discussion in the current California Rule is unclear, (ii) the Office of Chief Trial Counsel informed the Commission that it considered modifications to agreements by which a lawyer is retained by a client subject to Rule 3-300, and, (iii) the legal profession should be informed regarding the scope of the Rule in light of the first two considerations.

The applicability of proposed Rule 1.8.1 to fee agreement modifications. The Commission concluded that modifications to lawyer-client engagement agreements occur in many lawyer-client relationships and are frequently beneficial to the client. The Commission believed that imposing the Rule 1.8.1 protocol on every modification to an engagement agreement would create an unnecessary burden on the lawyer-client relationship and could deter modifications to engagement agreements in cases where the modification would benefit the client. In addition, the Commission concluded that existing California case law protects the client in situations involving overreaching or undue influence that are not readily susceptible to regulation by a disciplinary rule. The Commission's view was considered by the Board of Governors at its January 7 – 9, 2010 meeting, together with an alternate approach developed by a minority of the Commission. The minority approach limited the applicability of Rule 1.8.1 to modifications that confer on a lawyer an ownership, possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client; but also added a new paragraph (g) to Rule 1.5 (Fees for Legal Services) which prohibits a lawyer from making a material modification that is adverse to a client's interests unless: (i) the client is represented by an independent lawyer regarding the modification; or (ii) the lawyer advises the client in writing to seek the advice of an independent lawyer and is provided a reasonable opportunity to do so. Following discussion at its January 2010 meeting, the Board adopted the minority approach on the issue of fee modifications.

Addressing material modifications that are adverse to a client's interests in Rule 1.5. Beginning with two premises – (1) that only material modifications that are adverse to a client's interests require the special attention of a disciplinary rule; and (2) that a lawyer advising the client to seek the advice of an independent lawyer and be given a reasonably opportunity to do so is generally viewed as the most effective means of protecting a client in business dealings with the client's lawyer –new paragraph (g) to Rule 1.5 was adopted by the Board:

(f) A lawyer shall not make a material modification to an agreement by which the lawyer is retained by the client that is adverse to the client's interests unless the client is either represented with respect to the modification by an independent lawyer or is advised in writing by the lawyer to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client's choice and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice.

The foregoing paragraph applies to a "material" modification that is "adverse to the client's interests," even if the modification does not confer on the lawyer an ownership, possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client, as that term has been construed by the courts. By limiting the application of paragraph (g) to "material" modifications that are "adverse to the client's interests," the Rule will not prevent or discourage modifications intended to benefit the client. By requiring the lawyer to advise the client "to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client's choice" and be "given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice," the client is given the protections in dealing with the lawyer. Placing the provision in Rule 1.5 is believed to be the logical place that lawyers will look for guidance on all things concerning fees, including fee modifications. The explanatory comments provide guidance to lawyers on what constitutes a "material" modification that is "adverse to the client's interests. See proposed Comments [3] and [3A] to Rule 1.5.

As the Board agreed with the Commission minority, the Commission position on the treatment of fee agreement modifications is not implemented in proposed Rule 1.8.1 or Rule 1.5. For a full discussion of the Commission view on this subject, a memorandum from Commission members Robert Kehr and Ellen Peck is provided at the end of these materials.

The Disclosure Requirement under Rule 1.8.1. The Comment to the Proposed Rule modifies the Model Rule comment, which states that the obligation to make full disclosure under the Model Rule is satisfied by written disclosure by either the lawyer in the transaction or independent counsel. The Commission modified the Comment to state that the lawyer is not required to give legal advice to the client when the client is represented by independent counsel, but is required to disclose all material facts that lawyer knows or reasonably should know have not been disclosed to the client. The Commission concluded that the Model Rule Comment is unworkable. One of the purposes of the Rule is to afford a client the protection of advice from a lawyer who is free of the conflict of interest the lawyer subject to the proposed Rule has as a result of that lawyer's involvement in the transaction or acquisition. In the Commission's view, it does not make sense to require the lawyer who has a conflict to continue to advise the client when the client is being advised by a lawyer who does not have the conflict. In addition, requiring the lawyer in the transaction to continue to advise the client when the client has independent counsel could interfere with the client's confidential relationship with independent counsel. Several commenters objected, maintaining that requiring the lawyer in the transaction to make full disclosure without limitation assures that the client receives the fullest disclosure and protects the client in the event that independent counsel does not advise the client properly.

A Note on the Rule Number. As noted, the Proposed Rule appears in the Model Rules numbered 1.8(a). The Commission has not proposed that California follow the Model Rules construct of amalgamating in a single rule, numbered 1.8, all personal conflicts rules, regardless of their relationship, that do not fit neatly within current client, former client, former client, or government lawyer situations addressed in Model Rules 1.7, 1.9 and 1.11, respectively. Instead, to facilitate indexing and make these various provisions easier to locate and use, the Commission has recommended that each rule in the 1.8 series be given a separate number.

MEMO

To: RRC

From: Ellen Peck
Bob Kehr

Re: The application of Rules 1.8.1 (lawyer-client business transactions) and 1.5 (illegal and unconscionable fees) to the modification of fee agreements

Date: December 13, 2009

An earlier version of the Memo addressed only the application of Rule 1.8.1 to the modification of fee agreements. At the Commission's 12/11 – 12/12/09 meeting, the Commission at the direction of Board members drafted a limited protocol that would require lawyers, before entering into certain fee modifications, to provide written notice to the client of the right to independent counsel and to give the client the time to obtain independent legal advice. For organizational reasons, this proposed requirement was drafted as part of Rule 1.5. The Commission voted against the adoption of this proposed modification to Rule 1.5 but will send the on to the Board.

While the earlier Memo applies to a considerable extent to the new Rule 1.5 proposal, and we therefore have retained the earlier Memo below, we have added as an Introduction comments on the proposed Rule 1.5 changes.

Introduction regarding Rule 1.5: The apparent principle beyond the requested addition to Rule 1.5 is that clients would be protected by requiring lawyers to advise their clients of the right to seek independent counsel, and if lawyers were to give clients the time to obtain independent advice, before entering into any fee modification. To the contrary, we don't believe any meaningful protection would be provided by imposing these additional obligations on lawyers. Here are three examples that demonstrate our reasoning:

Example One: A lawyer bludgeons a client into increasing the lawyer's contingency fee by threatening to abandon the client at a critical moment in a lawsuit. Under this duress, the client agrees to increase the lawyer's contingency compensation. That lawyer would be disciplined under current law for an act of moral turpitude under Bus. & Prof. C. § 6106. Depending on the amount of the new contingency, the lawyer also might be subject to discipline under Rule 1.5 for entering into an agreement to charge an unconscionable fee. The new requirement would not protect the client because the client in effect has been blackmailed and had no meaningful opportunity to consult or take the advice of independent counsel, and the lawyer already is subject to easily available discipline.

Example Two: Another contingency lawyer has agreed to represent a client on a standard 40% contingency. The client receives a "final" settlement offer during last-minute settlement negotiations, but the client refuses the offer because the client believes it would result in an insufficient net recovery. The lawyer agrees to reduce his or her contingency to 37.5% in order to induce the client to accept the settlement offer, and the client does so. The lawyer cannot comply with the written notice and timing requirement. The lawyer later is sued by the client on the theory that the settlement offer was not truly a “final offer”, that the lawyer’s offer to reduce the contingency fee was insufficient, that the lawyer was motivated by the lawyer’s own interest rather than the client’s interest, that the fee reduction and the settlement therefore were not in the client’s interest, and that independent counsel would have been able to convince the first lawyer to reduce the fee to a far greater extent and to achieve better gross and net results. The client also reports the lawyer to the disciplinary authority based on the theory that the fee reduction was not for the client’s benefit, and that the lawyer therefore is subject to discipline.

Example Three: A sophisticated law firm enters into hourly fee agreements with clients. The fee agreements provide for the firm to increase hourly rates by some form of notice to the clients as is permitted by existing law. See Severson & Werson v. Bolinger, 235 Cal. App.3rd 1569, 1673 (1991). These lawyers are not subject to discipline under proposed Rule 1.5(f), and their billing rates are legally enforceable. An unsophisticated lawyer is not aware of the trap created by proposed Rule 1.5(f) and lacks the protection of the carefully prepared fee agreement. This unsophisticated lawyer increases a billing rate (for example, because of inflation or because a young lawyer has become more experienced and has been given more responsibility), or the lawyer adds a billing rate (for example, because another lawyer is hired). These changes probably are for the benefit of the lawyer and therefore are within the scope of proposed Rule 1.5(f). The unsophisticated lawyer is subject to discipline and to civil claims for breach of fiduciary duty.

In the heinous Example One, the client received no protection. In Example Two, the lawyer becomes a target for a client’s later civil and disciplinary claims. Example Three shows that proposed Rule 1.5(f) will create unexpected civil and disciplinary risks for lawyers.

It is our view that the effort to address fee modifications is a solution in search of a problem. Clients already are thoroughly protected by existing legal standards, and the attempt to find new solutions endangers lawyers in general and unsophisticated lawyers in particular.

Our original November 29, 2009 Memo:

The purpose of this Memo is to explain to the Commission our view that the current draft of Rule 1.8.1 is correct that the modification of a fee agreement generally should not be governed by Rule 1.8.1. We believe that to reverse the current draft, and to require lawyers to comply with Rule 1.8.1 in all fee modifications, would violate common sense, would be inconsistent with the Model Rules, and would be inconsistent with long-standing California law and the Restatement. This Memo will address each of these in turn.

If the Commission retains its current draft as we hope it will, this Memo with minor modifications also could serve as an explanation to the Board of the Commission’s action.

We believe that the audio recording of the recent RAC meeting demonstrates that the comments made in favor applying Rule 1.8.1 to all fee modifications was based on misunderstandings as to the current state of the law and the consequences that would flow from changing current law.

Common sense:

Anyone who advocates the application of Rule 1.8.1 to all agreements between lawyers and clients that have the effect of altering an existing fee agreement presumably has in mind a situation in which a lawyer takes advantage of the client's circumstances in order to trick or force the client into a new arrangement that benefits the lawyer but not the client, and that furthermore does not pass muster at some visceral level. However, the general application of Rule 1.8.1 to fee modifications also would cover at least the following:

- Substantive changes that are for the benefit of the client but not the lawyer.
 - o Contingency fee example --- lawyer accepts a representation, but at a 50% contingency because there is a lack of case authority to support the client's position in the proposed lawsuit, and the lawyer reasonably believes there is a substantial risk that the contingency will not occur. Some time later, the lawyer reports to the client the happy news of the publication of a supportive appellate decision. The client replies by asking the lawyer to reduce the fee. The lawyer is a mensch, agrees to reduce the fee to 40%, but does not comply with Rule 1.8.1. If the Rule were to apply to fee modifications, that logically should include a fee reduction as well as a fee increase even though the lawyer had a binding fee agreement and had no legal obligation to entertain the client's request (Should the lawyer have recommended to the client that a better figure would be 35%? Would an independent lawyer have advocated 35%?). This lawyer is subject to professional discipline, is subject to the threat of discipline if the client later demands the lawyer reduce the fee still further, and the lawyer arguably might lose the entire fee.
 - o Hourly fee example --- client suffers a financial reversal and requests a reduction in the billing rate. The lawyer has various legitimate alternatives, including among others, terminating the representation and leaving the client without representation (because of the client's inability to perform the fee agreement), humiliating the client by demanding that he borrow from relatives (or sell his wife's wedding ring, etc.), and keeping the current billing rate with a portion of the accumulating fee to be accrued with interest. The lawyer rejects all these alternatives and agrees to a reduction as requested by the client; the consequences are the same as in the contingency example. Should the fee reduction have been greater? Should the timing of payment been changed in some way? Should the lawyer have advised the client of these and other reasonably identifiable alternatives to the fee reduction requested by the client?

- Non-substantive changes that are for the benefit of the client but not the lawyer. Lawyer and client enter into an hourly fee agreement that requires the client to pay fees within 30 days after receipt of each monthly bill. The lawyer accedes to the client request for a short delay in the payment of a single statement. Again, the lawyer is subject to discipline, to the threat of discipline, and potentially to the loss of the entire fee.
- The negotiation with a current client of a new fee agreement for a new matter in which the current client seeks to retain the lawyer. If the existence of a lawyer-client relationship is the watershed event, then logically any fee negotiation between lawyer and a current client should be included, even if it is in a new matter. Nothing in principal distinguishes a new matter from an existing matter.
- The agreement between lawyer and client to apply an existing fee agreement to a new matter. Again, if the existence of a lawyer-client relationship is the watershed event, then the client would be entitled to all the protections of Rule 1.8.1 when discussing the application of an existing fee agreement to a new matter. Should the price or terms be different because the two matters are not the same, because the lawyer's level of experience in the second matter is less, or for some other reason?
- Billing rates provided for in an initial fee agreement. Example --- Lawyer agrees to represent a client in what is hoped to be (and turns out to be) a long-term relationship not limited to a single matter. Because hourly billing rates increase with time due to factors such as inflation and the increasing skill of young lawyers, and to avoid Rule 1.8.1, the lawyer's initial fee agreement states that the client will be billed at each lawyer's and each paralegal's normal billing rates. The lawyer's firm provides a notice of new rates that is sufficient to satisfy the standard of Severson & Werson v. Bolinger, 235 Cal. App.3rd 1569, 1673 (1991). The lawyer arguably would be subject to discipline under Rule 1.8.1.

We do not believe that the application of Rule 1.8.1 to any of these situations is supportable, and we are not aware of any authority for doing so. As appears from the opinion in the Severson & Werson case, the enforceability of the fee agreement is based on contract principles (which is consistent with the Restatement), and without any suggestion that the validity of the fee agreement has any connection with Rule 1.8.1.

Applying Rule 1.8.1 to all fee agreement modifications would be inconsistent with Model Rule 1.8(a):

ABA Model Rule 1.8(a), Comment [1], excludes the application of Rule 1.8(a) to "ordinary fee arrangements between client and lawyer" Presumably because of the consequences outlined above, the Model Rule fee agreement exception applies to all ordinary fee agreements without regard to whether they are fee agreements with new clients, modifications of existing fee agreements, or new fee agreements with existing clients.

The plain meaning of the Model Rule is understood and accepted. See Mauzy v. Edward Kraemer & Sons, Inc., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5098 (D. Minn. 2004) [“The assignment was a modification [of] a pre-existing fee agreement which did not encompass a loan or exchange of property which would justify characterization as a business transaction. Consequently, the plaintiff attorney was not required to comply with the writing and disclosure provisions of Minn. R. Prof. Cond. 1.8(a).”]; Valley/50th Ave., LLC v. Stewart, 159 Wn.2d 736, 743-44 (2007) [this involved a fee agreement that conveyed to the lawyer a deed of trust on real property, a transaction that would be covered by all versions of the Rule, but the court before the section dealing with Rule 1.8(a) effectively repeated the content of California Probate Code § 16004(c) in saying: “A fee agreement between a lawyer and a client, revised after the relationship has been established on terms more favorable to the lawyer than originally agreed upon, may be void or voidable unless the attorney shows that the contract was fair and reasonable, free from undue influence, and made after a fair and full disclosure of the facts on which it is predicated.”]; Cotton v. Kronenberg, 111 Wn. App. 258, 272 (2002) [This is consistent with the Restatement’s contract approach (see below), saying: “We note that our Supreme Court has held that any modification of a fee agreement after an attorney-client relationship has been established is subject to ‘particular attention and scrutiny’ [citations omitted]. If renegotiation after commencement of the attorney-client relationship results in greater compensation for the attorney than that under the initial agreement, courts may refuse to enforce the renegotiated fee unless it is supported by new consideration (citation omitted).] Cf. In the Matter of Thayer, 745 N.E.2d 207 (Ind. 2001) [at 211, n. 3, the Court stated: “The present situation differs from typical contingent fee negotiations between lawyers and their clients because here the contingency of the fee had expired with conclusion of the settlement negotiations – the insurer had offered to settle for $11,000 and the client had advised the respondent to accept the offer. In effect, the respondent attempted to increase his contingency fee arrangement with an unsophisticated client after the contingency no longer existed. These unique circumstances activated the need for the protections required for lawyer-client business transactions provided in Prof.Cond.R. 1.8(a). By this holding today, however, we do not mean to require that all modifications to contingency fee agreements under any circumstances be subject to the client protections contained in Prof.Cond.R. 1.8(a).” Query whether the Court would have come to the same conclusion if the Respondent had not agreed that he violated Rule 1.8(a) as discipline was possible in other ways, for example, under Rule 1.5, which Respondent also was found to have violated].

Applying Rule 1.8.1 to all fee agreement modifications would alter current California law:

California Probate Code § 16004(c) provides:

A transaction between the trustee and a beneficiary which occurs during the existence of the trust or while the trustee's influence with the beneficiary remains and by which the trustee obtains an advantage from the beneficiary is presumed to be a violation of the trustee's fiduciary duties. This presumption is a presumption affecting the burden of proof. This subdivision does not apply to the provisions of an agreement between a trustee and a beneficiary relating to the hiring or compensation of the trustee. (emphasis added)

The Law Revision Commission Comment states:

Subsection(c) restated the second sentence of former Civil Code Section 2235 without substantive change. For background on the provisions of this division, see the Comment to this division under the division heading. [20 Cal.L.Rev.Comm.Reports 1001 (1990)].

Walton v. Broglio (1975) 52 Cal.App.3d 400, 403-404, 125 Cal.Rptr. 123, understood that the final sentence of former section 2235, now Probate Code section 16004(c) applies to a modification of a fee agreement with an existing client, and stated:

Plaintiff contends on appeal that the presumption of invalidity codified in section 2235 of the Civil Code does not apply. We agree.

In contracting with his client, where there is a pre-existing attorney-client relationship, the attorney is charged with a rebuttable presumption of undue influence and thus invalidity of the contract. (Bradner v. Vasquez (1954) 43 Cal.2d 147, 272 P.2d 11; Denton v. Smith (1951) 101 Cal.App.2d 841, 226 P.2d 723.) This rule is based on section 2235 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows:

'All transactions between a trustee and his beneficiary during the existence of the trust, or while the influence acquired by the trustee remains, by which he obtains any advantage from his beneficiary, are presumed to be entered into by the latter without sufficient consideration, and under undue influence. The presumptions established by this section do not apply to the provisions of an agreement between a trustee and his beneficiary relating to the hiring or compensation of the trustee.'

The last sentence was added in 1963. By its terms, it broadly excludes all agreements relating to hiring or compensation, including those made after the fiduciary relationship is established. Prior law had created an exception only where there was no pre-existing fiduciary relationship. Thus, in Setzer v. Robinson (1962) 27 Cal.2d 213, 216, 18 Cal.Rptr. 524, 526, the Supreme Court said: 'The presumption of 'insufficient consideration' and 'undue influence' created by Civil Code, section 2235, is not applicable to a contract by which the relation of attorney and client is originally created and the attorney's compensation is fixed. 'The confidential relation does not exist until such contract is made, and in agreeing upon its terms the parties deal at arm's length.' (Cooley v. Miller & Lux, 156 Cal. 510, 524, 105 P. 981; see also Cooley v. Miller & Lux, 168 Cal. 120, 131, 142 P. 83; Youngblood v. Higgins, 146 Cal.App.2d 350, 352, 303 P.2d 637; 5 Am.Jur., Attorneys at Law, s 189, p. 375.) . . . No attorney could safely or reasonably negotiate any fee agreement with a prospective client without some preliminary investigation of the facts of the case and a disclosure to the prospective client of the legal steps which in his judgment must be taken. If by the very fact of such investigation and disclosure the relationship of attorney and client would thereby be created, the attorney would be placed in the impossible position of becoming the prospective client's attorney while he was attempting to reach an agreement with him as to whether he should become his attorney or not.'

None of the cases since the 1963 amendment have directly construed it. Three cases, Gold v. Greenwald (1966) 247 Cal.App.2d 296, 55 Cal.Rptr. 660; Carlson, Collins, Gordon & Bold v. Banducci (1967) 257 Cal.App.2d 212, 64 Cal.Rptr. 915; and Trafton v. Youngblood (1968) 69 Cal.2d 17, 69 Cal.Rptr. 568, 442 P.2d 648, dealt with events that occurred before the amendment became effective and thus did not discuss it. The fourth, Baron v. Sarlot (1975) 47 Cal.App.3d 304, 120 Cal.Rptr. 675 found the amendment was not 'significant' on the particular facts alleged. We hold that the amendment, properly construed, prevents the application of the presumption to any agreement relating to fees, even where there is a pre-existing attorney-client relationship. (emphasis added)

This case was decided after the 1974 amendments to the Rules of Professional Conduct, including the predecessor to rule 3-300 [former rule 5-101] were adopted. After Walton v. Broglio was decided, the Legislature adopted section 16004(c) with the stated intent of adopting section 2235 and the case law interpreting it.

Therefore, the policy of the State of California is that the fiduciary obligations of a trustee should not apply to an initial compensation agreement or a modification of that agreement respecting compensation. This legislative policy applies to every fiduciary relationship, including the attorney-client relationship.

Rule 3-300's discussion, sentence one, stated:

Rule 3-300 is not intended to apply to the agreement by which the member is retained by the client, unless the agreement confers on the member an ownership, possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client. . . ."

Thus, the foregoing discussion sentence in rule 3-300 stated language substantially similar to the last sentence of section 16004(c) [which applies to modifications as well as initial agreements], excepting terms and conditions of a retainer agreement involving an ownership, possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client consistent with Ames v. State Bar and its progeny.

Ramirez v. Sturdivant, (1994) 21 Cal.App.4th 904, 917, 26 Cal.Rptr.2d 554, 560-561, again considered whether section 16004(c) applied to a second, different fee agreement by a lawyer resuming an attorney-client relationship in the same litigation matter and found that there was no duty to advise the client to seek the advice of independent counsel:

It was generally understood that Civil Code section 2235 applied to the attorney-client relationship (e.g., Walton v. Broglio (1975) 52 Cal.App.3d 400, 403, 125 Cal.Rptr. 123), and we see no reason why Probate Code section

16004 also should not apply to that relationship. The statute, however, does no more than affect the burden of proof. In other words, under it, the trustee/attorney has the burden of proving that the transaction at issue did not violate a fiduciary duty. (Evid.Code, § 606.) Where, as here, the trustee/attorney produces evidence that the transaction was conducted at arms-length with an intelligent, experienced and sophisticated client, the trial court is entitled to conclude that the burden of proof has been met. In reviewing that conclusion, our only duty is to determine whether or not that conclusion is supported by substantial evidence. (Priester v. Citizens Nat. etc. Bank (1955) 131 Cal.App.2d 314, 317, 280 P.2d 835.) In addition, the last sentence of this provision specifically exempts from the presumption of undue influence any agreement relating to the "hiring or compensation" of the trustee/attorney. This exemption has been held to apply "even where there is a pre-existing attorney-client relationship." (Walton v. Broglio, supra, 52 Cal.App.3d at p. 404, 125 Cal.Rptr. 123; and see Vella v. Hudgins (1984) 151 Cal.App.3d 515, 519, 198 Cal.Rptr. 725: "A contingency fee contract may be modified by the parties at any time during the subject litigation.")

In all events, and contrary to Ramirez's contentions, substantial evidence supports the conclusion that Sturdevant did not take unfair advantage of Ramirez in negotiating the supplemental retainer agreement. Ramirez already had changed attorneys twice in the action and was perfectly aware that she could do so again. Prosecuting an appeal is a proceeding discrete from proceedings in the trial court, and often is accomplished by someone other than the trial attorney. Sturdevant, as we have discussed, was entitled to withdraw from the case, and thus was entitled to negotiate the terms under which he would continue. Ramirez's interest in continuing with Sturdevant may have caused her to agree to terms she otherwise would have refused, but that fact does not by itself translate into duress or a breach of fiduciary duty. Finally, we can see no reason why, under the circumstances present here, the supplemental agreement should be struck down simply because Sturdevant did not advise Ramirez that she should seek advice of other counsel in negotiating with him. Counsel could only have explained that Sturdevant was certainly entitled to insist on reimbursement of advanced fees and that $150,000 was a reasonable settlement figure.

Thus, California's leading published appellate decision, which has not been reversed or overruled, refused, in the civil context, to strike down a modification of a fee agreement on the basis that the client was not advised to seek independent counsel. Instead, the Court held that a modification should be scrutinized, as are initial fee agreements, to ensure that it is reasonable and fair to the client.

In In re Silverton (2005) 36 Cal.4th 81, 29 Cal.Rptr.3d 766, the Supreme Court stated:

The Review Department determined that the arrangement involving a compromise of the medical bills was a business transaction, in that "the authorization to compromise constituted an immediate transfer from the Hous of both the ownership and possessory interest in all funds remaining after payment to the Hous of their distributive share of the settlement proceeds and the payment of attorney's fees as called for in the original retainer agreement" in exchange for an upfront payment by the attorney. The transaction was therefore barred unless Silverton could show that [he complied with rule 3-300] . . . (Rule 3-300; see generally Fletcher v. Davis (2004) 33 Cal.4th 61, 69-70, 14 Cal.Rptr.3d 58, 90 P.3d 1216.) The Review Department determined that Silverton (1) failed to disclose to the Hous information necessary for a reasonable understanding of the transaction, (2) failed to provide the Hous with written notice of their right to seek independent legal counsel, and (3) failed to discharge his burden to show the transaction was fair and reasonable to the Hous. In particular, Silverton failed to share with his clients, as he had with cocounsel Watson, his confidence that the medical bills could be compromised at a lower amount. (See Mayhew v. Benninghoff (1997) 53 Cal.App.4th 1365, 1369, 62 Cal.Rptr.2d 27.)

Thus, the Supreme Court did not find that rule 3-300 applied to any modification of a fee agreement or a new agreement with an existing client. Rather, it applied rule 3-300 to a modification consistent with the discussion sentence. Rule 3-300 applied to Silverton's agreements only because the fee agreement negotiated during the course of the relationship if the agreement amounts to a business transaction between lawyer and client or grants to the lawyer an adverse pecuniary interest on the lawyer. We are aware of no reported authority holding that a lawyer is required to comply with rule 3-300 in all fee modifications.

To the contrary, it generally is accepted that § 16004(c) applies to the renegotiation as well as the original negotiation of a lawyer's fee agreement. In addition to the authorities cited above, see L.A. County Bar Ethics Opn. 521 (2007) and Opn. 496 (1998); Brandon, Burning Issues: The Representation of Insureds Under Burning Limits Policies Raises a Host of Ethical Issues, 27 L.A. Lawyer 30, 33 n.37 and accompanying text (2004); Family Law Practice & Procedure 2d Ed at §61.02 (Matthew Bender); and California Forms of Pleading and Practice §215.81 (Matthew Bender).

The Restatement Approach: The Restatement Third, The Law Governing Lawyers is consistent with Walton and with the Model Rule because it does not suggest at any place that we can locate that any conflict of interest rule applies to ordinary fee arrangements. Its position is expressed in §18, Comment e, and is based squarely on contract principles: "e. Contracts entered into during a representation. Client-lawyer fee contracts entered into after the matter in question is under way are subject to special scrutiny (cf. Restatement Second, Contracts § 89(a) (promise modifying contractual duty is binding if fair and equitable in view of circumstances unanticipated when contract was made)). A client might accept such a contract because it is burdensome to change lawyers during a representation. A client might hesitate to resist or even to suggest changes in new terms proposed by the lawyer, fearing the lawyer's resentment or believing that the proposals are meant to promote the client's good. ..." Section 89(a) to which it refers states: "A promise modifying a duty under a contract not fully performed on either side is binding (a) if the modification is fair and equitable in view of circumstances not anticipated by the parties when the contract was made;"

Thus, as suggested in the first portion of this Memo, the Restatement categorizes together all lawyer-client contracts entered into during the existence of the relationship, which would include modifications of existing fee agreements and new fee agreements on new matters.

The Burden of Compliance: It was stated at the November 2009 RAC meeting that applying Rule 1.8.1 to fee modifications would require the lawyer only to give written notice to the client that the client should obtain independent counsel. This is wrong, as we will explain in a moment, but we first will follow the logic of this assertion. The logic is that there would be some material benefit to the client from the mere recitation of the client's right to independent counsel. We believe this makes no sense in the situation where the client most needs protections – where, to use the facts of the Van Sickle case cited below, the client has a young child, a house in foreclosure, and a car that is going to be foreclosed. More fundamentally, it simply is wrong to say that, if every fee agreement with an existing client is labeled as a business transaction, the lawyer's only additional duty would be the recommendation to seek independent counsel.

The comment at the November 2009 RAC meeting that the only added burden of compliance would be for the lawyer to give the client advice to seek independent counsel is wrong for a second materials reason. Rule 1.8.1 requires that the advice to seek independent counsel must be in writing, and the lawyer must give the client a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice. Consider those two requirements within the common context of the settlement of a contingency case that takes place at the last moment or even during trial, where the lawyer agrees to reduce the contingency fee in order to obtain the client's consent to the settlement.

In the Absence of A Provision in 1.8.1 Concerning Special Requirements For Fee Modifications, Lawyers' Fee Modifications Are Still Heavily Regulated and California Consumers of Legal Services Are Protected Adequately By Existing Law

Lawyers' fee modifications are still heavily regulated without the need for any change to rule 1.8.1, and California consumers of legal services are adequately protected by existing law.

First, Communication about fee modifications: A lawyer who enters into any business transaction with a client bears the heavy burden of providing the same advice to the client as the lawyer would have if not a party to the transaction. As our Supreme Court stated in Felton v. LeBreton, 92 Cal. 457, 469 (1891) (emphasis added):

“While an attorney is not prohibited from having business transactions with his client, yet, inasmuch as the relation of attorney and client is one wherein the attorney is apt to have very great influence over the client, especially in transactions which are a part of or intimately connected with the very business in reference to which the relation exists, such transactions are always scrutinized by courts with jealous care, and are set aside at the mere instance of the client, unless the attorney can show by extrinsic evidence that his client acted with full knowledge of all the facts connected with such transaction, and fully understood their effect; and in any attempt by the attorney to enforce an agreement on the part of the client growing out of such transaction, the burden of proof is always upon the attorney to show that the dealing was fair and just, and that the client was fully advised. (Kisling v. Shaw, 33 Cal. 440; 91 Am. Dec. 644; Brock v. Barnes, 40 Barb. 533; Howell v. Ransom, 11 Paige, 542; Ford v. Harrington, 16 N. Y. 289; Evans v. Ellis, 5 Denio, 643; Dunn v. Dunn, 42 N. J. Eq. 437; 1 Story's Eq. Jur. 310, 311.) In the words of Lord Eldon, he must make it manifest that he gave to his client 'all that reasonable advice against himself that he would have given him against a third person.' (Gibson v. Jeyes, 6 Ves. 278.)."

This remains the law of California. See, e.g., Beery v. State Bar, 43 Cal.3d 802, 812 (1987). Also see Ball v. Posey, 176 Cal. App.3d 1209, 1214 (1986), where the court stated that the lawyer's burden of demonstrating that the client was fully informed on all matters related to any transactions between them is based on the fiduciary duty of full and unbiased disclosure described in Neel v. Magana, Olney, Levy, Cathcart & Gelfand, 6 Cal.3d 176, 188-89 (1971).

Second, modifications to fee agreements must be fair and reasonable to the client: See discussion of Ramirez v. Sturdevant, supra. Moreover, a client can compel scrutiny of a fee modification for fairness and reasonableness through MFAA fee arbitration or by initiating a civil law suit.

Third, if the fee modification involves a security interest or a business transaction, the lawyer must comply with current rule 3-300: See e.g., current Rule 3-300 Discussion paragraph 1 and discussion of Silverton, supra.

Fourth, if the process of obtaining a fee modification involves fraud, overreaching or duress, the lawyer is still subject to disciplinary investigation and potentially to professional discipline: See e.g., Bus. & Prof. C., 6106 [prohibiting fraud and dishonesty]; Matter of Brockway (Rev. Dept. 2006) 4 Cal.State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944, 959-960 [overreaching constituted moral turpitude where lawyer used complex legalese in fee agreement with clients, for whom English was a second language, to exempt himself from providing legal services of consequence to them]; Goldstone v. State Bar (1931) 214 Cal. 490, 498-499 and Herrscher v. State Bar (1935) 4 Cal.2d 399, 403 [fraud or overreaching by an attorney regarding fees is cause for discipline]; and Matter of Shalant (Rev. Dept. 2005) 4 State Bar Ct. Rptr. 829, 837-838 [the process by which modification negotiated was abusive to the client constituting moral turpitude¹].

Fifth, the fee or cost in a modified fee agreement may not be unconscionable or illegal. See rule 4-200(A).

¹ Shalant demanded the modification one business day before the client's deposition; faxed a letter to the client that insisted that a new fee arrangement needed to be worked out before the deposition; implied that the attorney would not provide his best efforts unless the client agreed to the modification; and had a staff member inform the client that it was impossible to postpone the deposition. While the attorney did appear at the deposition, the attorney insisted a few days later on the payment of a $25,000 nonrefundable fee to be credited against a contingent fee if there were any recovery. These discussions all took place approximately one week before the client was to travel out of state for extended medical treatment, leaving the client to worry about whether his case would be held in abeyance, and whether the client would need to find a replacement attorney. (Id.)

Conclusion: The Model Rule, the Restatement, and current California law have it right. Applying rule 1.8.1 to all fee agreements with current clients would sweep countless unintended situations into the area of possible discipline, and to the threat of discipline and the potential loss of all fees. Such a new requirement would be a trap for the unwary lawyer and would provide no meaningful benefit to the client. A lawyer who takes advantage of a client (or a potential client) through deceit or strong arm tactics already is subject to discipline under Rule 1.5 (unconscionable or illegal fee) and Bus. & Prof. C. § 6106. See, e.g., Matter of Van Sickle, 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 980, 993 (Rev. Dept. 2006).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8.1 Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(a) A lawyer shall not enter into a business transaction with a client or knowingly acquire an ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client unless:	~~(a)~~ A lawyer shall not enter into a business transaction with a client¹ or knowingly acquire an ownership, possessory, security¹ or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client¹ unless each of the following requirements has been satisfied:	Model Rule 1.8(a) has been reformatted to become the introductory paragraph. It retains the language in current rule 3-300, which, is the same as the text of Model Rule 1.8(a) with the exception of the language added at the end of the sentence. The Commission decided to retain the additional language in rule 3-300, which emphasizes a lawyer's responsibility to satisfy all of the Rule's requirements.
(1) the transaction and terms on which the lawyer acquires the interest are fair and reasonable to the client and are fully disclosed and transmitted in writing in a manner that can be reasonably understood by the client;	~~(1)~~ ~~a) the~~ The transaction or acquisition and its terms ~~on which the lawyer acquires the interest~~ are fair and reasonable to the client and are fully disclosed and transmitted in writing to the client in a manner that reasonably can be ~~reasonably~~ understood by the client; and	Paragraph (a) is an amalgamation of Model Rule 1.8(a)(1) and current California rule 3-300(A). The Model Rule language was modified to refer to both a transaction and an acquisition of an adverse pecuniary interest. The Commission believes that the Model Rule reference to terms "on which the lawyer acquires the interest" narrows the focus to the terms of an acquisition, rather than all of the aspects of the acquisition. The deletion of the Model Rule language and replacement with the term "acquisition" broadens the scope of the Rule and affords greater client protection. The change conforms to the current California rule. The Commission added the words "to the client" to clarify that the client is the person to whom the terms are transmitted. The change conforms to the language in the current California rule. The word "reasonably" was moved to correct grammar. The word "and" was added at the end of the paragraph to emphasize that the requirements are conjunctive.

* Proposed Rule 1.8.1, Draft 16 (7/1/10). Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8.1 Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(2) the client is advised in writing of the desirability of seeking and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of independent legal counsel on the transaction; and	(2b) ~~the~~The client either is represented in the transaction or acquisition by an independent lawyer of the client's choice or is advised in writing by the lawyer to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the ~~desirability of seeking~~client's choice and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek ~~the~~that advice ~~of independent legal counsel on the transaction~~; and	Paragraph (b) is a substantial revision of both Model Rule 1.8(a)(2) and California Rule 3-300(B). First, the rule has been revised to provide that compliance with the Rule occurs either if the client is represented in the transaction or acquisition by independent counsel of the client's choice or advised to seek such advice. Comment [14] to the Model Rule states the requirement to advise the client to seek independent counsel does not apply when the client is already represented by independent counsel. The Commission was concerned that the Model Rule Comment conflicted with the Rule, which did not suggest any limitation on the lawyer's obligation to advise the client to seek the advice of independent counsel. As a result, the Commission added the limitation into the Rule. The Commission concluded that it is not necessary to require a lawyer to advise the client to seek the advice of independent counsel when the client is actually receiving such advice. The Commission concluded that it would not advance the purposes of the Rule or the interest of client protection to require a lawyer to advise the client to seek the advice of independent counsel when the client already has independent counsel. In fact, a lawyer who did so might be understood as having denigrated the ability of the independent counsel, which would interfere with the goal of the requirement. Second, the Commission replaced the Model Rule reference to advising a client "of the desirability of seeking" advice from independent counsel with the reference in the current California rule to advising the client "to seek the advice of an independent lawyer." The California Supreme Court has held that a lawyer

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8.1 Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
		must encourage the client to seek such advice and cannot imply that such advice is unnecessary. (Rose v. State Bar (1989) 49 Cal.3d 646, 663; Rodgers v. State Bar (1989) 48 Cal.3d 300, 309, 314.) The Commission believes that this construction of the current California rule offers greater client protection than the Model Rule approach, which suggests that a lawyer does not need to be as emphatic in advising the client to seek the advice of an independent lawyer as is mandated under the current California rule and the Supreme Court's application of the language in the current rule. At the same time, the Commission departed from the current California rule language, which states that the client must be advised that the client "may seek the advice" of independent counsel. The proposed Rule requires the lawyer to advise the client "to seek the advice" of independent counsel. The change was made in response to an observation in Matter of Silverton II (2004) 4 Cal.State Bar Rptr. 643, n. 16 that "the language of Rule 3-300(B) appears inconsistent with the Supreme Court precedent that requires attorneys to advise their clients to seek independent counsel." Third, the Model Rule was revised to refer to both transaction and acquisition. The terms "transaction" and "acquisition" refer to the two types of business dealings that are covered by the Rule. The ABA Model Rule language refers only to a "transaction," which suggests that advising a client to seek independent counsel is limited to business transactions and not to adverse pecuniary interests. The Commission believes that the obligation to advise a client to seek independent counsel should apply to both transactions and acquisitions.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8.1 Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
		Finally, the Commission modified the last clause of the rule. The change conforms to the language in the current California Rule. In addition, since the reference to advice of an independent lawyer now appears earlier in the draft rule than it does in the Model Rule, the reference to "independent counsel" at the end of the rule is unnecessary and wordy.
(3) the client gives informed consent, in a writing signed by the client, to the essential terms of the transaction and the lawyer's role in the transaction, including whether the lawyer is representing the client in the transaction.	(3c) ~~the~~The client ~~gives informed consent, thereafter~~ consents in ~~a writing signed by the client,~~ to the ~~essential~~ terms of the transaction or the terms of the acquisition and the lawyer's role in the transaction or acquisition, including whether the lawyer is representing the client in the transaction or acquisition.	Paragraph (c) is adapted from the Model Rule and would expand the scope of current rule 3-300 by including a requirement that the lawyer disclose his or her role in the transaction or acquisition, including whether the lawyer is representing the client in that matter. The Model Rule language was modified to include a reference to the acquisition of an adverse pecuniary interest in order to clarify that the paragraph applies to both transactions and acquisitions.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8.1 Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[1] A lawyer's legal skill and training, together with the relationship of trust and confidence between lawyer and client, create the possibility of overreaching when the lawyer participates in a business, property or financial transaction with a client, for example, a loan or sales transaction or a lawyer investment on behalf of a client. [CONTINUED...]	~~Business Transactions Between Client and Lawyer~~ Scope of Rule [1] A lawyer's legal ~~skill and training~~ and skill, together with the relationship of trust and confidence that arises between a lawyer and client, create the possibility ~~of overreaching~~ that a lawyer, even unintentionally, will overreach or exploit client information when the lawyer ~~participates in~~ enters into a business, ~~property or financial~~ transaction with ~~the client, for example, a loan or sales~~ acquires a pecuniary interest adverse to the client. In these situations, the lawyer could influence the client for the lawyer's own benefit, could give advice to protect the lawyer's interest rather than the client's, and could use client information for the lawyer's benefit rather than the client's. This Rule is intended to afford the client the information needed to fully understand the terms and effect of the transaction or a lawyer investment on behalf acquisition and the importance of having independent legal advice. See, e.g., Beery v. State Bar (1987) 43 Cal.3d 802, 813 [239 Cal.Rptr. 121]. This Rule also requires that the transaction or acquisition be fair and reasonable to the client.	Comment [1] is a modified version of the first sentence of Comment [1] to the Model Rule and an elaboration of concepts related to the first sentence of the Model Rule Comment. The Comment is intended to explain the purpose of the Rule in light of California law. The Commission departed from the Model Rule Comment because the Model Rule Comment does not explain what client interests are protected by the Rule. The Commission concluded that explaining the underlying reasons for the Rule would assist lawyers in applying the Rule. The first sentence of Model Rule Comment [1] was modified to clarify that the Rule applies even if the possibility of overreaching is unintentional. The sentence also was revised to inform lawyers that the two principle considerations underlying the Rule are overreaching and exploitation of client information. The second sentence explains those two considerations in more detail. The rest of the Comment explains how the basic considerations that underlie the Rule are implemented in the Rule.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8.1 Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	[2] Except as set forth in Comment [5], this Rule does not apply when a lawyer enters into a transaction with or acquires a pecuniary interest adverse to a client prior to the commencement of a lawyer-client relationship with the client. [However, when a lawyer's interest in the transaction or in the adverse pecuniary interest results in the lawyer having a legal, business, financial or professional interest in the subject matter in which the lawyer is representing the client, the lawyer is required to comply with Rule 1.7(a)(2).]	Comment [2] is new. The Comment clarifies that the Rule does not apply to a transaction or acquisition of an adverse pecuniary interest that predates the lawyer-client relationship, except in specified circumstances. It also explains that while Rule 1.8.1 does not apply, other rules may apply to the lawyer's interest. The Model Rule Comments do not address this point. However, because both the California Rule and the Model Rule apply to transactions and acquisitions of adverse pecuniary interests with a client, the Rules do not apply when the party to the transaction or acquisition is not a client at the time the transaction or acquisition occurs. The Commission concluded that adding the Comment would assist lawyers in understanding and applying the Rule.
[...COMMENT [1] CONTINUED] Business Transactions Between Client and Lawyer [1] The requirements of paragraph (a) must be met even when the transaction is not closely related to the subject matter of the representation, as when a lawyer drafting a will for a client learns that the client needs money for unrelated expenses and offers to make a loan to the client. The Rule applies to lawyers engaged in the sale of goods or services related to the practice of law, for example, the sale of title insurance or investment services to existing clients of the lawyer's legal practice. See Rule 5.7. It also applies to lawyers purchasing property from estates they represent. [CONTINUED...]	Business Transactions ~~Between Client and Lawyer~~With Clients ~~[1] The requirements of paragraph (a) must be met~~This Rule applies even when the transaction is not ~~closely~~ related to the subject matter of the representation, as when a lawyer drafting a will for a client ~~learns that the client needs money for unrelated expenses and offers~~agrees to make a loan to the client.~~The Rule applies to lawyers engaged in pay expenses that are not related to the sale of representation. This Rule also applies when a lawyer sells to a client goods or non-legal services that are~~ related to the practice of law, ~~for example, the sale of titlesuch as~~ insurance, ~~brokerage~~ or investment ~~products or~~ services to ~~existing clients of~~	Comment [3] is a modified version of the second and third sentences of Model Rule Comment [1]. The Commission modified the second sentence of the Model Rule Comment to delete the reference to "closely" related transaction in order to clarify that no relationship between the representation and the transaction is required. The Commission also simplified the example given in the second sentence of Model Rule Comment [1] to avoid an inference that the Rule applies only when a lawyer, in the course of representing a client, learns about information leading to a transaction. The third sentence of the Model Rule Comment was revised to avoid the suggestion that the lawyer must be engaged in the business of selling goods and services related to the practice of law in order for the Rule to apply and to clarify that the Rule

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8.1 Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	~~the lawyer's legal practice. See Rule 5.7a client.~~	applies to any sale of law-related goods or services. The fourth sentence of the Model Rule Comment was deleted because such transactions are currently prohibited under proposed Rule 1.8.9.
[...COMMENT [1] CONTINUED] [1] It does not apply to ordinary fee arrangements between client and lawyer, which are governed by Rule 1.5, although its requirements must be met when the lawyer accepts an interest in the client's business or other nonmonetary property as payment of all or part of a fee. In addition, the Rule does not apply to standard commercial transactions between the lawyer and the client for products or services that the client generally markets to others, for example, banking or brokerage services, medical services, products manufactured or distributed by the client, and utilities' services. In such transactions, the lawyer has no advantage in dealing with the client, and the restrictions in paragraph (a) are unnecessary and impracticable.	~~[14] It also applies to lawyers purchasing property from estates they represent. It does not apply to ordinary fee arrangements between client and lawyer, which are governed by Rule 1.5, although its requirements must be met when the lawyer accepts an interest in the client's business or other nonmonetary property as payment of all or part of a fee. In addition, the~~This Rule does not apply to standard commercial transactions between the lawyer and the client for products or services that a lawyer acquires from a client on the same terms that the client generally markets them to others, for example where the lawyer has no advantage in dealing with the client, and the requirements of the Rule are unnecessary and impractical. Examples of such products and services include banking or and brokerage services, medical services, products manufactured or distributed by the client, and utilities' services. In suchThe Rule also does not apply to similar types of standard commercial transactions, for goods or services offered by a lawyer when the lawyer has no advantage in dealing with the clients, such as when a client purchases a meal at a restaurant owned by the lawyer or when the client pays for parking in a parking lot owned by the lawyer. This Rule also ordinarily would not apply	Comment [4] is an expansion of the sixth and seventh sentences of Comment [1] to the Model Rule. It is intended to include all of the types of transactions that California authorities have recognized are not covered by the Rule and to explain the reason why the Rule does not apply to the types of transactions. The first sentence of Comment [4] was added to introduce the concept that the Comment addresses. The second sentence combines the basic concepts in the two Model Rule Comment sentences in order to state the general rule. The Commission concluded that stating the general rule at the outset would assist lawyers in understanding the examples that follow. The third sentence of the Comment is a slightly modified version of the examples given in the Model Rule Comment. The fourth sentence includes examples of standard commercial transactions identified in State Bar Formal Opinion 1995-141. The Comment was drafted to explain the reason why the types of transactions described are not subject to the Rule. The fifth and sixth sentences are derived from the second paragraph of the Discussion to current Rule 3-300. The Commission expanded the discussion to clarify the circumstances in which this exception applies.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8.1 Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	where the lawyer and client each make an investment on terms offered to the general public or a significant portion thereof as when, for example, a lawyer invests in a limited partnership syndicated by a third party, and the ~~restrictions in paragraph (lawyer's client makes the same investment on the same terms. When a) are unnecessary lawyer and impracticable~~ a client each invest in the same business on the same terms offered to the public or a significant portion thereof, and the lawyer does not advise, influence or solicit the client with respect to the transaction, the lawyer does not enter into the transaction "with" the client for purposes of this Rule.
	[5] This Rule does not apply to an agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client or to the modification of such an agreement, unless the agreement or modification confers on the lawyer an ownership, possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client, such as when the lawyer obtains an interest in the client's property to secure the amount of the lawyer's past due or future fees. An agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client, and material modifications to such agreements that are adverse to the interests of the client, are governed in part by Rule 1.5. Even when this Rule does not apply to the negotiation of the agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client, other rules, statutes and fiduciary principles might apply. See Rule 1.5, Comment [3B].	Comment [5] has no counterpart in the Model Rule. The first sentence is derived from the Discussion to the current California Rule. The Commission expanded the discussion in the current rule to give guidance regarding when a agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client confers an ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client. The second sentence is new. It refers lawyer's to Rule 1.5, where the Commission recommends that obligations and guidance with respect to fee agreement modifications be placed. See proposed Rule 1.5 & comments [3] – [3C] thereto. The third sentence provides a specific reference to proposed Rule 1.5, Comment [3B], which is intended to provide guidance, by reference to case law and specific rules and statutes, to lawyers on fiduciary duties that might govern fee agreements even when neither this Rule nor Rule 1.5 applies.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8.1 Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	[6] This Rule does not apply to an agreement to advance to or deposit with a lawyer a sum to be applied to fees or costs incurred in the future. This Rule also does not apply to an agreement with a client for a contingent fee in a civil case, unless the agreement confers on the owner an ownership, possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client.	Comment [6] has no counterpart in the Model Rule. The first sentence clarifies that an advance deposit for fees and costs is not an ownership, possessory, security or other adverse pecuniary interest. The Commission concluded that the addition was warranted because the current California Rule is silent on the subject, and an advance for fees and costs could be construed as taking an interest in the client's property. The Commission concluded that adding the sentence would clarify the scope of the Rule. The second sentence clarifies that a contingency fee agreement is not subject to the Rule, unless the agreement confers an ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client. The current California Rule does not address whether a contingent fee is an ownership, possessory or security interest in the client's property. In light of the fact that a contingent fee agreement has characteristics that could be construed as such an interest and the benefit such arrangements offer for clients, the Commission concluded that clarification was warranted.
	Adverse Pecuniary Interests [7] An ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client arises when a lawyer acquires an interest in a client's property that is or may become detrimental to the client, even when the lawyer's intent is to aid the client. Hawk v. State Bar (1988) 45 Cal.3d 589 [247 Cal.Rptr. 599]. An adverse pecuniary interest arises, for example,	Comment [7] has no counterpart in the Model Rule. The Comment explains what constitutes an adverse pecuniary interest under the Rule. The Comment also helps clarify that the new Rule does not abrogate existing law on the subject.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8.1 Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	when the lawyer's personal financial interest conflicts with the client's interest in the property; when a lawyer obtains an interest in a cause of action or subject matter of litigation or other matter the lawyer is conducting for the client; or when the interest can be used to summarily extinguish the client's interest in the client's property. See Fletcher v. Davis (2004) 33 Cal.4th 61 [14 Cal.Rptr.3d 58]. An adverse pecuniary interest also arises when a lawyer acquires an interest in an obligation owed to a client or acquires an interest in an entity indebted to a client. See Rodgers v. State Bar (1989) 48 Cal.3d 300 [256 Cal.Rptr. 381]; Kapelus v. State Bar (1987) 44 Cal.3d 179 [242 Cal.Rptr. 196].
	Full Disclosure to the Client [8] Paragraph (a) requires that full disclosure be transmitted to the client in writing in a manner that reasonably can be understood by the client. Whether the disclosure reasonably can be understood by the client is based on what is objectively reasonable under the circumstances.	Comment [8] does not have a counterpart in the Comment to the Model Rule. The proposed rule includes the Model Rule requirement that the disclosure be transmitted “in a manner that reasonably can be understood by the client.” The Model Rule’s Comment addresses other elements of the Rule, but does not address this element. The Commission concluded that because this is an important element of the Rule, it should be discussed in the Comment. The Comment alerts lawyers that the application of this element of the Rule will depend on the circumstances.
[2] Paragraph (a)(1) requires that the transaction itself be fair to the client and that its essential terms be communicated to the client, in writing, in a	[29] Full disclosure under Paragraph (a)(1) requires that a lawyer to provide the client with the same advice regarding the transaction itself be fair or	Comment [9] addresses what the full disclosure element of the Rule requires. The Commission rejected most of Comment [2] to the Model Rule. Model Rule Comment [2] largely restates the manner that can be reasonably understood. Paragraph (a)(2) requires that the client also be advised, in writing, of the desirability of seeking the advice of independent legal counsel. It also requires that the client be given a reasonable opportunity to obtain such advice. Paragraph (a)(3) requires that the lawyer obtain the client's informed consent, in a writing signed by the client, both to the essential terms of the transaction and to the lawyer's role. When necessary, the lawyer should discuss both the material risks of the proposed transaction, including any risk presented by the lawyer's involvement, and the existence of reasonably available alternatives and should explain why the advice of independent legal counsel is desirable. See Rule 1.0(e) (definition of informed consent).	acquisition that the lawyer would provide to the client ~~and that its essential terms be communicated to the client, in writing,~~ in a manner that can be reasonably understood. ~~Paragraph (transaction with a) third party. Beery v. State Bar (21987) 43 Cal.3d 802 [239 Cal.Rptr. 121]. It requires that a lawyer to inform the client also be advised, in writing, of all of the desirability terms and all relevant facts of seeking the advice~~ transaction or acquisition, including the nature and extent of independent legal counsel, the lawyer's role and compensation in connection with the transaction or acquisition. It also requires ~~that the client be given a reasonable opportunity to obtain such advice. Paragraph (a)(3) requires that the lawyer obtain the client's informed consent, in a writing signed by~~ to fully inform the client, ~~both to the essential terms of the transaction and to the lawyer's role. When necessary, the lawyer should discuss both the material risks of the proposed transaction, including any risk presented by the lawyer's involvement, or acquisition and facts that might discourage the existence of reasonably available alternatives and should explain why~~ client from engaging in the advice of independent legal counsel is desirable transaction or acquisition. See Rule 1.0 ~~Rodgers v. State Bar (e1989) 48 Cal.3d 300 [256 Cal.Rptr. 381]; Clancy v. State Bar (definition of informed consent 1969) 71 Cal.2d 140 [77 Cal.Rptr. 657]; Brockway v. State Bar (1991) 53 Cal.3d 51 [278 Cal.Rptr. 836]. The burden is always on the lawyer to show that the transaction or acquisition and its terms were fair and just and that the client~~	requirements of the Model Rule with little elaboration. The Commission concluded that discussion in the Model Rule Comment regarding disclosures to the client is vague, limited and incomplete and lacks reference to the principles governing disclosure in general. California has a well developed body of law in this area, which better explains the nature of the duty than the Model Rule Comment.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8.1 Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8.1 Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[3] The risk to a client is greatest when the client expects the lawyer to represent the client in the transaction itself or when the lawyer's financial interest otherwise poses a significant risk that the lawyer's representation of the client will be materially limited by the lawyer's financial interest in the transaction. Here the lawyer's role requires that the lawyer must comply, not only with the requirements of paragraph (a), but also with the requirements of Rule 1.7. Under that Rule, the lawyer must disclose the risks associated with the lawyer's dual role as both legal adviser and participant in the transaction, such as the risk that the lawyer will structure the transaction or give legal advice in a way that favors the lawyer's interests at the expense of the client. Moreover, the lawyer must obtain the client's informed consent. In some cases, the lawyer's interest may be such that Rule 1.7 will preclude the lawyer from seeking the client's consent to the transaction.	was fully advised. Hunnicutt v. State Bar (1988) 44 Cal.3d 362 [243 Cal.Rptr. 699]; Felton v. Le Breton (1891) 92 Cal. 457, 469 [28 P. 490, 494]. ~~[3]~~¹⁰ The risk to a client is ~~greatest~~^{heightened} when the client expects the lawyer to represent the client in the transaction ~~itself or when the lawyer's financial interest otherwise poses a significant risk that the lawyer's representation of the client will be materially limited by the lawyer's financial interest in the transaction. Here the lawyer's role requires that the lawyer must comply, not only with the requirements of paragraph (a), but also with the requirements of Rule 1.7~~^{acquisition itself}. Under ~~that~~^{this} Rule, the lawyer must disclose the risks associated with the lawyer's dual role as both legal adviser and participant in the transaction ~~or acquisition~~, such as the risk that the lawyer will structure the transaction ~~or acquisition~~ or give legal advice in a way that favors the lawyer's interests at the expense of the client. ~~Moreover~~^{Because the lawyer has an interest in the transaction or acquisition}, the lawyer must ~~obtain the client's informed consent~~^{also comply with Rule 1.7(a)(2)}. In some cases, the lawyer's interest may be such that Rule 1.7 will preclude the lawyer from ~~seeking~~^{representing} the ~~client's consent to~~^{client in} the transaction ~~or acquisition~~.	Comment [10] is adapted from Comment [3] of the Model Rule. The Commission changed the reference in first line of the Model Rule Comment from “greatest” to “heightened.” The Commission concluded that the reference to “greatest” was an overstatement and could be misconstrued to suggest that the Rule had less application in all other situations or that all other situations do not pose comparable risks, which is not the case. Although the second part of the first sentence of the Comment to the Model Rule is deleted in this Comment, its subject is addressed in Comments [11] and [12] The remaining changes are to conform the Comment to the terminology in the draft Rule, which distinguishes between business transactions and acquisitions of adverse pecuniary interests. The terminology was added in order to clarify that the Comment applies to both. The sentence regarding the applicability of Rule 1.7(a)(2) was revised to account for differences between the Model Rule and the proposed new California Rule, which does not require a client's informed consent.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8.1 Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	[11]There are additional considerations when the lawyer-client relationship will continue after the transaction or acquisition. For example, if the lawyer and the client enter into a transaction to form or acquire a business, the client might expect the lawyer to represent the business or the client with respect to the business after the transaction is completed. When the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the client expects the lawyer to represent the business or the client with respect to the business or interest after the transaction or acquisition is completed, the lawyer must act in either of two ways. Before entering into the transaction or making the acquisition, the lawyer must either (i) inform the client that the lawyer will not represent the business, or the client with respect to the business or interest, and must then act accordingly; or (ii) disclose in writing the risks associated with the lawyer's dual role as both legal adviser and participant in the business or owner of the interest. The client consent requirement in paragraph (c) includes a requirement that the client consent to the risks to the lawyer's representation of the client, which the lawyer has disclosed to the client as required by this Rule. A lawyer must also comply with the requirements of Rule 1.7(a)(2) when the lawyer has a personal interest in the subject matter of the representation as a result of the transaction or acquisition.	Comment [11] addresses considerations when the lawyer continues to represent a client after entering into the transaction or acquisition. The Comment elaborates on the a more limited discussion of this subject in Comment [2] to the Model Rule and is directed to situations where the lawyer continues to represent the client with respect to the transaction or acquisition or the client expects the lawyer to do so. In addition, the Comment accounts for a decision by the State Bar Court and other authorities that hold that a lawyer's disclosure obligations under the current California Rule includes discussing the possible effect of a transaction or acquisition on the lawyer-client relationship. The Commission concluded that Comment [2] to the Model Rule does not clearly include disclosure of the effect of the transaction or acquisition on the lawyer-client relationship as part of the Rule's disclosure requirement. Including such disclosure in the Rule affords greater client protection because of the broad scope of the disclosure requirement in the proposed Rule and because the disclosure would be part of a protocol that includes the opportunity for review by independent counsel. At the same time, the Commission determined that lawyers are still required to comply with Rule 1.7, when that Rule applies. In light of these considerations, the Comment also addresses a lawyer's disclosure obligation when the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the client expects the lawyer to continue representing the client with respect to the transaction or acquisition after the transaction or acquisition is consummated. The Comment clarifies that the lawyer has an affirmative obligation to disclose either that the lawyer will not represent the client or the risks of the lawyer's dual role when the lawyer will continue to represent the client.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8.1 Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	[12] Even when the lawyer does not represent the client in the transaction or acquisition, there may be circumstances when the lawyer's interest in the transaction or acquisition may interfere with the lawyer's independent professional judgment or faithful representation of the client in another matter. When the lawyer's interest in the transaction or acquisition may interfere with the lawyer's independent professional judgment or faithful representation of the client, the lawyer must also disclose in writing the potential adverse effect on the lawyer-client relationship that may result from the lawyer's interest in the transaction or acquisition and must obtain the client's consent under paragraph (c). A lawyer must also comply with the requirements of Rule 1.7(a)(2) when the lawyer has a personal interest in the subject matter of the representation as a result of the transaction or acquisition.	Comment [12] expands on the discussion at the end of Comment [10] above, which, in turn, is derived from Comment [2] to the Model Rule. It addresses the situation in which the lawyer continues to represent the client in matters other than with respect to the transaction or acquisition. As in the case of Comment [11], the Comment incorporates a requirement that the lawyer disclose the effect of the transaction or acquisition on the lawyer's representation of the client in other matters as part of the Rule's disclosure obligation. It also clarifies that the lawyer also is required to comply with Rule 1.7 where applicable.
	Opportunity to Seek Advice of Independent Counsel [13] Under paragraph (b), a lawyer must encourage the client to seek the advice of an independent lawyer and may not imply that obtaining the advice of an independent lawyer is unnecessary. An independent lawyer is a lawyer who (i) does not have a financial interest in the transaction or acquisition, (ii) does not have a close legal, business, financial, professional or personal	Comment [13] addresses the requirement that a lawyer encourage the client to seek the advice of independent counsel. Since the California Rule departs from the Model Rule in this regard and imposes a more client protective standard, the Commission concluded that the requirement should be addressed in the Comment. The Comment also clarifies what constitutes independent

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8.1 Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	relationship with the lawyer seeking the client's consent, and (iii) represents the client with respect to the transaction or acquisition.	counsel, which the Model Rule does not address. The elements described in the Comment are derived from California court decisions.
[4] If the client is independently represented in the transaction, paragraph (a)(2) of this Rule is inapplicable, and the paragraph (a)(1) requirement for full disclosure is satisfied either by a written disclosure by the lawyer involved in the transaction or by the client's independent counsel. The fact that the client was independently represented in the transaction is relevant in determining whether the agreement was fair and reasonable to the client as paragraph (a)(1) further requires.	~~[4] If a lawyer is not required to advise the client is independently represented to seek the advice of independent counsel if the client already has independent counsel with respect to the transaction or acquisition; however, the lawyer must still afford the client a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of the independent counsel. A lawyer is not required to provide legal advice to a client who is represented by independent counsel; however, the lawyer is still required under paragraph (a)(2) of this Rule is inapplicable, and the paragraph (a)(1) requirement for to make full disclosure is satisfied either by a written disclosure by to the lawyer involved client in writing of all material facts related to the transaction or by acquisition when the client's independent counsel lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the client has not been informed of such facts.~~ The fact that the client was independently represented in the transaction or acquisition is relevant in determining whether the ~~agreement was~~ terms of the transaction or acquisition are fair and reasonable to the client as paragraph (a)(1) further requires.	Comment [14] is an adaptation of Comment [4] to the Model Rule. It reiterates the limitation of the lawyer's duty to advise a client to seek the advice of independent counsel when the client is represented by such counsel. However, the Commission narrowed the limitation to only the advice to seek independent counsel. The Model Rule exempts the lawyer from all of the requirements of paragraph (b) of the Rule, which would include the duty to afford a client a reasonable opportunity to obtain the advice of independent counsel. The Commission also modified the portion of the Comment dealing with a lawyer's obligation to provide legal advice to the client when the client is represented by independent counsel. The Model Rule Comment states that the full disclosure requirements in the Rule are satisfied either by written disclosure by the lawyer in the transaction or by independent counsel. The Commission modified the Comment to state that the lawyer in the transaction is not required to give legal advice to the client when the client has independent counsel, but must disclose all material facts related to the transaction or acquisition when the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the client has been informed of such facts. A majority of the Commission concluded that the language in the Model Rule Comment is too broad in that it potentially would exempt a lawyer from disclosing material facts that are not known to the client if independent counsel has provided a disclosure to

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8.1 Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
		the client in writing. The Commission modified the Comment to require the lawyer who is subject to the Rule to disclose all material facts the lawyer knows or reasonably should know are not known to the client. However, a majority of the Commission also considered the reference to disclosure by either the lawyer in the transaction or independent counsel unworkable. As a result of the lawyer-client privilege between the client and the client's independent counsel, the lawyer subject to the Rule will lack information regarding what the client and independent counsel discuss, which, in turn, could limit the value of the advice the lawyer could give the client. The lawyer-client privilege in the client's relationship with independent counsel would prevent the lawyer subject to the Rule from knowing the content of the disclosure or the advice the client is receiving from independent counsel. Requiring the lawyer subject to the Rule to give the client legal advice when the client is already receiving advice from independent counsel interferes with the client's relationship with independent counsel and may invade the confidential relationship between the client and independent counsel. In addition, the Rule exists because the lawyer in the transaction or acquisition has a conflict of interest as a result of the lawyer's interest in the transaction or acquisition. One of the purposes of the Rule is to afford a client the protection of advice from a lawyer who is free of the conflict of interest. When the client is represented by independent counsel, the client receives that protection. In the view of a majority of the Commission it does not make sense to require the lawyer who has a conflict to continue to advise the client, when the client is being advise by a lawyer who does not have the conflict. As a result, the

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8.1 Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
		Commission voted not to require the lawyer in the transaction or acquisition to provide legal advice to the client when the client is represented by independent counsel in the matter. The foregoing modification was the subject of considerable debate at the Commission. A minority of the Commission believe that the lawyer in the transaction should be required to make full disclosure to the client, including providing legal advice, when the client is represented by independent counsel. The minority maintains that not limiting the lawyer's disclosure obligation assures that the client receives full disclosure. It assures that the client does not suffer if the independent lawyer fails to advise the client properly. In this situation, the client has two lawyers and is entitled to advice from, the loyalty of, and candor, from both of them.
* * * Imputation of Prohibitions [20] Under paragraph (k), a prohibition on conduct by an individual lawyer in paragraphs (a) through (i) also applies to all lawyers associated in a firm with the personally prohibited lawyer. For example, one lawyer in a firm may not enter into a business transaction with a client of another member of the firm without complying with paragraph (a), even if the first lawyer is not personally involved in the representation of the client. The prohibition set forth in paragraph (j) is personal and is not applied to associated lawyers.	* * * Imputation of Prohibitions ~~[20] Under paragraph (k), a prohibition on conduct by an individual lawyer in paragraphs (a) through (i) also applies to all lawyers associated in a firm with the personally prohibited lawyer. For example, one lawyer in a firm may not enter into a business transaction with a client of another member of the firm without complying with paragraph (a), even if the first lawyer is not personally involved in the representation of the client. The prohibition set forth in paragraph (j) is personal and is not applied to associated lawyers.~~	Comment [20] of the Model Rule is deleted. The subject of this Comment is addressed in proposed Rule 1.8.11, which is the counterpart to Model Rule 1.8(k).

Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client

(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to the Public Comment Draft)

A lawyer shall not enter into a business transaction with a client; or knowingly acquire an ownership, possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client, unless each of the following requirements has been satisfied:

- (a) The transaction or acquisition and its terms are fair and reasonable to the client and are fully disclosed and transmitted in writing to the client in a manner that reasonably can be understood by the client; and
- (b) The client either is represented in the transaction or acquisition by an independent lawyer of the client's choice or is advised in writing by the lawyer to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client's choice and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice; and
- (c) The client thereafter consents in writing to the terms of the transaction or the terms of the acquisition and the lawyer's role in the transaction or acquisition, including whether the lawyer is representing the client in the transaction or acquisition.

COMMENT

Scope of Rule

- [1] A lawyer's legal training and skill, and the relationship of trust and confidence that arises between a lawyer and client, create the possibility that a lawyer, even unintentionally, will overreach or exploit client information when the lawyer enters into a business transaction with the client or acquires a pecuniary interest adverse to the client. In these situations, the lawyer could influence the client for the lawyer's own benefit, could give advice to protect the lawyer's interest rather than the client's, and could use client information for the lawyer's benefit rather than the client's. This Rule is intended to afford the client the information needed to fully understand the terms and effect of the transaction or acquisition and the importance of having independent legal advice. (See, e.g., Beery v. State Bar (1987) 43 Cal.3d 802, 813 [239 Cal.Rptr. 121].) This Rule also requires that the transaction or acquisition be fair and reasonable to the client.

- [2] Except as set forth in Comment [5], this Rule does not apply when a lawyer enters into a transaction with or acquires a pecuniary interest adverse to a client prior to the commencement of a lawyer-client relationship with the client. However, when a lawyer's interest in the transaction or in the adverse pecuniary interest results in the lawyer having a personal interest in the subject matter in which the lawyer is representing the client, the lawyer is required to comply with Rule 1.7(a)(2).

Business Transactions With Clients

- [3] This Rule applies even when the transaction is not related to the subject matter of the representation, as when a lawyer drafting a will for a client agrees to make a loan to the client to pay expenses that are not related to the representation. This Rule also applies when a lawyer sells to a client goods or non-legal services that are related to the practice of law, such as insurance, brokerage or investment products or services to a client.

- [4] This Rule does not apply to standard commercial transactions for products or services that a lawyer acquires from a client on the same terms that the client generally markets them to others, where the lawyer has no advantage in dealing with the client, and the requirements of the Rule are unnecessary and impractical. Examples of such products and services include banking and brokerage services, medical services, products manufactured or distributed by the client, and utilities' services. The Rule also does not apply to similar types of standard commercial transactions for goods or services offered by a lawyer when the lawyer has no advantage in dealing with the clients, such as when a client purchases a meal at a restaurant owned by the lawyer or when the client pays for parking in a parking lot owned by the lawyer. This Rule also ordinarily would not apply where the lawyer and client each make an investment on terms offered to the general public or a significant portion thereof as when, for example, a lawyer invests in a limited partnership syndicated by a third party, and the lawyer's client makes the same investment on the same terms. When a lawyer and a client each invest in the same business on the same terms offered to the public or a significant portion thereof, and the lawyer does not advise, influence or solicit the client with respect to the transaction, the lawyer does not enter into the transaction "with" the client for purposes of this Rule.
- [5] This Rule does not apply to an agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client or to the modification of such an agreement, unless the agreement or modification confers on the lawyer an ownership, possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client, such as when the lawyer obtains an interest in the client's property to secure the amount of the lawyer's past due or future fees. An agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client, and material modifications to such agreements that are adverse to the interests of the client, are governed in part by Rule 1.5. Even when this Rule does not apply to the negotiation of the agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client, other ~~Rules~~rules, statutes and fiduciary principles might apply. See Rule 1.5, Comment [3B].

- [6] ~~An~~This Rule does not apply to an agreement to advance to or deposit with a lawyer a sum to be applied to fees or costs incurred in the future ~~is not an ownership, possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client for purposes of this Rule.~~ This Rule ~~is also does~~ not ~~intended to~~ apply to an agreement with a client for a contingent fee in a civil case, unless the agreement confers on the owner an ownership, possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client.

Adverse Pecuniary Interests

- [7] An ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client arises when a lawyer acquires an interest in a client's property that is or may become detrimental to the client, even when the lawyer's intent is to aid the client. Hawk v. State Bar (1988) 45 Cal.3d 589 [247 Cal.Rptr. 599]. An adverse pecuniary interest arises, for example, when the lawyer's personal financial interest conflicts with the client's interest in the property; when a lawyer obtains an interest in a cause of action or subject matter of litigation or other matter the lawyer is conducting for the client; or when the interest can be used to summarily extinguish the client's interest in the client's property. ~~(See~~ Fletcher v. Davis (2004) 33 Cal.4th 61 [14 Cal.Rptr.3d 58].~~)~~ An adverse pecuniary interest also arises when a lawyer acquires an interest in an obligation owed to a client or acquires an interest in an entity indebted to a client. ~~(See~~ Rodgers v. State Bar (1989) 48 Cal.3d

300 [256 Cal.Rptr. 381]; Kapelus v. State Bar (1987) 44 Cal.3d 179 [242 Cal.Rptr. 196].

Full Disclosure to the Client

- [8] Paragraph (a) requires that full disclosure be transmitted to the client in writing in a manner that reasonably can be understood by the client. Whether the disclosure reasonably can be understood by the client is based on what is objectively reasonable under the circumstances.
- [9] Full disclosure under paragraph (a) requires a lawyer to provide the client with the same advice regarding the transaction or acquisition that the lawyer would provide to the client in a transaction with a third party. Beery v. State Bar (1987) 43 Cal.3d 802 [239 Cal.Rptr. 121]. It requires a lawyer to inform the client of all of the terms and all relevant facts of the transaction or acquisition, including the nature and extent of the lawyer's role and compensation in connection with the transaction or acquisition. It also requires the lawyer to fully inform the client of risks of the transaction or acquisition and facts that might discourage the client from engaging in the transaction or acquisition. (See Rodgers v. State Bar (1989) 48 Cal.3d 300 [256 Cal.Rptr. 381]; Clancy v. State Bar (1969) 71 Cal.2d 140 [77 Cal.Rptr. 657]; Brockway v. State Bar (1991) 53 Cal.3d 51 [278 Cal.Rptr. 836].) ~~Except in a disciplinary proceeding, the~~ The burden is always on the lawyer to show that the transaction or acquisition and its terms were fair and just and that the client was fully advised. [Hunnecutt v. State Bar \(1988\) 44 Cal.3d 362 \[243 Cal.Rptr. 699\]](#); Felton v. Le Breton (1891) 92 Cal. 457, 469 [28 P. 490, 494].

- [10] The risk to a client is heightened when the client expects the lawyer to represent the client in the transaction or acquisition itself. Under this Rule, the lawyer must disclose the risks associated with the lawyer's dual role as both legal adviser and participant in the transaction or acquisition, such as the risk that the lawyer will structure the transaction or acquisition or give legal advice in a way that favors the lawyer's interests at the expense of the client. Because the lawyer has a personal interest in the transaction or acquisition, the lawyer must also comply with Rule 1.7(a)(2). In some cases, the lawyer's interest may be such that Rule 1.7 will preclude the lawyer from representing the client in the transaction or acquisition.
- [11] There are additional considerations when the lawyer-client relationship will continue after the transaction or acquisition. For example, if the lawyer and the client enter into a transaction to form or acquire a business, the client might expect the lawyer to represent the business or the client with respect to the business after the transaction is completed. When the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the client expects the lawyer to represent the business or the client with respect to the business or interest after the transaction or acquisition is completed, the lawyer must act in either of two ways. Before entering into the transaction or making the acquisition, the lawyer must either (i) inform the client that the lawyer will not represent the business, or the client with respect to the business or interest, and must then act accordingly; or (ii) disclose in writing the risks associated with the lawyer's dual role as both legal adviser and participant in the business or owner of the interest. The client consent requirement in paragraph (c) includes a requirement that the client consent to the risks to the lawyer's representation of the client, which the lawyer has disclosed to the client as required by this Rule. A lawyer must also comply with the requirements of Rule 1.7(a)(2) when the lawyer has a personal interest in the subject matter of the representation as a result of the transaction or acquisition.

- [12] Even when the lawyer does not represent the client in the transaction or acquisition, there may be circumstances when the lawyer's interest in the transaction or acquisition may interfere with the lawyer's independent professional judgment or faithful representation of the client in another matter. When the lawyer's interest in the transaction or acquisition may interfere with the lawyer's independent professional judgment or faithful representation of the client, the lawyer must also disclose in writing the potential adverse effect on the lawyer-client relationship that may result from the lawyer's interest in the transaction or acquisition and must obtain the client's consent under paragraph (c). A lawyer must also comply with the requirements of Rule 1.7(a)(2) when the lawyer has a personal interest in the subject matter of the representation as a result of the transaction or acquisition.

Full Disclosure and Consent

Opportunity to Seek Advice of Independent Counsel

- [13] Under paragraph (b), a lawyer must encourage the client to seek the advice of an independent lawyer and may not imply that obtaining the advice of an independent lawyer is unnecessary. An independent lawyer is a lawyer who (i) does not have a financial interest in the transaction or acquisition, (ii) does not have a close legal, business, financial, professional or personal relationship with the lawyer seeking the client's consent, and (iii) represents the client with respect to the transaction or acquisition.
- [14] A lawyer is not required to advise the client to seek the advice of independent counsel if the client already has independent counsel with respect to the transaction or acquisition; however, the lawyer must still afford the client a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of the independent counsel. A lawyer is not required to provide legal advice to a client who is represented by independent counsel; however, the lawyer is still required under paragraph (a) to make full disclosure to the client in writing of all material facts related to the transaction or acquisition when the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the client has not been informed of such facts. The fact that the client was independently represented in the transaction or acquisition is relevant in determining whether the terms of the transaction or acquisition are fair and reasonable to the client as paragraph (a) requires.

Rule ~~3-300-Avoiding~~1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to ~~a~~the Client

(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to Current California Rule)

A ~~member~~lawyer shall not enter into a business transaction with a client; or knowingly acquire an ownership, possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client, unless each of the following requirements has been satisfied:

- ~~(A)~~(a) The transaction or acquisition and its terms are fair and reasonable to the client and are fully disclosed and transmitted in writing to the client in a manner ~~which should~~that reasonably ~~have been~~can be understood by the client; and
- ~~(B)~~(b) The client either is represented in the transaction or acquisition by an independent lawyer of the client's choice or is advised in writing ~~that~~by the ~~client may~~lawyer to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client's choice and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice; and
- ~~(C)~~(c) The client thereafter consents in writing to the terms of the transaction or the terms of the acquisition and the lawyer's role in the transaction or acquisition, including whether the lawyer is representing the client in the transaction or acquisition.

Discussion:COMMENT

~~Rule 3-300 is not intended to apply to the agreement by which the member is retained by the client, unless the agreement confers on the member an ownership, possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client. Such an agreement is governed, in part, by rule 4-200.~~

Scope of Rule

- [1] A lawyer's legal training and skill, and the relationship of trust and confidence that arises between a lawyer and client, create the possibility that a lawyer, even unintentionally, will overreach or exploit client information when the lawyer enters into a business transaction with the client or acquires a pecuniary interest adverse to the client. In these situations, the lawyer could influence the client for the lawyer's own benefit, could give advice to protect the lawyer's interest rather than the client's, and could use client information for the lawyer's benefit rather than the client's. This Rule is intended to afford the client the information needed to fully understand the terms and effect of the transaction or acquisition and the importance of having independent legal advice. See, e.g., Beery v. State Bar (1987) 43 Cal.3d 802, 813 [239 Cal.Rptr. 121]. This Rule also requires that the transaction or acquisition be fair and reasonable to the client.
- [2] Except as set forth in Comment [5], this Rule does not apply when a lawyer enters into a transaction with or acquires a pecuniary interest adverse to a client prior to the commencement of a lawyer-client relationship with the client. However, when a lawyer's interest in the transaction or in the adverse pecuniary interest results in the lawyer having a personal interest in the subject matter in which the lawyer is representing the client, the lawyer is required to comply with Rule 1.7(a)(2).

Business Transactions With Clients

- [3] This Rule applies even when the transaction is not related to the subject matter of the representation, as when a lawyer drafting a will for a client agrees to make a loan to the client to pay expenses that are not related to the representation. This Rule also applies when a lawyer sells to a client goods or non-legal services that are related to the practice of law, such as insurance, brokerage or investment products or services to a client.
- [4] This Rule ~~3-300 is~~ does not ~~intended~~ apply to standard commercial transactions for products or services that a lawyer acquires from a client on the same terms that the client generally markets them to others, where the lawyer has no advantage in dealing with the client, and the requirements of the Rule are unnecessary and impractical. Examples of such products and services include banking and brokerage services, medical services, products manufactured or distributed by the client, and utilities' services. The Rule also does not apply to similar types of standard commercial transactions for goods or services offered by a lawyer when the lawyer has no advantage in dealing with the clients, such as when a client purchases a meal at a restaurant owned by the lawyer or when the client pays for parking in a parking lot owned by the lawyer. This Rule also ordinarily would not apply where the ~~member~~ lawyer and client each make an investment on terms offered to the general public or a significant portion thereof. ~~For as~~ when, for example, ~~rule 3-300 is not intended to apply where A,~~ a ~~member~~ lawyer invests in a limited partnership syndicated by a third party. ~~B,~~ A's and the lawyer's client, makes the same investment on the same terms. ~~Although A~~ When a lawyer and B ~~are a client~~ each ~~investing~~ invest in the same business on the same terms offered to the public or a significant portion thereof, ~~A did~~ and the lawyer does not advise, influence or solicit the client with respect to the transaction, the lawyer does not enter into the transaction "with" ~~B for~~ the client for purposes of ~~the rule~~ this Rule.

~~Rule 3-300 is intended to apply where the member wishes to obtain an interest in client's property in order to secure the amount of the member's past due or future fees.~~

- [5] This Rule does not apply to an agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client or to the modification of such an agreement, unless the agreement or modification confers on the lawyer an ownership, possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client, such as when the lawyer obtains an interest in the client's property to secure the amount of the lawyer's past due or future fees. An agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client, and material modifications to such agreements that are adverse to the interests of the client, are governed in part by Rule 1.5. Even when this Rule does not apply to the negotiation of the agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client, other rules, statutes and fiduciary principles might apply. See Rule 1.5, Comment [3B].
- [6] This Rule does not apply to an agreement to advance to or deposit with a lawyer a sum to be applied to fees or costs incurred in the future. This Rule also does not apply to an agreement with a client for a contingent fee in a civil case, unless the agreement confers on the owner an ownership, possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client.

Adverse Pecuniary Interests

- [7] An ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client arises when a lawyer acquires an interest in a client's property that is or may become detrimental to the client, even when the lawyer's intent is to aid the client. Hawk v. State Bar (1988) 45 Cal.3d 589 [247 Cal.Rptr. 599]. An adverse pecuniary interest arises, for example, when the lawyer's personal financial interest conflicts with the client's interest in the property; when a lawyer obtains an interest in a cause of action or subject matter of litigation or other matter the lawyer is conducting for the client; or when the interest can be used to summarily extinguish the client's interest in the client's property. See Fletcher v. Davis (2004) 33 Cal.4th 61 [14 Cal.Rptr.3d 58]. An adverse pecuniary interest also arises when a lawyer acquires an interest in an obligation owed to a client or acquires an interest in an entity indebted to a client. See Rodgers v. State Bar (1989) 48 Cal.3d 300 [256 Cal.Rptr. 381]; Kapelus v. State Bar (1987) 44 Cal.3d 179 [242 Cal.Rptr. 196].

Full Disclosure to the Client

- [8] Paragraph (a) requires that full disclosure be transmitted to the client in writing in a manner that reasonably can be understood by the client. Whether the disclosure reasonably can be understood by the client is based on what is objectively reasonable under the circumstances.
- [9] Full disclosure under paragraph (a) requires a lawyer to provide the client with the same advice regarding the transaction or acquisition that the lawyer would provide to the client in a transaction with a third party. Beery v. State Bar (1987) 43 Cal.3d 802 [239 Cal.Rptr. 121]. It requires a lawyer to inform the client of all of the terms and all relevant facts of the transaction or acquisition, including the nature and extent of the lawyer's role and compensation in connection with the transaction or acquisition. It also requires the lawyer to fully inform the client of risks of the transaction or acquisition and facts that might discourage the client from engaging in the transaction or acquisition. See Rodgers v. State Bar (1989) 48 Cal.3d 300 [256 Cal.Rptr. 381]; Clancy v. State Bar (1969) 71 Cal.2d 140 [77 Cal.Rptr. 657]; Brockway v. State Bar (1991) 53 Cal.3d 51 [278 Cal.Rptr. 836]. The burden is always on the lawyer to show that the transaction or acquisition and its terms were fair and just and that the client was fully advised. Hunnecutt v. State Bar (1988) 44 Cal.3d 362 [243 Cal.Rptr. 699]; Felton v. Le Breton (1891) 92 Cal. 457, 469 [28 P. 490, 494].

- [10] The risk to a client is heightened when the client expects the lawyer to represent the client in the transaction or acquisition itself. Under this Rule, the lawyer must disclose the risks associated with the lawyer's dual role as both legal adviser and participant in the transaction or acquisition, such as the risk that the lawyer will structure the transaction or acquisition or give legal advice in a way that favors the lawyer's interests at the expense of the client. Because the lawyer has a personal interest in the transaction or acquisition, the lawyer must also comply with Rule 1.7(a)(2). In some cases, the lawyer's interest may be such that Rule 1.7 will preclude the lawyer from representing the client in the transaction or acquisition.
- [11] There are additional considerations when the lawyer-client relationship will continue after the transaction or acquisition. For example, if the lawyer and the client enter into a transaction to form or acquire a business, the client might expect the lawyer to represent the business or the client with respect to the business after the transaction is completed. When the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the client expects the lawyer to represent the business or the client with respect to the business or interest after the transaction or acquisition is completed, the lawyer must act in either of two ways. Before entering into the transaction or making the acquisition, the lawyer must either (i) inform the client that the lawyer will not represent the business, or the client with respect to the business or interest, and must then act accordingly; or (ii) disclose in writing the risks associated with the lawyer's dual role as both legal adviser and participant in the business or owner of the interest. The client consent requirement in paragraph (c) includes a requirement that the client consent to the risks to the lawyer's representation of the client, which the lawyer has disclosed to the client as required by this Rule. A lawyer must also comply with the requirements of Rule 1.7(a)(2) when the lawyer has a personal interest in the subject matter of the representation as a result of the transaction or acquisition.

- [12] Even when the lawyer does not represent the client in the transaction or acquisition, there may be circumstances when the lawyer's interest in the transaction or acquisition may interfere with the lawyer's independent professional judgment or faithful representation of the client in another matter. When the lawyer's interest in the transaction or acquisition may interfere with the lawyer's independent professional judgment or faithful representation of the client, the lawyer must also disclose in writing the potential adverse effect on the lawyer-client relationship that may result from the lawyer's interest in the transaction or acquisition and must obtain the client's consent under paragraph (c). A lawyer must also comply with the requirements of Rule 1.7(a)(2) when the lawyer has a personal interest in the subject matter of the representation as a result of the transaction or acquisition.

Opportunity to Seek Advice of Independent Counsel

- [13] Under paragraph (b), a lawyer must encourage the client to seek the advice of an independent lawyer and may not imply that obtaining the advice of an independent lawyer is unnecessary. An independent lawyer is a lawyer who (i) does not have a financial interest in the transaction or acquisition, (ii) does not have a close legal, business, financial, professional or personal relationship with the lawyer seeking the client's consent, and (iii) represents the client with respect to the transaction or acquisition.
- [14] A lawyer is not required to advise the client to seek the advice of independent counsel if the client already has independent counsel with respect to the transaction or acquisition; however, the lawyer must still afford the client a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of the independent counsel. A lawyer is not required to provide legal advice to a client who is represented by independent counsel; however, the lawyer is still required under paragraph (a) to make full disclosure to the client in writing of all material facts related to the transaction or acquisition when the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the client has not been informed of such facts. The fact that the client was independently represented in the transaction or acquisition is relevant in determining whether the terms of the transaction or acquisition are fair and reasonable to the client as paragraph (a) requires.

Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client

(Commission's Proposed Rule – Clean Version)

A lawyer shall not enter into a business transaction with a client; or knowingly acquire an ownership, possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client, unless each of the following requirements has been satisfied:

- (a) The transaction or acquisition and its terms are fair and reasonable to the client and are fully disclosed and transmitted in writing to the client in a manner that reasonably can be understood by the client; and
- (b) The client either is represented in the transaction or acquisition by an independent lawyer of the client's choice or is advised in writing by the lawyer to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client's choice and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice; and
- (c) The client thereafter consents in writing to the terms of the transaction or the terms of the acquisition and the lawyer's role in the transaction or acquisition, including whether the lawyer is representing the client in the transaction or acquisition.

COMMENT

Scope of Rule

- [1] A lawyer's legal training and skill, and the relationship of trust and confidence that arises between a lawyer and client, create the possibility that a lawyer, even unintentionally, will overreach or exploit client information when the lawyer enters into a business transaction with the client or acquires a pecuniary interest adverse to the client. In these situations, the lawyer could influence the client for the lawyer's own benefit, could give advice to protect the lawyer's interest rather than the client's, and could use client information for the lawyer's benefit rather than the client's. This Rule is intended to afford the client the information needed to fully understand the terms and effect of the transaction or acquisition and the importance of having independent legal advice. See, e.g., Beery v. State Bar (1987) 43 Cal.3d 802, 813 [239 Cal.Rptr. 121]. This Rule also requires that the transaction or acquisition be fair and reasonable to the client.

- [2] Except as set forth in Comment [5], this Rule does not apply when a lawyer enters into a transaction with or acquires a pecuniary interest adverse to a client prior to the commencement of a lawyer-client relationship with the client. However, when a lawyer's interest in the transaction or in the adverse pecuniary interest results in the lawyer having a personal interest in the subject matter in which the lawyer is representing the client, the lawyer is required to comply with Rule 1.7(a)(2).

Business Transactions With Clients

- [3] This Rule applies even when the transaction is not related to the subject matter of the representation, as when a lawyer drafting a will for a client agrees to make a loan to the client to pay expenses that are not related to the representation. This Rule also applies when a lawyer sells to a client goods or non-legal services that are related to the practice of law, such as insurance, brokerage or investment products or services to a client.

- [4] This Rule does not apply to standard commercial transactions for products or services that a lawyer acquires from a client on the same terms that the client generally markets them to others, where the lawyer has no advantage in dealing with the client, and the requirements of the Rule are unnecessary and impractical. Examples of such products and services include banking and brokerage services, medical services, products manufactured or distributed by the client, and utilities' services. The Rule also does not apply to similar types of standard commercial transactions for goods or services offered by a lawyer when the lawyer has no advantage in dealing with the clients, such as when a client purchases a meal at a restaurant owned by the lawyer or when the client pays for parking in a parking lot owned by the lawyer. This Rule also ordinarily would not apply where the lawyer and client each make an investment on terms offered to the general public or a significant portion thereof as when, for example, a lawyer invests in a limited partnership syndicated by a third party, and the lawyer's client makes the same investment on the same terms. When a lawyer and a client each invest in the same business on the same terms offered to the public or a significant portion thereof, and the lawyer does not advise, influence or solicit the client with respect to the transaction, the lawyer does not enter into the transaction "with" the client for purposes of this Rule.
- [5] This Rule does not apply to an agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client or to the modification of such an agreement, unless the agreement or modification confers on the lawyer an ownership, possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client, such as when the lawyer obtains an interest in the client's property to secure the amount of the lawyer's past due or future fees. An agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client, and material modifications to such agreements that are adverse to the interests of the client, are governed in part by Rule 1.5. Even when this Rule does not apply to the negotiation of the agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client, other rules, statutes and fiduciary principles might apply. See Rule 1.5, Comment [3B].

- [6] This Rule does not apply to an agreement to advance to or deposit with a lawyer a sum to be applied to fees or costs incurred in the future. This Rule also does not apply to an agreement with a client for a contingent fee in a civil case, unless the agreement confers on the owner an ownership, possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client.

Adverse Pecuniary Interests

- [7] An ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client arises when a lawyer acquires an interest in a client's property that is or may become detrimental to the client, even when the lawyer's intent is to aid the client. Hawk v. State Bar (1988) 45 Cal.3d 589 [247 Cal.Rptr. 599]. An adverse pecuniary interest arises, for example, when the lawyer's personal financial interest conflicts with the client's interest in the property; when a lawyer obtains an interest in a cause of action or subject matter of litigation or other matter the lawyer is conducting for the client; or when the interest can be used to summarily extinguish the client's interest in the client's property. See Fletcher v. Davis (2004) 33 Cal.4th 61 [14 Cal.Rptr.3d 58]. An adverse pecuniary interest also arises when a lawyer acquires an interest in an obligation owed to a client or acquires an interest in an entity indebted to a client. See Rodgers v. State Bar (1989) 48 Cal.3d 300 [256 Cal.Rptr. 381]; Kapelus v. State Bar (1987) 44 Cal.3d 179 [242 Cal.Rptr. 196].

Full Disclosure to the Client

- [8] Paragraph (a) requires that full disclosure be transmitted to the client in writing in a manner that reasonably can be understood by the client. Whether the disclosure reasonably can be understood by the client is based on what is objectively reasonable under the circumstances.
- [9] Full disclosure under paragraph (a) requires a lawyer to provide the client with the same advice regarding the transaction or acquisition that the lawyer would provide to the client in a transaction with a third party. Beery v. State Bar (1987) 43 Cal.3d 802 [239 Cal.Rptr. 121]. It requires a lawyer to inform the client of all of the terms and all relevant facts of the transaction or acquisition, including the nature and extent of the lawyer's role and compensation in connection with the transaction or acquisition. It also requires the lawyer to fully inform the client of risks of the transaction or acquisition and facts that might discourage the client from engaging in the transaction or acquisition. See Rodgers v. State Bar (1989) 48 Cal.3d 300 [256 Cal.Rptr. 381]; Clancy v. State Bar (1969) 71 Cal.2d 140 [77 Cal.Rptr. 657]; Brockway v. State Bar (1991) 53 Cal.3d 51 [278 Cal.Rptr. 836]. The burden is always on the lawyer to show that the transaction or acquisition and its terms were fair and just and that the client was fully advised. Hunnecutt v. State Bar (1988) 44 Cal.3d 362 [243 Cal.Rptr. 699]; Felton v. Le Breton (1891) 92 Cal. 457, 469 [28 P. 490, 494].
- [10] The risk to a client is heightened when the client expects the lawyer to represent the client in the transaction or acquisition itself. Under this Rule, the lawyer must disclose the risks associated with the lawyer's dual role as both legal adviser and participant in the transaction or acquisition, such as the risk that the lawyer will structure the transaction or acquisition or give legal advice in a way that favors the lawyer's interests at the expense of the client. Because the lawyer has a personal interest in the transaction or acquisition, the lawyer must also comply with Rule 1.7(a)(2). In some cases, the lawyer's interest may be such that Rule 1.7 will preclude the lawyer from representing the client in the transaction or acquisition.

- [11] There are additional considerations when the lawyer-client relationship will continue after the transaction or acquisition. For example, if the lawyer and the client enter into a transaction to form or acquire a business, the client might expect the lawyer to represent the business or the client with respect to the business after the transaction is completed. When the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the client expects the lawyer to represent the business or the client with respect to the business or interest after the transaction or acquisition is completed, the lawyer must act in either of two ways. Before entering into the transaction or making the acquisition, the lawyer must either (i) inform the client that the lawyer will not represent the business, or the client with respect to the business or interest, and must then act accordingly; or (ii) disclose in writing the risks associated with the lawyer's dual role as both legal adviser and participant in the business or owner of the interest. The client consent requirement in paragraph (c) includes a requirement that the client consent to the risks to the lawyer's representation of the client, which the lawyer has disclosed to the client as required by this Rule. A lawyer must also comply with the requirements of Rule 1.7(a)(2) when the lawyer has a personal interest in the subject matter of the representation as a result of the transaction or acquisition.
- [12] Even when the lawyer does not represent the client in the transaction or acquisition, there may be circumstances when the lawyer's interest in the transaction or acquisition may interfere with the lawyer's independent professional judgment or faithful representation of the client in another matter. When the lawyer's interest in the transaction or acquisition may interfere with the lawyer's independent professional judgment or faithful representation of the client, the lawyer must also disclose in writing the potential adverse effect on the lawyer-client relationship that may result from the lawyer's interest in the transaction or acquisition and must obtain the client's consent under paragraph (c). A lawyer must also comply with the requirements of Rule 1.7(a)(2) when the lawyer has a personal interest in the subject matter of the representation as a result of the transaction or acquisition.

client has not been informed of such facts. The fact that the client was independently represented in the transaction or acquisition is relevant in determining whether the terms of the transaction or acquisition are fair and reasonable to the client as paragraph (a) requires.

Opportunity to Seek Advice of Independent Counsel

- [13] Under paragraph (b), a lawyer must encourage the client to seek the advice of an independent lawyer and may not imply that obtaining the advice of an independent lawyer is unnecessary. An independent lawyer is a lawyer who (i) does not have a financial interest in the transaction or acquisition, (ii) does not have a close legal, business, financial, professional or personal relationship with the lawyer seeking the client's consent, and (iii) represents the client with respect to the transaction or acquisition.
- [14] A lawyer is not required to advise the client to seek the advice of independent counsel if the client already has independent counsel with respect to the transaction or acquisition; however, the lawyer must still afford the client a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of the independent counsel. A lawyer is not required to provide legal advice to a client who is represented by independent counsel; however, the lawyer is still required under paragraph (a) to make full disclosure to the client in writing of all material facts related to the transaction or acquisition when the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the

Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 6 Agree = 2
Disagree = 1
Modify = 3
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
1	Balin, William and Andrew Dilworth	M	No		Proposed Rule 1.8.1, Comments [5] and [6], together with Proposed Rule 1.5, leave a gap that allows an attorney to add language to an existing contract that materially adversely affects the rights of the client without compelling the attorney to make the appropriate disclosures and to obtain the requisite written consent. Comment [5] to the Proposed Rule specifically excludes the original agreement by which a client hires a lawyer as well as any “modification of such an agreement.” Comment [6] states that the Rule “is not intended to apply to an agreement with a client for a contingent fee in a civil case.” However, we can envision at least two scenarios in which a change in the fee agreement will not give the attorney “an ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to the client” yet would materially impact the client's rights with a concomitant advantage to the attorney. The first instance is where the attorney, in mid-representation, asks the client to change a contingent fee agreement to an hourly fee agreement, or vice versa. The second	The Commission and the Board of Governors addressed this concern in proposed Rule 1.5(g), (formerly 1.5(f)), which prevents a lawyer from making a material modification to a fee agreement that is adverse to a client, unless the client is represented by counsel with respect to the modification or is advised by the lawyer in writing to seek the advice of such counsel and is afforded a reasonable opportunity to do so. Comments [3], [3A], [3B] and [3C] to Rule 1.5 explain that Rule 1.5(g) applies in the scenarios the commenter describes. Rule 1.5(g) adequately addresses the issue raised by the commenter without subjecting modifications to the rigorous protocol of this Rule, which could deter modifications that would be beneficial to a client.

¹ A = AGREE with proposed Rule D = DISAGREE with proposed Rule M = AGREE ONLY IF MODIFIED NI = NOT INDICATED

Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					instance is where the attorney asks the client to modify the agreement by adding a clause making all disputes subject to binding private arbitration. We are concerned that Proposed Rule 1.5, subdivision (f) does not provide sufficient protections for clients under the scenarios outlined above, while the application of Proposed Rule 1.8.1 to such scenarios is specifically precluded. We also note that there are no Comments in Rule 1.5 that address subdivision (f). We therefore recommend changing or adding a Comment to Rule 1.8.1 that applies the Proposed Rule to modifications in a fee agreement that are adverse to the client's interests. While we view the protections of Proposed Rule 1.5 as insufficient to protect the interests of clients in the situations outlined above, we urge the Commission, at a minimum, to add a Comment to Rule 1.5 that clearly applies the Proposed Rule to situations in which an attorney materially alters an existing fee agreement to the detriment of the client, such as in the instances we have outlined.	There are four Comments in Rule 1.5 that concern subdivision (g), Comments [3], [3A], [3B] and [3C]. The Commission believes that Rule 1.5(g) and the related Comments provide sufficient protections for a client. Rule 1.5(g) is directed to the kind of circumstances that present the concerns the commenter raises. It requires the client either to be represented by independent counsel with respect to the modification or advised in writing to seek the advice of such counsel and be afforded an opportunity to obtain that advice. It applies to significant changes that benefit the lawyer in a manner that is contrary to the client's interests. Comment [3B] refers lawyers to other fiduciary duties that apply to such modifications as well. These provisions provide adequate protections for the client. They are directed to the specific concerns of the commenter.
2	COPRAC	A	Yes	Comment [6]	The first sentence of Comment [6] does not make it entirely clear that the Rule is not applicable to a deposit or advance. The	The Commission revised the Comment along the lines recommended by the commenter.

Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					second sentence of Comment [6] makes this point more directly as to contingent fee agreements. Accordingly, if the RRC intends that this Rule not apply to an advance or deposit, then perhaps a more accurate expression of that would be to frame the statement as the RRC had done in the second sentence, that is, to say, "This Rule is not intended to apply to an advance to or deposit with a lawyer of a sum to be applied to fees or costs incurred in the future."
3	Hazard, Geoffrey, Deborah Rhode & Richard Zitrin (ethics law professors group)	D	Yes		"...draft would improperly allow lawyers to bypass the current requirements of Rule 3-300 when they modify their fee agreements with clients, and also be at odds with California case law on fiduciary duty. Despite widespread criticism, the Commission has improvidently insisted on a clearly anti-client rule that serves only the interests of lawyers wishing to change their fee structure in the middle of a representation." "Any subsequent modification of a fee agreement with a client, however, is done under circumstances where the lawyer has already taken on ongoing fiduciary duties to the client. Thus a modification of a fee agreement is a business transaction with a client, and may involve acquiring a pecuniary interest adverse to the client..."	The Commission disagrees. The Supreme Court has recognized that the procedures in this Rule are an extensive protocol. (Santa Clara County Attnys Assn v. Woodside (1994) 7 Cal.4th 525, 545) Failure to comply with the Rule can result in the voiding of a transaction that is subject to the Rule. Making the Rule applicable to modifications of agreements by which a lawyer is retained by a client could discourage modifications that could benefit the client. At the same time, there are some kinds of modifications that should be subject to heightened scrutiny. In response to these competing interests, the Commission and the Board of Governors have addressed the issue in Rule 1.5(g). Rule 1.5(g) adequately addresses the issue raised by the commenter without subjecting modifications to the rigorous protocol of this Rule, which could deter

Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comment [5]	“...current draft...simply eliminates these requirements, and excludes modifications of fee contracts from the rule. This proposed language adds the italicized language to the existing comment: ‘This Rule is not intended to apply to an agreement by which a lawyer is retained by a client or to the modification of such an agreement.’” “...the draft sets up a conflict between common law principles of fiduciary duty and the ethics rules themselves. “ “The phrase relating to modifications of fee contracts in Comment 5 must be stricken.”	modifications that would be beneficial to a client..
				Comments [13]-[14]	Definition includes corporate general counsel who may not be California counsel and need not be schooled in California rules and contracts. “Thus, independent counsel not hire for the specific purpose of examining the transaction in question may well miss the very issues necessary to evaluate the transaction.	There is no requirement that a California ethics expert is the only lawyer who can qualify as independent counsel or that a corporation’s general counsel is not qualified to act as independent counsel under the Rule. Nor does the Commission believe it is necessary for a lawyer subject to the Rule to advise a client to seek the advice of independent counsel when the client has such counsel in place. Comment [13] requires that independent counsel must represent the client with respect to the transaction or acquisition.
				Comment [14]	“...having independent counsel is no substitute for adequate disclosure and advice by the lawyer wishing to engage in the transaction. The ABA language in MR	The Commission does not agree with this comment. Under Comment [14] of Model Rule 1.8, the written disclosure requirement is met when such disclosure is made by the lawyer subject to the Rule or the

Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					1.8(a)(2) and Comment 4 should replace the ill-advised Commission language."	client's independent counsel. The Model Rule Comment, therefore, does not require the lawyer subject to the Rule to advise the client if the advice is given by the independent lawyer. The Commission was concerned that the Model Rule Comment does not protect clients adequately when the lawyer in the transaction knows material facts that independent counsel has not communicated to the client. Comment [14] provides greater client protection than the Model Rule Comment by requiring such disclosure by the lawyer in the transaction. At the same time, there are practical problems with a requirement that either the lawyer in the transaction or the independent lawyer advise the client. The lawyer in the transaction would have to invade the lawyer-client relationship and lawyer-client privilege between the client and independent lawyer in order to demonstrate compliance with the Rule. The Commission believes that the interests the Rule protects with respect to assuring the client is fully advised about the transaction or acquisition are served when the client has independent counsel, subject to a requirement that the lawyer in the transaction disclose material facts the lawyer knows or reasonably should know have not been disclosed to the client.

Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
4	Office of Chief Trial Counsel	M	Yes		There are too many Comments and many are too long and incorporate other Proposed Rules and Comments. They seem more appropriate for treatises, law review articles, and ethics opinions. Comment [6] While OCTC believes modifications normally apply to this rule, it supports the compromise adopted that states in most cases modifications will be governed by Proposed Rule 1.5(f). The first sentence of Comment [6] seems unnecessary. Comment [9] Comment [6]'s last sentence should make clear that a contingent fee could fall within this rule if the lawyer obtains a proprietary interest in the client's property. For example, if an attorney represents a client in a civil lawsuit over the shares of a company and if the agreement states that if successful the lawyer obtains a percentage of the shares and not	As the Commission has noted with respect to other Rules, the comments are an important part of the Rules modeled on the ABA Model Rules, providing clarification of the black letter and guidance to lawyers on how to be in compliance with their professional obligations. No response required. The Commission believes that the first sentence of Comment [6] is necessary. There has been a question in the past regarding whether an advance fee is an ownership, security, possessory or other pecuniary interest. The first sentence of the Comment clarifies the application of the Rule in a situation where clarification is necessary. The Commission agrees with this comment and revised the second sentence in Comment [6] along the line suggested by the comment.

Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comments [10]-[14]	just a percentage of the worth of the shares the attorney's agreement should come within Proposed Rule 1.8.1. The Commission rejected ABA Rule 1.8(i) because they believed Proposed Rule 1.8.1 was sufficient. Thus, when we are discussing an actual interest in the subject of the representation, and not just monetary percentage, Proposed Rule 1.8.1 should apply, even for contingency agreements. The last sentence of Comment [9] should be stricken as it is legally incorrect. If the Commission is stating or implying that in a disciplinary proceeding the attorney does not have the burden of showing that the transaction or acquisition and its terms were fair and reasonable or just and that the client was fully advised, the Commission is wrong. It is well established that the attorney in a disciplinary proceeding has the burden of showing that the transaction is fair and reasonable and was fully known and understood by the client. (See, Rodgers v. State Bar; Huniecutt v. State Bar; Clancy v. State Bar; In the Matter of Hagen; In the Matter of Peavey; In the Matter of Gillis.) Comments [10]-[14] could be shortened and tightened.	The Commission has revised the sentence to eliminate the exception for disciplinary proceedings. The Commission reviewed the Comments and does not agree that they should be revised. Comments

Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
						[10] through [12] deal with conflict of interest issues related to business transactions, either when the lawyer will represent the client in connection with the transaction or in another matter. Comment [10] is derived in part from Model Rule Comment [3] Comments [10] through [12] were added because compliance with the Rule includes addressing conflicts in the lawyer-client relationship; however, such considerations are not immediately apparent on the face of the Rule. Because there are different considerations when a lawyer is representing the client with respect to the subject of the transaction and in matters that are not the subject of the transaction, the two situations are addressed in separate comments. The Commissions believes that some explanation of the circumstance and issues in the two situations is necessary to give lawyers useful guidance for compliance with the Rule. Comments [13] addresses the requirements for independent counsel. Comment [13] is derived from existing law regarding the minimum requirements for an independent counsel. Clarification on this point is necessary In light of comments the Commission received indicating disagreement over the criteria for independent counsel. The Commissions believes that this is not an issue that should be left uncertain in the Rule.

Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
						Comment [14] concerns when a lawyer who is subject to the Rule must make disclosures to the client. It is a variation on Model Rule Comment [4]. The Commission believes that the Model Rule Comment does not protect a client adequately. Deleting the Comment would result in lawyers and courts referring to the Model Rule Comment. The Commission does not believe that there is a way to rewrite the Comment without detracting from its import.
5	San Diego County Bar Association	M	Yes	1.8.1(a)	1.8.1(a) fair and reasonable requirement should apply at the time of the transaction or acquisition. Also, change Comment [9] to reflect this.	Commission did not make the requested revision. Paragraph (a) tracks the current rule, which has been in place for years. The recommended change would be a substantive revision. It cannot be said that the consideration whether a transaction is fair and reasons cannot account for what transpired in the transaction. The comment does not offer a rationale that would justify this change.
				Comment [4]	Add sentence at end of Comment [4] that states: "However, the rule may apply if the lawyer has, or should have, any reason to believe the client is investing, in part, because of the client's confidence in the lawyer's judgment."	Commission did not make the requested revision. The last sentence in Comment [4] states that the exception applies "when the lawyer does not advise, influence or solicit the client with respect to the transaction..." The quoted language adequately addresses the concern raised in the comment.
				Comment [5]	Comment [5]: delete words "or to the modification of such an agreement" in line 2 and the words "and modifications to such agreements" in line 6.	Commission did not make the requested revision. Modifications to engagement agreements occur in many lawyer-client relationships. Such modifications do not inherently involve the type of

Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comment [6]	Comment [6]: first two sentences (including citation to Seltzer) are misleading because some courts have not found negotiation of a retainer to be an arms-length transaction.	overreaching and misuse of confidential information that can occur in other types of transactions. Modifications can benefit a client and may even be requested by a client. There is no way to distinguish in this rule between modifications that involve overreaching or undue influence and those that do not. The California Supreme Court has described the requirements of the current California Rule (which are continued in Rule 1.8.1) as an “extensive protocol.” Imposing that protocol on every modification to an engagement agreement would create an unnecessary burden on the lawyer-client relationship by making every modification subject to discipline and could deter modifications to engagement agreements in cases where the modification would benefit the client. The Commission and the Board of Governors addressed this concern in proposed Rule 1.5(g), which is directed to material modifications that are adverse to a client. The proposed Rule is tailored to the types of modifications where the need is the greatest to assure that there is no overreaching or undue influence. Commission did not make the requested revision. The first two sentences in the Comment correctly state the law

Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comment [8]	Add sentence at end of Comment [8] that states: "However, a lawyer who has reason to believe that the client does not understand the disclosure must explain the issues further."	Commission did not make the requested revision. The reference to "objectively reasonable under the circumstances " addresses the concern raised in the comment. No further change is required.
				Comment [9]	Revise of the first two sentences of comment [9] as follows: The requirement for full disclosure in writing in paragraph (a) ~~requires a lawyer to provide the client with the same advice regarding the transaction or acquisition that the lawyer would provide to the client in a transaction with a third party. Beery v. State Bar (1987) 43 Cal.3d 802 [239 Cal.Rptr. 121].~~ It requires a lawyer to inform the client of all of the terms and all relevant facts of the transaction or acquisition, including the nature and extent of the lawyer's role and compensation in connection the transaction or acquisition.	Commission did not make the requested revision. The proposed revision does not accurately state the law. The first sentence of the draft comment is an accurate statement.
				Comment [10]	Comment [10] should say "the lawyer must also comply with Rule 1.7(b) and 1.7(d)." (Not only 1.7(d)).	Commission did not make the requested revision. However, the Commission added the following language at the beginning of the sentence: "Because the lawyer has an interest in the transaction or acquisition..." The language was added in order to clarify why citation to Rule 1.7(d) is appropriate.

Rule 1.8.1 Business Transactions with a Client and Acquiring Interests Adverse to the Client.
[Sorted by Commenter]

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comment [13]	Requests for improved clarification that the Commission insert “before the transaction or acquisition is completed” after “must” in the fourth sentence: “The lawyer must before the transaction or acquisition is completed either (i) inform the client ...” and also substitute “1.7” for “1.7(d)” in the last sentence of the Comment.	The Commission agrees with the first of the two requested changes and added the following words at the beginning of the fourth sentence “Before entering into the transaction or making the acquisition...” The Commission did not make the second requested change. Rule 1.7(d) is the appropriate rule to cite with respect to a lawyer’s interest in the subject matter of a representation.
				Comment [16]	Delete Comment [13] entirely.	Agree with change. Comment deleted.
					Since the ABA Rule has a comment on imputation, the Commission should add a Comment [16] which would read as follows: “The obligations imposed under this rule apply to lawyers associated in a firm with the lawyer who represents the client directly. These lawyers must make all of the required disclosures before entering into a business transaction with or acquiring an interest adverse to the client.”	Commission did not make the requested revision. Comment [16] has been deleted.
6	Santa Clara County Bar Association	A	Yes	Comment [5]	Comment [5] should include a reference to the new formal ethics interim number 05-001, which analyzes the meaning of an “attorney’s interest” in applying this rule; the formal ethics opinion is consistent with the proposed change to this rule regarding modification of attorney fee agreements.	The Commission disagrees. The Rules do not include citations to bar association ethics opinions.

Rule 1.8: Conflict of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules

STATE VARIATIONS

(The following is an excerpt from Regulation of Lawyers: Statutes and Standards (2010 Ed.)
by Steven Gillers, Roy D. Simon and Andrew M. Perlman.)

Alabama. Alabama's Rule 1.8(e)(3) provides as follows:

(3) a lawyer may advance or guarantee emergency financial assistance to the client, the repayment of which may not be contingent on the outcome of the matter, provided that no promise or assurance of financial assistance was made to the client by the lawyer, or on the lawyer's behalf, prior to the employment of the lawyer.

Alabama also adds Rule 1.8(k), which identifies when a lawyer can represent both parties to an uncontested divorce or domestic relations proceeding. Relating to Rule 1.8(h), the Alabama Legal Services Liability Act, Ala. Code §§6-5-570 et seq., provides as follows: "There shall be only one form and cause of action against legal service providers in courts in the State of Alabama and it shall be known as the legal service liability action." Finally, Rules 1.8(l) and (m) describe prohibitions on sexual relations between lawyers and clients. Notably,

Rule 1.8(m) states that "except for a spousal relationship or a relationship that existed at the commencement of the lawyer-client relationship, sexual relations between the lawyer and the client shall be presumed to be exploitative [and thus violate Rule 1.8(l)]. This presumption is rebuttable."

Arizona: Rule 1.8(h)(2) adds a clause forbidding a lawyer to "make an agreement prospectively limiting the client's right to report the lawyer to appropriate professional authorities." Rule 1.8(l), which retains the 1983 version of ABA Model Rule 1.8(i), provides: "A lawyer related to another lawyer as parent, child, sibling, spouse or cohabitant shall not represent a client in a representation directly adverse to a person who the lawyer knows is represented by the other lawyer except upon consent by the client after consultation regarding the relationship."

California: California's rules are generally equivalent to Model Rule 1.8, but two exceptions deserve attention. Rule 3-320 provides as follows:

A member shall not represent a client in a matter in which another party's lawyer is a spouse, parent, child, or sibling of the member, lives with the member, is a client of the member, or has an intimate personal relationship with the member, unless the member informs the client in writing of the relationship.

And Rule 4-210 provides in part as follows:

(A) A member shall not directly or indirectly pay or agree to pay, guarantee, represent, or sanction a representation that the member or member's law firm will pay the personal or business expenses of a prospective or existing client, except that this rule shall not prohibit a member: . . . (2) After employment, from lending money to the client upon the client's promise in writing to repay such loan.

Connecticut adds the following language to Rule 1.8(a), providing that lawyers can enter into business transactions with clients under the following circumstances:

(4) With regard to a business transaction, the lawyer advises the client or former client in writing either (A) that the lawyer will provide legal services to the client or former client concerning the transaction, or (B) that the lawyer will not provide legal services to the client or former client and that the lawyer is involved as a business person only and not as a lawyer representing the client or former client and that the lawyer is not one to whom the client or former client can turn for legal advice concerning the transaction.

(5) With regard to the providing of investment services, the lawyer advises the client or former client in writing (A) whether such services are covered by legal liability insurance or other insurance, and [makes either disclosure set out in paragraph (a)(4)]. Investment services shall only apply where the lawyer has either a direct or indirect control over the invested funds and a direct or indirect interest in the underlying investment.

For purposes of subsection (a)(1) through (a)(5), the phrase "former client" shall mean a client for whom the two year period starting from the conclusion of representation has not expired.

District of Columbia: D.C. Rule 1.8(d) permits lawyers to advance "financial assistance which is reasonably necessary to permit the client to institute or maintain the litigation or administrative proceeding.” Rule 1.8(i) provides as follows:

A lawyer may acquire and enforce a lien granted by law to secure the lawyer's fees or expenses, but a lawyer shall not impose a lien upon any part of a client's files, except upon the lawyer's own work product, and then only to the extent that the work product has not been paid for. This work product exception shall not apply when the client has become unable to pay, or when withholding the lawyer's work product would present a significant risk to the client of irreparable harm.

Florida adds Rule 4-8.4(i), which provides that a lawyer shall not engage in sexual conduct with a client “or a representative of a client” that:

exploits or adversely affects the interests of the client or the lawyer-client relationship including, but not limited to:

(1) requiring or demanding sexual relations with a client or a representative of a client incident to or as a condition of a legal representation;

(2) employing coercion, intimidation, or undue influence in entering into sexual relations with a client or a representative of a client; or

(3) continuing to represent a client if the lawyer's sexual relations with the client or a representative of the client cause the lawyer to render incompetent representation.

In 2004, the Florida Supreme Court deleted language from the comment to Rule 8.4, which had stated that lawyer-client sexual relations do not violate the rule if a sexual relationship existed between the lawyer and client before commencement of the lawyer-client relationship.

Georgia: Rule 1.8(a), drawing on DR 5-104 of the ABA Code of Professional Responsibility, applies “if the client expects the lawyer to exercise the lawyer's professional judgment therein for the protection of the client.” Georgia retains the language of deleted ABA Model Rule 1.8(i) but adds that the disqualification of a lawyer due to a parent, child, sibling, or spousal relationship “is personal and is not imputed to members of firms with whom the lawyers are associated.” Georgia adds that the maximum penalty for violating Rule 1.8(b) (which relates to confidentiality) is disbarment, but the maximum penalty for violating any other provision of Rule 1.8 is only a public reprimand.

Illinois: In the rules effective January 1, 2010, Rule 1.8(a)(2) omits the phrase “desirability of seeking.”

Louisiana: Rule 1.8(g) permits an aggregate settlement if “a court approves the settlement in a certified class action.” Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to “provide financial assistance to a client who is in necessitous circumstances” subject to strict controls, including:

(ii) The advance or loan guarantee, or the offer thereof, shall not be used as an inducement by the lawyer, or anyone acting on the lawyer’s behalf, to secure employment.

(iii) Neither the lawyer nor anyone acting on the lawyer’s behalf may offer to make advances or loan guarantees prior to being hired by a client, and the lawyer shall not publicize nor advertise a willingness to make advances or loan guarantees to clients.

Massachusetts: Rule 1.8(b) forbids a lawyer to use confidential information “for the lawyer’s advantage or the advantage of a third person” without consent.

Michigan: Rules 1.8(a)(2) and 1.8(h)(2) (regarding business transactions with clients and settlement of legal malpractice claims) both require that the client be given a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of independent counsel but lack the ABA requirement that the client be “advised in writing of the desirability of seeking” independent counsel. Michigan Rule 1.8(g), regarding aggregate settlements, lacks the ABA requirement that the client’s consent be “in a writing signed by the client.” Michigan retains the language of deleted ABA Model Rule 1.8(i) verbatim.

Minnesota: Rule 1.8(e)(3) allows a lawyer to guarantee a loan necessary for a client to withstand litigation delay. Rule 1.8(k)’s provision on sexual relationships with clients prohibits a lawyer from having sexual relations with a client unless a consensual relationship existed between the lawyer and client when the client-lawyer relationship commenced. The rule also defines “sexual relations” and adds the following Rules 1.8(k)(2)-(3) to explain the meaning of sex with a “client” when a lawyer represents an organization:

(2) if the client is an organization, any individual who oversees the representation and gives instructions to the lawyer on behalf of the organization shall be deemed to be the client . . .

(3) this paragraph does not prohibit a lawyer from engaging in sexual relations with a client of the lawyer’s firm provided that the lawyer has no involvement in the performance of the legal work for the client . . .

Mississippi: Rule 1.8(e)(2) permits a lawyer to advance medical and living expenses to a client under certain narrowly defined circumstances.

New Hampshire: The New Hampshire rules include a Rule 1.19 (Disclosure of Information to the Client), which requires a lawyer (other than a government or in-house lawyer) to inform a client at the time of engagement if “the lawyer does not maintain professional liability insurance” of at least $100,000 per occurrence and $300,000 in the aggregate “or if the lawyer’s professional liability insurance ceases to be in effect.”

New Jersey: Rule 1.8(e)(3) creates an exception allowing financial assistance by a “non-profit organization authorized under [other law]” if the organization is representing the indigent client without a fee. Rule 1.8(h)(1), while forbidding agreements prospectively limiting liability to a client, contains an exception if “the client fails to act in accordance with the lawyer’s advice and the lawyer nevertheless continues to represent the client at the client’s request.” New Jersey Rule 1.8(k) and (l) provide as follows:

(k) A lawyer employed by a public entity, either as a lawyer or in some other role, shall not undertake the representation of another client if the representation presents a substantial risk that the lawyer’s responsibilities to the public entity would limit the lawyer’s ability to provide independent advice or diligent and competent representation to either the public entity or the client.

(l) A public entity cannot consent to a representation otherwise prohibited by this Rule.

New York: In the rules effective April 1, 2009, Rule 1.8(a) deletes the language “knowingly acquire an ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client” and adds language from DR 5-104(A) of the old Model Code: “if they have differing interests therein and if the client expects the lawyer to exercise professional judgment therein for the protection of the client....” Comments 3A and 4A-4F, which have no Model Rule equivalents, describe in considerable detail the problem of business transactions with clients, including (in Comments 4D-4F) issues related to a lawyer’s receipt of a client’s securities. New York omits Comment 5.

Rule 1.8(d) draws, in part, on DR 5-104(B) of the old Model Code, and Comment 9 provides more guidance than the equivalent Model Rule provisions concerning a lawyer's acquisition of media or literary rights that relate to a client matter.

Finally, Rule 1.8(j) and (k) as well as Comments 17, 17A, 17B, and 18-20, all address sexual relationships with clients and provide significantly more guidance in this regard than the equivalent Model Rule provision. Comment 17B concludes that "[a] law firm's failure to educate lawyers about the restrictions on sexual relations — or a firm's failure to enforce those restrictions against lawyers who violate them — may constitute a violation of Rule 5.1, which obligates a law firm to make reasonable efforts to ensure that all lawyers in the firm conform to these Rules."

North Dakota: Rule 1.8(g), regarding aggregate settlements, applies "other than in class actions." North Dakota adds Rule 1.8(k), which restricts the practice of law by a part-time prosecutor or judge in certain circumstances.

Ohio: Rule 1.8(c) forbids a lawyer to solicit "any substantial gift from a client" and forbids a lawyer to "prepare on behalf of a client an instrument giving the lawyer, the lawyer's partner, associate, paralegal, law clerk or other employee of the lawyer's firm, a lawyer acting 'of counsel' in the lawyer's firm, or a person related to the lawyer any gift unless the lawyer or other recipient of the gift is related to the client." "Gift" is defined to include "a testamentary gift." Ohio Rule 1.8(f)(4) provides a detailed "statement of insured client's rights" that a lawyer "selected and paid by an insurer to represent an insured" must give to the client.

In July 2009, an Ohio statute (R.C. §1349.55) took effect to regulate companies that make cash advances to plaintiffs in pending civil cases in exchange for the right to receive part of the proceeds of any settlement, award, or judgment. Paragraph (C) of the statute provides that if a plaintiff gets into a dispute concerning the contract for the cash advance, "the responsibilities of the attorney representing the consumer [the plaintiff] in the civil action or claim shall be no greater than the attorney's responsibilities under the Ohio Rules of Professional Conduct."

Oregon: Rule 1.8(b) permits a lawyer to use confidential information to a client's disadvantage only if the client's consent is "confirmed in writing" (except as otherwise permitted or required by the Rules). Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to advance litigation expenses only if "the client remains ultimately liable for such expenses to the extent of the client's ability to pay." Finally, Oregon's rule governing sexual relations with clients contains a detailed description of "sexual relations," providing that it includes "sexual intercourse or any touching of the sexual or other intimate parts of a person or causing such person to touch the sexual or other intimate parts of the lawyer for the purpose of arousing or gratifying the sexual desire of either party."

Pennsylvania: Rule 1.8(g) does not require that client consent be “confirmed in writing.”

Texas: Rule 1.08(c) provides that prior to the conclusion of “all aspects of the matter giving rise to the lawyer’s employment,” a lawyer shall not make or negotiate an agreement “with a client, prospective client, or former client” giving the lawyer literary or media rights to a portrayal or account based in substantial part on information relating to the representation. Rule 1.08(d) provides as follows:

(d) A lawyer shall not provide financial assistance to a client in connection with pending or contemplated litigation or administrative proceedings, except that:

(1) a lawyer may advance or guarantee court costs, expenses of litigation or administrative proceedings, and reasonably necessary medical and living expenses, the repayment of which may be contingent on the outcome of the matter; and

(2) a lawyer representing an indigent client may pay court costs and expenses of litigation on behalf of the client.

Virginia: Rule 1.8(b) forbids the use of information “for the advantage of the lawyer or of a third person or to the disadvantage of the client.” Rule 1.8(e)(1) requires a client ultimately to be liable for court costs and expenses. Rule 1.8(h) contains an exception where the lawyer is “an employee” of the client “as long as the client is independently represented in making the agreement” prospectively limiting the lawyer’s liability for malpractice.

Washington: Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to (1) advance or guarantee the expenses of litigation “provided the client remains ultimately liable for such expenses; and (2) in matters maintained as class actions only, repayment of expenses of litigation may be contingent on the outcome of the matter.” Washington deletes ABA Model Rule 1.8(e)(2) (permitting lawyers to pay litigation costs for indigent clients).

Wisconsin: Rule 1.8(c) creates an exception to testamentary gifts where:

(1) the client is related to the donee, (2) the donee is a natural object of the bounty of the client, (3) there is no reasonable ground to anticipate a contest, or a claim of undue influence or for the public to lose confidence in the integrity of the bar, and (4) the amount of the gift or bequest is reasonable and natural under the circumstances.

Proposed Rule 1.8.2 [RPC 3-100 and 3-310]
“Rule 1.8.2 Use of Current Client's Information Protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)”
(XDraft #5, 6/16/10)

Summary: This proposed Rule restricts a lawyer's use of a current client's information to that client's disadvantage. It complements other related rules that generally prohibit disclosure of client information and conflicting representations of other clients.

Comparison with ABA Counterpart

Rule	Comment
☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule	☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
☒ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule	☒ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart	☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

Primary Factors Considered

- ☒ Existing California Law

Rule

RPC 3-100; 3-310

Statute

Bus. & Prof. Code §6068(e)

Case law

- ☒ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

Massachusetts; Virginia; Oregon; and Illinois

- ☐ Other Primary Factor(s)

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(13 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 13 due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Less than Six Members Opposing Adoption ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 10

Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 2

Abstain 0

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by Consensus ☐

Commission Minority Position, Known Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

Minority Position Included on Model Rule Comparison Chart: ☒ Yes ☐ No

(See introduction and rule explanation in the Model Rule comparison chart.)

☒ No Known Stakeholders

☐ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

☐ Very Controversial – Explanation:

☒ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

See introduction and rule explanation in the Model Rule comparison chart.

☐ Not Controversial – Explanation:

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.8.2* Use of Current Client's Information Protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)

June 2010

(Proposed rule following June 15, 2010 public comment deadline.)

INTRODUCTION:

Proposed Rule 1.8.2, which governs a lawyer's use of a current client's information to the client's disadvantage, complements proposed Rules 1.6 (disclosure of a current client's information) and 1.7 (lawyer accepting or continuing representations adverse to a current client). Together, these Rules provide critical guidance to lawyers concerning their important duties of loyalty and confidentiality. Proposed Rule 1.8.2 largely tracks the language of Model Rule 1.8(b). The differences between proposed Rule 1.8.2 and the Model Rule relate primarily to California well-settled policy of imposing on lawyers a more uniform and consistent duty of confidentiality. Other changes are intended to clarify the centrality of client loyalty to the Rule's rationale. Finally, there are some housekeeping revisions related to proposed Rule 1.8.2 being a standalone Rule. See Explanation of Rule Changes, ¶. 2.

The Commission's comment modifies the comparable Model Rule language by clarifying that use of a client's information is governed by this Rule whether or not the information is confidential. The comment also tracks the Commission's addition of the requirement for written consent.

Minority. A minority of the Commission believes that this Rule should not require the more stringent "informed written consent" standard for obtaining the client's consent to the lawyer's use of information relating to the representation to the client's disadvantage. See Explanation of Changes to the Rule, below.

* Proposed Rule 1.8.2, XDraft 5 (6/16/10).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(b) Conflict of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.2 Use of Current Client's Information Protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(b) A lawyer shall not use information relating to representation of a client to the disadvantage of the client unless the client gives informed consent, except as permitted or required by these Rules.	~~(b)-~~ A lawyer shall not use ~~information relating to representation of a client~~current client's information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) to the disadvantage of the client unless the client gives informed written consent, except as permitted ~~or required~~ by these Rules or the State Bar Act.	Rule 1.8.2 is similar to Model Rule 1.8(b) but substantive changes have been made to enhance client protection. The letter designation of the Model Rule paragraph has been deleted because, unlike Model Rule 1.8, which gathers together many divergent concepts in separate paragraphs in a single rule, the Commission has made each paragraph of that Rule a separate, standalone rule. The phrase "information relating to the representation" has been replaced by "information relating to a client." Because this Rule applies to information of current clients, to which lawyers owe an undivided duty of loyalty, the Commission determined that information protected under this Rule should not be limited to that related only to the client's representation. The Commission has added the requirement that the client give informed written consent to the lawyer's use of information relating to the representation to the client's disadvantage. The Commission determined that mandating informed written consent, which requires that the lawyer's disclosure of adverse consequences to the client be provided to the client in writing, provides an extra layer of protection by adding the formality of a writing. For example, current California rule 3-310 requires a client's informed written consent before a client is deemed to have waived a conflict of interest. The phrase, "or required," has been deleted because there are no provisions in the Rules or the State Bar Act that require a lawyer to violate his or her duty of confidentiality.

* Proposed Rule 1.8.2, XDraft 5 (6/16/10). Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(b) Conflict of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.2 Use of Current Client's Information Protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
		As the Commission has throughout its proposed rules, a reference to the State Bar Act, which is also part of the regulatory landscape in California, has been added. Minority: "Informed Written Consent". A minority of the Commission notes that current rule 3-100 requires only the client's informed consent to disclose the client's confidential information relating to the representation. The minority notes that the heightened written disclosure requirements for waiving conflicts of interest are appropriate in the conflicts context, because the adverse effects of a lawyer's conflicted representation are not necessarily apparently to a person who is not experienced in the use of legal services. That is not true of the use of the client's information to the client's disadvantage, where the potential adverse consequences will be readily apparent to the client. Approaches in Other Jurisdictions. There is little divergence from the Model Rule in other jurisdictions. Some jurisdictions, e.g., Massachusetts and Virginia, retain the ABA Model Code's prohibition on the use of client information to the advantage of the lawyer or a third person. Oregon permits use to the client's disadvantage only if the client's informed consent is "confirmed in writing." The current, pre-Ethics2000 Illinois Rules do not include Model Rule 1.8(b), but the Illinois State Bar has recommended its adoption.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(b) Conflict of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.2 Use of Current Client's Information Protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[5] Use of information relating to the representation to the disadvantage of the client violates the lawyer's duty of loyalty. Paragraph (b) applies when the information is used to benefit either the lawyer or a third person, such as another client or business associate of the lawyer. For example, if a lawyer learns that a client intends to purchase and develop several parcels of land, the lawyer may not use that information to purchase one of the parcels in competition with the client or to recommend that another client make such a purchase. The Rule does not prohibit uses that do not disadvantage the client. For example, a lawyer who learns a government agency's interpretation of trade legislation during the representation of one client may properly use that information to benefit other clients. Paragraph (b) prohibits disadvantageous use of client information unless the client gives informed consent, except as permitted or required by these Rules. See Rules 1.2(d), 1.6, 1.9(c), 3.3, 4.1(b), 8.1 and 8.3.	[1] ~~[5]~~ Use of information ~~relating~~ protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e), whether or not confidential, to the disadvantage of the client violates the lawyer's duty of loyalty. ~~Paragraph (b)~~ See Rule 1.6, Comments [3] to [6]. This Rule applies when the information is used to benefit either the lawyer or a third person, such as another client or business associate of the lawyer, to the disadvantage of the client. For example, if a lawyer learns that a client intends to purchase and develop several parcels of land, the lawyer may not use that information to purchase one of the parcels in competition with the client or to recommend that another client make such a purchase. The Rule does not prohibit uses that do not disadvantage the client. For example, a lawyer who learns a government agency's interpretation of trade legislation during the representation of one client may properly use that information to benefit other clients. ~~Paragraph (b)~~ This Rule prohibits disadvantageous use of ~~client~~ information protected by Business and Profession's Code section 6068(e) unless the client gives informed written consent, except as permitted ~~or required~~ by these Rules or the State Bar Act. See Rules ~~1.2(d),~~ 1.6, 1.9(c), ~~3.3,~~ 4.1(~~ba~~)(2), ~~8.1~~ and ~~8.3~~ Business and Professions Code section 6068(e).	The Comment to proposed Rule 1.8.2 is substantially similar to Model Rule 1.8(b), comment [5]. Aside from necessary housekeeping revisions such as renumbering the comment and substituting "this Rule" for "paragraph (b)," the first sentence has been modified to emphasize that regardless of whether the client information in which a lawyer traffics is confidential, the lawyer will still violate his duty of loyalty and thus this rule if the information is used to the client's disadvantage. The first sentence has also been revised to conform to the change that the Commission recommends to the black letter rule. See Explanation of Changes to the Rule. The clause, "to the disadvantage of the client," has been added in the second sentence to emphasize that the Rule prohibits the disadvantageous use of client information. The more stringent "informed written consent" standard has been added in keeping with California practice. See Explanation of Changes to the Rule. The phrase "or required" has been deleted to conform to the Rule. The comment cross-references the three proposed rules the Commission contemplates will permit use or disclosure client information that might be to the disadvantage a client: Rules 1.6, 1.9(c), and 4.1(a)(2). The other rules referenced in the Model Rule comment do not comport with California policy on confidentiality. The Commission has rejected those rules to the extent they permit a lawyer to violate the duty of confidentiality.

* Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule

Rule 1.8.2 Use of Current Client's Information Protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)
(Commission's Proposed Rule – XDraft5 (6/16/10) – CLEAN VERSION)

A lawyer shall not use a current client's information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) to the disadvantage of the client unless the client gives informed written consent, except as permitted by these Rules or the State Bar Act.

Comment

- [1] Use of information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e), whether or not confidential, to the disadvantage of the client violates the lawyer's duty of loyalty. See Rule 1.6, Comments [3] to [6]. This Rule applies when the information is used to benefit either the lawyer or a third person, such as another client or business associate of the lawyer, to the disadvantage of the client. For example, if a lawyer learns that a client intends to purchase and develop several parcels of land, the lawyer may not use that information to purchase one of the parcels in competition with the client or to recommend that another client make such a purchase. The Rule does not prohibit uses that do not disadvantage the client. For example, a lawyer who learns a government agency's interpretation of trade legislation during the representation of one client may properly use that information to benefit other clients. This Rule prohibits disadvantageous use of information protected by Business and Profession's Code section 6068(e) unless the client gives informed written consent, except as permitted by these Rules or the State Bar Act. See Rules 1.6, 1.9(c), 4.1(a)(2), and Business and Professions Code section 6068(e).

Rule 1.8.2 Use of Current Client's Confidential Information Relating to the Representation [3-100, 3-100.5]
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 2 Agree = 1
Disagree = 0
Modify = 1
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
1	Office of Chief Trial Counsel ("OCTC"), State Bar of California	M	Yes		OCTC supports the rule and especially the use of informed written consent. Comment [1], however, seems unnecessarily long. The examples could either be stricken or tightened.	The Commission disagrees that Comment [1], which closely tracks Model Rule 1.8, cmt. [5], is unnecessarily long. The Commission has determined that it provides appropriate guidance on a lawyer's use of a client's information.
2	San Diego County Bar Association	A	Yes		We approve of the new rule in its entirety.	No response required.

¹ A = AGREE with proposed Rule D = DISAGREE with proposed Rule M = AGREE ONLY IF MODIFIED NI = NOT INDICATED

Rule 1.8: Conflict of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules

STATE VARIATIONS

(The following is an excerpt from Regulation of Lawyers: Statutes and Standards (2010 Ed.)
by Steven Gillers, Roy D. Simon and Andrew M. Perlman.)

Alabama. Alabama's Rule 1.8(e)(3) provides as follows:

(3) a lawyer may advance or guarantee emergency financial assistance to the client, the repayment of which may not be contingent on the outcome of the matter, provided that no promise or assurance of financial assistance was made to the client by the lawyer, or on the lawyer's behalf, prior to the employment of the lawyer.

Alabama also adds Rule 1.8(k), which identifies when a lawyer can represent both parties to an uncontested divorce or domestic relations proceeding. Relating to Rule 1.8(h), the Alabama Legal Services Liability Act, Ala. Code §§6-5-570 et seq., provides as follows: "There shall be only one form and cause of action against legal service providers in courts in the State of Alabama and it shall be known as the legal service liability action." Finally, Rules 1.8(l) and (m) describe prohibitions on sexual relations between lawyers and clients. Notably,

Rule 1.8(m) states that "except for a spousal relationship or a relationship that existed at the commencement of the lawyer-client relationship, sexual relations between the lawyer and the client shall be presumed to be exploitative [and thus violate Rule 1.8(l)]. This presumption is rebuttable."

Arizona: Rule 1.8(h)(2) adds a clause forbidding a lawyer to "make an agreement prospectively limiting the client's right to report the lawyer to appropriate professional authorities." Rule 1.8(l), which retains the 1983 version of ABA Model Rule 1.8(i), provides: "A lawyer related to another lawyer as parent, child, sibling, spouse or cohabitant shall not represent a client in a representation directly adverse to a person who the lawyer knows is represented by the other lawyer except upon consent by the client after consultation regarding the relationship."

California: California's rules are generally equivalent to Model Rule 1.8, but two exceptions deserve attention. Rule 3-320 provides as follows:

A member shall not represent a client in a matter in which another party's lawyer is a spouse, parent, child, or sibling of the member, lives with the member, is a client of the member, or has an intimate personal relationship with the member, unless the member informs the client in writing of the relationship.

And Rule 4-210 provides in part as follows:

(A) A member shall not directly or indirectly pay or agree to pay, guarantee, represent, or sanction a representation that the member or member's law firm will pay the personal or business expenses of a prospective or existing client, except that this rule shall not prohibit a member: . . . (2) After employment, from lending money to the client upon the client's promise in writing to repay such loan.

Connecticut adds the following language to Rule 1.8(a), providing that lawyers can enter into business transactions with clients under the following circumstances:

(4) With regard to a business transaction, the lawyer advises the client or former client in writing either (A) that the lawyer will provide legal services to the client or former client concerning the transaction, or (B) that the lawyer will not provide legal services to the client or former client and that the lawyer is involved as a business person only and not as a lawyer representing the client or former client and that the lawyer is not one to whom the client or former client can turn for legal advice concerning the transaction.

(5) With regard to the providing of investment services, the lawyer advises the client or former client in writing (A) whether such services are covered by legal liability insurance or other insurance, and [makes either disclosure set out in paragraph (a)(4)]. Investment services shall only apply where the lawyer has either a direct or indirect control over the invested funds and a direct or indirect interest in the underlying investment.

For purposes of subsection (a)(1) through (a)(5), the phrase "former client" shall mean a client for whom the two year period starting from the conclusion of representation has not expired.

District of Columbia: D.C. Rule 1.8(d) permits lawyers to advance "financial assistance which is reasonably necessary to permit the client to institute or maintain the litigation or administrative proceeding.” Rule 1.8(i) provides as follows:

A lawyer may acquire and enforce a lien granted by law to secure the lawyer's fees or expenses, but a lawyer shall not impose a lien upon any part of a client's files, except upon the lawyer's own work product, and then only to the extent that the work product has not been paid for. This work product exception shall not apply when the client has become unable to pay, or when withholding the lawyer's work product would present a significant risk to the client of irreparable harm.

Florida adds Rule 4-8.4(i), which provides that a lawyer shall not engage in sexual conduct with a client “or a representative of a client” that:

exploits or adversely affects the interests of the client or the lawyer-client relationship including, but not limited to:

(1) requiring or demanding sexual relations with a client or a representative of a client incident to or as a condition of a legal representation;

(2) employing coercion, intimidation, or undue influence in entering into sexual relations with a client or a representative of a client; or

(3) continuing to represent a client if the lawyer's sexual relations with the client or a representative of the client cause the lawyer to render incompetent representation.

In 2004, the Florida Supreme Court deleted language from the comment to Rule 8.4, which had stated that lawyer-client sexual relations do not violate the rule if a sexual relationship existed between the lawyer and client before commencement of the lawyer-client relationship.

Georgia: Rule 1.8(a), drawing on DR 5-104 of the ABA Code of Professional Responsibility, applies “if the client expects the lawyer to exercise the lawyer's professional judgment therein for the protection of the client.” Georgia retains the language of deleted ABA Model Rule 1.8(i) but adds that the disqualification of a lawyer due to a parent, child, sibling, or spousal relationship “is personal and is not imputed to members of firms with whom the lawyers are associated.” Georgia adds that the maximum penalty for violating Rule 1.8(b) (which relates to confidentiality) is disbarment, but the maximum penalty for violating any other provision of Rule 1.8 is only a public reprimand.

Illinois: In the rules effective January 1, 2010, Rule 1.8(a)(2) omits the phrase “desirability of seeking.”

Louisiana: Rule 1.8(g) permits an aggregate settlement if “a court approves the settlement in a certified class action.” Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to “provide financial assistance to a client who is in necessitous circumstances” subject to strict controls, including:

(ii) The advance or loan guarantee, or the offer thereof, shall not be used as an inducement by the lawyer, or anyone acting on the lawyer’s behalf, to secure employment.

(iii) Neither the lawyer nor anyone acting on the lawyer’s behalf may offer to make advances or loan guarantees prior to being hired by a client, and the lawyer shall not publicize nor advertise a willingness to make advances or loan guarantees to clients.

Massachusetts: Rule 1.8(b) forbids a lawyer to use confidential information “for the lawyer’s advantage or the advantage of a third person” without consent.

Michigan: Rules 1.8(a)(2) and 1.8(h)(2) (regarding business transactions with clients and settlement of legal malpractice claims) both require that the client be given a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of independent counsel but lack the ABA requirement that the client be “advised in writing of the desirability of seeking” independent counsel. Michigan Rule 1.8(g), regarding aggregate settlements, lacks the ABA requirement that the client’s consent be “in a writing signed by the client.” Michigan retains the language of deleted ABA Model Rule 1.8(i) verbatim.

Minnesota: Rule 1.8(e)(3) allows a lawyer to guarantee a loan necessary for a client to withstand litigation delay. Rule 1.8(k)’s provision on sexual relationships with clients prohibits a lawyer from having sexual relations with a client unless a consensual relationship existed between the lawyer and client when the client-lawyer relationship commenced. The rule also defines “sexual relations” and adds the following Rules 1.8(k)(2)-(3) to explain the meaning of sex with a “client” when a lawyer represents an organization:

(2) if the client is an organization, any individual who oversees the representation and gives instructions to the lawyer on behalf of the organization shall be deemed to be the client . . .

(3) this paragraph does not prohibit a lawyer from engaging in sexual relations with a client of the lawyer’s firm provided that the lawyer has no involvement in the performance of the legal work for the client . . .

Mississippi: Rule 1.8(e)(2) permits a lawyer to advance medical and living expenses to a client under certain narrowly defined circumstances.

New Hampshire: The New Hampshire rules include a Rule 1.19 (Disclosure of Information to the Client), which requires a lawyer (other than a government or in-house lawyer) to inform a client at the time of engagement if “the lawyer does not maintain professional liability insurance” of at least $100,000 per occurrence and $300,000 in the aggregate “or if the lawyer’s professional liability insurance ceases to be in effect.”

New Jersey: Rule 1.8(e)(3) creates an exception allowing financial assistance by a “non-profit organization authorized under [other law]” if the organization is representing the indigent client without a fee. Rule 1.8(h)(1), while forbidding agreements prospectively limiting liability to a client, contains an exception if “the client fails to act in accordance with the lawyer’s advice and the lawyer nevertheless continues to represent the client at the client’s request.” New Jersey Rule 1.8(k) and (l) provide as follows:

(k) A lawyer employed by a public entity, either as a lawyer or in some other role, shall not undertake the

representation of another client if the representation presents a substantial risk that the lawyer’s responsibilities to the public entity would limit the lawyer’s ability to provide independent advice or diligent and competent representation to either the public entity or the client.

(l) A public entity cannot consent to a representation otherwise prohibited by this Rule.

New York: In the rules effective April 1, 2009, Rule 1.8(a) deletes the language “knowingly acquire an ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client” and adds language from DR 5-104(A) of the old Model Code: “if they have differing interests therein and if the client expects the lawyer to exercise professional judgment therein for the protection of the client....” Comments 3A and 4A-4F, which have no Model Rule equivalents, describe in considerable detail the problem of business transactions with clients, including (in Comments 4D-4F) issues related to a lawyer’s receipt of a client’s securities. New York omits Comment 5.

Rule 1.8(d) draws, in part, on DR 5-104(B) of the old Model Code, and Comment 9 provides more guidance than the equivalent Model Rule provisions concerning a lawyer's acquisition of media or literary rights that relate to a client matter.

Finally, Rule 1.8(j) and (k) as well as Comments 17, 17A, 17B, and 18-20, all address sexual relationships with clients and provide significantly more guidance in this regard than the equivalent Model Rule provision. Comment 17B concludes that "[a] law firm's failure to educate lawyers about the restrictions on sexual relations — or a firm's failure to enforce those restrictions against lawyers who violate them — may constitute a violation of Rule 5.1, which obligates a law firm to make reasonable efforts to ensure that all lawyers in the firm conform to these Rules."

North Dakota: Rule 1.8(g), regarding aggregate settlements, applies "other than in class actions." North Dakota adds Rule 1.8(k), which restricts the practice of law by a part-time prosecutor or judge in certain circumstances.

Ohio: Rule 1.8(c) forbids a lawyer to solicit "any substantial gift from a client" and forbids a lawyer to "prepare on behalf of a client an instrument giving the lawyer, the lawyer's partner, associate, paralegal, law clerk or other employee of the lawyer's firm, a lawyer acting 'of counsel' in the lawyer's firm, or a person related to the lawyer any gift unless the lawyer or other recipient of the gift is related to the client." "Gift" is defined to include "a testamentary gift." Ohio Rule 1.8(f)(4) provides a detailed "statement of insured client's rights" that a lawyer "selected and paid by an insurer to represent an insured" must give to the client.

In July 2009, an Ohio statute (R.C. §1349.55) took effect to regulate companies that make cash advances to plaintiffs in pending civil cases in exchange for the right to receive part of the proceeds of any settlement, award, or judgment. Paragraph (C) of the statute provides that if a plaintiff gets into a dispute concerning the contract for the cash advance, "the responsibilities of the attorney representing the consumer [the plaintiff] in the civil action or claim shall be no greater than the attorney's responsibilities under the Ohio Rules of Professional Conduct."

Oregon: Rule 1.8(b) permits a lawyer to use confidential information to a client's disadvantage only if the client's consent is "confirmed in writing" (except as otherwise permitted or required by the Rules). Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to advance litigation expenses only if "the client remains ultimately liable for such expenses to the extent of the client's ability to pay." Finally, Oregon's rule governing sexual relations with clients contains a detailed description of "sexual relations," providing that it includes "sexual intercourse or any touching of the sexual or other intimate parts of a person or causing such person to touch the sexual or other intimate parts of the lawyer for the purpose of arousing or gratifying the sexual desire of either party."

Pennsylvania: Rule 1.8(g) does not require that client consent be “confirmed in writing.”

Texas: Rule 1.08(c) provides that prior to the conclusion of “all aspects of the matter giving rise to the lawyer’s employment,” a lawyer shall not make or negotiate an agreement “with a client, prospective client, or former client” giving the lawyer literary or media rights to a portrayal or account based in substantial part on information relating to the representation. Rule 1.08(d) provides as follows:

(d) A lawyer shall not provide financial assistance to a client in connection with pending or contemplated litigation or administrative proceedings, except that:

(1) a lawyer may advance or guarantee court costs, expenses of litigation or administrative proceedings, and reasonably necessary medical and living expenses, the repayment of which may be contingent on the outcome of the matter; and

(2) a lawyer representing an indigent client may pay court costs and expenses of litigation on behalf of the client.

Virginia: Rule 1.8(b) forbids the use of information “for the advantage of the lawyer or of a third person or to the disadvantage of the client.” Rule 1.8(e)(1) requires a client ultimately to be liable for court costs and expenses. Rule 1.8(h) contains an exception where the lawyer is “an employee” of the client “as long as the client is independently represented in making the agreement” prospectively limiting the lawyer’s liability for malpractice.

Washington: Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to (1) advance or guarantee the expenses of litigation “provided the client remains ultimately liable for such expenses; and (2) in matters maintained as class actions only, repayment of expenses of litigation may be contingent on the outcome of the matter.” Washington deletes ABA Model Rule 1.8(e)(2) (permitting lawyers to pay litigation costs for indigent clients).

Wisconsin: Rule 1.8(c) creates an exception to testamentary gifts where:

(1) the client is related to the donee, (2) the donee is a natural object of the bounty of the client, (3) there is no reasonable ground to anticipate a contest, or a claim of undue influence or for the public to lose confidence in the integrity of the bar, and (4) the amount of the gift or bequest is reasonable and natural under the circumstances.

Proposed Rule 1.8.3 [4-400]

“Gifts from Clients”

(XDraft #5.1, 10/18/09)

Summary: Rule 1.8.3, which is based on Model Rule 1.8(c), addresses a lawyer’s duties with respect to gifts from a client. See Introduction for details as to how proposed Rule 1.8.3 differs substantively from Model Rule 1.8(c).

Comparison with ABA Counterpart

Rule

Comment

- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
- ☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
- ☒ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
- ☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
- ☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
- ☒ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
- ☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

Primary Factors Considered

- ☒ Existing California Law

Rules

RPC 4-400

Statute

Probate Code § 21350(b)

Case law

McGee v. State Bar (1962) 58 Cal.2nd 423

- ☐ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

- ☐ Other Primary Factor(s)

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(13 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 13 due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Less than Six Members Opposing Adoption ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 9

Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 1

Abstain 1

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by Consensus ☐

Minority/Position Included on Model Rule Comparison Chart: ☐ Yes ☒ No

Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

☒ No Known Stakeholders

☐ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

☐ Very Controversial – Explanation:

☒ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

Public commenters took issue with the Commission's proposed substitution of "induce" for the Model Rule's "solicit". Other commenters criticized broadening the Rule to include "attempts to induce". See Public Comment Chart, comments from San Diego County Bar Association and Ross Simmons. The Commission has replaced the "attempt to induce" standard with the Model Rule's "solicit" and believes that change may assuage the commenters' concerns.

☐ Not Controversial

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.8.3* Gifts from Clients

June 2010

(Proposed rule following June 15, 2010 public comment deadline.)

INTRODUCTION:

Proposed Rule 1.8.3 is based on Model Rule 1.8(c), and is intended to replace current California rule 4-400. Proposed Rule 1.8.3 reorganizes ABA 1.8(c), and includes several changes that improve client protection and conform the rule to California law. First, the Rule retains the current California rule prohibition against “inducing” a gift, which provides broader protection than the Model Rule, in addition to the Model Rule standard, which prohibits “solicitation” of gifts. Second, rather than restate in the rule the scope of related persons excluded from the gift prohibition, reference instead is made to Probate Code § 21350(b), which defines “a person who is related by blood or marriage.” See proposed paragraph (b). Third, to conform to California law, the Commission has included a requirement in Comment [2] that an unrelated client have independent legal representation before an attorney may draft an instrument giving a substantial gift to the lawyer. Model Rule 1.8(c), cmt. [7] merely states that the client “should” have such advice.

Variations in Other Jurisdictions. Nearly every jurisdiction has adopted Model Rule 1.8(c), some with minor variations. See State Variations chart, below.

A Note on Rule Numbering. Rather than follow the Model Rules, which place a group of largely unrelated conflict concepts in a single rule, for ease of reference the Commission has assigned each concept in Model Rule 1.8 its own separate rule number.

* Proposed Rule 1.8.3, XDraft #5,1 (10/18/09).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(c) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.3 Gifts from Clients	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(c) A lawyer shall not solicit any substantial gift from a client, including a testamentary gift, or prepare on behalf of a client an instrument giving the lawyer or a person related to the lawyer any substantial gift unless the lawyer or other recipient of the gift is related to the client. For purposes of this paragraph, related persons include a spouse, child, grandchild, parent, grandparent or other relative or individual with whom the lawyer or the client maintains a close, familial relationship.	(a) A lawyer shall not: (c) ~~A lawyer shall not solicit any substantial gift from a client, including a testamentary gift, or prepare on behalf of a client an instrument giving the lawyer or a person related to the lawyer any substantial gift unless the lawyer or other recipient of the gift is related to the client. For purposes of this paragraph, related persons include a spouse, child, grandchild, parent, grandparent or other relative or individual with whom the lawyer or the client maintains a close, familial relationship.~~	Proposed Rule 1.8.3 is based on Model Rule 1.8(c), but has been reorganized into three subparts to improve its readability.
	(1) induce or solicit a client to make a substantial gift, including a testamentary gift, to the lawyer or a person related to the lawyer, or	The Commission has retained the prohibition in current California rule 4-400, which prohibits “inducing” a client gift, and has also added the Model Rule’s “solicit” standard. Together, they provide broader client protection than the Model Rule, which simply prohibits “solicitation” of a gift. In response to public comment, the Commission has removed the “attempting to induce” standard proposed in the public comment draft because it is too vague a standard for a disciplinary rule.

* Proposed Rule 1.8.3, XDraft 5.1 (10/18/09).

BLUE UNDERLINE indicates that language has been added to the ABA Model Rule.

~~REDLINE STRIKEOUT~~ shows text that has been deleted from the ABA Model Rule.

~~Green STRIKEOUT~~ indicates that text from the ABA Model Rule has been moved and Green UNDERLINE shows the new location where that language has been placed in the proposed Rule.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(c) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.3 Gifts from Clients	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	(2) prepare on behalf of a client an instrument giving the lawyer or a person related to the lawyer any substantial gift,	Subparagraph (2) is taken verbatim from Model Rule 1.8(c).
	unless the lawyer or other recipient of the gift is related to the client.	The closing clause of paragraph (a) is taken verbatim from Model Rule 1.8(c).
	(b) For purposes of this Rule, related persons include "a person who is related by blood or marriage" as that term is defined in Cal. Probate Code, section 21350(b).	Rather than restate in the Rule a description of people excluded from the Rule's coverage, as does Model Rule 1.8(c), the Commission recommends including a reference to Probate Code § 21350, which includes a statutory definition of "a person who is related by blood or marriage."

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(c) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.3 Gifts from Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Gifts to Lawyers [6] A lawyer may accept a gift from a client, if the transaction meets general standards of fairness. For example, a simple gift such as a present given at a holiday or as a token of appreciation is permitted. If a client offers the lawyer a more substantial gift, paragraph (c) does not prohibit the lawyer from accepting it, although such a gift may be voidable by the client under the doctrine of undue influence, which treats client gifts as presumptively fraudulent. In any event, due to concerns about overreaching and imposition on clients, a lawyer may not suggest that a substantial gift be made to the lawyer or for the lawyer's benefit, except where the lawyer is related to the client as set forth in paragraph (c).	~~Gifts to Lawyers~~ ~~[6] A lawyer may accept a gift from a client, if the transaction meets general standards of fairness. For example, a simple gift such as a present given at a holiday or as a token of appreciation is permitted. If a client offers the lawyer a more substantial gift, paragraph (c) does not prohibit the lawyer from accepting it, although such a gift may be voidable by the client under the doctrine of undue influence, which treats client gifts as presumptively fraudulent. In any event, due to concerns about overreaching and imposition on clients, a lawyer may not suggest that a substantial gift be made to the lawyer or for the lawyer's benefit, except where the lawyer is related to the client as set forth in paragraph (c).~~	See Explanation of Changes for Comment [1], below.
	[1] Paragraph (a) prohibits a lawyer from persuading or influencing a client to give the lawyer any gift of more than nominal market value, except where the lawyer is related to the client. However, a lawyer does not violate this Rule merely by engaging in conduct that might result in a client making a gift, such as by sending the client a wedding announcement. Discipline is appropriate where impermissible influence occurs. See Magee v. State Bar (1962) 58 Cal.2d 423 [24 Cal.Rptr. 839].	Comment [1] is based on Model Rule 1.8(c), cmt. [6], but has been substantially revised to make it more concise and provide greater clarity. In particular, the Commission has changed the example to better illustrate the point of the Comment. Reference to Supreme Court authority confirming imposition of discipline where a lawyer induces a substantial gift has been included.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(c) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.3 Gifts from Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[7] If effectuation of a substantial gift requires preparing a legal instrument such as a will or conveyance, the client should have the detached advice that another lawyer can provide. The sole exception to this Rule is where the client is a relative of the donee.	~~[7]~~ If ~~effectuation—of~~effecting a substantial gift requires preparing a legal instrument such as a will or conveyance, the client ~~should~~must have ~~the detached advice that~~independent representation by another lawyer ~~can—provide~~in accordance with Probate Code, sections 21350 et seq. The sole exception ~~to this Rule~~ is where the client is a relative of the donee.	Comment [2] is based on Model Rule 1.8, cmt. [7]. Other than changing the text of the Model Rule comment for clarity, the Commission has retained the California requirement that an unrelated client actually have independent legal representation before an attorney may draft an instrument giving a substantial gift to the lawyer. Model Rule Comment [7] merely states that the client “should” have such advice. Thus, the proposed Comment provides greater client protection.
[8] This Rule does not prohibit a lawyer from seeking to have the lawyer or a partner or associate of the lawyer named as executor of the client's estate or to another potentially lucrative fiduciary position. Nevertheless, such appointments will be subject to the general conflict of interest provision in Rule 1.7 when there is a significant risk that the lawyer's interest in obtaining the appointment will materially limit the lawyer's independent professional judgment in advising the client concerning the choice of an executor or other fiduciary. In obtaining the client's informed consent to the conflict, the lawyer should advise the client concerning the nature and extent of the lawyer's financial interest in the appointment, as well as the availability of alternative candidates for the position.	~~[8]~~ This Rule does not prohibit a lawyer from seeking to have the lawyer or a partner or associate of the lawyer named as executor of the client's estate or to another potentially lucrative fiduciary position. Nevertheless, such appointments will be subject to ~~the general conflict of interest provision in Rule 1.7(a)(2).—when there is a significant risk that the lawyer's interest in obtaining the appointment will materially limit the lawyer's independent professional judgment in advising the client concerning the choice of an executor or other fiduciary.~~ In ~~obtaining the client's informed consent to~~disclosing the conflict, the lawyer should advise the client concerning the nature and extent of the lawyer's financial interest in the appointment, as well as the availability of alternative candidates for the position.	Comment [3] largely tracks the language in Model Rule 1.8, cmt. [8], except it deletes an explanation of what the referenced rule 1.7 states. The Commission has not recommended the adoption of the “materially limit” standard in Model Rule 1.7, so including the description would be inaccurate. Minority. A minority of the Commission believes this explanation for deleting most of the second sentence from Model Rule, cmt. [2], illustrates the lack of public protection under proposed Rule 1.7(d) for conflicts described in this Comment that can materially affect a lawyer's duty of loyalty and professional judgment. Contrary to the rule in virtually every other jurisdiction, proposed Rule 1.7(d) imposes no obligation to obtain the client's consent where the lawyer seeks to have himself named or have a partner or associate in the firm named as executor, trustee or to another “potentially lucrative fiduciary position” no matter how significant the risk that the recommendation, or the appointment, will materially limit the lawyer's professional judgment. See Minority Report to proposed Rule 1.7.

Rule 1.8.3 Gifts From Client

(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to the Public Comment Draft)

- (a) A lawyer shall not:
- (1) induce or solicit a client to make a substantial gift, including a testamentary gift, to the lawyer or a person related to the lawyer, or
 - (2) prepare on behalf of a client an instrument giving the lawyer or a person related to the lawyer any substantial gift, unless the lawyer or other recipient of the gift is related to the client.
- (b) For purposes of this Rule, related persons include "a person who is related by blood or marriage" as that term is defined in California Probate Code section 21350(b).
- sections 21350 et seq. The sole exception is where the client is a relative of the donee.
- [3] This Rule does not prohibit a lawyer from seeking to have the lawyer or a partner or associate of the lawyer named as executor of the client's estate or to another potentially lucrative fiduciary position. Nevertheless, such appointments will be subject to ~~the general conflict of interest provisions in~~ Rule 1.7(d)(a)(2). In disclosing the conflict, the lawyer should advise the client concerning the nature and extent of the lawyer's financial interest in the appointment, as well as the availability of alternative candidates for the position.

COMMENT

- [1] Paragraph (a) prohibits a lawyer from persuading or influencing a client to give the lawyer any gift of more than nominal market value, except where the lawyer is related to the client. However, a lawyer does not violate this Rule merely by engaging in conduct that might result in a client making a gift, such as by sending the client a wedding announcement. Discipline is appropriate where impermissible influence occurs. ~~(See Magee v. State Bar (1962) 58 Cal.2d 423 [24 Cal.Rptr. 839].)~~
- [2] If effecting a substantial gift requires preparing a legal instrument such as a will or conveyance, the client must have independent representation by another lawyer in accordance with Probate Code,

Rule ~~4-400~~1.8.3 Gifts From Client

(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to Current California Rule)

(a) A lawyer shall not: ~~A member shall not~~

- (1) induce or solicit a client to make a substantial gift, including a testamentary gift, to the ~~member~~lawyer or ~~to the member's parent, child, sibling, or spouse, except where the client is a person~~ related to the ~~member~~lawyer, or
- (2) prepare on behalf of a client an instrument giving the lawyer or a person related to the lawyer any substantial gift, unless the lawyer or other recipient of the gift is related to the client.

(b) For purposes of this Rule, related persons include "a person who is related by blood or marriage" as that term is defined in California Probate Code section 21350(b).

~~Discussion:~~ COMMENT

- [1] ~~A member may accept~~ Paragraph (a) prohibits a lawyer from persuading or influencing a client to give the lawyer any gift of more than nominal market value, except where the lawyer is related to the client. However, a lawyer does not violate this Rule merely by engaging in conduct that might result in a client making a gift ~~from a member's client, subject to general standards of fairness and absence of undue influence. The member who participates in~~ such as by sending the preparation of an instrument memorializing client a gift which wedding announcement. Discipline is otherwise permissible ought not to be subject to professional discipline. On the other hand, appropriate where impermissible influence occurred, discipline is ~~appropriate~~occurs. (See Magee v. State Bar (1962) 58 Cal.2d 423 [24 Cal.Rptr. 839].)

[2] If effecting a substantial gift requires preparing a legal instrument such as a will or conveyance, the client must have independent representation by another lawyer in accordance with Probate Code, sections 21350 et seq. The sole exception is where the client is a relative of the donee.

[3] This Rule does not prohibit a lawyer from seeking to have the lawyer or a partner or associate of the lawyer named as executor of the client's estate or to another potentially lucrative fiduciary position. Nevertheless, such appointments will be subject to Rule 1.7(a)(2). In disclosing the conflict, the lawyer should advise the client concerning the nature and extent of the lawyer's financial interest in the appointment, as well as the availability of alternative candidates for the position.

Rule 1.8.3 Gifts From Client
(Commission's Proposed Rule – Clean Version)

- (a) A lawyer shall not:
- (1) induce or solicit a client to make a substantial gift, including a testamentary gift, to the lawyer or a person related to the lawyer, or
 - (2) prepare on behalf of a client an instrument giving the lawyer or a person related to the lawyer any substantial gift, unless the lawyer or other recipient of the gift is related to the client.
- (b) For purposes of this Rule, related persons include "a person who is related by blood or marriage" as that term is defined in California Probate Code section 21350(b).
- sections 21350 et seq. The sole exception is where the client is a relative of the donee.
- [3] This Rule does not prohibit a lawyer from seeking to have the lawyer or a partner or associate of the lawyer named as executor of the client's estate or to another potentially lucrative fiduciary position. Nevertheless, such appointments will be subject to Rule 1.7(a)(2). In disclosing the conflict, the lawyer should advise the client concerning the nature and extent of the lawyer's financial interest in the appointment, as well as the availability of alternative candidates for the position.

COMMENT

- [1] Paragraph (a) prohibits a lawyer from persuading or influencing a client to give the lawyer any gift of more than nominal market value, except where the lawyer is related to the client. However, a lawyer does not violate this Rule merely by engaging in conduct that might result in a client making a gift, such as by sending the client a wedding announcement. Discipline is appropriate where impermissible influence occurs. See Magee v. State Bar (1962) 58 Cal.2d 423 [24 Cal.Rptr. 839].
- [2] If effecting a substantial gift requires preparing a legal instrument such as a will or conveyance, the client must have independent representation by another lawyer in accordance with Probate Code,

Rule 1.8.3 Gifts from Client. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 4 Agree = 2 Disagree = 0 Modify = 2 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
1	COPRAC	A	Yes		Support as drafted.	No response required.
2	Office of Chief Trial Counsel	A	Yes	Comment [1]	The first sentence of Comment [1] seems unnecessary in light of the clear language of the Proposed Rule.	The Commission did not make the suggested change. The first sentence operates as a topic sentence for the discussion that follows.
3	San Diego County Bar Association (Ross Simmons)	M	Yes		Rule should track ABA Model Rule 1.8(c) but replace the term “solicit” with “induce.” Greater instruction needed as to the terms “substantial” and “modest” as used in the rule and Comments [1] and [2]. Rule should not include the phrase “attempt to induce” because it adds an unnecessarily broad sweep to the rule and is too subjective, making compliance and enforcement little more than conjecture. Statement in Comment [1] that lawyers may accept modest gifts should include the qualifier that is found in the Model Rule that the transaction must meet general standards of fairness. Add a Comment [4] which would state: “The term ‘close, familial relationship’ apart from those expressly set out in the Rule, is intended to similarly situated	This language was revised and the term “induce” is used. The language was revised and the term “modest” is no longer used. The Commission agreed, and removed “attempts to induce” from the Rule. The Commission removed the discussion regarding “modest” gifts. Commission did not make the requested revision, in part, because the Probate Code references are adequate and controlling.

¹ A = AGREE with proposed Rule

D = DISAGREE with proposed Rule

M = AGREE ONLY IF MODIFIED

NI = NOT INDICATED

Rule 1.8.3 Gifts from Client. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 4 Agree = 2 Disagree = 0 Modify = 2 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					relationships, which by way of example include registered domestic partners or equivalents in other jurisdictions, cohabitants, relatives within the third degree of the lawyer and of the lawyer's spouse (or domestic partner or equivalent, as applicable)." Add a Comment [5] which would state: "In interpreting the Rule, similarly worded authority from other jurisdictions is intended to be instructive although not binding. The term 'induce,' however, is intended to be broader than the term 'solicit.'"	The Commission did not make the requested revision, in part, because it has removed "attempt to induce" from the Rule.
4	Santa Clara County Bar Association ("SCCBA")	M	Yes		Change the last sentence of 1.8.3(a) to read "unless the lawyer or other recipient of the gift is related to the client or the client has had independent advice from another lawyer." This eliminates the need for Comment [2] as currently drafted. Comment [2] can read: "It is the intent of this rule that it be applied consistent with PC 21350 et seq."	Commission did not make the requested revision, in part, because the language of the Rule is accurate as drafted and Comment [2] provides additional guidance that should be helpful to lawyers who are unfamiliar with Cal. Probate Code section 21350.

Rule 1.8: Conflict of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules

STATE VARIATIONS

(The following is an excerpt from Regulation of Lawyers: Statutes and Standards (2010 Ed.)
by Steven Gillers, Roy D. Simon and Andrew M. Perlman.)

Alabama. Alabama's Rule 1.8(e)(3) provides as follows:

(3) a lawyer may advance or guarantee emergency financial assistance to the client, the repayment of which may not be contingent on the outcome of the matter, provided that no promise or assurance of financial assistance was made to the client by the lawyer, or on the lawyer's behalf, prior to the employment of the lawyer.

Alabama also adds Rule 1.8(k), which identifies when a lawyer can represent both parties to an uncontested divorce or domestic relations proceeding. Relating to Rule 1.8(h), the Alabama Legal Services Liability Act, Ala. Code §§6-5-570 et seq., provides as follows: "There shall be only one form and cause of action against legal service providers in courts in the State of Alabama and it shall be known as the legal service liability action." Finally, Rules 1.8(l) and (m) describe prohibitions on sexual relations between lawyers and clients. Notably,

Rule 1.8(m) states that "except for a spousal relationship or a relationship that existed at the commencement of the lawyer-client relationship, sexual relations between the lawyer and the client shall be presumed to be exploitative [and thus violate Rule 1.8(l)]. This presumption is rebuttable."

Arizona: Rule 1.8(h)(2) adds a clause forbidding a lawyer to "make an agreement prospectively limiting the client's right to report the lawyer to appropriate professional authorities." Rule 1.8(l), which retains the 1983 version of ABA Model Rule 1.8(i), provides: "A lawyer related to another lawyer as parent, child, sibling, spouse or cohabitant shall not represent a client in a representation directly adverse to a person who the lawyer knows is represented by the other lawyer except upon consent by the client after consultation regarding the relationship."

California: California's rules are generally equivalent to Model Rule 1.8, but two exceptions deserve attention. Rule 3-320 provides as follows:

A member shall not represent a client in a matter in which another party's lawyer is a spouse, parent, child, or sibling of the member, lives with the member, is a client of the member, or has an intimate personal relationship with the member, unless the member informs the client in writing of the relationship.

And Rule 4-210 provides in part as follows:

(A) A member shall not directly or indirectly pay or agree to pay, guarantee, represent, or sanction a representation that the member or member's law firm will pay the personal or business expenses of a prospective or existing client, except that this rule shall not prohibit a member: . . . (2) After employment, from lending money to the client upon the client's promise in writing to repay such loan.

Connecticut adds the following language to Rule 1.8(a), providing that lawyers can enter into business transactions with clients under the following circumstances:

(4) With regard to a business transaction, the lawyer advises the client or former client in writing either (A) that the lawyer will provide legal services to the client or former client concerning the transaction, or (B) that the lawyer will not provide legal services to the client or former client and that the lawyer is involved as a business person only and not as a lawyer representing the client or former client and that the lawyer is not one to whom the client or former client can turn for legal advice concerning the transaction.

(5) With regard to the providing of investment services, the lawyer advises the client or former client in writing (A) whether such services are covered by legal liability insurance or other insurance, and [makes either disclosure set out in paragraph (a)(4)]. Investment services shall only apply where the lawyer has either a direct or indirect control over the invested funds and a direct or indirect interest in the underlying investment.

For purposes of subsection (a)(1) through (a)(5), the phrase "former client" shall mean a client for whom the two year period starting from the conclusion of representation has not expired.

District of Columbia: D.C. Rule 1.8(d) permits lawyers to advance "financial assistance which is reasonably necessary to permit the client to institute or maintain the litigation or administrative proceeding.” Rule 1.8(i) provides as follows:

A lawyer may acquire and enforce a lien granted by law to secure the lawyer's fees or expenses, but a lawyer shall not impose a lien upon any part of a client's files, except upon the lawyer's own work product, and then only to the extent that the work product has not been paid for. This work product exception shall not apply when the client has become unable to pay, or when withholding the lawyer's work product would present a significant risk to the client of irreparable harm.

Florida adds Rule 4-8.4(i), which provides that a lawyer shall not engage in sexual conduct with a client “or a representative of a client” that:

exploits or adversely affects the interests of the client or the lawyer-client relationship including, but not limited to:

(1) requiring or demanding sexual relations with a client or a representative of a client incident to or as a condition of a legal representation;

(2) employing coercion, intimidation, or undue influence in entering into sexual relations with a client or a representative of a client; or

(3) continuing to represent a client if the lawyer's sexual relations with the client or a representative of the client cause the lawyer to render incompetent representation.

In 2004, the Florida Supreme Court deleted language from the comment to Rule 8.4, which had stated that lawyer-client sexual relations do not violate the rule if a sexual relationship existed between the lawyer and client before commencement of the lawyer-client relationship.

Georgia: Rule 1.8(a), drawing on DR 5-104 of the ABA Code of Professional Responsibility, applies “if the client expects the lawyer to exercise the lawyer's professional judgment therein for the protection of the client.” Georgia retains the language of deleted ABA Model Rule 1.8(i) but adds that the disqualification of a lawyer due to a parent, child, sibling, or spousal relationship “is personal and is not imputed to members of firms with whom the lawyers are associated.” Georgia adds that the maximum penalty for violating Rule 1.8(b) (which relates to confidentiality) is disbarment, but the maximum penalty for violating any other provision of Rule 1.8 is only a public reprimand.

Illinois: In the rules effective January 1, 2010, Rule 1.8(a)(2) omits the phrase “desirability of seeking.”

Louisiana: Rule 1.8(g) permits an aggregate settlement if “a court approves the settlement in a certified class action.” Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to “provide financial assistance to a client who is in necessitous circumstances” subject to strict controls, including:

(ii) The advance or loan guarantee, or the offer thereof, shall not be used as an inducement by the lawyer, or anyone acting on the lawyer’s behalf, to secure employment.

(iii) Neither the lawyer nor anyone acting on the lawyer’s behalf may offer to make advances or loan guarantees prior to being hired by a client, and the lawyer shall not publicize nor advertise a willingness to make advances or loan guarantees to clients.

Massachusetts: Rule 1.8(b) forbids a lawyer to use confidential information “for the lawyer’s advantage or the advantage of a third person” without consent.

Michigan: Rules 1.8(a)(2) and 1.8(h)(2) (regarding business transactions with clients and settlement of legal malpractice claims) both require that the client be given a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of independent counsel but lack the ABA requirement that the client be “advised in writing of the desirability of seeking” independent counsel. Michigan Rule 1.8(g), regarding aggregate settlements, lacks the ABA requirement that the client’s consent be “in a writing signed by the client.” Michigan retains the language of deleted ABA Model Rule 1.8(i) verbatim.

Minnesota: Rule 1.8(e)(3) allows a lawyer to guarantee a loan necessary for a client to withstand litigation delay. Rule 1.8(k)’s provision on sexual relationships with clients prohibits a lawyer from having sexual relations with a client unless a consensual relationship existed between the lawyer and client when the client-lawyer relationship commenced. The rule also defines “sexual relations” and adds the following Rules 1.8(k)(2)-(3) to explain the meaning of sex with a “client” when a lawyer represents an organization:

(2) if the client is an organization, any individual who oversees the representation and gives instructions to the lawyer on behalf of the organization shall be deemed to be the client . . .

(3) this paragraph does not prohibit a lawyer from engaging in sexual relations with a client of the lawyer’s firm provided that the lawyer has no involvement in the performance of the legal work for the client . . .

Mississippi: Rule 1.8(e)(2) permits a lawyer to advance medical and living expenses to a client under certain narrowly defined circumstances.

New Hampshire: The New Hampshire rules include a Rule 1.19 (Disclosure of Information to the Client), which requires a lawyer (other than a government or in-house lawyer) to inform a client at the time of engagement if “the lawyer does not maintain professional liability insurance” of at least $100,000 per occurrence and $300,000 in the aggregate “or if the lawyer’s professional liability insurance ceases to be in effect.”

New Jersey: Rule 1.8(e)(3) creates an exception allowing financial assistance by a “non-profit organization authorized under [other law]” if the organization is representing the indigent client without a fee. Rule 1.8(h)(1), while forbidding agreements prospectively limiting liability to a client, contains an exception if “the client fails to act in accordance with the lawyer’s advice and the lawyer nevertheless continues to represent the client at the client’s request.” New Jersey Rule 1.8(k) and (l) provide as follows:

(k) A lawyer employed by a public entity, either as a lawyer or in some other role, shall not undertake the

representation of another client if the representation presents a substantial risk that the lawyer’s responsibilities to the public entity would limit the lawyer’s ability to provide independent advice or diligent and competent representation to either the public entity or the client.

(l) A public entity cannot consent to a representation otherwise prohibited by this Rule.

New York: In the rules effective April 1, 2009, Rule 1.8(a) deletes the language “knowingly acquire an ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client” and adds language from DR 5-104(A) of the old Model Code: “if they have differing interests therein and if the client expects the lawyer to exercise professional judgment therein for the protection of the client....” Comments 3A and 4A-4F, which have no Model Rule equivalents, describe in considerable detail the problem of business transactions with clients, including (in Comments 4D-4F) issues related to a lawyer’s receipt of a client’s securities. New York omits Comment 5.

Rule 1.8(d) draws, in part, on DR 5-104(B) of the old Model Code, and Comment 9 provides more guidance than the equivalent Model Rule provisions concerning a lawyer's acquisition of media or literary rights that relate to a client matter.

Finally, Rule 1.8(j) and (k) as well as Comments 17, 17A, 17B, and 18-20, all address sexual relationships with clients and provide significantly more guidance in this regard than the equivalent Model Rule provision. Comment 17B concludes that "[a] law firm's failure to educate lawyers about the restrictions on sexual relations — or a firm's failure to enforce those restrictions against lawyers who violate them — may constitute a violation of Rule 5.1, which obligates a law firm to make reasonable efforts to ensure that all lawyers in the firm conform to these Rules."

North Dakota: Rule 1.8(g), regarding aggregate settlements, applies "other than in class actions." North Dakota adds Rule 1.8(k), which restricts the practice of law by a part-time prosecutor or judge in certain circumstances.

Ohio: Rule 1.8(c) forbids a lawyer to solicit "any substantial gift from a client" and forbids a lawyer to "prepare on behalf of a client an instrument giving the lawyer, the lawyer's partner, associate, paralegal, law clerk or other employee of the lawyer's firm, a lawyer acting 'of counsel' in the lawyer's firm, or a person related to the lawyer any gift unless the lawyer or other recipient of the gift is related to the client." "Gift" is defined to include "a testamentary gift." Ohio Rule 1.8(f)(4) provides a detailed "statement of insured client's rights" that a lawyer "selected and paid by an insurer to represent an insured" must give to the client.

In July 2009, an Ohio statute (R.C. §1349.55) took effect to regulate companies that make cash advances to plaintiffs in pending civil cases in exchange for the right to receive part of the proceeds of any settlement, award, or judgment. Paragraph (C) of the statute provides that if a plaintiff gets into a dispute concerning the contract for the cash advance, "the responsibilities of the attorney representing the consumer [the plaintiff] in the civil action or claim shall be no greater than the attorney's responsibilities under the Ohio Rules of Professional Conduct."

Oregon: Rule 1.8(b) permits a lawyer to use confidential information to a client's disadvantage only if the client's consent is "confirmed in writing" (except as otherwise permitted or required by the Rules). Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to advance litigation expenses only if "the client remains ultimately liable for such expenses to the extent of the client's ability to pay." Finally, Oregon's rule governing sexual relations with clients contains a detailed description of "sexual relations," providing that it includes "sexual intercourse or any touching of the sexual or other intimate parts of a person or causing such person to touch the sexual or other intimate parts of the lawyer for the purpose of arousing or gratifying the sexual desire of either party."

Pennsylvania: Rule 1.8(g) does not require that client consent be “confirmed in writing.”

Texas: Rule 1.08(c) provides that prior to the conclusion of “all aspects of the matter giving rise to the lawyer’s employment,” a lawyer shall not make or negotiate an agreement “with a client, prospective client, or former client” giving the lawyer literary or media rights to a portrayal or account based in substantial part on information relating to the representation. Rule 1.08(d) provides as follows:

(d) A lawyer shall not provide financial assistance to a client in connection with pending or contemplated litigation or administrative proceedings, except that:

(1) a lawyer may advance or guarantee court costs, expenses of litigation or administrative proceedings, and reasonably necessary medical and living expenses, the repayment of which may be contingent on the outcome of the matter; and

(2) a lawyer representing an indigent client may pay court costs and expenses of litigation on behalf of the client.

Virginia: Rule 1.8(b) forbids the use of information “for the advantage of the lawyer or of a third person or to the disadvantage of the client.” Rule 1.8(e)(1) requires a client ultimately to be liable for court costs and expenses. Rule 1.8(h) contains an exception where the lawyer is “an employee” of the client “as long as the client is independently represented in making the agreement” prospectively limiting the lawyer’s liability for malpractice.

Washington: Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to (1) advance or guarantee the expenses of litigation “provided the client remains ultimately liable for such expenses; and (2) in matters maintained as class actions only, repayment of expenses of litigation may be contingent on the outcome of the matter.” Washington deletes ABA Model Rule 1.8(e)(2) (permitting lawyers to pay litigation costs for indigent clients).

Wisconsin: Rule 1.8(c) creates an exception to testamentary gifts where:

(1) the client is related to the donee, (2) the donee is a natural object of the bounty of the client, (3) there is no reasonable ground to anticipate a contest, or a claim of undue influence or for the public to lose confidence in the integrity of the bar, and (4) the amount of the gift or bequest is reasonable and natural under the circumstances.

Proposed Rule 1.8.5 [4-210]

“Payment of Personal or Business Expenses Incurred by or for a Client”

(XDraft # 8, 10/6/09)

Summary: Although proposed Rule 1.8.5 addresses the same concept as Model Rule 1.8(e), i.e., placing restrictions on a lawyer paying the personal or business expenses of a client, the proposed Rule provides a more detailed statement in order to afford better client protection and protect the integrity of the legal system. See Introduction.

Comparison with ABA Counterpart

Rule

Comment

- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
- ☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
- ☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
- ☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
- ☒ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
- ☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
- ☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
- ☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

Primary Factors Considered

- ☒ Existing California Law

Rules

RPC 4-210.

Statute

Case law

- ☐ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

- ☐ Other Primary Factor(s)

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(13 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 13 due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Less than Six Members Opposing Adoption ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 7
Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 3
Abstain 1

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by Consensus ☐

Minority/Position Included on Model Rule Comparison Chart: ☐ Yes ☒ No

Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

☒ No Known Stakeholders

☐ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

☐ Very Controversial – Explanation:

☐ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

☒ Not Controversial

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.8.5* Payment of Personal or Business Expenses Incurred by or for a Client

June 2010

(Proposed rule following June 15, 2010 public comment deadline.)

INTRODUCTION:

Although proposed Rule 1.8.5 addresses the same concept as Model Rule 1.8(e), i.e., placing restrictions on a lawyer paying the personal or business expenses of a client, the proposed Rule provide a fuller and more detailed statement in order to afford better client protection and protect the integrity of the legal system. The proposed Rule also clarifies points that are alluded to only in general terms by the Model Rule, or not at all. These include expanding the reach of the Rule to include promises made in advance and not just the lawyer's actual advancement of funds, adding a definition of "costs", limiting a lawyer's right to advance costs to those that are "reasonable", and clarifying that a lawyer may loan money to a client with certain limitation including compliance with the business transactions Rule. The proposed Rule operates to limit the risk of a conflict of interest between a lawyer and client that can result from the lawyer's heightened interest in the outcome of matter when the lawyer has advanced the costs and expenses of litigation. See Explanation of Changes for paragraph (a). The Rule also prohibits a lawyer from "purchasing" a client's loyalty by the lawyer promising loans or other remuneration to ensure that the client retains the lawyer by making clear that such promises or guarantees are prohibited, (see Explanation of Changes to paragraph (a)), and prohibiting the making of loans until after the lawyer has been retained. (See Explanation of Changes for subparagraph (a)(2).)

Variation in Other Jurisdictions. Every state has adopted a rule that places restrictions on a lawyer making loans or advancing costs and expenses to a client. Mississippi permits a lawyer to advance "reasonable and necessary medical expenses associated with the treatment of an injury giving rise to the litigation" and "reasonable and necessary living expenses." See State Variations, below.

* Proposed Rule 1.8.5, XDraft #8 (10/6/08).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(e) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.5 Payment of Personal or Business Expenses Incurred by or for a Client	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(e) A lawyer shall not provide financial assistance to a client in connection with pending or contemplated litigation, except that:	~~(e) A lawyer shall not provide financial assistance to a client in connection with pending or contemplated litigation, except that:~~	Model Rule 1.8(e) is intended to avoid several risks. First, a lawyer's promise to provide financial assistance to a client could amount to bidding for clients, which traditionally has been deemed unacceptable. Also, the lawyer's resulting financial stake could create a conflict of interest for the lawyer and interfere with the lawyer's exercise of independent professional judgment on behalf of the client. The Commission agrees with these goals, but it has rejected the Model Rule in favor of a substantially more detailed version.
	(a) A lawyer shall not directly or indirectly pay or agree to pay, guarantee, or represent that the lawyer or lawyer's law firm will pay the personal or business expenses of a prospective or existing client, except that a lawyer may:	Model Rule 1.8(e) prohibits a lawyer from providing financial assistance, but by its terms it is not limited to financial assistance to a client. The Commission does not believe that the risks addressed by the Rule arise when a lawyer provides financial assistance to a non-client. Paragraph (a) excludes a lawyer's assistance to non-clients. Paragraph (a) also moves the prohibition forward in time, recognizing that it is the promise to provide financial assistance and not the financial assistance itself that triggers the client solicitation concerns of the Rule. Paragraph (a) also expands the prohibition to assistance by the lawyer law firm.
(1) a lawyer may advance court costs and expenses of litigation, the repayment of which may be contingent on the outcome of the matter; and	~~(1) a lawyer may advance court costs and expenses of litigation, the repayment of which may be contingent on the outcome of the matter; and~~	Model Rule subparagraph (e)(1) addresses a lawyer's advancement of court costs and of litigation expenses. The Commission has moved this topic to subparagraph (3) where it is stated more fully.

* Proposed Rule 1.8.5, XDraft 8 (10/6/09). Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(e) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.5 Payment of Personal or Business Expenses Incurred by or for a Client	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	(1) pay or agree to pay such expenses to third persons, from funds collected or to be collected for the client as a result of the representation, with the consent of the client;	There is no Model Rule counterpart to subparagraph (a)(1). It recognizes that a lawyer might be asked to use client funds, which might come under the lawyer's control in the future, to pay the client's personal or business expenses. This could happen, for example, if a lawyer agrees to pay a client's medical provider out of the recovery. Because the risks addressed by this Rule are not involved when a lawyer does so, subparagraph (a)(1) expressly permits this arrangement.
(2) a lawyer representing an indigent client may pay court costs and expenses of litigation on behalf of the client.	(2) after the lawyer is retained by the client, agree to lend money to the client based on the client's written promise to repay the loan, provided the lawyer complies with Rule 1.8.1 before making the loan or agreeing to do so;	There is no Model Rule counterpart to subparagraph (a)(2). The Model Rule implicitly permits a lawyer to loan money to a client. Subparagraph (a)(2) makes this explicit, and by doing so it permits reference to the business transactions Rule in order to provide guidance to lawyers in how to fulfill their duties.
	(3) advance the costs of prosecuting or defending a claim or action, or of otherwise protecting or promoting the client's interests, the repayment of which may be contingent on the outcome of the matter. "Costs" within the meaning of this paragraph (a)(3) are limited to all reasonable expenses of litigation, including court costs, and reasonable expenses in preparing for litigation or in providing other legal services to the client; and	Subparagraph (a)(3) is consistent with Model Rule 1.8(e)(1) but is stated more fully. It adds a definition of "costs" and, to eliminate a potential loophole in the Model Rule, limits costs to those that are reasonable.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(e) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.5 Payment of Personal or Business Expenses Incurred by or for a Client	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	(24) ~~a lawyer representing an indigent client may~~ pay court costs and reasonable expenses of litigation on behalf of an indigent or pro bono client in a matter in which the lawyer represents the client.	Subparagraph (a)(4) is based on Model Rule 1.8(e)(2). As the Commission did in subparagraph (3), it limits costs to those that are reasonable. Also, it expands the provision to include pro bono clients as well as indigent clients. Lawyers should be encouraged to support pro bono clients as well as indigent clients.
	(b) A lawyer does not violate this rule by offering or giving a gift to a current client, provided that anything given was not offered in consideration of any promise, agreement, or understanding that the lawyer would make a gift to the client.	The Model Rule has no counterpart to paragraph (b). Paragraph (b) is intended to avoid having a lawyer's gift to a client come within the scope of the Rule, so long as the gift was not bargained for.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(e) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.5 Payment of Personal or Business Expenses Incurred by or for a Client Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Financial Assistance [10] Lawyers may not subsidize lawsuits or administrative proceedings brought on behalf of their clients, including making or guaranteeing loans to their clients for living expenses, because to do so would encourage clients to pursue lawsuits that might not otherwise be brought and because such assistance gives lawyers too great a financial stake in the litigation. These dangers do not warrant a prohibition on a lawyer lending a client court costs and litigation expenses, including the expenses of medical examination and the costs of obtaining and presenting evidence, because these advances are virtually indistinguishable from contingent fees and help ensure access to the courts. Similarly, an exception allowing lawyers representing indigent clients to pay court costs and litigation expenses regardless of whether these funds will be repaid is warranted.	Financial Assistance ~~[10] Lawyers may not subsidize lawsuits or administrative proceedings brought on behalf of their clients, including making or guaranteeing loans to their clients for living expenses, because to do so would encourage clients to pursue lawsuits that might not otherwise be brought and because such assistance gives lawyers too great a financial stake in the litigation. These dangers do not warrant a prohibition on a lawyer lending a client court costs and litigation expenses, including the expenses of medical examination and the costs of obtaining and presenting evidence, because these advances are virtually indistinguishable from contingent fees and help ensure access to the courts. Similarly, an exception allowing lawyers representing indigent clients to pay court costs and litigation expenses regardless of whether these funds will be repaid is warranted.~~	To provide for a more complete explanation of the Rule, and to accommodate the Commission's changes in the Model Rule, the Commission has restated the Model Rule's single Comment paragraph as three paragraphs. The proposed Rule's comment generally is consistent with the Model Rule Comment except where the proposed Rule differs in substance, as described above.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(e) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.5 Payment of Personal or Business Expenses Incurred by or for a Client Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	[1] This Rule is intended to balance two competing concerns. One is that a lawyer's subsidization of a client's legal proceedings would give the lawyer a financial stake in the proceedings that might injuriously affect the performance of the duties owed to the client, including the obligation to exercise independent professional judgment on the client's behalf without being influenced by the lawyer's personal interests. The second concern is that a prohibition on the lawyer providing financial assistance to the client might adversely affect the client's access to justice. The Rule is also intended to protect against the hidden transfer of funds to a client under the guise of a loan and to protect the lawyer against client demands for loans or gifts.	See above. Comment [1] is taken from Restatement (3d), Law Governing Lawyers § 33.
	[2] Paragraph (a)(2) does not permit a lawyer to lend money, or to offer, promise or agree to lend money, to a prospective client. It does permit a lawyer to lend money to a client after the lawyer is retained, but the lawyer then must comply with Rules 1.7(b)(2) and 1.8.1. Nothing in this Rule shall be deemed to limit the application of Rule 1.8.12.	See above. Comment [2] adds a reference to Rule 1.7(d)(4), which addresses a lawyer's potential conflict because of the lawyer's financial or other interest in the subject of the representation.
	[3] "Costs," as defined in paragraph (a)(3), are not limited to those that are taxable or recoverable under any applicable statute or rule of court.	See above. Comment [3] clarifies the meaning of "costs" in order to avoid any suggestion that it is limited to taxable costs.

Rule 1.8.5 Payment of Personal or Business Expenses Incurred by or for a Client

(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to the Public Comment Draft)

- (a) A lawyer shall not directly or indirectly pay or agree to pay, guarantee, or represent that the lawyer or lawyer's law firm will pay the personal or business expenses of a prospective or existing client, except that a lawyer may:
- (1) pay or agree to pay such expenses to third persons, from funds collected or to be collected for the client as a result of the representation, with the consent of the client;
 - (2) after the lawyer is retained by the client, agree to lend money to the client based on the client's written promise to repay the loan, provided the lawyer complies with Rule 1.8.1 before making the loan or agreeing to do so;
 - (3) advance the costs of prosecuting or defending a claim or action, or of otherwise protecting or promoting the client's interests, the repayment of which may be contingent on the outcome of the matter. "Costs" within the meaning of this paragraph (a)(3) are limited to all reasonable expenses of litigation, including court costs, and reasonable expenses in preparing for litigation or in providing other legal services to the client; and
 - (4) pay court costs and reasonable expenses of litigation on behalf of an indigent or pro bono client in a matter in which the lawyer represents the client.
- (b) A lawyer does not violate this rule by offering or giving a gift to a current client, provided that anything given was not offered in consideration of any promise, agreement, or understanding that the lawyer would make a gift to the client.

COMMENT

- [1] This Rule is intended to balance two competing concerns. One is that a lawyer's subsidization of a client's legal proceedings would give the lawyer a financial stake in the proceedings that might injuriously affect the performance of the duties owed to the client, including the obligation to exercise independent professional judgment on the client's behalf without being influenced by the lawyer's personal interests. The second concern is that a prohibition on the lawyer providing financial assistance to the client might adversely affect the client's access to justice. The Rule is also intended to protect against the hidden transfer of funds to a client under the guise of a loan and to protect the lawyer against client demands for loans or gifts.
- [2] Paragraph (a)(2) does not permit a lawyer to lend money, or to offer, promise or agree to lend money, to a prospective client. It does permit a lawyer to lend money to a client after the lawyer is retained, but the lawyer then must comply with Rules 1.7\(b\)\(2\) and 1.8.1 ~~and make a disclosure under Rule 1.7(d)(4) concerning the effect the proposed agreement might have on the lawyer's representation of the client.~~ Nothing in this Rule shall be deemed to limit the application of Rule 1.8.9.
- [3] "Costs," as defined in paragraph (a)(3), are not limited to those that are taxable or recoverable under any applicable statute or rule of court.

Rule ~~4-210~~1.8.5 Payment of Personal or Business Expenses Incurred by or for a Client

(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to Current California Rule)

(Aa) A ~~member~~lawyer shall not directly or indirectly pay or agree to pay, guarantee, ~~represent, or sanction a representation~~represent that the ~~member~~lawyer or ~~member's~~lawyer's law firm will pay the personal or business expenses of a prospective or existing client, except that ~~this rule shall not prohibit a member~~lawyer may:

- (1) ~~With the consent of the client, from paying~~pay or ~~agreeing~~agree to pay such expenses to third persons, from funds collected or to be collected for the client as a result of the representation, ~~with the consent of the client;~~~~or~~
- (2) ~~After employment~~after the lawyer is retained by the client, ~~from lending~~agree to lend money to the client ~~upon~~based on the client's ~~written~~ promise ~~in writing~~to repay ~~such~~the loan; ~~provided the lawyer complies with Rule 1.8.1 before making the loan or agreeing to do so;~~
- (3) ~~From advancing~~advance the costs of prosecuting or defending a claim or action, or ~~of~~ otherwise protecting or promoting the client's interests, the repayment of which may be contingent on the outcome of the matter. ~~Such costs~~ "Costs" within the meaning of this ~~subparagraph~~paragraph (a)(3) ~~shall be~~are limited to all reasonable expenses of litigation~~or, including court costs, and~~ reasonable expenses in ~~preparation~~preparing for litigation or in providing ~~any other~~ legal services to the client; ~~and~~
- (4) pay court costs and reasonable expenses of litigation on behalf of an indigent or pro bono client in a matter in which the lawyer represents the client.

(b) A lawyer does not violate this rule by offering or giving a gift to a current client, provided that anything given was not offered in consideration of any promise, agreement, or understanding that the lawyer would make a gift to the client.

(B) ~~Nothing in rule 4-210 shall be deemed to limit rules 3-300, 3-310, and 4-300.~~

Comment

[1] This Rule is intended to balance two competing concerns. One is that a lawyer's subsidization of a client's legal proceedings would give the lawyer a financial stake in the proceedings that might injuriously affect the performance of the duties owed to the client, including the obligation to exercise independent professional judgment on the client's behalf without being influenced by the lawyer's personal interests. The second concern is that a prohibition on the lawyer providing financial assistance to the client might adversely affect the client's access to justice. The Rule is also intended to protect against the hidden transfer of funds to a client under the guise of a loan and to protect the lawyer against client demands for loans or gifts.

[2] Paragraph (a)(2) does not permit a lawyer to lend money, or to offer, promise or agree to lend money, to a prospective client. It does permit a lawyer to lend money to a client after the lawyer is retained, but the lawyer then must comply with Rules 1.7(b)(2) and 1.8.1. Nothing in this Rule shall be deemed to limit the application of Rule 1.8.9.

[3] "Costs," as defined in paragraph (a)(3), are not limited to those that are taxable or recoverable under any applicable statute or rule of court.

Rule 1.8.5 Payment of Personal or Business Expenses Incurred by or for a Client
(Commission's Proposed Rule – Clean Version)

- (a) A lawyer shall not directly or indirectly pay or agree to pay, guarantee, or represent that the lawyer or lawyer's law firm will pay the personal or business expenses of a prospective or existing client, except that a lawyer may:
- (1) pay or agree to pay such expenses to third persons, from funds collected or to be collected for the client as a result of the representation, with the consent of the client;
 - (2) after the lawyer is retained by the client, agree to lend money to the client based on the client's written promise to repay the loan, provided the lawyer complies with Rule 1.8.1 before making the loan or agreeing to do so;
 - (3) advance the costs of prosecuting or defending a claim or action, or of otherwise protecting or promoting the client's interests, the repayment of which may be contingent on the outcome of the matter. "Costs" within the meaning of this paragraph (a)(3) are limited to all reasonable expenses of litigation, including court costs, and reasonable expenses in preparing for litigation or in providing other legal services to the client; and
 - (4) pay court costs and reasonable expenses of litigation on behalf of an indigent or pro bono client in a matter in which the lawyer represents the client.
- (b) A lawyer does not violate this rule by offering or giving a gift to a current client, provided that anything given was not offered in consideration of any promise, agreement, or understanding that the lawyer would make a gift to the client.

COMMENT

- [1] This Rule is intended to balance two competing concerns. One is that a lawyer's subsidization of a client's legal proceedings would give the lawyer a financial stake in the proceedings that might injuriously affect the performance of the duties owed to the client, including the obligation to exercise independent professional judgment on the client's behalf without being influenced by the lawyer's personal interests. The second concern is that a prohibition on the lawyer providing financial assistance to the client might adversely affect the client's access to justice. The Rule is also intended to protect against the hidden transfer of funds to a client under the guise of a loan and to protect the lawyer against client demands for loans or gifts.
- [2] Paragraph (a)(2) does not permit a lawyer to lend money, or to offer, promise or agree to lend money, to a prospective client. It does permit a lawyer to lend money to a client after the lawyer is retained, but the lawyer then must comply with Rules 1.7(b)(2) and 1.8.1. Nothing in this Rule shall be deemed to limit the application of Rule 1.8.9.
- [3] "Costs," as defined in paragraph (a)(3), are not limited to those that are taxable or recoverable under any applicable statute or rule of court.

Rule 1.8.5 Payment of Personal or Business Expenses Incurred by or for a Client.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 2 Agree = 2
Disagree = 0
Modify = 0
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
1	Office of Chief Trial Counsel	A	Yes	Comment [3]	Comment [3] should be in the Proposed Rule and not a Comment.	It appears to the Commission that OCTC believes that it cannot discipline a lawyer under a Rule if the meaning of the Rule is confirmed by reference to a definition contained in a Comment. The Commission does not agree and has not made the requested change. The current California rules as well as the Model Rules have definitions that sometimes are found in Comments. This fact has not and will not affect the ability to impose discipline on a lawyer. The choice of location largely has been determined as a matter of drafting convenience and clarity and not for any substantive reason. Placing a definition in a Comment amounts to nothing more than explaining a term in a Rule, just as is done when the explanation is not in the form of a definition. Moreover, most if not all of such explanations could have been written as definitions and most if not all of the Comment definitions could have been written without appearing to be definitions.
2	San Diego County Bar Association	A	Yes		Support as drafted.	No response required.

¹ A = AGREE with proposed Rule D = DISAGREE with proposed Rule M = AGREE ONLY IF MODIFIED NI = NOT INDICATED

Rule 1.8: Conflict of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules

STATE VARIATIONS

(The following is an excerpt from Regulation of Lawyers: Statutes and Standards (2010 Ed.)
by Steven Gillers, Roy D. Simon and Andrew M. Perlman.)

Alabama. Alabama's Rule 1.8(e)(3) provides as follows:

(3) a lawyer may advance or guarantee emergency financial assistance to the client, the repayment of which may not be contingent on the outcome of the matter, provided that no promise or assurance of financial assistance was made to the client by the lawyer, or on the lawyer's behalf, prior to the employment of the lawyer.

Alabama also adds Rule 1.8(k), which identifies when a lawyer can represent both parties to an uncontested divorce or domestic relations proceeding. Relating to Rule 1.8(h), the Alabama Legal Services Liability Act, Ala. Code §§6-5-570 et seq., provides as follows: "There shall be only one form and cause of action against legal service providers in courts in the State of Alabama and it shall be known as the legal service liability action." Finally, Rules 1.8(l) and (m) describe prohibitions on sexual relations between lawyers and clients. Notably,

Rule 1.8(m) states that "except for a spousal relationship or a relationship that existed at the commencement of the lawyer-client relationship, sexual relations between the lawyer and the client shall be presumed to be exploitative [and thus violate Rule 1.8(l)]. This presumption is rebuttable."

Arizona: Rule 1.8(h)(2) adds a clause forbidding a lawyer to "make an agreement prospectively limiting the client's right to report the lawyer to appropriate professional authorities." Rule 1.8(l), which retains the 1983 version of ABA Model Rule 1.8(i), provides: "A lawyer related to another lawyer as parent, child, sibling, spouse or cohabitant shall not represent a client in a representation directly adverse to a person who the lawyer knows is represented by the other lawyer except upon consent by the client after consultation regarding the relationship."

California: California's rules are generally equivalent to Model Rule 1.8, but two exceptions deserve attention. Rule 3-320 provides as follows:

A member shall not represent a client in a matter in which another party's lawyer is a spouse, parent, child, or sibling of the member, lives with the member, is a client of the member, or has an intimate personal relationship with the member, unless the member informs the client in writing of the relationship.

And Rule 4-210 provides in part as follows:

(A) A member shall not directly or indirectly pay or agree to pay, guarantee, represent, or sanction a representation that the member or member's law firm will pay the personal or business expenses of a prospective or existing client, except that this rule shall not prohibit a member: . . . (2) After employment, from lending money to the client upon the client's promise in writing to repay such loan.

Connecticut adds the following language to Rule 1.8(a), providing that lawyers can enter into business transactions with clients under the following circumstances:

(4) With regard to a business transaction, the lawyer advises the client or former client in writing either (A) that the lawyer will provide legal services to the client or former client concerning the transaction, or (B) that the lawyer will not provide legal services to the client or former client and that the lawyer is involved as a business person only and not as a lawyer representing the client or former client and that the lawyer is not one to whom the client or former client can turn for legal advice concerning the transaction.

(5) With regard to the providing of investment services, the lawyer advises the client or former client in writing (A) whether such services are covered by legal liability insurance or other insurance, and [makes either disclosure set out in paragraph (a)(4)]. Investment services shall only apply where the lawyer has either a direct or indirect control over the invested funds and a direct or indirect interest in the underlying investment.

For purposes of subsection (a)(1) through (a)(5), the phrase "former client" shall mean a client for whom the two year period starting from the conclusion of representation has not expired.

District of Columbia: D.C. Rule 1.8(d) permits lawyers to advance "financial assistance which is reasonably necessary to permit the client to institute or maintain the litigation or administrative proceeding.” Rule 1.8(i) provides as follows:

A lawyer may acquire and enforce a lien granted by law to secure the lawyer's fees or expenses, but a lawyer shall not impose a lien upon any part of a client's files, except upon the lawyer's own work product, and then only to the extent that the work product has not been paid for. This work product exception shall not apply when the client has become unable to pay, or when withholding the lawyer's work product would present a significant risk to the client of irreparable harm.

Florida adds Rule 4-8.4(i), which provides that a lawyer shall not engage in sexual conduct with a client “or a representative of a client” that:

exploits or adversely affects the interests of the client or the lawyer-client relationship including, but not limited to:

(1) requiring or demanding sexual relations with a client or a representative of a client incident to or as a condition of a legal representation;

(2) employing coercion, intimidation, or undue influence in entering into sexual relations with a client or a representative of a client; or

(3) continuing to represent a client if the lawyer's sexual relations with the client or a representative of the client cause the lawyer to render incompetent representation.

In 2004, the Florida Supreme Court deleted language from the comment to Rule 8.4, which had stated that lawyer-client sexual relations do not violate the rule if a sexual relationship existed between the lawyer and client before commencement of the lawyer-client relationship.

Georgia: Rule 1.8(a), drawing on DR 5-104 of the ABA Code of Professional Responsibility, applies “if the client expects the lawyer to exercise the lawyer's professional judgment therein for the protection of the client.” Georgia retains the language of deleted ABA Model Rule 1.8(i) but adds that the disqualification of a lawyer due to a parent, child, sibling, or spousal relationship “is personal and is not imputed to members of firms with whom the lawyers are associated.” Georgia adds that the maximum penalty for violating Rule 1.8(b) (which relates to confidentiality) is disbarment, but the maximum penalty for violating any other provision of Rule 1.8 is only a public reprimand.

Illinois: In the rules effective January 1, 2010, Rule 1.8(a)(2) omits the phrase “desirability of seeking.”

Louisiana: Rule 1.8(g) permits an aggregate settlement if “a court approves the settlement in a certified class action.” Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to “provide financial assistance to a client who is in necessitous circumstances” subject to strict controls, including:

(ii) The advance or loan guarantee, or the offer thereof, shall not be used as an inducement by the lawyer, or anyone acting on the lawyer’s behalf, to secure employment.

(iii) Neither the lawyer nor anyone acting on the lawyer’s behalf may offer to make advances or loan guarantees prior to being hired by a client, and the lawyer shall not publicize nor advertise a willingness to make advances or loan guarantees to clients.

Massachusetts: Rule 1.8(b) forbids a lawyer to use confidential information “for the lawyer’s advantage or the advantage of a third person” without consent.

Michigan: Rules 1.8(a)(2) and 1.8(h)(2) (regarding business transactions with clients and settlement of legal malpractice claims) both require that the client be given a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of independent counsel but lack the ABA requirement that the client be “advised in writing of the desirability of seeking” independent counsel. Michigan Rule 1.8(g), regarding aggregate settlements, lacks the ABA requirement that the client’s consent be “in a writing signed by the client.” Michigan retains the language of deleted ABA Model Rule 1.8(i) verbatim.

Minnesota: Rule 1.8(e)(3) allows a lawyer to guarantee a loan necessary for a client to withstand litigation delay. Rule 1.8(k)’s provision on sexual relationships with clients prohibits a lawyer from having sexual relations with a client unless a consensual relationship existed between the lawyer and client when the client-lawyer relationship commenced. The rule also defines “sexual relations” and adds the following Rules 1.8(k)(2)-(3) to explain the meaning of sex with a “client” when a lawyer represents an organization:

(2) if the client is an organization, any individual who oversees the representation and gives instructions to the lawyer on behalf of the organization shall be deemed to be the client . . .

(3) this paragraph does not prohibit a lawyer from engaging in sexual relations with a client of the lawyer’s firm provided that the lawyer has no involvement in the performance of the legal work for the client . . .

Mississippi: Rule 1.8(e)(2) permits a lawyer to advance medical and living expenses to a client under certain narrowly defined circumstances.

New Hampshire: The New Hampshire rules include a Rule 1.19 (Disclosure of Information to the Client), which requires a lawyer (other than a government or in-house lawyer) to inform a client at the time of engagement if “the lawyer does not maintain professional liability insurance” of at least $100,000 per occurrence and $300,000 in the aggregate “or if the lawyer’s professional liability insurance ceases to be in effect.”

New Jersey: Rule 1.8(e)(3) creates an exception allowing financial assistance by a “non-profit organization authorized under [other law]” if the organization is representing the indigent client without a fee. Rule 1.8(h)(1), while forbidding agreements prospectively limiting liability to a client, contains an exception if “the client fails to act in accordance with the lawyer’s advice and the lawyer nevertheless continues to represent the client at the client’s request.” New Jersey Rule 1.8(k) and (l) provide as follows:

(k) A lawyer employed by a public entity, either as a lawyer or in some other role, shall not undertake the

representation of another client if the representation presents a substantial risk that the lawyer’s responsibilities to the public entity would limit the lawyer’s ability to provide independent advice or diligent and competent representation to either the public entity or the client.

(l) A public entity cannot consent to a representation otherwise prohibited by this Rule.

New York: In the rules effective April 1, 2009, Rule 1.8(a) deletes the language “knowingly acquire an ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client” and adds language from DR 5-104(A) of the old Model Code: “if they have differing interests therein and if the client expects the lawyer to exercise professional judgment therein for the protection of the client....” Comments 3A and 4A-4F, which have no Model Rule equivalents, describe in considerable detail the problem of business transactions with clients, including (in Comments 4D-4F) issues related to a lawyer’s receipt of a client’s securities. New York omits Comment 5.

Rule 1.8(d) draws, in part, on DR 5-104(B) of the old Model Code, and Comment 9 provides more guidance than the equivalent Model Rule provisions concerning a lawyer’s acquisition of media or literary rights that relate to a client matter.

Finally, Rule 1.8(j) and (k) as well as Comments 17, 17A, 17B, and 18-20, all address sexual relationships with clients and provide significantly more guidance in this regard than the equivalent Model Rule provision. Comment 17B concludes that “[a] law firm’s failure to educate lawyers about the restrictions on sexual relations — or a firm’s failure to enforce those restrictions against lawyers who violate them — may constitute a violation of Rule 5.1, which obligates a law firm to make reasonable efforts to ensure that all lawyers in the firm conform to these Rules.”

North Dakota: Rule 1.8(g), regarding aggregate settlements, applies “other than in class actions.” North Dakota adds Rule 1.8(k), which restricts the practice of law by a part-time prosecutor or judge in certain circumstances.

Ohio: Rule 1.8(c) forbids a lawyer to solicit “any substantial gift from a client” and forbids a lawyer to “prepare on behalf of a client an instrument giving the lawyer, the lawyer’s partner, associate, paralegal, law clerk or other employee of the lawyer’s firm, a lawyer acting ‘of counsel’ in the lawyer’s firm, or a person related to the lawyer any gift unless the lawyer or other recipient of the gift is related to the client.” “Gift” is defined to include “a testamentary gift.” Ohio Rule 1.8(f)(4) provides a detailed “statement of insured client’s rights” that a lawyer “selected and paid by an insurer to represent an insured” must give to the client.

In July 2009, an Ohio statute (R.C. §1349.55) took effect to regulate companies that make cash advances to plaintiffs in pending civil cases in exchange for the right to receive part of the proceeds of any settlement, award, or judgment. Paragraph (C) of the statute provides that if a plaintiff gets into a dispute concerning the contract for the cash advance, “the responsibilities of the attorney representing the consumer [the plaintiff] in the civil action or claim shall be no greater than the attorney’s responsibilities under the Ohio Rules of Professional Conduct.”

Oregon: Rule 1.8(b) permits a lawyer to use confidential information to a client’s disadvantage only if the client’s consent is “confirmed in writing” (except as otherwise permitted or required by the Rules). Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to advance litigation expenses only if “the client remains ultimately liable for such expenses to the extent of the client’s ability to pay.” Finally, Oregon’s rule governing sexual relations with clients contains a detailed description of “sexual relations,” providing that it includes “sexual intercourse or any touching of the sexual or other intimate parts of a person or causing such person to touch the sexual or other intimate parts of the lawyer for the purpose of arousing or gratifying the sexual desire of either party.”

Pennsylvania: Rule 1.8(g) does not require that client consent be “confirmed in writing.”

Texas: Rule 1.08(c) provides that prior to the conclusion of “all aspects of the matter giving rise to the lawyer’s employment,” a lawyer shall not make or negotiate an agreement “with a client, prospective client, or former client” giving the lawyer literary or media rights to a portrayal or account based in substantial part on information relating to the representation. Rule 1.08(d) provides as follows:

(d) A lawyer shall not provide financial assistance to a client in connection with pending or contemplated litigation or administrative proceedings, except that:

(1) a lawyer may advance or guarantee court costs, expenses of litigation or administrative proceedings, and reasonably necessary medical and living expenses, the repayment of which may be contingent on the outcome of the matter; and

(2) a lawyer representing an indigent client may pay court costs and expenses of litigation on behalf of the client.

Virginia: Rule 1.8(b) forbids the use of information “for the advantage of the lawyer or of a third person or to the disadvantage of the client.” Rule 1.8(e)(1) requires a client ultimately to be liable for court costs and expenses. Rule 1.8(h) contains an exception where the lawyer is “an employee” of the client “as long as the client is independently represented in making the agreement” prospectively limiting the lawyer’s liability for malpractice.

Washington: Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to (1) advance or guarantee the expenses of litigation “provided the client remains ultimately liable for such expenses; and (2) in matters maintained as class actions only, repayment of expenses of litigation may be contingent on the outcome of the matter.” Washington deletes ABA Model Rule 1.8(e)(2) (permitting lawyers to pay litigation costs for indigent clients).

Wisconsin: Rule 1.8(c) creates an exception to testamentary gifts where:

(1) the client is related to the donee, (2) the donee is a natural object of the bounty of the client, (3) there is no reasonable ground to anticipate a contest, or a claim of undue influence or for the public to lose confidence in the integrity of the bar, and (4) the amount of the gift or bequest is reasonable and natural under the circumstances.

Proposed Rule 1.8.6 [3-310(F)] “Third Party Payments”

(XDraft #9, 6/28/10)

Summary: This proposed rule follows Model Rule 1.8(e) and current RPC 3-310(F) in requiring client consent when a lawyer is paid by anyone other than the client. However, it expands on the Model Rule by requiring “informed written consent”, and it expands on the Model Rule and the current RPC by moving the consent forward to before the lawyer enters an agreement with or charges the payor. See Introduction. Following the second round of public comment, non-substantive changes were made to the Comment to conform to revisions that have been made to Rule 1.7 and edits for clarity in response to the public comment.

Comparison with ABA Counterpart

Rule

Comment

- ☒ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
- ☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
- ☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
- ☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
- ☒ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
- ☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
- ☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
- ☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

Primary Factors Considered

- ☒ Existing California Law

Rules

RPC 3-310(F)

Statute

Case law

- ☐ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

- ☐ Other Primary Factor(s)

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(13 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 13 due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Less than Six Members Opposing Adoption ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 9

Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 1

Abstain 0

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by Consensus ☐

Minority/Position Included on Model Rule Comparison Chart: ☐ Yes ☒ No

Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

☐ No Known Stakeholders

☒ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

California Commission on Access to Justice; Legal Aid Association of California

Very Controversial – Explanation:

☐ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

☒ Not Controversial

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.8.6* Third Party Payments

July 2010

(Draft rule following consideration of second round of public comment)

INTRODUCTION:

ABA Model Rule 1.8(f) and proposed Rule 1.8.6 begin from the same premise: a lawyer has a potential conflict of interest when the lawyer is compensated by someone other than the client. However, proposed Rule 1.8.6 expands in important ways on the protection afforded a client by the Model Rule. The Model Rule requires compliance before a lawyer accepts compensation from someone other than the client; the proposed Rule extends this by also requiring compliance before a lawyer enters into an agreement with or charges someone other than the client. The proposed revision is designed to include in the Rule events that would create the conflict of interest the Rule is intended to address. Proposed Rule 1.8.6 also requires a higher standard of lawyer conduct than is found in the Model Rule because proposed Rule 1.8.6 requires that the lawyer obtain the client's consent in writing. To facilitate access to justice, the proposed Rule also excepts from the Rule certain legal services provided by government agencies or through non-profit organizations. The latter exception was added following the initial round of public comment. The only changes made following the second round of public comment were nonsubstantive changes to the Comment to conform to revisions that have been made to proposed Rule 1.7 and edits for clarity in response to the public comment.

* Proposed Rule 1.8.6, XDraft 9 (6/28/10).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(f) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.6 Third Party Payments	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(f) A lawyer shall not accept compensation for representing a client from one other than the client unless:	(f) A lawyer shall not enter into an agreement for, charge, or accept compensation for representing a client from one other than the client unless:	Both the ABA and proposed California versions of this Rule recognize the potential conflict of interest that arises for a lawyer who accepts payment from someone other than the lawyer's client. However, California's proposed Rule makes one substantive addition to the Model Rule to extend the reach of the Rule for better client protection. The Model Rule restricts only the acceptance of compensation from someone other than the client. The proposed Rule recognizes it is not only the fact of the payment – which might be delayed or deferred for various reasons - but also the lawyer's expectation of payment from the non-client that could lead the lawyer to look to the interests of the payor rather than to those of the client. The proposed Rule therefore forbids not only the acceptance of payment, as does the Model Rule, but also prohibits the lawyer (i) from entering into an agreement with the non-client for payment of the lawyer's fee or (ii) actually charging the other person: the lawyer may not do any of these three things without first complying with the proposed Rule. Approaches in Other Jurisdictions. There are a number of jurisdictions that have varied the wording or organization of the Model Rule without fundamentally altering the thrust of the Rule. These jurisdictions include Mississippi, North Dakota, Virginia, Washington D.C., and Wyoming.
(1) the client gives informed consent;	(a1) the client gives informed written consent at or before the time the lawyer has	Paragraph (a) provides for client consent. However, it does so with two substantive variations from the Model Rule. First,

* Proposed Rule 1.8.6., XDraft 9 (6/28/10). Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(f) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.6 Third Party Payments	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	entered into the agreement for, charged, or accepted compensation from one other than the client, or as soon thereafter as is reasonably practicable, provided that no disclosure or consent is required if the lawyer: (i) is rendering legal services on behalf of a public agency that provides legal services to other public agencies or the public; or (ii) is rendering services through a non-profit organization;	paragraph (a) utilizes California's more client-protective requirement that the consent be written. This additional requirement adds a safeguard for the client by placing the lawyer's disclosure and the client's consent in a relatively permanent form that the client can review and discuss with others before giving consent, and the formality of the writing underlines the importance of the lawyer's request for consent. This provision also provides appropriate protection for the compliant lawyer by making it harder for a client to claim that the lawyer made an inadequate disclosure or that the client gave no consent. Second, paragraph (a) includes a timing requirement for obtaining the client's written consent. This is important for the client to be able to maintain supervision and control over the lawyer's conduct. In addition, as in the current California rule [3-310(F)], certain public agency representations are excluded from the Rule. This exclusion has been expanded in response to public comment to include lawyers who provide legal services through non-profit organizations. See Comment [2], below. Approaches in Other Jurisdictions. Montana has included the requirement of "written" consent, and a number of states have excluded insurance and in some cases other situations in which a third-person compensates the lawyer. These states include Connecticut, Louisiana, Ohio, Wisconsin, and perhaps Minnesota (its Rule and Comment do not make this clear, but it appears likely). The Commission recommends limiting the exclusions to the public agency, charitable, and insurance situations. The first two are included in the Rule itself because that can be done simply without altering the Model Rule syntax; the latter exclusion is included only in a Comment because this allows the Rule to adhere more closely to the lay out of the Model Rule, and the Comment that is proposed is similar to the language in the

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(f) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.6 Third Party Payments	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
		Discussion to California's current rule, language that appears already to be well understood. See proposed Comment [4].
(2) there is no interference with the lawyer's independence of professional judgment or with the client-lawyer relationship; and	(~~2~~b) there is no interference with the lawyer's independence of professional judgment or with the ~~client~~-lawyer-client relationship; and	No change in the Model Rule language is proposed for this paragraph.
(3) information relating to representation of a client is protected as required by Rule 1.6.	(~~3~~c) information ~~relating to representation of a client is~~ protected ~~as required~~ by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rule 1.6 is protected.	Paragraph (c) identifies the duty of confidentiality as a special concern. The proposed version broadens the Model Rule's reference to Rule 1.6 to include California's statutory duty of confidentiality.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(f) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.6 Third Party Payments Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Person Paying for a Lawyer's Services [11] Lawyers are frequently asked to represent a client under circumstances in which a third person will compensate the lawyer, in whole or in part. The third person might be a relative or friend, an indemnitor (such as a liability insurance company) or a co-client (such as a corporation sued along with one or more of its employees). Because third-party payers frequently have interests that differ from those of the client, including interests in minimizing the amount spent on the representation and in learning how the representation is progressing, lawyers are prohibited from accepting or continuing such representations unless the lawyer determines that there will be no interference with the lawyer's independent professional judgment and there is informed consent from the client. See also Rule 5.4(c) (prohibiting interference with a lawyer's professional judgment by one who recommends, employs or pays the lawyer to render legal services for another).	Person Paying for a Lawyer's Services ~~[11] Lawyers are frequently~~ A lawyer might be asked to represent a client ~~under circumstances in which a third~~ when another client or other person will ~~compensate pay the lawyer's fees~~, in whole or in part. ~~The third person might be a relative or friend, an indemnitor (such as a liability insurance company) or a co-client (such as a corporation sued along with one or more of its employees). Because third-party payers frequently have interests~~ This Rule recognizes that ~~differ from those~~ any such agreement, charge, or payment creates risks to the lawyer's performance of his or her duties to the client, including ~~interests in minimizing the amount spent on the representation and in learning how the representation is progressing~~ duties of undivided loyalty, ~~lawyers are prohibited from accepting or continuing such representations unless the lawyer determines that there will be no interference with the lawyer's independent professional judgment, there is informed consent from competence, and confidentiality. A lawyer's responsibilities in a matter are owed only to the client except where the lawyer also represents the payor in the same matter. With respect to the lawyer's additional duties when representing both the client and the payor in the same matter, see Rule 1.7(a)(2) and Rule 1.7, Comments [29] through [33], regarding joint representations. The~~	Model Rule, Comment [11] and the Commission's proposed Comment [1] cover much the same ground. However, the Commission's proposed draft eliminates discursive Model Rule language that does not explain the meaning or application of the Rule. The proposed draft also contains a more specific statement of the duties of lawyers, including references to pertinent portions of the basic conflict of interest Rule, proposed Rule 1.7. No substantive change is intended.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(f) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.6 Third Party Payments Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	lawyer also must comply with Rule 1.7(b)(2) when there is a significant risk that the lawyer's representation of the client will be materially limited because the lawyer has another relationship with the payor, such as when the lawyer represents the payor in a different matter. In accepting payment from someone other than the client, the lawyer also must comply with Rule 1.6 and Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) (concerning confidentiality) and Rule 5.4(c) (concerning interference with a lawyer's professional judgment by one who recommends, employs, or pays the lawyer to render legal services for another).
[12] Sometimes, it will be sufficient for the lawyer to obtain the client's informed consent regarding the fact of the payment and the identity of the third-party payer. If, however, the fee arrangement creates a conflict of interest for the lawyer, then the lawyer must comply with Rule. 1.7. The lawyer must also conform to the requirements of Rule 1.6 concerning confidentiality. Under Rule 1.7(a), a conflict of interest exists if there is significant risk that the lawyer's representation of the client will be materially limited by the lawyer's own interest in the fee arrangement or by the lawyer's responsibilities to the third-party payer (for example, when the third-party payer is a co-client). Under Rule 1.7(b), the lawyer may accept or continue the representation with the informed consent of each affected client, unless the conflict is	~~[12] Sometimes, it will be sufficient for the lawyer to obtain the client's informed consent regarding the fact of the payment and the identity of the third-party payer. If, however, the fee arrangement creates a conflict of interest for the lawyer, then the lawyer must comply with Rule. 1.7. The lawyer must also conform to the requirements of Rule 1.6 concerning confidentiality. Under Rule 1.7(a), a conflict of interest exists if there is significant risk that the lawyer's representation of the client will be materially limited by the lawyer's own interest in the fee arrangement or by the lawyer's responsibilities to the third-party payer (for example, when the third-party payer is a co-client). Under Rule 1.7(b), the lawyer may accept or continue the representation with the informed consent of each affected client, unless the conflict is~~	The Commission recommends deleting Model Rule 1.8, cmt. [12], and replacing it with Comments [2] to [5], which more thoroughly address the concepts set forth in the Model Rule comment, and also address issues unique to California.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(f) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.6 Third Party Payments Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
nonconsentable under that paragraph. Under Rule 1.7(b), the informed consent must be confirmed in writing.	~~nonconsentable under that paragraph. Under Rule 1.7(b), the informed consent must be confirmed in writing.~~
	[2] Paragraph (a) exemptions reflect policy decisions to not interfere with the functioning of (1) public agencies that provide legal services to other public agencies or the public, or (2) non-profit organizations that provide legal services to the indigent and to others. A lawyer who is exempt under paragraph (a) nevertheless must comply with paragraphs (b) and (c).	The Commission in response to public comment added an exception for lawyers when providing legal services through non-profit organizations. New Comment [2] has been added to clarify the reason for the exceptions to the Rule.
	[3] This Rule does not apply to payment of a lawyer's fees by a third party pursuant to a settlement agreement or as ordered by a court or otherwise provided by law.	Comment [3] clarifies the application of this Rule in a common situation that could prove confusing. Because a settlement agreement or court order obligating someone other than the client to pay the lawyer's fees would come at or near the end of the lawyer's representation of the client in the matter, the concerns addressed by this Rule either do not exist or are highly attenuated.
	[4] This Rule is not intended to abrogate existing relationships between insurers and insureds whereby the insurer has the contractual right to unilaterally select counsel for the insured, where there is no conflict of interest. See San Diego Navy Federal Credit Union v. Cumis Insurance Society (1984) 162 Cal.App.3d 358 [208 Cal.Rptr. 494].	Comment [4] clarifies the application of this Rule in the insurance context when the insurer appoints counsel to represent an insured. Under a large and well-developed body of California case law, this Rule normally will not apply to the arrangement under which an insurance company compensates counsel for its insured. This Comment also clarifies that, although this Rule normally does not apply in the appointed counsel situation, there

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(f) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.6 Third Party Payments Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	Thus, a lawyer is not obligated to obtain the client's consent under paragraph (a) when appointed and paid by an insurer to represent an insured pursuant to the insurer's contractual right to do so. However, the lawyer nevertheless must comply with Rule 1.7 whenever there is a significant risk that the representation of the insured will be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to the insurer. See Rule 1.7(a)(2) and Comments [36] and [37].	are circumstances in which the appointed counsel will have a potential or actual conflict of interest and, if so, the lawyer must comply with Rule 1.7. A similar comment can be found in the Discussion to current rule 3-310.
	[5] In some limited circumstances, a lawyer might not be able to obtain client consent before the lawyer has entered into an agreement for, charged, or accepted compensation, as required by this Rule. This might happen, for example, when a lawyer is retained or paid by a family member on behalf of an incarcerated client. This also might happen in certain commercial settings, such as when a lawyer is retained by creditors' committee involved in a corporate debt restructuring and agrees to be compensated for any services to be provided to other similarly situated creditors who have not yet been identified. When this occurs, paragraph (a) permits the lawyer to comply with this Rule as soon thereafter as is reasonably practicable.	As noted, the Commission has expanded paragraph (a) to include a timing requirement that states when a lawyer must obtain the client's written consent to the lawyer's fee arrangement with another person: either before the lawyer enters the fee arrangement or as soon thereafter as is reasonably practicable. Comment [5] provides a common example of when the lawyer might not be able to obtain client consent before entering the fee arrangement. Under those circumstances, the lawyer may obtain client consent "as soon thereafter as is reasonably practicable." In response to public comment, the Commission has added a second example of when a lawyer might not immediately be able to comply with the Rule's timing requirements.

Rule 1.8.6 Third Party Payments ~~Not From Client~~
(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to the Public Comment Draft)

A lawyer shall not enter into an agreement for, charge, or accept compensation for representing a client from one other than the client unless:

- (a) the client gives informed written consent at or before the time the lawyer has entered into the agreement for, charged, or accepted compensation from one other than the client, or as soon thereafter as is reasonably practicable, provided that no disclosure or consent is required if the lawyer: (i) is rendering legal services on behalf of a public agency that provides legal services to other public agencies or the public; or (ii) is rendering services through a non-profit organization;
- (b) there is no interference with the lawyer's independence of professional judgment or with the lawyer-client relationship; and
- (c) information ~~relating to representation of a client is protected as required by Rule 1.6 and~~ protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rule 1.6 is protected.

Comment

- [1] A lawyer might be asked to represent a client when another client or other person will pay the lawyer's fees, in whole or in part. This Rule recognizes that any such agreement, charge, or payment creates risks to the lawyer's performance of his or her duties to the client, including the duties of undivided loyalty, independent professional judgment, competence, and confidentiality. A lawyer's responsibilities in a matter are owed only to the client except where the lawyer also represents the payor in the same matter. With respect to the lawyer's additional duties when representing both the client and the payor in the same matter, see Rule 1.7 ~~(b)~~ (a)(2) and Rule 1.7, Comments ~~[1229]~~ [1333] and through [1333], regarding joint representations. The lawyer also must comply with Rule 1.7 ~~(d)~~ (b)(2) when there is a significant risk that the lawyer's representation of the client will be materially limited ~~has a potential conflict of interest~~ because the lawyer has another relationship with the payor, such as when the lawyer represents the payor in a different matter. In accepting payment from someone other than the client, the lawyer also must comply with Rule 1.6 and Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) (concerning confidentiality) and Rule 5.4(c) (concerning interference with a lawyer's professional judgment by one who recommends, employs, or pays the lawyer to render legal services for another).

- [2] ~~Despite the risks described in Comment [1], paragraph (a) contains two exemptions from compliance with its requirements. These exemptions~~ reflect policy decisions to not interfere with the functioning of (1) public agencies that provide legal services to other public agencies or the public, or (2) non-profit organizations that provide legal services to the indigent and to others. A lawyer who is exempt ~~from compliance with~~ under paragraph (a) nevertheless must comply with paragraphs (b) and (c).

- [3] This Rule does not apply to payment of a lawyer's fees by a third party pursuant to a settlement agreement or as ordered by a court or otherwise provided by law.
- [4] This Rule is not intended to abrogate existing relationships between insurers and insureds whereby the insurer has the contractual right to unilaterally select counsel for the insured, where there is no conflict of interest. ~~(See San Diego Navy Federal Credit Union v. Cumis Insurance Society (1984) 162 Cal.App.3d 358 [208 Cal.Rptr. 494].)~~ Thus, a lawyer is not obligated to obtain the client's consent under paragraph (a) when appointed and paid by an insurer to represent an insured pursuant to the insurer's contractual right to do so. However, the lawyer nevertheless must comply with Rule 1.7 whenever ~~the lawyer has a potential or actual conflict of interest~~ there is a significant risk that the representation of the insured will be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to the insurer. See Rule 1.7(a)(2), and Comments ~~[35]~~[36] and [37].
- [5] In some limited circumstances, a lawyer might not be able to obtain client consent before the lawyer has entered into an agreement for, charged, or accepted compensation, as required by this Rule. This might happen, for example, when a lawyer is retained or paid by a family member on behalf of an incarcerated client. This also might happen in certain commercial settings, such as when a lawyer is retained by creditors' committee involved in a corporate debt restructuring and agrees to be compensated for any services to be provided to other similarly situated creditors who have not yet been identified. When this occurs, paragraph (a) permits the lawyer to comply with this Rule as soon thereafter as is reasonably practicable.

Rule 3-310(F) 1.8.6 Avoiding the Representation of Adverse Interests Third Party Payments

(Comparison of the Current Proposed Rule to Current California Rule)

~~(F)~~ A ~~member~~lawyer shall not enter into an agreement for, charge, or accept compensation for representing a client from one other than the client unless:

(a) the client gives informed written consent at or before the time the lawyer has entered into the agreement for, charged, or accepted compensation from one other than the client, or as soon thereafter as is reasonably practicable, provided that no disclosure or consent is required if the lawyer: (i) is rendering legal services on behalf of a public agency that provides legal services to other public agencies or the public; or (ii) is rendering services through a non-profit organization;

~~(1b)~~ There~~there~~ is no interference with the ~~member's~~lawyer's independence of professional judgment or with the ~~client-lawyer~~client relationship; and ~~(2c)~~ Information relating to representation of the client is information protected ~~as required by~~ Business and Professions Code section 6068, ~~subdivision (e); and~~ Rule 1.6 is protected.

~~(3)~~ The member obtains the client's informed written consent, ~~provided that no disclosure or consent is required if:~~

~~(a) such nondisclosure is otherwise authorized by law; or~~

~~(b) the member is rendering legal services on behalf of any public agency which provides legal services to other public agencies or the public.~~

Discussion: Comment

~~Rule 3-310 is not intended to prohibit a member from representing parties having antagonistic positions on the same legal question that has arisen in different cases, unless representation of either client would be adversely affected.~~

~~Other rules and laws may preclude making adequate disclosure under this rule. If such disclosure is precluded, informed written consent is likewise precluded. (See, e.g., Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (e).)~~

~~Paragraph (B) is not intended to apply to the relationship of a member to another party's lawyer. Such relationships are governed by rule 3-320.~~

~~Paragraph (B) is not intended to require either the disclosure of the new engagement to a former client or the consent of the former client to the new engagement. However, both disclosure and consent are required if paragraph (E) applies.~~

~~While paragraph (B) deals with the issues of adequate disclosure to the present client or clients of the member's present or past relationships to other parties or witnesses or present interest in the subject matter of the~~

~~representation, paragraph (E) is intended to protect the confidences of another present or former client. These two paragraphs are to apply as complementary provisions.~~

~~Paragraph (B) is intended to apply only to a member's own relationships or interests, unless the member knows that a partner or associate in the same firm as the member has or had a relationship with another party or witness or has or had an interest in the subject matter of the representation.~~

~~Subparagraphs (C)(1) and (C)(2) are intended to apply to all types of legal employment, including the concurrent representation of multiple parties in litigation or in a single transaction or in some other common enterprise or legal relationship. Examples of the latter include the formation of a partnership for several partners or a corporation for several shareholders, the preparation of an ante-nuptial agreement, or joint or reciprocal wills for a husband and wife, or the resolution of an "uncontested" marital dissolution. In such situations, for the sake of convenience or economy, the parties may well prefer to employ a single counsel, but a member must disclose the potential adverse aspects of such multiple representation (e.g., Evid. Code, §962) and must obtain the informed written consent of the clients thereto pursuant to subparagraph (C)(1). Moreover, if the potential adversity should become actual, the member must obtain the further informed written consent of the clients pursuant to subparagraph (C)(2).~~

~~Subparagraph (C)(3) is intended to apply to representations of clients in both litigation and transactional matters.~~

~~In State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company v. Federal Insurance Company (1999) 72 Cal.App.4th 1422 [86 Cal.Rptr.2d 20], the court held that subparagraph (C)(3) was violated when a member, retained by an insurer to defend one suit, and while that suit was still pending, filed a direct action against the same insurer in an unrelated action without securing the insurer's consent. Notwithstanding State Farm, subparagraph (C)(3) is not intended to apply with respect to the relationship between an insurer and a member when, in each matter, the insurer's interest is only as an indemnity provider and not as a direct party to the action.~~

~~There are some matters in which the conflicts are such that written consent may not suffice for non-disciplinary purposes. (See Woods v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal.App.3d 931 [197 Cal.Rptr. 185]; Klemm v. Superior Court (1977) 75 Cal.App.3d 893 [142 Cal.Rptr. 509]; Ishmael v. Millington (1966) 241 Cal.App.2d 520 [50 Cal.Rptr. 592].)~~

~~Paragraph (D) is not intended to apply to class action settlements subject to court approval.~~

[1] A lawyer might be asked to represent a client when another client or other person will pay the lawyer's fees, in whole or in part. This Rule recognizes that any such agreement, charge, or payment creates risks to the lawyer's performance of his or her duties to the client, including the duties of undivided loyalty, independent professional judgment, competence, and confidentiality. A lawyer's responsibilities in a matter are owed only to the client except where the lawyer also represents the payor in the same matter. With respect to the lawyer's additional duties when representing both the client and the payor in the same matter, see Rule 1.7(a)(2) and Rule 1.7, Comments [29] through [33], regarding joint representations. The lawyer also must comply with Rule 1.7(b)(2) when there is a significant risk that the lawyer's representation of the client will be materially limited because the lawyer has another relationship with the payor, such as when the lawyer represents the payor in a different matter. In accepting payment from someone other than the client, the lawyer also must comply with Rule 1.6 and Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) (concerning confidentiality) and Rule 5.4(c) (concerning interference with a lawyer's professional judgment by one who recommends, employs, or pays the lawyer to render legal services for another).

[2] Paragraph (a) exemptions reflect policy decisions to not interfere with the functioning of (1) public agencies that provide legal services to other public agencies or the public, or (2) non-profit organizations that provide legal services to the indigent and to others. A lawyer who is exempt under paragraph (a) nevertheless must comply with paragraphs (b) and (c).

[3] This Rule does not apply to payment of a lawyer's fees by a third party pursuant to a settlement agreement or as ordered by a court or otherwise provided by law.

[4] ~~This Rule Paragraph (F)~~ is not intended to abrogate existing relationships between insurers and insureds whereby the insurer has the contractual right to unilaterally select counsel for the insured, where there is no conflict of interest. (See San Diego Navy Federal Credit Union v. Cumis Insurance Society (1984) 162 Cal.App.3d 358 [208

Cal.Rptr. 494]. Thus, a lawyer is not obligated to obtain the client's consent under paragraph (a) when appointed and paid by an insurer to represent an insured pursuant to the insurer's contractual right to do so. However, the lawyer nevertheless must comply with Rule 1.7 whenever there is a significant risk that the representation of the insured will be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to the insurer. See Rule 1.7(a)(2) and Comments [36] and [37].

[5] In some limited circumstances, a lawyer might not be able to obtain client consent before the lawyer has entered into an agreement for, charged, or accepted compensation, as required by this Rule. This might happen, for example, when a lawyer is retained or paid by a family member on behalf of an incarcerated client. This also might happen in certain commercial settings, such as when a lawyer is retained by creditors' committee involved in a corporate debt restructuring and agrees to be compensated for any services to be provided to other similarly situated creditors who have not yet been identified. When this occurs, paragraph (a) permits the lawyer to comply with this Rule as soon thereafter as is reasonably practicable.

Rule 1.8.6 Third Party Payments (Commission's Proposed Rule – Clean Version)

A lawyer shall not enter into an agreement for, charge, or accept compensation for representing a client from one other than the client unless:

- (a) the client gives informed written consent at or before the time the lawyer has entered into the agreement for, charged, or accepted compensation from one other than the client, or as soon thereafter as is reasonably practicable, provided that no disclosure or consent is required if the lawyer: (i) is rendering legal services on behalf of a public agency that provides legal services to other public agencies or the public; or (ii) is rendering services through a non-profit organization;
- (b) there is no interference with the lawyer's independence of professional judgment or with the lawyer-client relationship; and
- (c) information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rule 1.6 is protected.

Comment

- [1] A lawyer might be asked to represent a client when another client or other person will pay the lawyer's fees, in whole or in part. This Rule recognizes that any such agreement, charge, or payment creates risks to the lawyer's performance of his or her duties to the client, including the duties of undivided loyalty, independent professional judgment, competence, and confidentiality. A lawyer's responsibilities in a matter are owed only to the client except where the lawyer also represents the payor in the same matter. With respect to the lawyer's additional duties when representing both the client and the payor in the same matter, see Rule 1.7(a)(2) and Rule 1.7, Comments [29] through [33], regarding joint representations. The lawyer also must comply with Rule 1.7(b)(2) when there is a significant risk that the lawyer's representation of the client will be materially limited because the lawyer has another relationship with the payor, such as when the lawyer represents the payor in a different matter. In accepting payment from someone other than the client, the lawyer also must comply with Rule 1.6 and Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) (concerning confidentiality) and Rule 5.4(c) (concerning interference with a lawyer's professional judgment by one who recommends, employs, or pays the lawyer to render legal services for another).

- [2] Paragraph (a) exemptions reflect policy decisions to not interfere with the functioning of (1) public agencies that provide legal services to other public agencies or the public, or (2) non-profit organizations that provide legal services to the indigent and to others. A lawyer who is exempt under paragraph (a) nevertheless must comply with paragraphs (b) and (c).
- [3] This Rule does not apply to payment of a lawyer's fees by a third party pursuant to a settlement agreement or as ordered by a court or otherwise provided by law.

- [4] This Rule is not intended to abrogate existing relationships between insurers and insureds whereby the insurer has the contractual right to unilaterally select counsel for the insured, where there is no conflict of interest. See San Diego Navy Federal Credit Union v. Cumis Insurance Society (1984) 162 Cal.App.3d 358 [208 Cal.Rptr. 494]. Thus, a lawyer is not obligated to obtain the client's consent under paragraph (a) when appointed and paid by an insurer to represent an insured pursuant to the insurer's contractual right to do so. However, the lawyer nevertheless must comply with Rule 1.7 whenever there is a significant risk that the representation of the insured will be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to the insurer. See Rule 1.7(a)(2) and Comments [36] and [37].
- [5] In some limited circumstances, a lawyer might not be able to obtain client consent before the lawyer has entered into an agreement for, charged, or accepted compensation, as required by this Rule. This might happen, for example, when a lawyer is retained or paid by a family member on behalf of an incarcerated client. This also might happen in certain commercial settings, such as when a lawyer is retained by creditors' committee involved in a corporate debt restructuring and agrees to be compensated for any services to be provided to other similarly situated creditors who have not yet been identified. When this occurs, paragraph (a) permits the lawyer to comply with this Rule as soon thereafter as is reasonably practicable.

Rule 1.8.6 Third Party Payments [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 4 Agree = 2 Disagree = 0 Modify = 2 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
1	COPRAC	A	Yes		Support as drafted.	No response required.
2	Office of Chief Trial Counsel ("OCTC")	M	Yes		OCTC believes that a Comment should be added suggesting to the lawyers that they advise in writing both the client and the paying non-client that the lawyer's duty only requires him or her to communicate with the client and that, unless the client designates the non-client to receive communications for the client, the lawyer cannot communicate about the case to a non-client and even with such designation the lawyer must preserve the client's confidences and secrets. OCTC finds that often the paying non-client complains to us because they do not understand that the lawyer cannot communicate with them.	The Commission disagrees and did not make the requested change. It concluded that a comment along the lines suggested would not explain the Rule but instead would be a best practices guide.
				Comments [1] & [2]	Comments [1] and [2] should be tightened.	The Commission has reconsidered Comments [1] and [2]; it does not see how Comment [1] might be tightened effectively but has substantially shortened Comment [2] without changing its meaning.
				Comment [3]	Comment [3] should be in the Proposed Rule.	This recommendation apparently is based on the idea that a definition must be in a Rule to serve as

¹ A = AGREE with proposed Rule

D = DISAGREE with proposed Rule

M = AGREE ONLY IF MODIFIED

NI = NOT INDICATED

Rule 1.8.6 Third Party Payments [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 4 Agree = 2 Disagree = 0 Modify = 2 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
						the basis for discipline. The Commission does not believe that ever has been true (various definitions are included in the official Discussion to the current California Rules and in the Model Rules without any problem of which the Commission is aware). The Commission also believes that this should not be true because a Comment's definition of a term amounts to an explanation of the Rule, and that is the purpose of the Comments. For these reasons, the Commission disagreed with OCTC's suggestion and did not make the requested change.
3	Paulsen, Bradley	M	No	Rule and Comment [1]	Commenter, in general, is concerned with attorney conduct in regard to soliciting clients in the area of Homeowner's Notice of Claim of Violation of Functionality Standards, per Civil Code section 910 and Senate Bill 800. Commenter is aware of a situation in which a home had suffered a severe mold problem that, on average, would cost $10,000 to repair. Commenter was told by a homeowner in the neighborhood that the case settled for approximately $500 per home to the homeowners. This owner was left with a defective home, potential health hazard, no builder warranty, and no recourse. The system failed this family by allowing the Soliciting Attorney Groups to solicit this homeowner into a mass action lawsuit and then allowing the Soliciting Attorney Group to deceive the homeowner with a small	These comments are concerned with issues concerning the enforcement of the Rules, which that is a subject beyond the purview of the Commission.

Rule 1.8.6 Third Party Payments [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 4 Agree = 2 Disagree = 0 Modify = 2 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response settlement amount. The catalyst for the claim was the fees the Soliciting Attorney Group stood to gain.
4	San Diego County Bar Association Legal Ethics Committee	A	Yes		Support as drafted.	No response required.

Rule 1.8: Conflict of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules

STATE VARIATIONS

(The following is an excerpt from Regulation of Lawyers: Statutes and Standards (2010 Ed.)
by Steven Gillers, Roy D. Simon and Andrew M. Perlman.)

Alabama. Alabama's Rule 1.8(e)(3) provides as follows:

(3) a lawyer may advance or guarantee emergency financial assistance to the client, the repayment of which may not be contingent on the outcome of the matter, provided that no promise or assurance of financial assistance was made to the client by the lawyer, or on the lawyer's behalf, prior to the employment of the lawyer.

Alabama also adds Rule 1.8(k), which identifies when a lawyer can represent both parties to an uncontested divorce or domestic relations proceeding. Relating to Rule 1.8(h), the Alabama Legal Services Liability Act, Ala. Code §§6-5-570 et seq., provides as follows: "There shall be only one form and cause of action against legal service providers in courts in the State of Alabama and it shall be known as the legal service liability action." Finally, Rules 1.8(l) and (m) describe prohibitions on sexual relations between lawyers and clients. Notably,

Rule 1.8(m) states that "except for a spousal relationship or a relationship that existed at the commencement of the lawyer-client relationship, sexual relations between the lawyer and the client shall be presumed to be exploitative [and thus violate Rule 1.8(l)]. This presumption is rebuttable."

Arizona: Rule 1.8(h)(2) adds a clause forbidding a lawyer to "make an agreement prospectively limiting the client's right to report the lawyer to appropriate professional authorities." Rule 1.8(l), which retains the 1983 version of ABA Model Rule 1.8(i), provides: "A lawyer related to another lawyer as parent, child, sibling, spouse or cohabitant shall not represent a client in a representation directly adverse to a person who the lawyer knows is represented by the other lawyer except upon consent by the client after consultation regarding the relationship."

California: California's rules are generally equivalent to Model Rule 1.8, but two exceptions deserve attention. Rule 3-320 provides as follows:

A member shall not represent a client in a matter in which another party's lawyer is a spouse, parent, child, or sibling of the member, lives with the member, is a client of the member, or has an intimate personal relationship with the member, unless the member informs the client in writing of the relationship.

And Rule 4-210 provides in part as follows:

(A) A member shall not directly or indirectly pay or agree to pay, guarantee, represent, or sanction a representation that the member or member's law firm will pay the personal or business expenses of a prospective or existing client, except that this rule shall not prohibit a member: . . . (2) After employment, from lending money to the client upon the client's promise in writing to repay such loan.

Connecticut adds the following language to Rule 1.8(a), providing that lawyers can enter into business transactions with clients under the following circumstances:

(4) With regard to a business transaction, the lawyer advises the client or former client in writing either (A) that the lawyer will provide legal services to the client or former client concerning the transaction, or (B) that the lawyer will not provide legal services to the client or former client and that the lawyer is involved as a business person only and not as a lawyer representing the client or former client and that the lawyer is not one to whom the client or former client can turn for legal advice concerning the transaction.

(5) With regard to the providing of investment services, the lawyer advises the client or former client in writing (A) whether such services are covered by legal liability insurance or other insurance, and [makes either disclosure set out in paragraph (a)(4)]. Investment services shall only apply where the lawyer has either a direct or indirect control over the invested funds and a direct or indirect interest in the underlying investment.

For purposes of subsection (a)(1) through (a)(5), the phrase "former client" shall mean a client for whom the two year period starting from the conclusion of representation has not expired.

District of Columbia: D.C. Rule 1.8(d) permits lawyers to advance "financial assistance which is reasonably necessary to permit the client to institute or maintain the litigation or administrative proceeding.” Rule 1.8(i) provides as follows:

A lawyer may acquire and enforce a lien granted by law to secure the lawyer’s fees or expenses, but a lawyer shall not impose a lien upon any part of a client’s files, except upon the lawyer’s own work product, and then only to the extent that the work product has not been paid for. This work product exception shall not apply when the client has become unable to pay, or when withholding the lawyer’s work product would present a significant risk to the client of irreparable harm.

Florida adds Rule 4-8.4(i), which provides that a lawyer shall not engage in sexual conduct with a client “or a representative of a client” that:

exploits or adversely affects the interests of the client or the lawyer-client relationship including, but not limited to:

(1) requiring or demanding sexual relations with a client or a representative of a client incident to or as a condition of a legal representation;

(2) employing coercion, intimidation, or undue influence in entering into sexual relations with a client or a representative of a client; or

(3) continuing to represent a client if the lawyer’s sexual relations with the client or a representative of the client cause the lawyer to render incompetent representation.

In 2004, the Florida Supreme Court deleted language from the comment to Rule 8.4, which had stated that lawyer-client sexual relations do not violate the rule if a sexual relationship existed between the lawyer and client before commencement of the lawyer-client relationship.

Georgia: Rule 1.8(a), drawing on DR 5-104 of the ABA Code of Professional Responsibility, applies “if the client expects the lawyer to exercise the lawyer’s professional judgment therein for the protection of the client.” Georgia retains the language of deleted ABA Model Rule 1.8(i) but adds that the disqualification of a lawyer due to a parent, child, sibling, or spousal relationship “is personal and is not imputed to members of firms with whom the lawyers are associated.” Georgia adds that the maximum penalty for violating Rule 1.8(b) (which relates to confidentiality) is disbarment, but the maximum penalty for violating any other provision of Rule 1.8 is only a public reprimand.

Illinois: In the rules effective January 1, 2010, Rule 1.8(a)(2) omits the phrase “desirability of seeking.”

Louisiana: Rule 1.8(g) permits an aggregate settlement if “a court approves the settlement in a certified class action.” Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to “provide financial assistance to a client who is in necessitous circumstances” subject to strict controls, including:

(ii) The advance or loan guarantee, or the offer thereof, shall not be used as an inducement by the lawyer, or anyone acting on the lawyer’s behalf, to secure employment.

(iii) Neither the lawyer nor anyone acting on the lawyer’s behalf may offer to make advances or loan guarantees prior to being hired by a client, and the lawyer shall not publicize nor advertise a willingness to make advances or loan guarantees to clients.

Massachusetts: Rule 1.8(b) forbids a lawyer to use confidential information “for the lawyer’s advantage or the advantage of a third person” without consent.

Michigan: Rules 1.8(a)(2) and 1.8(h)(2) (regarding business transactions with clients and settlement of legal malpractice claims) both require that the client be given a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of independent counsel but lack the ABA requirement that the client be “advised in writing of the desirability of seeking” independent counsel. Michigan Rule 1.8(g), regarding aggregate settlements, lacks the ABA requirement that the client’s consent be “in a writing signed by the client.” Michigan retains the language of deleted ABA Model Rule 1.8(i) verbatim.

Minnesota: Rule 1.8(e)(3) allows a lawyer to guarantee a loan necessary for a client to withstand litigation delay. Rule 1.8(k)’s provision on sexual relationships with clients prohibits a lawyer from having sexual relations with a client unless a consensual relationship existed between the lawyer and client when the client-lawyer relationship commenced. The rule also defines “sexual relations” and adds the following Rules 1.8(k)(2)-(3) to explain the meaning of sex with a “client” when a lawyer represents an organization:

(2) if the client is an organization, any individual who oversees the representation and gives instructions to the lawyer on behalf of the organization shall be deemed to be the client . . .

(3) this paragraph does not prohibit a lawyer from engaging in sexual relations with a client of the lawyer’s firm provided that the lawyer has no involvement in the performance of the legal work for the client . . .

Mississippi: Rule 1.8(e)(2) permits a lawyer to advance medical and living expenses to a client under certain narrowly defined circumstances.

New Hampshire: The New Hampshire rules include a Rule 1.19 (Disclosure of Information to the Client), which requires a lawyer (other than a government or in-house lawyer) to inform a client at the time of engagement if “the lawyer does not maintain professional liability insurance” of at least $100,000 per occurrence and $300,000 in the aggregate “or if the lawyer’s professional liability insurance ceases to be in effect.”

New Jersey: Rule 1.8(e)(3) creates an exception allowing financial assistance by a “non-profit organization authorized under [other law]” if the organization is representing the indigent client without a fee. Rule 1.8(h)(1), while forbidding agreements prospectively limiting liability to a client, contains an exception if “the client fails to act in accordance with the lawyer’s advice and the lawyer nevertheless continues to represent the client at the client’s request.” New Jersey Rule 1.8(k) and (l) provide as follows:

(k) A lawyer employed by a public entity, either as a lawyer or in some other role, shall not undertake the

representation of another client if the representation presents a substantial risk that the lawyer’s responsibilities to the public entity would limit the lawyer’s ability to provide independent advice or diligent and competent representation to either the public entity or the client.

(l) A public entity cannot consent to a representation otherwise prohibited by this Rule.

New York: In the rules effective April 1, 2009, Rule 1.8(a) deletes the language “knowingly acquire an ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client” and adds language from DR 5-104(A) of the old Model Code: “if they have differing interests therein and if the client expects the lawyer to exercise professional judgment therein for the protection of the client....” Comments 3A and 4A-4F, which have no Model Rule equivalents, describe in considerable detail the problem of business transactions with clients, including (in Comments 4D-4F) issues related to a lawyer’s receipt of a client’s securities. New York omits Comment 5.

Rule 1.8(d) draws, in part, on DR 5-104(B) of the old Model Code, and Comment 9 provides more guidance than the equivalent Model Rule provisions concerning a lawyer's acquisition of media or literary rights that relate to a client matter.

Finally, Rule 1.8(j) and (k) as well as Comments 17, 17A, 17B, and 18-20, all address sexual relationships with clients and provide significantly more guidance in this regard than the equivalent Model Rule provision. Comment 17B concludes that “[a] law firm’s failure to educate lawyers about the restrictions on sexual relations — or a firm’s failure to enforce those restrictions against lawyers who violate them — may constitute a violation of Rule 5.1, which obligates a law firm to make reasonable efforts to ensure that all lawyers in the firm conform to these Rules.”

North Dakota: Rule 1.8(g), regarding aggregate settlements, applies “other than in class actions.” North Dakota adds Rule 1.8(k), which restricts the practice of law by a part-time prosecutor or judge in certain circumstances.

Ohio: Rule 1.8(c) forbids a lawyer to solicit “any substantial gift from a client” and forbids a lawyer to “prepare on behalf of a client an instrument giving the lawyer, the lawyer’s partner, associate, paralegal, law clerk or other employee of the lawyer’s firm, a lawyer acting ‘of counsel’ in the lawyer’s firm, or a person related to the lawyer any gift unless the lawyer or other recipient of the gift is related to the client.” “Gift” is defined to include “a testamentary gift.” Ohio Rule 1.8(f)(4) provides a detailed “statement of insured client’s rights” that a lawyer “selected and paid by an insurer to represent an insured” must give to the client.

In July 2009, an Ohio statute (R.C. §1349.55) took effect to regulate companies that make cash advances to plaintiffs in pending civil cases in exchange for the right to receive part of the proceeds of any settlement, award, or judgment. Paragraph (C) of the statute provides that if a plaintiff gets into a dispute concerning the contract for the cash advance, “the responsibilities of the attorney representing the consumer [the plaintiff] in the civil action or claim shall be no greater than the attorney’s responsibilities under the Ohio Rules of Professional Conduct.”

Oregon: Rule 1.8(b) permits a lawyer to use confidential information to a client’s disadvantage only if the client’s consent is “confirmed in writing” (except as otherwise permitted or required by the Rules). Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to advance litigation expenses only if “the client remains ultimately liable for such expenses to the extent of the client’s ability to pay.” Finally, Oregon’s rule governing sexual relations with clients contains a detailed description of “sexual relations,” providing that it includes “sexual intercourse or any touching of the sexual or other intimate parts of a person or causing such person to touch the sexual or other intimate parts of the lawyer for the purpose of arousing or gratifying the sexual desire of either party.”

Pennsylvania: Rule 1.8(g) does not require that client consent be “confirmed in writing.”

Texas: Rule 1.08(c) provides that prior to the conclusion of “all aspects of the matter giving rise to the lawyer’s employment,” a lawyer shall not make or negotiate an agreement “with a client, prospective client, or former client” giving the lawyer literary or media rights to a portrayal or account based in substantial part on information relating to the representation. Rule 1.08(d) provides as follows:

(d) A lawyer shall not provide financial assistance to a client in connection with pending or contemplated litigation or administrative proceedings, except that:

(1) a lawyer may advance or guarantee court costs, expenses of litigation or administrative proceedings, and reasonably necessary medical and living expenses, the repayment of which may be contingent on the outcome of the matter; and

(2) a lawyer representing an indigent client may pay court costs and expenses of litigation on behalf of the client.

Virginia: Rule 1.8(b) forbids the use of information “for the advantage of the lawyer or of a third person or to the disadvantage of the client.” Rule 1.8(e)(1) requires a client ultimately to be liable for court costs and expenses. Rule 1.8(h) contains an exception where the lawyer is “an employee” of the client “as long as the client is independently represented in making the agreement” prospectively limiting the lawyer’s liability for malpractice.

Washington: Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to (1) advance or guarantee the expenses of litigation “provided the client remains ultimately liable for such expenses; and (2) in matters maintained as class actions only, repayment of expenses of litigation may be contingent on the outcome of the matter.” Washington deletes ABA Model Rule 1.8(e)(2) (permitting lawyers to pay litigation costs for indigent clients).

Wisconsin: Rule 1.8(c) creates an exception to testamentary gifts where:

(1) the client is related to the donee, (2) the donee is a natural object of the bounty of the client, (3) there is no reasonable ground to anticipate a contest, or a claim of undue influence or for the public to lose confidence in the integrity of the bar, and (4) the amount of the gift or bequest is reasonable and natural under the circumstances.

Proposed Rule 1.8.7 [3-310(D)] “Aggregate Settlements”

(XDraft #10, 6/27/10)

Summary: Proposed Rule 1.8.7 carries forward the Model Rule and current California concept that a lawyer has a conflict when jointly represented clients are asked to approve an aggregate settlement of their claims or liabilities. This proposal includes the informed written consent requirement normally found in California’s conflict rules but otherwise is substantially the same as the Model Rule. The only substantive change following the second round of public comment was to delete Comment [4], which was not necessary to understanding the Rule’s applicability.

Comparison with ABA Counterpart

Rule

Comment

- ☒ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
- ☐ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
- ☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
- ☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
- ☒ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
- ☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
- ☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
- ☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

Primary Factors Considered

- ☒ Existing California Law

Rules

RPC 3-310(D)

Statute

Case law

- ☐ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

- ☐ Other Primary Factor(s)

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(13 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 13 due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Less than Six Members Opposing Adoption ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 6

Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 3

Abstain 2

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by Consensus ☐

Minority/Position Included on Model Rule Comparison Chart: ☒ Yes ☐ No

Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

☒ No Known Stakeholders

☐ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

☐ Very Controversial – Explanation:

☒ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

There was public comment received that criticized the requirement of informed written consent, which requirement also appears in current rule 3-310(D).

☐ Not Controversial

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.8.7* Aggregate Settlements

July 2010

(Draft rule following consideration of second round of public comment)

INTRODUCTION:

ABA Model Rule 1.8(g) and proposed Rule 1.8.7 both treat as a potential conflict of interest a lawyer's representation of two or more clients in arranging a settlement of claims, whether civil or criminal. Proposed Rule 1.8.7 largely tracks the first sentence of Model Rule 1.8(g). The only substantive difference is the substitution of California's more client-protective "informed written consent" requirement. That requirement also appears in current California Rule 3-310(D) and the Commission determined that it should be carried forward into proposed Rule 1.8.7. The Commission has slightly modified the second sentence of Model Rule 1.8(g) because it is an incomplete statement of the disclosure necessary to obtain informed client consent. In addition, the proposed comment expands upon Model Rule 1.8, cmt. [13] and includes a more robust discussion of the disclosure necessary under this Rule, increasing the likelihood of lawyer compliance with the Rule and enhancing client protection.

Minority. A minority of the Commission objects to the higher "informed written consent" that the Commission recommends be adopted. The minority takes the position that, while laudable, requiring an informed written consent, which itself requires written disclosures, will likely result in the demise of the last minute settlements that often take place at the court house, with resulting prejudice to the clients involved. They take the position that the Model Rule's standard of an "informed consent, in a writing signed by the client," provides adequate protection to clients. See the complete dissent, below.

Variation in Other Jurisdictions. Every state has adopted some version of Model Rule 1.8(g). See Explanation of Changes for the Rule for a brief discussion of some variations. See also selected STATE VARIATIONS excerpt, below.

* Proposed Rule 1.8.7, XDraft 10 (6/27/10).

Proposed Rule 1.8.7 Aggregate Settlements

Minority Dissent

This Rule requires “informed, written consent” to any aggregate settlement. The idea behind this Rule is noble, but its implementation in many instances will be very problematical; and if literally enforced, the Rule will preclude many settlements.

It must be common ground for all experienced civil litigators -- and probably in multi-person criminal cases as well -- that while ideally, settlements are arranged prior to trial call or its immediate time frame, in fact many settlements are made literally at the courthouse door. Not always are all of multiple clients -- especially multiple plaintiffs -- in immediate attendance. While it is an ideal concept that both the amount and the internal allocation (which is exempt from the Rule's requirement) of a settlement be discussed in detail with all clients in advance, the fact is that these last minute settlements do occur and often involve different terms from those recently discussed, and that in virtually all cases they satisfy the litigants. Experienced lawyers will have had thorough discussions with their clients about the range of possible settlements beforehand and will be acting with their clients' advance general authorization -- i.e., authorization which involves a range of options. But the facts of life are that there may be unanticipated last minute developments, both about the case itself and about a changing settlement picture, which frequently result in settlements. And those settlements will relate to just one of several options which the lawyer may have discussed with his/her clients: Is the lawyer to provide multiple versions of the informed written consent, encompassing all authorized or desired options?

While it is surely the intent of the Rule that the “informed written consent” can be provided orally by the clients on the court record, this is not always possible. First, not all clients may be present in court. Second, the settlement may take place away from a court reporter and in circumstances which do not lend themselves to a full on-the-record report. Third, the “informed” part of the consent picture (a) requires disclosure of often privileged, confidential information which cannot and should not be spread on a record, and (b) would be of enormous benefit to the opposition by disclosing the weaknesses and evaluations of the parties' case, which could be greatly abused if for any reason the settlement failed. Indeed, upon hearing such a candid disclosure, the opposing party may have second thoughts and may try to scuttle the settlement: such things have happened before.

An “informed” written consent, in the experience of this minority, commonly requires numerous pages of written exposition, which should be carefully prepared and reviewed before signing. That is not something that can be done quickly; but settlements are often done in the twinkling of an eye.

We understand that it is the intent of this Rule that in class action settlements, only the named class representatives must provide their informed written consent, though we do not see that in the Comments, where it should be stated.

Adoption of this Rule will surely have one of two serious negative consequences, perhaps both: Last minute settlements, or settlements which require quick acceptance to “seize the moment,” will disappear; and the Rule will almost surely lead to non-compliance and violations. Neither is good for the profession or for the clients it serves.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(g) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.7 Aggregate Settlements	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(g) A lawyer who represents two or more clients shall not participate in making an aggregate settlement of the claims of or against the clients, or in a criminal case an aggregated agreement as to guilty or nolo contendere pleas, unless each client gives informed consent, in a writing signed by the client. The lawyer's disclosure shall include the existence and nature of all the claims or pleas involved and of the participation of each person in the settlement.	~~(g)~~ A lawyer who represents two or more clients shall not participate in making an aggregate settlement of the claims of or against the clients, or in a criminal case an ~~aggregated~~ aggregate agreement as to guilty or nolo contendere pleas, unless each client gives informed ~~in a writing signed by the client~~ written consent. The lawyer's disclosure shall include, among other things, the existence and nature of all the claims or pleas involved and of the participation of each person in the settlement.	Changes to the Model Rule. Proposed paragraph (a) is substantially the same as MR 1.8(g). For consistency, the term "aggregate" is used in relation to both civil and criminal matters throughout this Rule and its Comment. Instead of the Model Rule phrase "informed consent, in a writing signed by the client," the Commission recommends retaining California's more client-protective requirement of "informed written consent." Unlike the Model Rule language, "informed written consent" requires by definition a written disclosure. It is noteworthy that the Restatement of Law of Aggregate Litigation § 3.17(a) (Tent. Draft No. 1 4/2008) requires that each claimant "be able to review the settlements of all other persons subject to the aggregate settlement," indicating the predicate of a written disclosure to permit "review." Moreover, current California rule 3-310(D), the counterpart to Model Rule 1.8(g), requires "the informed written consent of each client," which under rule 3-310(A)(2) requires written disclosure. The Commission sees no reason to depart from the well-settled client protection rule currently in place. The statement of the lawyer's disclosure duty in the second sentence of Model Rule 1.8(g) does not provide adequate client protection. Therefore, the phrase, "among other things" has been added to the sentence, and a more expansive explanation of disclosure under this Rule appears in the comment. See Comments [2] and [3]. Approaches in Other Jurisdictions. Several other jurisdictions have added other exceptions to the Model Rule. Some jurisdictions exclude settlements in class actions (Louisiana and N.D.) or, more broadly, any settlement that is approved by the court (N.Y. and Ohio) or that is in the court's written record (Maryland). Minnesota removes criminal matters

* Proposed Rule 1.8.7, XDraft 10 (6/27/10). Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(g) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.7 Aggregate Settlements	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
		from the Rule. Concerning the requirement of "informed consent," most jurisdictions follow the Model Rule consent language, but there are a number of jurisdictions that provide less client protection than does the Model Rule. Some of these jurisdictions do not require that the consent be in a writing signed by the client, and some even do not require that the consent be in any writing. For example, Illinois has "consents after disclosure" and N.J. requires "informed consent after consultation". N.D. retains the 1983 Model Rule language that the client "consents after consultation", as do Georgia, Mississippi, and Virginia (which have not revised their rules since the Ethics 2000 revisions were published). Washington requires that the consent be confirmed in writing, so it does not require the client's signature because this writing could be one created by the lawyer. Connecticut requires no client consent "... where the lawyer is retained to represent a client by a third party obligated under the terms of a contract to provide the client with a defense and indemnity for the loss and the third party elects to settle a matter without contribution by the client."

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(g) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Comment to Rule* Rule 1.8.7 Aggregate Settlements Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Model Rule 1.8, cmt. [13]. See below.	[1] This Rule addresses the conflict issues that arise for a lawyer when the lawyer's clients enter into an aggregate settlement. An aggregate settlement occurs when two or more clients who are represented by the same lawyer resolve their claims, defenses or pleas together, whether in a single matter or in different matters. This can occur in a civil or criminal matter, and it includes a civil settlement made before potential criminal charges are filed. An aggregate settlement in criminal matters often is referred to as a "package deal". This Rule adds an obligation to those the lawyer has under Rule 1.7(a)(2) concerning a lawyer's duties when representing multiple clients in a single matter. It also adds an obligation to those the lawyer has under Rule 1.2(a) to abide by each client's decision whether to make, accept, or reject an offer of settlement in a civil matter or to enter a guilty or nolo contendere plea in a criminal case. This Rule applies whether or not litigation is pending. However, it does not apply to class action settlements that are subject to court approval.	Comments [1], [2], and [3] substantially expand on the single Comment paragraph found in the Model Rule but are intended to be consistent with it. These three paragraphs supplement the discussion of what an aggregate settlement is and what information about the proposed settlement a lawyer is obligated to provide to the client. This fuller explanation should aid lawyer compliance and thus add to client protection.
Model Rule 1.8, cmt. [13]. See below.	[2] This Rule applies in criminal matters in addition to any obligation to obtain the approval of the trial court. All plea offers, whether written or oral, must be communicated to each client. See Rule 1.4.	See Explanation re Comment [1].

* Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(g) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Comment to Rule* Rule 1.8.7 Aggregate Settlements Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Comment * * * Aggregate Settlements [13] Differences in willingness to make or accept an offer of settlement are among the risks of common representation of multiple clients by a single lawyer. Under Rule 1.7, this is one of the risks that should be discussed before undertaking the representation, as part of the process of obtaining the clients' informed consent. In addition, Rule 1.2(a) protects each client's right to have the final say in deciding whether to accept or reject an offer of settlement and in deciding whether to enter a guilty or nolo contendere plea in a criminal case. The rule stated in this paragraph is a corollary of both these Rules and provides that, before any settlement offer or plea bargain is made or accepted on behalf of multiple clients, the lawyer must inform each of them about all the material terms of the settlement, including what the other clients will receive or pay if the settlement or plea offer is accepted. See also Rule 1.0(e) (definition of informed consent). Lawyers representing a class of plaintiffs or defendants, or those proceeding derivatively, may not have a full client-lawyer relationship with each member of the class; nevertheless, such lawyers must comply with applicable rules regulating notification of class members and other procedural requirements designed to ensure adequate protection of the entire class.	Comment Aggregate Settlements ~~[13] Differences in willingness to make or accept an offer of settlement are among the risks of common representation of multiple clients by a single lawyer. Under Rule 1.7, this is one of the risks that should be discussed before undertaking the representation, as part of the process of obtaining the clients' informed consent. In addition, Rule 1.2(a) protects each client's right to have the final say in deciding whether to accept or reject an offer of settlement and in deciding whether to enter a guilty or nolo contendere plea in a criminal case. The rule stated in this paragraph is a corollary of both these Rules and provides that, before any settlement offer or plea bargain is made or accepted on behalf of multiple clients, the lawyer must inform each of them about all the material terms of the settlement, including what the other clients will receive or pay if the settlement or plea offer is accepted. See also Rule 1.0(e) (definition of informed consent). Lawyers representing a class of plaintiffs or defendants, or those proceeding derivatively, may not have a full client-lawyer relationship with each member of the class; nevertheless, such lawyers must comply with applicable rules regulating notification of class members and other procedural requirements designed to ensure adequate protection of the entire class.~~ [3] This Rule permits a lawyer in a civil matter to	See Explanation re Comment [1].

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(g) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Comment to Rule* Rule 1.8.7 Aggregate Settlements Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule negotiate potential settlement terms on behalf of multiple clients, but the lawyer must obtain the informed written consent of each client as provided in this Rule before accepting an opposing party's aggregate settlement offer or before making an aggregate settlement offer that would be binding on multiple clients if an opposing party were to accept it. In addition, Rule 1.4, concerning the lawyer's duty to communicate with each of the lawyer's clients, applies during the negotiation of an aggregate settlement; the lawyer is obligated to fulfill the duty to communicate with all the clients. In making written disclosure to each client of the existence and nature of all the claims or defenses involved and of the participation of each person in the settlement, as is required by this Rule in obtaining informed written consent, the lawyer ordinarily must include the material terms of the settlement, what each of the lawyer's clients would receive or pay if the settlement were accepted, and the method by which expenses (including any expenses already paid by the lawyer and any expenses to be paid out of the settlement proceeds) would be apportioned among them. The disclosure also must include the amount of any fee and of any expense reimbursement the lawyer would receive from the settlement. If the lawyer does not yet know the total amount of expenses to be reimbursed, the lawyer must disclose the amounts then known and make a good faith estimate of additional expenses. See also Rule 1.0(e) (definition of informed consent).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(g) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Comment to Rule* Rule 1.8.7 Aggregate Settlements Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[No corresponding provision]	[4] A lawyer's obligation to make a written disclosure and obtain written consent may be satisfied when the lawyer makes the required disclosure and the clients give consent in court and on the record. See the definition of "written" in Rule 1.0.1(n).	There is no Model Rule counterpart for proposed Comment [5]. The Commission added this Comment in response to public comment, with which the Commission agrees, to clarify that a court's record of client approval of the terms of a settlement is a "written" disclosure and consent, as the Rule requires.

Rule 1.8.7 3-310(D) Aggregate Settlements
(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to the Public Comment Draft)

A lawyer who represents two or more clients shall not participate in making an aggregate settlement of the claims of or against the clients, or in a criminal case an aggregate agreement as to guilty or nolo contendere pleas, unless each client gives informed written consent. The lawyer's disclosure shall include, among other things, the existence and nature of all the claims or pleas involved and of the participation of each person in the settlement.

Comment

COMMENT

[1] This Rule addresses the conflict issues that arise for a lawyer when the lawyer's clients enter into an aggregate settlement. An aggregate settlement occurs when two or more clients who are represented by the same lawyer resolve their claims, defenses or pleas together, whether in a single matter or in different matters. This can occur in a civil or criminal matter, and it includes a civil settlement made before potential criminal charges are filed. An aggregate settlement in criminal matters often is referred to as a "package deal". This Rule adds an obligation to those the lawyer has under Rule 1.7(ba)(2) concerning a lawyer's duties when representing multiple clients in a single matter. It also adds an obligation to those the lawyer has under Rule 1.2(a) to abide by each client's decision whether to make, accept, or reject an offer of settlement in a civil matter or to enter a guilty or nolo contendere plea in a criminal case. This Rule applies whether or not litigation is pending. However, it does not apply to class action settlements that are subject to court approval.

- [2] This Rule applies in criminal matters in addition to any obligation to obtain the approval of the trial court. All plea offers, whether written or oral, must be communicated to each client. See Rule 1.4.
- [3] This Rule permits a lawyer in a civil matter to negotiate potential settlement terms on behalf of multiple clients, but the lawyer must obtain the informed written consent of each client as provided in this Rule before accepting an opposing party's aggregate settlement offer or before making an aggregate settlement offer that would be binding on multiple clients if an opposing party were to accept it. In addition, Rule 1.4, concerning the lawyer's duty to communicate with each of the lawyer's clients, applies during the negotiation of an aggregate settlement; the lawyer is obligated to fulfill the duty to communicate with all the clients. In making written disclosure to each client of the existence and nature of all the claims or defenses involved and of the participation of each person in the settlement, as is required by this Rule in obtaining informed written consent, the lawyer ordinarily must include the material terms of the settlement, what each of the lawyer's clients would receive or pay if the settlement were accepted, and the method by which expenses (including any expenses already paid by the lawyer and any expenses to be paid out of the settlement proceeds) would be apportioned among them. The disclosure also must include the amount of any fee and of any expense reimbursement the lawyer would receive from the settlement. If the lawyer does not yet know the total amount of expenses to be reimbursed, the lawyer must disclose the amounts then known and make a good faith estimate of additional expenses. See also Rule ~~1-01.0.1~~1.0.1(e) (definition of informed consent).

[4] ~~The aggregate settlement that is the topic of this Rule is the agreement with the adverse parties. The Rule does not address any process by which the jointly represented clients determine how to share the benefits or burdens of that settlement. For example, this Rule does not prevent a lawyer in a civil matter from participating in making an aggregate settlement although the allocation of the benefits or burdens of the settlement is delayed for subsequent agreement among the lawyer's clients, so long as the lawyer complies with the written disclosure and consent requirements of the Rule. See Comment [3]. Also, provided a lawyer complies with those disclosure and consent requirements, this Rule does not prevent the lawyer from assisting the jointly represented clients from agreeing at any time to a procedure by which a third-party neutral would be authorized to determine what each of the clients would receive or pay if the settlement were accepted, and the method by which expenses (including any expenses already paid by the lawyer and any expenses to be paid out of the settlement proceeds) would be apportioned among them.~~

[5] A lawyer's obligation to make a written disclosure and obtain written consent ~~is~~may be satisfied when the lawyer makes the required disclosure, and the clients give consent, in court and on the record ~~in court before a licensed court reporter that transcribes the disclosure and consent.~~ See the definition of "written" in Rule 1.0.1(n).

Rule ~~3-310(D)~~ Avoiding the Representation of Adverse Interests 1.8.7 Aggregate Settlements

(Comparison of the Current Proposed Rule to Current California Rule)

~~(A) For purposes of this rule:~~

- ~~(1) "Disclosure" means informing the client or former client of the relevant circumstances and of the actual and reasonably foreseeable adverse consequences to the client or former client;~~
- ~~(2) "Informed written consent" means the client's or former client's written agreement to the representation following written disclosure;~~
- ~~(3) "Written" means any writing as defined in Evidence Code section 250.~~

~~(B) A member shall not accept or continue representation of a client without providing written disclosure to the client where:~~

- ~~(1) The member has a legal, business, financial, professional, or personal relationship with a party or witness in the same matter; or~~
- ~~(2) The member knows or reasonably should know that:
 - ~~(a) the member previously had a legal, business, financial, professional, or personal relationship with a party or witness in the same matter; and~~
 - ~~(b) the previous relationship would substantially affect the member's representation; or~~~~

~~(3) The member has or had a legal, business, financial, professional, or personal relationship with another person or entity the member knows or reasonably should know would be affected substantially by resolution of the matter; or~~

~~(4) The member has or had a legal, business, financial, or professional interest in the subject matter of the representation.~~

~~(C) A member shall not, without the informed written consent of each client:~~

- ~~(1) Accept representation of more than one client in a matter in which the interests of the clients potentially conflict; or~~
- ~~(2) Accept or continue representation of more than one client in a matter in which the interests of the clients actually conflict; or~~
- ~~(3) Represent a client in a matter and at the same time in a separate matter accept as a client a person or entity whose interest in the first matter is adverse to the client in the first matter.~~

~~(D)~~ A ~~member~~lawyer who represents two or more clients shall not ~~enter into~~participate in making an aggregate settlement of the claims of or against the clients ~~without the, or in a criminal case an aggregate agreement as to guilty or nolo contendere pleas, unless each client gives~~ informed written consent. The lawyer's disclosure shall include, among other things, the existence and nature of all the claims or pleas involved and of the participation of each client~~person in the settlement.~~

~~(E) A member shall not, without the informed written consent of the client or former client, accept employment adverse to the client or former client where, by reason of the representation of the client or former client, the member has obtained confidential information material to the employment.~~

~~(F) A member shall not accept compensation for representing a client from one other than the client unless:~~

~~(1) There is no interference with the member's independence of professional judgment or with the client-lawyer relationship; and~~

~~(2) Information relating to representation of the client is protected as required by Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (e); and~~

~~(3) The member obtains the client's informed written consent, provided that no disclosure or consent is required if:~~

~~(a) such nondisclosure is otherwise authorized by law; or~~

~~(b) the member is rendering legal services on behalf of any public agency which provides legal services to other public agencies or the public.~~

~~Discussion:~~ COMMENT

~~Rule 3-310 is not intended to prohibit a member from representing parties having antagonistic positions on the same legal question that has arisen in~~

~~different cases, unless representation of either client would be adversely affected.~~

~~Other rules and laws may preclude making adequate disclosure under this rule. If such disclosure is precluded, informed written consent is likewise precluded. (See, e.g., Business and Professions Code section 6068, subdivision (e).)~~

~~Paragraph (B) is not intended to apply to the relationship of a member to another party's lawyer. Such relationships are governed by rule 3-320.~~

~~Paragraph (B) is not intended to require either the disclosure of the new engagement to a former client or the consent of the former client to the new engagement. However, both disclosure and consent are required if paragraph (E) applies.~~

~~While paragraph (B) deals with the issues of adequate disclosure to the present client or clients of the member's present or past relationships to other parties or witnesses or present interest in the subject matter of the representation, paragraph (E) is intended to protect the confidences of another present or former client. These two paragraphs are to apply as complementary provisions.~~

~~Paragraph (B) is intended to apply only to a member's own relationships or interests, unless the member knows that a partner or associate in the same firm as the member has or had a relationship with another party or witness or has or had an interest in the subject matter of the representation.~~

[1] This Rule addresses the conflict issues that arise for a lawyer when the lawyer's clients enter into an aggregate settlement. An aggregate settlement occurs when two or more clients who are represented by the same lawyer resolve their claims, defenses or pleas together, whether in a single matter or in different matters. This can occur in a civil or criminal matter, and it includes a civil settlement made before potential criminal charges are filed. An aggregate settlement in criminal matters often is referred to as a "package deal". This Rule adds an obligation to those the lawyer has under Rule 1.7(a)(2) concerning a lawyer's duties when representing multiple clients in a single matter. It also adds an obligation to those the lawyer has under Rule 1.2(a) to abide by each client's decision whether to make, accept, or reject an offer of settlement in a civil matter or to enter a guilty or nolo contendere plea in a criminal case. This Rule applies whether or not litigation is pending. However, it does not apply to class action settlements that are subject to court approval.

[2] This Rule applies in criminal matters in addition to any obligation to obtain the approval of the trial court. All plea offers, whether written or oral, must be communicated to each client. See Rule 1.4.

[3] This Rule permits a lawyer in a civil matter to negotiate potential settlement terms on behalf of multiple clients, but the lawyer must obtain the informed written consent of each client as provided in this Rule before accepting an opposing party's aggregate settlement offer or before making an aggregate settlement offer that would be binding on multiple clients if an opposing party were to accept it. In addition, Rule 1.4, concerning the lawyer's duty to communicate with each of the lawyer's clients, applies during the negotiation of an aggregate settlement; the lawyer is obligated to fulfill the duty to communicate with all the clients. In making written disclosure to each client of the existence and nature of all the claims or defenses involved and of the participation of each person in the settlement, as is required by this Rule in obtaining informed written consent, the lawyer ordinarily must include the material terms of the settlement, what each of the lawyer's clients would receive or pay if the settlement were accepted, and the method by which expenses (including any expenses already paid by the lawyer and any expenses to be paid out of the settlement proceeds) would be apportioned among them. The disclosure also must include the amount of any fee and of any expense reimbursement the lawyer would receive from the settlement. If the lawyer does not yet know the total amount of expenses to be reimbursed, the lawyer must disclose the amounts then known and make a good faith estimate of additional expenses. See also Rule 1.0.1(e) (definition of informed consent).

[4] A lawyer's obligation to make a written disclosure and obtain written consent may be satisfied when the lawyer makes the required disclosure and the clients give consent in court and on the record. See the definition of "written" in Rule 1.0.1(n).

~~Subparagraph (C)(3) is intended to apply to representations of clients in both litigation and transactional matters.~~

~~In State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company v. Federal Insurance Company (1999) 72 Cal.App.4th 1422 [86 Cal.Rptr.2d 20], the court held that subparagraph (C)(3) was violated when a member, retained by an insurer to defend one suit, and while that suit was still pending, filed a direct action against the same insurer in an unrelated action without securing the insurer's consent. Notwithstanding State Farm, subparagraph (C)(3) is not intended to apply with respect to the relationship between an insurer and a member when, in each matter, the insurer's interest is only as an indemnity provider and not as a direct party to the action. There are some matters in which the conflicts are such that written consent may not suffice for non-disciplinary purposes. (See Woods v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal.App.3d 931 [197 Cal.Rptr. 185]; Klemm v. Superior Court (1977) 75 Cal.App.3d 893 [142 Cal.Rptr. 509]; Ishmael v. Millington (1966) 241 Cal.App.2d 520 [50 Cal.Rptr. 592].)~~

~~Paragraph (D) is not intended to apply to class action settlements subject to court approval.~~

~~Paragraph (F) is not intended to abrogate existing relationships between insurers and insureds whereby the insurer has the contractual right to unilaterally select counsel for the insured, where there is no conflict of interest. (See San Diego Navy Federal Credit Union v. Cumis Insurance Society (1984) 162 Cal.App.3d 358 [208 Cal.Rptr. 494].) (Amended by order of Supreme Court, operative September 14, 1992; operative March 3, 2003.)~~

Rule 1.8.7 [3-310(D)] Aggregate Settlements (Commission's Proposed Rule – Clean Version)

A lawyer who represents two or more clients shall not participate in making an aggregate settlement of the claims of or against the clients, or in a criminal case an aggregate agreement as to guilty or nolo contendere pleas, unless each client gives informed written consent. The lawyer's disclosure shall include, among other things, the existence and nature of all the claims or pleas involved and of the participation of each person in the settlement.

Comment

[1] This Rule addresses the conflict issues that arise for a lawyer when the lawyer's clients enter into an aggregate settlement. An aggregate settlement occurs when two or more clients who are represented by the same lawyer resolve their claims, defenses or pleas together, whether in a single matter or in different matters. This can occur in a civil or criminal matter, and it includes a civil settlement made before potential criminal charges are filed. An aggregate settlement in criminal matters often is referred to as a "package deal". This Rule adds an obligation to those the lawyer has under Rule 1.7(a)(2) concerning a lawyer's duties when representing multiple clients in a single matter. It also adds an obligation to those the lawyer has under Rule 1.2(a) to abide by each client's decision whether to make, accept, or reject an offer of settlement in a civil matter or to enter a guilty or nolo contendere plea in a criminal case. This Rule applies whether or not litigation is pending. However, it does not apply to class action settlements that are subject to court approval.

[2] This Rule applies in criminal matters in addition to any obligation to obtain the approval of the trial court. All plea offers, whether written or oral, must be communicated to each client. See Rule 1.4.

[3] This Rule permits a lawyer in a civil matter to negotiate potential settlement terms on behalf of multiple clients, but the lawyer must obtain the informed written consent of each client as provided in this Rule before accepting an opposing party's aggregate settlement offer or before making an aggregate settlement offer that would be binding on multiple clients if an opposing party were to accept it. In addition, Rule 1.4, concerning the lawyer's duty to communicate with each of the lawyer's clients, applies during the negotiation of an aggregate settlement; the lawyer is obligated to fulfill the duty to communicate with all the clients. In making written disclosure to each client of the existence and nature of all the claims or defenses involved and of the participation of each person in the settlement, as is required by this Rule in obtaining informed written consent, the lawyer ordinarily must include the material terms of the settlement, what each of the lawyer's clients would receive or pay if the settlement were accepted, and the method by which expenses (including any expenses already paid by the lawyer and any expenses to be paid out of the settlement proceeds) would be apportioned among them. The disclosure also must include the amount of any fee and of any expense reimbursement the lawyer would receive from the settlement. If the lawyer does not yet know the total amount of expenses to be reimbursed, the lawyer must disclose the amounts then known and make a good faith estimate of additional expenses. See also Rule 1.0.1(e) (definition of informed consent).

[4] A lawyer's obligation to make a written disclosure and obtain written consent may be satisfied when the lawyer makes the required disclosure and the clients give consent in court and on the record. See the definition of "written" in Rule 1.0.1(n).

Rule 1.8.7 Aggregate Settlements. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 3 Agree = 0 Disagree = 0 Modify = 3 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
1	COPRAC	M	Yes	Comment [4]	The last sentence of Comment [4] contains certain awkward language that may be corrected by replacing “. . . this Rule does not prevent the lawyer from assisting the jointly-represented clients from agreeing at any time to a procedure” with “. . . this Rule does not prevent the lawyer from assisting the jointly-represented clients in reaching an agreement at any time on a procedure. . . .”	The commenter's point is moot because the Commission has deleted Comment [4].
				Comment [5]	Comment [5] states: “A lawyer’s obligation to make a written disclosure and obtain written consent is satisfied when the lawyer makes the required disclosure, and the clients give consent, on the record in court before a licensed court reporter that transcribes the disclosure and consent.” COPRAC believes it would be more accurate to change “is satisfied” to “may be satisfied.” This is because, read in isolation, the Comment as currently phrased would improperly suggest that disclosure and consent in court before a licensed court reporter on the record is the only way to satisfy the disclosure and consent requirements of this Proposed Rule.	The Commission generally agrees and has made the suggested change with a slight rewording.

¹ A = AGREE with proposed Rule

D = DISAGREE with proposed Rule

M = AGREE ONLY IF MODIFIED

NI = NOT INDICATED

Rule 1.8.7 Aggregate Settlements. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 3 Agree = 0 Disagree = 0 Modify = 3 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					We recommend deleting the portion of the Comment that states: "before a licensed court reporter that transcribes the disclosure and consent" as unnecessary and inconsistent with practices in some courts which use audio tapes instead of court reporters for the record.	The Commission agrees and has made the suggested change.
2	Office of Chief Trial Counsel ("OCTC")	M	No		1. The commenter supports the proposal to use the term "informed written consent" as that term is used in other California rules. However, the commenter finds the rule as written and the Commission's Comments somewhat confusing, especially Comment [4], which is not in the ABA Model Rules. If the Commission is seeking to allow clients to agree that a neutral third-party may determine the allocation of the aggregate settlement that should be stated in the rule, not a comment. 2. The commenter agrees with the definition of aggregate package deals in criminal cases in comment [1]. However, the commenter asserts there are too many comments and they are too long. The ABA has only one comment on this subject, while these proposed rules have five comments. Comment [2] seems unnecessary in light of proposed rule 1.4. Comment [3] is too long and could be tightened.	1. No response required. The commenter's point is moot because the Commission has deleted Comment [4]. 2. No response required. As already noted, the Commission disagrees that there are too many comments. Each comment is necessary to provide adequate guidance to lawyers in this area of the law.

Rule 1.8.7 Aggregate Settlements. [Sorted by Commenter]							TOTAL = 3 Agree = 0 Disagree = 0 Modify = 3 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
3	San Diego County Bar Association Legal Ethics Committee	M	Yes		The second sentence of the Rule states: “The lawyer’s disclosure shall include, among other things, the existence and nature of all the claims or pleas involved and of the participation of each person in the settlement.” SDCBA criticizes “among other things” as being vague and not specifically defining exactly what must be covered in a disclosure. It then recommends says that the entire sentence is unnecessary and likely to cause confusion and should be removed. It points out the need for a conforming change to Comment [3] if the second sentence is removed.	The Commission disagrees and did not make the requested change. The phrase “among other things” is an addition to the Model Rule language that does not change its meaning and is intended only to emphasize, as is true of the Model Rule, that information described in the sentence is not intended to be exclusive. On the broader point, removing the sentence would not alter the lawyer’s ability to make a disclosure sufficient to obtain “informed written consent”, but doing so would leave the lawyer without any guidance as to what needs to be disclosed to obtain “informed written consent”. Including the Model Rule sentence does provide some guidance.

Rule 1.8: Conflict of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules

STATE VARIATIONS

(The following is an excerpt from Regulation of Lawyers: Statutes and Standards (2010 Ed.)
by Steven Gillers, Roy D. Simon and Andrew M. Perlman.)

Alabama. Alabama's Rule 1.8(e)(3) provides as follows:

(3) a lawyer may advance or guarantee emergency financial assistance to the client, the repayment of which may not be contingent on the outcome of the matter, provided that no promise or assurance of financial assistance was made to the client by the lawyer, or on the lawyer's behalf, prior to the employment of the lawyer.

Alabama also adds Rule 1.8(k), which identifies when a lawyer can represent both parties to an uncontested divorce or domestic relations proceeding. Relating to Rule 1.8(h), the Alabama Legal Services Liability Act, Ala. Code §§6-5-570 et seq., provides as follows: "There shall be only one form and cause of action against legal service providers in courts in the State of Alabama and it shall be known as the legal service liability action." Finally, Rules 1.8(l) and (m) describe prohibitions on sexual relations between lawyers and clients. Notably,

Rule 1.8(m) states that "except for a spousal relationship or a relationship that existed at the commencement of the lawyer-client relationship, sexual relations between the lawyer and the client shall be presumed to be exploitative [and thus violate Rule 1.8(l)]. This presumption is rebuttable."

Arizona: Rule 1.8(h)(2) adds a clause forbidding a lawyer to "make an agreement prospectively limiting the client's right to report the lawyer to appropriate professional authorities." Rule 1.8(l), which retains the 1983 version of ABA Model Rule 1.8(i), provides: "A lawyer related to another lawyer as parent, child, sibling, spouse or cohabitant shall not represent a client in a representation directly adverse to a person who the lawyer knows is represented by the other lawyer except upon consent by the client after consultation regarding the relationship."

California: California's rules are generally equivalent to Model Rule 1.8, but two exceptions deserve attention. Rule 3-320 provides as follows:

A member shall not represent a client in a matter in which another party's lawyer is a spouse, parent, child, or sibling of the member, lives with the member, is a client of the member, or has an intimate personal relationship with the member, unless the member informs the client in writing of the relationship.

And Rule 4-210 provides in part as follows:

(A) A member shall not directly or indirectly pay or agree to pay, guarantee, represent, or sanction a representation that the member or member's law firm will pay the personal or business expenses of a prospective or existing client, except that this rule shall not prohibit a member: . . . (2) After employment, from lending money to the client upon the client's promise in writing to repay such loan.

Connecticut adds the following language to Rule 1.8(a), providing that lawyers can enter into business transactions with clients under the following circumstances:

(4) With regard to a business transaction, the lawyer advises the client or former client in writing either (A) that the lawyer will provide legal services to the client or former client concerning the transaction, or (B) that the lawyer will not provide legal services to the client or former client and that the lawyer is involved as a business person only and not as a lawyer representing the client or former client and that the lawyer is not one to whom the client or former client can turn for legal advice concerning the transaction.

(5) With regard to the providing of investment services, the lawyer advises the client or former client in writing (A) whether such services are covered by legal liability insurance or other insurance, and [makes either disclosure set out in paragraph (a)(4)]. Investment services shall only apply where the lawyer has either a direct or indirect control over the invested funds and a direct or indirect interest in the underlying investment.

For purposes of subsection (a)(1) through (a)(5), the phrase "former client" shall mean a client for whom the two year period starting from the conclusion of representation has not expired.

District of Columbia: D.C. Rule 1.8(d) permits lawyers to advance "financial assistance which is reasonably necessary to permit the client to institute or maintain the litigation or administrative proceeding.” Rule 1.8(i) provides as follows:

A lawyer may acquire and enforce a lien granted by law to secure the lawyer’s fees or expenses, but a lawyer shall not impose a lien upon any part of a client’s files, except upon the lawyer’s own work product, and then only to the extent that the work product has not been paid for. This work product exception shall not apply when the client has become unable to pay, or when withholding the lawyer’s work product would present a significant risk to the client of irreparable harm.

Florida adds Rule 4-8.4(i), which provides that a lawyer shall not engage in sexual conduct with a client “or a representative of a client” that:

exploits or adversely affects the interests of the client or the lawyer-client relationship including, but not limited to:

(1) requiring or demanding sexual relations with a client or a representative of a client incident to or as a condition of a legal representation;

(2) employing coercion, intimidation, or undue influence in entering into sexual relations with a client or a representative of a client; or

(3) continuing to represent a client if the lawyer’s sexual relations with the client or a representative of the client cause the lawyer to render incompetent representation.

In 2004, the Florida Supreme Court deleted language from the comment to Rule 8.4, which had stated that lawyer-client sexual relations do not violate the rule if a sexual relationship existed between the lawyer and client before commencement of the lawyer-client relationship.

Georgia: Rule 1.8(a), drawing on DR 5-104 of the ABA Code of Professional Responsibility, applies “if the client expects the lawyer to exercise the lawyer’s professional judgment therein for the protection of the client.” Georgia retains the language of deleted ABA Model Rule 1.8(i) but adds that the disqualification of a lawyer due to a parent, child, sibling, or spousal relationship “is personal and is not imputed to members of firms with whom the lawyers are associated.” Georgia adds that the maximum penalty for violating Rule 1.8(b) (which relates to confidentiality) is disbarment, but the maximum penalty for violating any other provision of Rule 1.8 is only a public reprimand.

Illinois: In the rules effective January 1, 2010, Rule 1.8(a)(2) omits the phrase “desirability of seeking.”

Louisiana: Rule 1.8(g) permits an aggregate settlement if “a court approves the settlement in a certified class action.” Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to “provide financial assistance to a client who is in necessitous circumstances” subject to strict controls, including:

- (ii) The advance or loan guarantee, or the offer thereof, shall not be used as an inducement by the lawyer, or anyone acting on the lawyer’s behalf, to secure employment.

- (iii) Neither the lawyer nor anyone acting on the lawyer’s behalf may offer to make advances or loan guarantees prior to being hired by a client, and the lawyer shall not publicize nor advertise a willingness to make advances or loan guarantees to clients.

Massachusetts: Rule 1.8(b) forbids a lawyer to use confidential information “for the lawyer’s advantage or the advantage of a third person” without consent.

Michigan: Rules 1.8(a)(2) and 1.8(h)(2) (regarding business transactions with clients and settlement of legal malpractice claims) both require that the client be given a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of independent counsel but lack the ABA requirement that the client be “advised in writing of the desirability of seeking” independent counsel. Michigan Rule 1.8(g), regarding aggregate settlements, lacks the ABA requirement that the client’s consent be “in a writing signed by the client.” Michigan retains the language of deleted ABA Model Rule 1.8(i) verbatim.

Minnesota: Rule 1.8(e)(3) allows a lawyer to guarantee a loan necessary for a client to withstand litigation delay. Rule 1.8(k)’s provision on sexual relationships with clients prohibits a lawyer from having sexual relations with a client unless a consensual relationship existed between the lawyer and client when the client-lawyer relationship commenced. The rule also defines “sexual relations” and adds the following Rules 1.8(k)(2)-(3) to explain the meaning of sex with a “client” when a lawyer represents an organization:

- (2) if the client is an organization, any individual who oversees the representation and gives instructions to the lawyer on behalf of the organization shall be deemed to be the client . . .

- (3) this paragraph does not prohibit a lawyer from engaging in sexual relations with a client of the lawyer’s firm provided that the lawyer has no involvement in the performance of the legal work for the client . . .

Mississippi: Rule 1.8(e)(2) permits a lawyer to advance medical and living expenses to a client under certain narrowly defined circumstances.

New Hampshire: The New Hampshire rules include a Rule 1.19 (Disclosure of Information to the Client), which requires a lawyer (other than a government or in-house lawyer) to inform a client at the time of engagement if “the lawyer does not maintain professional liability insurance” of at least $100,000 per occurrence and $300,000 in the aggregate “or if the lawyer’s professional liability insurance ceases to be in effect.”

New Jersey: Rule 1.8(e)(3) creates an exception allowing financial assistance by a “non-profit organization authorized under [other law]” if the organization is representing the indigent client without a fee. Rule 1.8(h)(1), while forbidding agreements prospectively limiting liability to a client, contains an exception if “the client fails to act in accordance with the lawyer’s advice and the lawyer nevertheless continues to represent the client at the client’s request.” New Jersey Rule 1.8(k) and (l) provide as follows:

(k) A lawyer employed by a public entity, either as a lawyer or in some other role, shall not undertake the

representation of another client if the representation presents a substantial risk that the lawyer’s responsibilities to the public entity would limit the lawyer’s ability to provide independent advice or diligent and competent representation to either the public entity or the client.

(l) A public entity cannot consent to a representation otherwise prohibited by this Rule.

New York: In the rules effective April 1, 2009, Rule 1.8(a) deletes the language “knowingly acquire an ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client” and adds language from DR 5-104(A) of the old Model Code: “if they have differing interests therein and if the client expects the lawyer to exercise professional judgment therein for the protection of the client....” Comments 3A and 4A-4F, which have no Model Rule equivalents, describe in considerable detail the problem of business transactions with clients, including (in Comments 4D-4F) issues related to a lawyer’s receipt of a client’s securities. New York omits Comment 5.

Rule 1.8(d) draws, in part, on DR 5-104(B) of the old Model Code, and Comment 9 provides more guidance than the equivalent Model Rule provisions concerning a lawyer's acquisition of media or literary rights that relate to a client matter.

Finally, Rule 1.8(j) and (k) as well as Comments 17, 17A, 17B, and 18-20, all address sexual relationships with clients and provide significantly more guidance in this regard than the equivalent Model Rule provision. Comment 17B concludes that “[a] law firm’s failure to educate lawyers about the restrictions on sexual relations — or a firm’s failure to enforce those restrictions against lawyers who violate them — may constitute a violation of Rule 5.1, which obligates a law firm to make reasonable efforts to ensure that all lawyers in the firm conform to these Rules.”

North Dakota: Rule 1.8(g), regarding aggregate settlements, applies “other than in class actions.” North Dakota adds Rule 1.8(k), which restricts the practice of law by a part-time prosecutor or judge in certain circumstances.

Ohio: Rule 1.8(c) forbids a lawyer to solicit “any substantial gift from a client” and forbids a lawyer to “prepare on behalf of a client an instrument giving the lawyer, the lawyer’s partner, associate, paralegal, law clerk or other employee of the lawyer’s firm, a lawyer acting ‘of counsel’ in the lawyer’s firm, or a person related to the lawyer any gift unless the lawyer or other recipient of the gift is related to the client.” “Gift” is defined to include “a testamentary gift.” Ohio Rule 1.8(f)(4) provides a detailed “statement of insured client’s rights” that a lawyer “selected and paid by an insurer to represent an insured” must give to the client.

In July 2009, an Ohio statute (R.C. §1349.55) took effect to regulate companies that make cash advances to plaintiffs in pending civil cases in exchange for the right to receive part of the proceeds of any settlement, award, or judgment. Paragraph (C) of the statute provides that if a plaintiff gets into a dispute concerning the contract for the cash advance, “the responsibilities of the attorney representing the consumer [the plaintiff] in the civil action or claim shall be no greater than the attorney’s responsibilities under the Ohio Rules of Professional Conduct.”

Oregon: Rule 1.8(b) permits a lawyer to use confidential information to a client’s disadvantage only if the client’s consent is “confirmed in writing” (except as otherwise permitted or required by the Rules). Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to advance litigation expenses only if “the client remains ultimately liable for such expenses to the extent of the client’s ability to pay.” Finally, Oregon’s rule governing sexual relations with clients contains a detailed description of “sexual relations,” providing that it includes “sexual intercourse or any touching of the sexual or other intimate parts of a person or causing such person to touch the sexual or other intimate parts of the lawyer for the purpose of arousing or gratifying the sexual desire of either party.”

Pennsylvania: Rule 1.8(g) does not require that client consent be “confirmed in writing.”

Texas: Rule 1.08(c) provides that prior to the conclusion of “all aspects of the matter giving rise to the lawyer’s employment,” a lawyer shall not make or negotiate an agreement “with a client, prospective client, or former client” giving the lawyer literary or media rights to a portrayal or account based in substantial part on information relating to the representation. Rule 1.08(d) provides as follows:

(d) A lawyer shall not provide financial assistance to a client in connection with pending or contemplated litigation or administrative proceedings, except that:

(1) a lawyer may advance or guarantee court costs, expenses of litigation or administrative proceedings, and reasonably necessary medical and living expenses, the repayment of which may be contingent on the outcome of the matter; and

(2) a lawyer representing an indigent client may pay court costs and expenses of litigation on behalf of the client.

Virginia: Rule 1.8(b) forbids the use of information “for the advantage of the lawyer or of a third person or to the disadvantage of the client.” Rule 1.8(e)(1) requires a client ultimately to be liable for court costs and expenses. Rule 1.8(h) contains an exception where the lawyer is “an employee” of the client “as long as the client is independently represented in making the agreement” prospectively limiting the lawyer’s liability for malpractice.

Washington: Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to (1) advance or guarantee the expenses of litigation “provided the client remains ultimately liable for such expenses; and (2) in matters maintained as class actions only, repayment of expenses of litigation may be contingent on the outcome of the matter.” Washington deletes ABA Model Rule 1.8(e)(2) (permitting lawyers to pay litigation costs for indigent clients).

Wisconsin: Rule 1.8(c) creates an exception to testamentary gifts where:

(1) the client is related to the donee, (2) the donee is a natural object of the bounty of the client, (3) there is no reasonable ground to anticipate a contest, or a claim of undue influence or for the public to lose confidence in the integrity of the bar, and (4) the amount of the gift or bequest is reasonable and natural under the circumstances.

Proposed Rule 1.8.8 [RPC 3-400]

“Limiting Liability to Client”

(XDraft #6, 10/10/09)

Summary: Proposed Rule 1.8.8 carries forward the substance of current rule 3-400 and rejects the approach in Model Rule 1.8(h)(1) that permits a lawyer to obtain a client's waiver of the lawyer's prospective malpractice liability if the client is represented by independent counsel. Otherwise, the Rule largely tracks the remainder of the Model Rule.

Comparison with ABA Counterpart

Rule	Comment
☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
☒ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
☐ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule	☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
☒ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule	☒ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart	☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

Primary Factors Considered

☒ Existing California Law

Rule

RPC 3-400

Statute

Business and Professions Code § 6090.5

Case law

☐ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

☐ Other Primary Factor(s)

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(13 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 13 due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Less than Six Members Opposing Adoption ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 11
Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 1
Abstain 0

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by Consensus ☐

Minority/Dissenting Position Included on Model Rule Comparison Chart ☐ Yes ☒ No

Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

☒ No Known Stakeholders

☐ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

☐ Very Controversial – Explanation:

☐ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

☒ Not Controversial

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.8.8* Limiting Liability to Client

June 2010

(Proposed rule following June 15, 2010 public comment deadline.)

INTRODUCTION:

Proposed Rule 1.8.8 is based on Model Rule 1.8(h), but incorporates the principles of current California Rule 3-400 on limiting liability to a client. The major difference between the proposed Rule and Model Rule 1.8(h) is found in paragraph (a) in that the proposed Rule does not have an exception for limiting prospective liability for malpractice if the client is represented by independent counsel. Paragraph (a) is more client-protective by not permitting lawyers in any circumstances to obtain prospective waivers of future malpractice claims. Paragraph (b) of the proposed Rule is substantially similar to the equivalent Model Rule paragraph. The Comments to the proposed Rule have been substantially shortened to eliminate excess verbiage that adds little to comprehension of the Rule.

The Commission concluded that its proposed Rule offers substantially more public protection than does the Model Rule and has clearer and more easily understood language. See Explanation of Changes for paragraph (a).

Variations in other Jurisdictions. Most jurisdictions have adopted Model Rule 1.8(h) without substantial change. Two states have added provisions relating to the reporting of complaints to the appropriate disciplinary authorities, a prohibition that is covered by statute in California (Business and Professions Code § 6090.5). A reference to that code section has been added to the Comment pursuant to a suggestion by the Los Angeles County Bar Association.

A Note on Rule Numbering. Rather than follow the Model Rules, which place a group of largely unrelated conflict concepts in a single rule, for ease of reference the Commission has assigned each concept in Model Rule 1.8 to its own separate rule number.

* Proposed Rule 1.8.8, XDraft 6 (10/10/09).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(h)	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.8 Limiting Liability to Client	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(h) A lawyer shall not: (1) make an agreement prospectively limiting the lawyer's liability to a client for malpractice unless the client is independently represented in making the agreement; or	~~h)~~A lawyer shall not: (1)~~a) make an agreement~~Contract with a client prospectively limiting the lawyer's liability to ~~a client for malpractice unless the client is independently represented in making for the agreement,~~lawyer's professional malpractice; or	Proposed paragraph (a) rejects the advance waiver of a client's possible future malpractice claim. As explained in Restatement § 54, Comment b: "Such an agreement is against public policy because it tends to undermine competent and diligent legal representation. Also, many clients are unable to evaluate the desirability of such an agreement before a dispute has arisen or while they are represented by the lawyer seeking the agreement." In addition, a lawyer who recognizes some particular risk in a proposed representation should direct his or her efforts to explaining that to the client, not to obtaining a limitation on the lawyer's liability.
(2) settle a claim or potential claim for such liability with an unrepresented client or former client unless that person is advised in writing of the desirability of seeking and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of independent legal counsel in connection therewith.	~~(b)~~ Settle a claim or potential claim for the lawyer's liability to a client or former client for the lawyer's professional malpractice, unless the client or former client is either: (1) represented by independent counsel concerning the settlement; or (2) ~~settle a claim or potential claim for such liability with an unrepresented client or former client unless that person is~~ advised in writing ~~that~~by the lawyer to seek the advice of an [independent lawyer] of the desirability of seeking~~client's choice regarding the settlement~~ and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek ~~the~~that ~~advice of independent legal counsel in connection herewith.~~	The proposed language of paragraph (b) is substantially similar to that of the Model Rule but offers more client protection by mandating that the lawyer advise the client to seek independent counsel rather than advise of the desirability of doing so. Paragraph (b)(1) has been added in recognition that, if the client is already represented by independent counsel, the lawyer should have no duty to advise the client to seek independent counsel.

* Proposed Rule 1.8.8, XDraft 6 (10/10/09). Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(h) Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.8 Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule Comments
Limiting Liability and Settling Malpractice Claims [15] Agreements settling a claim or a potential claim for malpractice are not prohibited by this Rule. Nevertheless, in view of the danger that a lawyer will take unfair advantage of an unrepresented client or former client, the lawyer must first advise such a person in writing of the appropriateness of independent representation in connection with such a settlement. In addition, the lawyer must give the client or former client a reasonable opportunity to find and consult independent counsel.	~~[15] Agreements settling a claim or a potential claim for malpractice are not prohibited by this Rule. Nevertheless, in view of the danger that a lawyer will take unfair advantage of an unrepresented client or former client, the lawyer must first advise such a person in writing of the appropriateness of independent representation in connection with such a settlement. In addition, the lawyer must give the client or former client a reasonable opportunity to find and consult independent counsel.~~ [1] This Rule precludes a lawyer from taking unfair advantage of a client or former client in settling a claim or potential claim for malpractice.	The Commission decided to eliminate a large amount of verbiage that added little to comprehension of the Rule.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(h) Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.8 Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule Comments
Limiting Liability and Settling Malpractice Claims [14] Agreements prospectively limiting a lawyer's liability for malpractice are prohibited unless the client is independently represented in making the agreement because they are likely to undermine competent and diligent representation. Also, many clients are unable to evaluate the desirability of making such an agreement before a dispute has arisen, particularly if they are then represented by the lawyer seeking the agreement. This paragraph does not, however, prohibit a lawyer from entering into an agreement with the client to arbitrate legal malpractice claims, provided such agreements are enforceable and the client is fully informed of the scope and effect of the agreement. Nor does this paragraph limit the ability of lawyers to practice in the form of a limited-liability entity, where permitted by law, provided that each lawyer remains personally liable to the client for his or her own conduct and the firm complies with any conditions required by law, such as provisions requiring client notification or maintenance of adequate liability insurance. Nor does it prohibit an agreement in accordance with Rule 1.2 that defines the scope of the representation, although a definition of scope that makes the obligations of representation illusory will amount to an attempt to limit liability.	~~[14] Agreements prospectively limiting a lawyer's liability for malpractice are prohibited unless the client is independently represented in making the agreement because they are likely to undermine competent and diligent representation. Also, many clients are unable to evaluate the desirability of making such an agreement before a dispute has arisen, particularly if they are then represented by the lawyer seeking the agreement. This paragraph~~Rule does not, however, prohibit a lawyer from entering into an agreement with the client to arbitrate legal malpractice claims. See, provided such agreements are enforceable and the client is fully informed of the scope and effect of the agreemente.g., Powers v. Dickson, Carlson & Campillo (1997) 54 Cal.App.4th 1102 [63 Cal.Rptr.2d 261]; Lawrence v. Walzer & Gabrielson (1989) 207 Cal.App.3d 1501 [256 Cal.Rptr. 6]. Nor does this paragraphRule limit the ability of lawyers to practice in the form of a limited-liability entity, where permitted by law, provided that each lawyer remains personally liable to the client for his or her own conduct and the firm complies with any conditions required by law, such as provisions requiring client notification or maintenance of adequate liability insurance. Nor does it prohibit an agreement in accordance with Rule 1.2 that defines the scope of the representation, although a definition of scope that makes the obligations of representation illusory will amount to an attempt to limit liability.	The Commission decided to eliminate a large amount of verbiage that added little to comprehension of the Rule. The Commission added a pointer on the permissibility of entering into an agreement with the client to arbitrate a legal malpractice claim, citing cases.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(h) Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.8 Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule Comments
	[3] Paragraph (b) is not intended to override obligations the lawyer may have under other law. See, e.g., Business and Professions Code section 6090.5.	This Comment was added to make certain that lawyers are aware of the statutory prohibition on agreements that purport to preclude the reporting of complaints to the State Bar.
	[4] This Rule does not apply to customary qualifications and limitations in legal opinions and memoranda, nor does it prevent a lawyer from reasonably limiting the scope of the lawyer's representation. (See Rule 1.2.)	This paragraph clarifies the meaning of the Rule by describing important limitations on its scope, and by reminding that Rule 1.2 allows a lawyer to limit the scope of a representation.

Rule 1.8.8 [3-400] Limiting Liability to Client
(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to the Public Comment Draft)

A lawyer shall not:

- (a) Contract with a client prospectively limiting the lawyer's liability to the client for the lawyer's professional malpractice; or
 - (b) Settle a claim or potential claim for the lawyer's liability to a client or former client for the lawyer's professional malpractice, unless the client or former client is either:
 - (1) represented by independent counsel concerning the settlement; or
 - (2) advised in writing by the lawyer to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client's choice regarding the settlement and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice.
- [3] Paragraph (b) is not intended to override obligations the lawyer may have under other law. See, e.g., Business and Professions Code ~~§~~ section 6090.5.
- [4] This Rule does not apply to customary qualifications and limitations in legal opinions and memoranda, nor does it prevent a lawyer from reasonably limiting the scope of the lawyer's representation. See Rule 1.2.

COMMENT

- [1] This Rule precludes a lawyer from taking unfair advantage of a client or former client in settling a claim or potential claim for malpractice.
- [2] This Rule does not prohibit a lawyer from entering into an agreement with the client to arbitrate legal malpractice claims. See, e.g., Powers v. Dickson, Carlson & Campillo (1997) 54 Cal.App.4th 1102 [63 Cal.Rptr.2d 261]; Lawrence v. Walzer & Gabrielson (1989) 207 Cal.App.3d 1501 [256 Cal.Rptr. 6]. Nor does this Rule limit the ability of lawyers to practice in the form of a limited-liability entity.

Rule 1.8.8 ~~3-400~~ Limiting Liability to Client
(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to Current California Rule)

A ~~member~~lawyer shall not:

- ~~(A)~~(a) Contract with a client prospectively limiting the ~~member's~~lawyer's liability to the client for the ~~member's~~lawyer's professional malpractice; or
- (b) Settle a claim or potential claim for the lawyer's liability to a client or former client for the lawyer's professional malpractice, unless the client or former client is either:
- (1) represented by independent counsel concerning the settlement; or
- ~~(B)~~(2) ~~advised—Settle a claim or potential claim for the member's liability to the client for the member's professional malpractice, unless the client is informed~~ in writing ~~that~~by the client ~~may~~lawyer to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client's choice regarding the settlement and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice.

Discussion:COMMENT

- [1] This Rule precludes a lawyer from taking unfair advantage of a client or former client in settling a claim or potential claim for malpractice.
- [2] This Rule does not prohibit a lawyer from entering into an agreement with the client to arbitrate legal malpractice claims. See, e.g., Powers v. Dickson, Carlson & Campillo (1997) 54 Cal.App.4th 1102 [63 Cal.Rptr.2d 261]; Lawrence v. Walzer & Gabrielson (1989) 207

Cal.App.3d 1501 [256 Cal.Rptr. 6]. Nor does this Rule limit the ability of lawyers to practice in the form of a limited-liability entity.

- [3] Paragraph (b) is not intended to override obligations the lawyer may have under other law. See, e.g., Business and Professions Code section 6090.5.
- [4] This Rule ~~3-400—~~isdoes not ~~intended to~~ apply to customary qualifications and limitations in legal opinions and memoranda, nor ~~isdoes~~ it ~~intended to~~ prevent a ~~member~~lawyer from reasonably limiting the scope of the ~~member's employment or~~lawyer's representation. See Rule 1.2.

Rule 1.8.8 [3-400] Limiting Liability to Client
(Commission's Proposed Rule – Clean Version)

A lawyer shall not:

- (a) Contract with a client prospectively limiting the lawyer's liability to the client for the lawyer's professional malpractice; or
 - (b) Settle a claim or potential claim for the lawyer's liability to a client or former client for the lawyer's professional malpractice, unless the client or former client is either:
 - (1) represented by independent counsel concerning the settlement; or
 - (2) advised in writing by the lawyer to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client's choice regarding the settlement and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice.
- [3] Paragraph (b) is not intended to override obligations the lawyer may have under other law. See, e.g., Business and Professions Code section 6090.5.
- [4] This Rule does not apply to customary qualifications and limitations in legal opinions and memoranda, nor does it prevent a lawyer from reasonably limiting the scope of the lawyer's representation. See Rule 1.2.

COMMENT

- [1] This Rule precludes a lawyer from taking unfair advantage of a client or former client in settling a claim or potential claim for malpractice.
- [2] This Rule does not prohibit a lawyer from entering into an agreement with the client to arbitrate legal malpractice claims. See, e.g., Powers v. Dickson, Carlson & Campillo (1997) 54 Cal.App.4th 1102 [63 Cal.Rptr.2d 261]; Lawrence v. Walzer & Gabrielson (1989) 207 Cal.App.3d 1501 [256 Cal.Rptr. 6]. Nor does this Rule limit the ability of lawyers to practice in the form of a limited-liability entity.

Rule 1.8.8 Limiting Liability to Client. [Sorted by Commenter] TOTAL = 2 Agree = 2 Disagree = 0 Modify = 0 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
1	COPRAC	A	Yes		Support as drafted.	No response required.
2	Office of Chief Trial Counsel	A	Yes		OCTC would recommend that this rule also require that the potential malpractice settlement be fair and reasonable. A leading treatise on legal ethics has criticized the ABA's model rules limiting liability because it does not require the terms of the agreement to be fair, although the treatise notes that this may be because that is already required by the ABA's version of 3-300 (ABA Model Rule 1.8(a)). (See Hazard & Hodes, "The Law of Lawyering, 3rd Edition § 12.19.) Comments [1] and [2] seem more appropriate for treatises, law review articles, and ethics opinions.	The proposed rule follows Model Rule 1.8(h) fairly closely; the Model Rule has no such requirement. Since the proposed rule requires that the client be represented by counsel or be advised to seek such counsel, there appears to be no compelling reason to also require that any such settlement be fair and reasonable. As the Commission has noted with respect to other Rules, the comments are an important part of the Rules modeled on the ABA Model Rules, providing clarification of the black letter and guidance to lawyers on how to be in compliance with their professional obligations.

¹ A = AGREE with proposed Rule

D = DISAGREE with proposed Rule

M = AGREE ONLY IF MODIFIED

NI = NOT INDICATED

Rule 1.8: Conflict of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules

STATE VARIATIONS

(The following is an excerpt from Regulation of Lawyers: Statutes and Standards (2010 Ed.)
by Steven Gillers, Roy D. Simon and Andrew M. Perlman.)

Alabama. Alabama's Rule 1.8(e)(3) provides as follows:

(3) a lawyer may advance or guarantee emergency financial assistance to the client, the repayment of which may not be contingent on the outcome of the matter, provided that no promise or assurance of financial assistance was made to the client by the lawyer, or on the lawyer's behalf, prior to the employment of the lawyer.

Alabama also adds Rule 1.8(k), which identifies when a lawyer can represent both parties to an uncontested divorce or domestic relations proceeding. Relating to Rule 1.8(h), the Alabama Legal Services Liability Act, Ala. Code §§6-5-570 et seq., provides as follows: "There shall be only one form and cause of action against legal service providers in courts in the State of Alabama and it shall be known as the legal service liability action." Finally, Rules 1.8(l) and (m) describe prohibitions on sexual relations between lawyers and clients. Notably,

Rule 1.8(m) states that "except for a spousal relationship or a relationship that existed at the commencement of the lawyer-client relationship, sexual relations between the lawyer and the client shall be presumed to be exploitative [and thus violate Rule 1.8(l)]. This presumption is rebuttable."

Arizona: Rule 1.8(h)(2) adds a clause forbidding a lawyer to "make an agreement prospectively limiting the client's right to report the lawyer to appropriate professional authorities." Rule 1.8(l), which retains the 1983 version of ABA Model Rule 1.8(i), provides: "A lawyer related to another lawyer as parent, child, sibling, spouse or cohabitant shall not represent a client in a representation directly adverse to a person who the lawyer knows is represented by the other lawyer except upon consent by the client after consultation regarding the relationship."

California: California's rules are generally equivalent to Model Rule 1.8, but two exceptions deserve attention. Rule 3-320 provides as follows:

A member shall not represent a client in a matter in which another party's lawyer is a spouse, parent, child, or sibling of the member, lives with the member, is a client of the member, or has an intimate personal relationship with the member, unless the member informs the client in writing of the relationship.

And Rule 4-210 provides in part as follows:

(A) A member shall not directly or indirectly pay or agree to pay, guarantee, represent, or sanction a representation that the member or member's law firm will pay the personal or business expenses of a prospective or existing client, except that this rule shall not prohibit a member: . . . (2) After employment, from lending money to the client upon the client's promise in writing to repay such loan.

Connecticut adds the following language to Rule 1.8(a), providing that lawyers can enter into business transactions with clients under the following circumstances:

(4) With regard to a business transaction, the lawyer advises the client or former client in writing either (A) that the lawyer will provide legal services to the client or former client concerning the transaction, or (B) that the lawyer will not provide legal services to the client or former client and that the lawyer is involved as a business person only and not as a lawyer representing the client or former client and that the lawyer is not one to whom the client or former client can turn for legal advice concerning the transaction.

(5) With regard to the providing of investment services, the lawyer advises the client or former client in writing (A) whether such services are covered by legal liability insurance or other insurance, and [makes either disclosure set out in paragraph (a)(4)]. Investment services shall only apply where the lawyer has either a direct or indirect control over the invested funds and a direct or indirect interest in the underlying investment.

For purposes of subsection (a)(1) through (a)(5), the phrase "former client" shall mean a client for whom the two year period starting from the conclusion of representation has not expired.

District of Columbia: D.C. Rule 1.8(d) permits lawyers to advance "financial assistance which is reasonably necessary to permit the client to institute or maintain the litigation or administrative proceeding.” Rule 1.8(i) provides as follows:

A lawyer may acquire and enforce a lien granted by law to secure the lawyer's fees or expenses, but a lawyer shall not impose a lien upon any part of a client's files, except upon the lawyer's own work product, and then only to the extent that the work product has not been paid for. This work product exception shall not apply when the client has become unable to pay, or when withholding the lawyer's work product would present a significant risk to the client of irreparable harm.

Florida adds Rule 4-8.4(i), which provides that a lawyer shall not engage in sexual conduct with a client “or a representative of a client” that:

exploits or adversely affects the interests of the client or the lawyer-client relationship including, but not limited to:

(1) requiring or demanding sexual relations with a client or a representative of a client incident to or as a condition of a legal representation;

(2) employing coercion, intimidation, or undue influence in entering into sexual relations with a client or a representative of a client; or

(3) continuing to represent a client if the lawyer's sexual relations with the client or a representative of the client cause the lawyer to render incompetent representation.

In 2004, the Florida Supreme Court deleted language from the comment to Rule 8.4, which had stated that lawyer-client sexual relations do not violate the rule if a sexual relationship existed between the lawyer and client before commencement of the lawyer-client relationship.

Georgia: Rule 1.8(a), drawing on DR 5-104 of the ABA Code of Professional Responsibility, applies “if the client expects the lawyer to exercise the lawyer's professional judgment therein for the protection of the client.” Georgia retains the language of deleted ABA Model Rule 1.8(i) but adds that the disqualification of a lawyer due to a parent, child, sibling, or spousal relationship “is personal and is not imputed to members of firms with whom the lawyers are associated.” Georgia adds that the maximum penalty for violating Rule 1.8(b) (which relates to confidentiality) is disbarment, but the maximum penalty for violating any other provision of Rule 1.8 is only a public reprimand.

Illinois: In the rules effective January 1, 2010, Rule 1.8(a)(2) omits the phrase “desirability of seeking.”

Louisiana: Rule 1.8(g) permits an aggregate settlement if “a court approves the settlement in a certified class action.” Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to “provide financial assistance to a client who is in necessitous circumstances” subject to strict controls, including:

(ii) The advance or loan guarantee, or the offer thereof, shall not be used as an inducement by the lawyer, or anyone acting on the lawyer’s behalf, to secure employment.

(iii) Neither the lawyer nor anyone acting on the lawyer’s behalf may offer to make advances or loan guarantees prior to being hired by a client, and the lawyer shall not publicize nor advertise a willingness to make advances or loan guarantees to clients.

Massachusetts: Rule 1.8(b) forbids a lawyer to use confidential information “for the lawyer’s advantage or the advantage of a third person” without consent.

Michigan: Rules 1.8(a)(2) and 1.8(h)(2) (regarding business transactions with clients and settlement of legal malpractice claims) both require that the client be given a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of independent counsel but lack the ABA requirement that the client be “advised in writing of the desirability of seeking” independent counsel. Michigan Rule 1.8(g), regarding aggregate settlements, lacks the ABA requirement that the client’s consent be “in a writing signed by the client.” Michigan retains the language of deleted ABA Model Rule 1.8(i) verbatim.

Minnesota: Rule 1.8(e)(3) allows a lawyer to guarantee a loan necessary for a client to withstand litigation delay. Rule 1.8(k)’s provision on sexual relationships with clients prohibits a lawyer from having sexual relations with a client unless a consensual relationship existed between the lawyer and client when the client-lawyer relationship commenced. The rule also defines “sexual relations” and adds the following Rules 1.8(k)(2)-(3) to explain the meaning of sex with a “client” when a lawyer represents an organization:

(2) if the client is an organization, any individual who oversees the representation and gives instructions to the lawyer on behalf of the organization shall be deemed to be the client . . .

(3) this paragraph does not prohibit a lawyer from engaging in sexual relations with a client of the lawyer’s firm provided that the lawyer has no involvement in the performance of the legal work for the client . . .

Mississippi: Rule 1.8(e)(2) permits a lawyer to advance medical and living expenses to a client under certain narrowly defined circumstances.

New Hampshire: The New Hampshire rules include a Rule 1.19 (Disclosure of Information to the Client), which requires a lawyer (other than a government or in-house lawyer) to inform a client at the time of engagement if “the lawyer does not maintain professional liability insurance” of at least $100,000 per occurrence and $300,000 in the aggregate “or if the lawyer’s professional liability insurance ceases to be in effect.”

New Jersey: Rule 1.8(e)(3) creates an exception allowing financial assistance by a “non-profit organization authorized under [other law]” if the organization is representing the indigent client without a fee. Rule 1.8(h)(1), while forbidding agreements prospectively limiting liability to a client, contains an exception if “the client fails to act in accordance with the lawyer’s advice and the lawyer nevertheless continues to represent the client at the client’s request.” New Jersey Rule 1.8(k) and (l) provide as follows:

(k) A lawyer employed by a public entity, either as a lawyer or in some other role, shall not undertake the

representation of another client if the representation presents a substantial risk that the lawyer’s responsibilities to the public entity would limit the lawyer’s ability to provide independent advice or diligent and competent representation to either the public entity or the client.

(l) A public entity cannot consent to a representation otherwise prohibited by this Rule.

New York: In the rules effective April 1, 2009, Rule 1.8(a) deletes the language “knowingly acquire an ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client” and adds language from DR 5-104(A) of the old Model Code: “if they have differing interests therein and if the client expects the lawyer to exercise professional judgment therein for the protection of the client....” Comments 3A and 4A-4F, which have no Model Rule equivalents, describe in considerable detail the problem of business transactions with clients, including (in Comments 4D-4F) issues related to a lawyer’s receipt of a client’s securities. New York omits Comment 5.

Rule 1.8(d) draws, in part, on DR 5-104(B) of the old Model Code, and Comment 9 provides more guidance than the equivalent Model Rule provisions concerning a lawyer's acquisition of media or literary rights that relate to a client matter.

Finally, Rule 1.8(j) and (k) as well as Comments 17, 17A, 17B, and 18-20, all address sexual relationships with clients and provide significantly more guidance in this regard than the equivalent Model Rule provision. Comment 17B concludes that "[a] law firm's failure to educate lawyers about the restrictions on sexual relations — or a firm's failure to enforce those restrictions against lawyers who violate them — may constitute a violation of Rule 5.1, which obligates a law firm to make reasonable efforts to ensure that all lawyers in the firm conform to these Rules."

North Dakota: Rule 1.8(g), regarding aggregate settlements, applies "other than in class actions." North Dakota adds Rule 1.8(k), which restricts the practice of law by a part-time prosecutor or judge in certain circumstances.

Ohio: Rule 1.8(c) forbids a lawyer to solicit "any substantial gift from a client" and forbids a lawyer to "prepare on behalf of a client an instrument giving the lawyer, the lawyer's partner, associate, paralegal, law clerk or other employee of the lawyer's firm, a lawyer acting 'of counsel' in the lawyer's firm, or a person related to the lawyer any gift unless the lawyer or other recipient of the gift is related to the client." "Gift" is defined to include "a testamentary gift." Ohio Rule 1.8(f)(4) provides a detailed "statement of insured client's rights" that a lawyer "selected and paid by an insurer to represent an insured" must give to the client.

In July 2009, an Ohio statute (R.C. §1349.55) took effect to regulate companies that make cash advances to plaintiffs in pending civil cases in exchange for the right to receive part of the proceeds of any settlement, award, or judgment. Paragraph (C) of the statute provides that if a plaintiff gets into a dispute concerning the contract for the cash advance, "the responsibilities of the attorney representing the consumer [the plaintiff] in the civil action or claim shall be no greater than the attorney's responsibilities under the Ohio Rules of Professional Conduct."

Oregon: Rule 1.8(b) permits a lawyer to use confidential information to a client's disadvantage only if the client's consent is "confirmed in writing" (except as otherwise permitted or required by the Rules). Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to advance litigation expenses only if "the client remains ultimately liable for such expenses to the extent of the client's ability to pay." Finally, Oregon's rule governing sexual relations with clients contains a detailed description of "sexual relations," providing that it includes "sexual intercourse or any touching of the sexual or other intimate parts of a person or causing such person to touch the sexual or other intimate parts of the lawyer for the purpose of arousing or gratifying the sexual desire of either party."

Pennsylvania: Rule 1.8(g) does not require that client consent be “confirmed in writing.”

Texas: Rule 1.08(c) provides that prior to the conclusion of “all aspects of the matter giving rise to the lawyer’s employment,” a lawyer shall not make or negotiate an agreement “with a client, prospective client, or former client” giving the lawyer literary or media rights to a portrayal or account based in substantial part on information relating to the representation. Rule 1.08(d) provides as follows:

(d) A lawyer shall not provide financial assistance to a client in connection with pending or contemplated litigation or administrative proceedings, except that:

(1) a lawyer may advance or guarantee court costs, expenses of litigation or administrative proceedings, and reasonably necessary medical and living expenses, the repayment of which may be contingent on the outcome of the matter; and

(2) a lawyer representing an indigent client may pay court costs and expenses of litigation on behalf of the client.

Virginia: Rule 1.8(b) forbids the use of information “for the advantage of the lawyer or of a third person or to the disadvantage of the client.” Rule 1.8(e)(1) requires a client ultimately to be liable for court costs and expenses. Rule 1.8(h) contains an exception where the lawyer is “an employee” of the client “as long as the client is independently represented in making the agreement” prospectively limiting the lawyer’s liability for malpractice.

Washington: Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to (1) advance or guarantee the expenses of litigation “provided the client remains ultimately liable for such expenses; and (2) in matters maintained as class actions only, repayment of expenses of litigation may be contingent on the outcome of the matter.” Washington deletes ABA Model Rule 1.8(e)(2) (permitting lawyers to pay litigation costs for indigent clients).

Wisconsin: Rule 1.8(c) creates an exception to testamentary gifts where:

(1) the client is related to the donee, (2) the donee is a natural object of the bounty of the client, (3) there is no reasonable ground to anticipate a contest, or a claim of undue influence or for the public to lose confidence in the integrity of the bar, and (4) the amount of the gift or bequest is reasonable and natural under the circumstances.

Proposed Rule 1.8.9 [4-300]
“Purchasing Property at a Foreclosure or a Sale Subject to Judicial Review”

(XDraft #3, 2/09/10)

Summary: Proposed Rule 1.8.9, for which there is no Model Rule counterpart, carries forward current rule 4-300's prohibition on lawyers' (i) purchasing property at various legally required sales such as foreclosure, execution, receiver's and similar sales, or (ii) representing the seller at such a sale in which a spouse or associate of the lawyer is the buyer. Unlike the current rule, however, the proposed Rule does not regulate probate sales. See Introduction.

Comparison with ABA Counterpart

Rule

Comment

- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
- ☐ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
- ☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
- ☒ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
- ☐ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
- ☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
- ☒ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

Primary Factors Considered

- ☒ Existing California Law

Rules

RPC 4-300

Statute

Probate Code §§ 9880-9885.

Case law

- ☐ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

- ☐ Other Primary Factor(s)

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(14 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 14 due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Less than Six Members Opposing Adoption ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 8

Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 4

Abstain 0

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by consensus ☐

Minority/Position Included on Model Rule Comparison Chart: ☒ Yes ☐ No

Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

☒ No Known Stakeholders

☐ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

☐ Very Controversial – Explanation:

☒ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

The Commission's decision to remove probate sales from the scope of the current rule, under which participation in such sales is prohibited, might be viewed as lessening client protection because the Probate Code permits lawyer's participation in such sales under certain conditions.

☐ Not Controversial

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.8.9* Purchasing Property at a Foreclosure or a Sale Subject to Judicial Review

June 2010

(Proposed rule following June 15, 2010 public comment deadline.)

INTRODUCTION:

Proposed Rule 1.8.9 prohibits lawyers' either purchasing property at various sales under legal process, such as foreclosure, execution, receiver's and similar sales, or representing the seller at such a sale in which a spouse or associate of the lawyer is the buyer.

There is no equivalent Model Rule, but the Commission believes that such a rule is a necessary public protection device, as it has been for many years.

There is only one substantive change to the current rule that the Commission proposes. The current rule applies to probate sales as well as to other types of sales; but Probate Code sections 9880-9885 specifically allow such transactions under specified and detailed provisions including disclosure and court approval. This conflict between statute and rule has existed for a number of years. Consequently, the Commission proposes that the statute provides sufficient public protection and that therefore the Rule need not address probate sales. However, a cross reference to the pertinent Probate Code sections is provided so as to identify the issue and the statute controls for any interested parties.

Minority. This proposal will change current Rule 4-300 to permit a lawyer in a probate case to buy assets out of the estate. As set forth in more detail in the dissent to this proposal, it thereby abrogates decades of clear decisional law, will allow lawyers to take advantage of vulnerable members of the public, will promote conflicts of interest for lawyers in probate cases, and will deprive the judiciary of objective advocacy in an essential aspect of the probate process. Proposed Rule 1.7 does not cure the defects in this new proposed rule because it does not require a lawyer to obtain the informed written consent of the client or of the heirs, beneficiaries, or creditors of the probate estate, nor to assure that they obtain independent representation, before the lawyer or the lawyer's relation may purchase an asset of the estate. Thus, the proposed rules will not protect the public but will encourage harm to those interested in probate estates

* Proposed Rule 1.8.9, XDraft #3 (2/09/10).

INTRODUCTION (Continued):

A Note on the Rule Number. Rather than follow the Model Rules, which place a group of largely unrelated conflict concepts in a single rule, for ease of reference the Commission has assigned each such concept its own separate rule number.

Proposed Rule 1.8.9 Purchasing Property at a Foreclosure or a Sale Subject to Judicial Review Rules Revision Commission – Minority Dissent

This proposal will change current Rule 4-300 to permit a lawyer in a probate case to buy assets out of the estate. It thereby abrogates decades of clear decisional law, will allow lawyers to take advantage of vulnerable members of the public, will promote conflicts of interest for lawyers in probate cases, and will deprive the judiciary of objective advocacy in an essential aspect of the probate process. Proposed Rule 1.7 does not cure the defects in this new proposed rule because it does not require a lawyer to obtain the informed written consent of the client or of the heirs, beneficiaries, or creditors of the probate estate, nor to assure that they obtain independent representation, before the lawyer or the lawyer's relation may purchase an asset of the estate. Thus, the proposed rules will not protect the public but will encourage harm to those interested in probate estates.

California has always strictly prohibited an attorney from purchasing assets at a probate or other judicial sale if the attorney represents a party to the matter. This prophylactic rule is intended to remove any temptation for a lawyer to deal unfairly and is intended to protect the reputation of the legal profession. In Eschwig v. State Bar (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 8, 16, the Court disbarred an attorney for purchasing property that was an asset of an estate in which he was an attorney for the executrix. The Court emphasized the conflicts of interest inherent in this situation:

An attorney representing the representative of an estate is under an obligation to seek the highest possible price on the sale of an estate asset. As a purchaser, however, he would be inclined to seek the lowest possible price. The resulting conflict of interest where the attorney becomes the purchaser is apparent. Because of the conflict of interest inherent in the situation, [former] Rule 8 is applicable even where an attorney is acting in good faith and even where there is competitive bidding. A conflict of interest exists, and is inherently more dangerous, in a sale during probate such as occurred here, because it was not public, was unknown to the court, did not involve competitive bidding, and allowed petitioner to overreach or exercise undue influence upon his client.

Id., 1 Cal. 3d at 15. Attorneys should not be allowed to purchase, directly or indirectly, any property at a probate, foreclosure, or judicial sale in which the attorney represents a party. See, e.g., Marlowe v. State Bar (1965) 63 Cal. 2d 304 [attorney's wife bought at judicial sale. Held act of moral turpitude and breach of fiduciary duty.]; Sodikoff v. State Bar (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 422 [attorney bought asset through his corporate alter ego: six months suspension].

It is astounding that the majority of the Commission recommends continuing the absolute prohibition as to foreclosure, receiver's, trustee's, or judicial sales but would permit lawyers to purchase in probate sales. In probate, the executor, executrix, administrator, heir, or beneficiary is often less able to protect herself or himself than in the other types of sales. A widow, widower, orphan, or surviving parent may have no experience in sales of business, real property, or other assets. Often, they are unsophisticated. Particularly when a close relative, spouse, or lover has died, a normal reaction of the survivors is one of shock and pain. Often, the full emotional impact of the death is more than the survivor or survivors can tolerate, and they become dependent on their attorney to guide them through the transition. Even if the survivors would normally have the ability to exercise independent judgment, after the death of a loved one they often do not. The author of this dissent has met with surviving spouses and parents, and months later they admit that they were in such shock that they did not even remember that we met, let alone what we discussed. Nevertheless, the majority of the Commission who voted to change this rule would deprive vulnerable people of the protections of existing law but continue those protections for commercial receivership sales, foreclosure sales and the like.

Permitting attorneys in probate cases to loot estates would be inexcusable. An attorney who has the opportunity to recommend a sale of an asset and to guide the survivors in how to sell, to whom to sell, under what circumstances, and at what price, may perform a valuable service. However, an attorney who has a direct interest in the sale because he or she is a buyer is more likely to perform a huge disservice. The attorney's own financial, business, property, and personal interests will conflict with the interests of the client and with the interests of the heirs, beneficiaries, and creditors of the probate estate. The attorney may find it very difficult to set his or her personal interests aside, and those interested in the estate will not receive advice based upon independent professional judgment. This will occur precisely when they are most vulnerable.

Particularly in probate cases, the courts are uniquely dependent upon the integrity of counsel. Many matters are unopposed, so no advocate urges that a petition for authority to sell is not in the best interests of the estate or those interested in it. Often, the personal representative has no idea what the consequences of a sale at a given price may be and is dependent on the attorney to ascertain what is in the personal representative's or the heirs' best interests. Permitting lawyers to buy assets from probate estates will impair the ability of clients to obtain independent advice and representation and will cut the courts off from advocacy by someone without a personal stake in the outcome.

The heirs, beneficiaries, and creditors of the probate estate will not adequately be protected by court procedures. For example, because the executrix trusts the attorney, she and the beneficiaries or heirs consent to the petition for approval of the sale without obtaining any independent advice. The petition comes on for an unopposed hearing before a judge who may not have time to examine the merits, let alone give attention to the lawyer's conflicts of interest.¹ Now, when a lawyer alleges in a petition that a sale is in the best interests of the estate and those beneficially interested in the estate, the probate judge can assume that the lawyer is advocating for the executrix, heirs, and creditors and not from self interest. In the future, if proposed rule 1.8.9 is adopted, no one will be advocating for them who does not have an inherent conflict of interest. This rule will create a very substantial risk that parties to probate proceedings will be represented in the courts by attorneys who cannot give them objective advice and who cannot objectively represent them in court. When an attorney for a personal representative appears on the petition for authority to sell property, he or she will be advocating that the property should be sold to the attorney or to the attorney's relative or partner, but not to a bona fide purchaser. The attorney will be advocating what is in his or her own interest when, instead, the lawyer should be advocating what is in the best interests of the estate and those beneficially interested in it. The administration of justice will have been corrupted.

¹ On October 7, 2009, the San Francisco probate department heard 55 matters on its 9:00 calendar. At three minutes a case, only contested matters can receive much attention.

The type of transaction that would be promoted by the proposed new rule is inherently abhorrent. It will victimize clients and other members of the public who are inherently vulnerable.

Deviating from established norms of our profession is not justified by the lobbying that the probate bar did to induce the Legislature to permit lawyers to buy at a probate sale. The fact that the Legislature included permission for lawyers to buy at probate sales does not make that wrongful practice right. Probate Code section 9881 does not serve as a substitute for rules of ethics or of discipline and does not absolve the lawyer of the duty to address the significant conflicts of interest when buying from a probate estate.

The Supreme Court has inherent jurisdiction to control conduct of lawyers in probate cases. See Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 6077 & 6103. The Supreme Court can require attorneys to adhere to stricter standards than the Legislature may require. Legislative standards are only minimal standards that must be applied for discipline, and the Supreme Court retains inherent power to make its rules more strict than the Legislature requires. See, e.g., Stratmore v. State Bar (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 887, 889-90.

In 1990, Commission for the Revision of the Rules recommended adoption of current Rule 4-300. In its report, the Commission expressly pointed out to the Board of Governors and to the Supreme Court the conflict between that rule and then new Probate Code sections 9880 through 9885. The Commission recommended that the Supreme Court adopt Rule 4-300 because it affords clients protection from predatory lawyers in situations where clients, for emotional or other reasons, will likely have difficulty exercising independent or objective judgment. The Board of Governors and the Supreme Court agreed. That was the ethical and correct position, and it would be the ethical and correct position to take today.

The Commission should be embarrassed by proposing to enrich lawyers by blessing inherent conflicts of interest that jeopardize the public. The Board of Governors should reject this new rule.

ABA Model Rule No Comparable ABA Model Rule	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.9 Purchasing Property at a Foreclosure or a Sale Subject to Judicial Review	Explanation of Changes to the California Rule 4-300
	(Aa) A ~~member~~lawyer shall not directly or indirectly purchase property at a ~~probate,~~ foreclosure, receiver's, trustee's, or judicial sale in an action or proceeding in which such ~~member~~lawyer or any lawyer affiliated ~~by reason of personal, business, or professional relationship~~ with that ~~member or with that member's~~lawyer's law firm is acting as a lawyer for a party or as executor, receiver, trustee, administrator, guardian, or conservator.	Since there is no comparable ABA Model Rule, this Explanation will only address changes to the existing California Rule, 4-300. The Commission believes that this Rule protects the public against self-dealing by lawyers who are performing professional functions in connection with various forms of property sales under legal processes, such as receiver's, trustee's, or judicial sales, and should be continued. The Commission is not aware of any reasons why the ABA has not addressed this subject; but it believes that the possibility for self-dealing or abuse in these situations is apparent wherever a lawyer performs professional functions concerning a public or semi-public sale under legal process. Thus, proposed Rule 1.8.9 retains virtually all of current California rule 4-300, with one significant exception. Lawyers' roles in probate sales have been regulated both by rule 4-300 and by statute (Probate Code §§ 9880-9885). The current rule completely prohibits lawyers' self-dealing (directly or indirectly through family members etc.) in such transactions; but the Probate Code allows such transactions upon court order, given after notice to all interested parties as specified in the Code. After extensive consideration whether to continue the current rule's total prohibition of that which the legislature has decided to allow with specified conditions, the Commission decided that the statutory provision afforded adequate public protection in probate sales transactions, and has deleted that part of current rule 4-300 from the proposed Rule.

* Redline/strikeout showing changes to the current California rule as there is no ABA Model Rule counterpart.

ABA Model Rule No Comparable ABA Model Rule	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.9 Purchasing Property at a Foreclosure or a Sale Subject to Judicial Review	Explanation of Changes to the California Rule 4-300
		The only other changes to part (a) are that the qualification which describes the nature of the "affiliation" which precludes participation in such a sale was eliminated as unnecessary and perhaps too limiting, and that "lawyer" was substituted for "member."
	(B) A ~~member~~lawyer shall not represent the seller at a ~~probate~~, foreclosure, ~~receiver~~receiver's, ~~trustee~~trustee's, or judicial sale ~~in an action or proceeding~~ in which the purchaser is a spouse or relative or other close associate of the ~~member~~lawyer or of another lawyer in the ~~member's lawyer's~~ law firm ~~or is an employee of the member or the member's law firm.~~ (Amended by order of Supreme Court, operative September 14, 1992.)	See Explanation of Changes for paragraph (a).
	(c) This Rule does not prohibit a lawyer's participation in transactions that are specifically authorized by and comply with Probate Code sections 9880 through 9885; but such transactions remain subject to the provisions of Rules 1.8.1 [3-300] and 1.7 [3-310].	New paragraph (c) excepts probate sales from the Rule and cross-references the specific provision of the Probate Code. See Explanation to part (a) of this proposed rule. Paragraph (c) also adds the caveat that although probate sales might be regulated under the statute, a lawyer's participation in such transactions is still subject to other rules.

ABA Model Rule No Comparable ABA Model Rule Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.9 Purchasing Property at a Foreclosure or a Sale Subject to Judicial Review Comment	Explanation of Changes to the California Rule 4-300
	[1] A lawyer may lawfully participate in a transaction involving a probate proceeding which concerns a client by following the process described in Probate Code sections 9880 - 9885. These provisions, which permit what would otherwise be impermissible self-dealing by specific submissions to and approval by the courts, must be strictly followed in order to avoid violation of this Rule.	Comment [1] has been added to caution lawyers that failure to comply with the conditions of the Probate Code as to probate sales is a violation of this Rule.

Rule 1.8.9 Purchasing Property at a Foreclosure or a Sale Subject to Judicial Review
(Commission's Proposed Rule – Clean Version)

- (a) A lawyer shall not directly or indirectly purchase property at a foreclosure, receiver's, trustee's, or judicial sale in an action or proceeding in which such lawyer or any lawyer affiliated with that lawyer's law firm is acting as a lawyer for a party or as executor, receiver, trustee, administrator, guardian or conservator.
- (b) A lawyer shall not represent the seller at a foreclosure, receiver's, trustee's, or judicial sale in which the purchaser is a spouse, relative or other close associate of the lawyer or of another lawyer in the lawyer's law firm.
- (c) This Rule does not prohibit a lawyer's participation in transactions that are specifically authorized by and comply with Probate Code sections 9880 through 9885; but such transactions remain subject to the provisions of Rules 1.8.1 and 1.7.

COMMENT

- [1] A lawyer may lawfully participate in a transaction involving a probate proceeding which concerns a client by following the process described in Probate Code sections 9880 - 9885. These provisions, which permit what would otherwise be impermissible self-dealing by specific submissions to and approval by the courts, must be strictly followed in order to avoid violation of this Rule.

Rule 1.8.9 Purchasing Property at a Foreclosure or a Sale Subject to Judicial Review.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 2 Agree = 1
Disagree = 1
Modify = 0
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
1	Office of Chief Trial Counsel	D	Yes		OCTC opposes the change to this rule. Current Rule 4-300 prohibits all such transactions, but subparagraph (c) of the Proposed Rule permits lawyers to directly or indirectly purchase property as specifically authorized by Probate Code sections 9880 through 9885. However, it is not clear that Probate Code section 9881 was intended to permit the personal representative's attorney to purchase property of the estate personally. OCTC has serious concerns about permitting a member to either directly or indirectly purchase estate property pursuant to Probate Code sections 9880-9885. They include: (1) whether the transaction is truly fair and in the best interest of the client; (2) its impact on the public's confidence in the profession; (3) whether such transactions undermine or may undermine the attorney's duty of undivided loyalty to the client; (4) whether the attorney is looking for a deal rather than representing his or her client's best interest; and (5) the appearance of or actual overreaching by the attorney against potentially unsophisticated and/or grieving parties or family members.	The Commission had considered at length the disparity between current Rule 4-300 and the Probate Code section, and decided that although the great majority of the Commission felt that the rule was better than the statute, the Commission should not create or continue an inconsistency with the statutory regime.

¹ A = AGREE with proposed Rule

D = DISAGREE with proposed Rule

M = AGREE ONLY IF MODIFIED

NI = NOT INDICATED

Rule 1.8.9 Purchasing Property at a Foreclosure or a Sale Subject to Judicial Review.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 2 Agree = 1
Disagree = 1
Modify = 0
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comment [1]	If the Commission strikes subparagraph (c) then Comment [1] should be stricken.
2	San Diego County Bar Association	A	Yes		Rule 4-300 conflicted with Probate Code 9880-9885 which provided that a lawyer could participate in a probate proceeding sale. This revision aligns both statutes.	No response required.

Rule 1.8: Conflict of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules

STATE VARIATIONS

(The following is an excerpt from Regulation of Lawyers: Statutes and Standards (2010 Ed.)
by Steven Gillers, Roy D. Simon and Andrew M. Perlman.)

Alabama. Alabama's Rule 1.8(e)(3) provides as follows:

(3) a lawyer may advance or guarantee emergency financial assistance to the client, the repayment of which may not be contingent on the outcome of the matter, provided that no promise or assurance of financial assistance was made to the client by the lawyer, or on the lawyer's behalf, prior to the employment of the lawyer.

Alabama also adds Rule 1.8(k), which identifies when a lawyer can represent both parties to an uncontested divorce or domestic relations proceeding. Relating to Rule 1.8(h), the Alabama Legal Services Liability Act, Ala. Code §§6-5-570 et seq., provides as follows: "There shall be only one form and cause of action against legal service providers in courts in the State of Alabama and it shall be known as the legal service liability action." Finally, Rules 1.8(l) and (m) describe prohibitions on sexual relations between lawyers and clients. Notably,

Rule 1.8(m) states that "except for a spousal relationship or a relationship that existed at the commencement of the lawyer-client relationship, sexual relations between the lawyer and the client shall be presumed to be exploitative [and thus violate Rule 1.8(l)]. This presumption is rebuttable."

Arizona: Rule 1.8(h)(2) adds a clause forbidding a lawyer to "make an agreement prospectively limiting the client's right to report the lawyer to appropriate professional authorities." Rule 1.8(l), which retains the 1983 version of ABA Model Rule 1.8(i), provides: "A lawyer related to another lawyer as parent, child, sibling, spouse or cohabitant shall not represent a client in a representation directly adverse to a person who the lawyer knows is represented by the other lawyer except upon consent by the client after consultation regarding the relationship."

California: California's rules are generally equivalent to Model Rule 1.8, but two exceptions deserve attention. Rule 3-320 provides as follows:

A member shall not represent a client in a matter in which another party's lawyer is a spouse, parent, child, or sibling of the member, lives with the member, is a client of the member, or has an intimate personal relationship with the member, unless the member informs the client in writing of the relationship.

And Rule 4-210 provides in part as follows:

(A) A member shall not directly or indirectly pay or agree to pay, guarantee, represent, or sanction a representation that the member or member's law firm will pay the personal or business expenses of a prospective or existing client, except that this rule shall not prohibit a member: . . . (2) After employment, from lending money to the client upon the client's promise in writing to repay such loan.

Connecticut adds the following language to Rule 1.8(a), providing that lawyers can enter into business transactions with clients under the following circumstances:

(4) With regard to a business transaction, the lawyer advises the client or former client in writing either (A) that the lawyer will provide legal services to the client or former client concerning the transaction, or (B) that the lawyer will not provide legal services to the client or former client and that the lawyer is involved as a business person only and not as a lawyer representing the client or former client and that the lawyer is not one to whom the client or former client can turn for legal advice concerning the transaction.

(5) With regard to the providing of investment services, the lawyer advises the client or former client in writing (A) whether such services are covered by legal liability insurance or other insurance, and [makes either disclosure set out in paragraph (a)(4)]. Investment services shall only apply where the lawyer has either a direct or indirect control over the invested funds and a direct or indirect interest in the underlying investment.

For purposes of subsection (a)(1) through (a)(5), the phrase "former client" shall mean a client for whom the two year period starting from the conclusion of representation has not expired.

District of Columbia: D.C. Rule 1.8(d) permits lawyers to advance "financial assistance which is reasonably necessary to permit the client to institute or maintain the litigation or administrative proceeding.” Rule 1.8(i) provides as follows:

A lawyer may acquire and enforce a lien granted by law to secure the lawyer's fees or expenses, but a lawyer shall not impose a lien upon any part of a client's files, except upon the lawyer's own work product, and then only to the extent that the work product has not been paid for. This work product exception shall not apply when the client has become unable to pay, or when withholding the lawyer's work product would present a significant risk to the client of irreparable harm.

Florida adds Rule 4-8.4(i), which provides that a lawyer shall not engage in sexual conduct with a client “or a representative of a client” that:

exploits or adversely affects the interests of the client or the lawyer-client relationship including, but not limited to:

(1) requiring or demanding sexual relations with a client or a representative of a client incident to or as a condition of a legal representation;

(2) employing coercion, intimidation, or undue influence in entering into sexual relations with a client or a representative of a client; or

(3) continuing to represent a client if the lawyer's sexual relations with the client or a representative of the client cause the lawyer to render incompetent representation.

In 2004, the Florida Supreme Court deleted language from the comment to Rule 8.4, which had stated that lawyer-client sexual relations do not violate the rule if a sexual relationship existed between the lawyer and client before commencement of the lawyer-client relationship.

Georgia: Rule 1.8(a), drawing on DR 5-104 of the ABA Code of Professional Responsibility, applies “if the client expects the lawyer to exercise the lawyer's professional judgment therein for the protection of the client.” Georgia retains the language of deleted ABA Model Rule 1.8(i) but adds that the disqualification of a lawyer due to a parent, child, sibling, or spousal relationship “is personal and is not imputed to members of firms with whom the lawyers are associated.” Georgia adds that the maximum penalty for violating Rule 1.8(b) (which relates to confidentiality) is disbarment, but the maximum penalty for violating any other provision of Rule 1.8 is only a public reprimand.

Illinois: In the rules effective January 1, 2010, Rule 1.8(a)(2) omits the phrase “desirability of seeking.”

Louisiana: Rule 1.8(g) permits an aggregate settlement if “a court approves the settlement in a certified class action.” Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to “provide financial assistance to a client who is in necessitous circumstances” subject to strict controls, including:

(ii) The advance or loan guarantee, or the offer thereof, shall not be used as an inducement by the lawyer, or anyone acting on the lawyer’s behalf, to secure employment.

(iii) Neither the lawyer nor anyone acting on the lawyer’s behalf may offer to make advances or loan guarantees prior to being hired by a client, and the lawyer shall not publicize nor advertise a willingness to make advances or loan guarantees to clients.

Massachusetts: Rule 1.8(b) forbids a lawyer to use confidential information “for the lawyer’s advantage or the advantage of a third person” without consent.

Michigan: Rules 1.8(a)(2) and 1.8(h)(2) (regarding business transactions with clients and settlement of legal malpractice claims) both require that the client be given a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of independent counsel but lack the ABA requirement that the client be “advised in writing of the desirability of seeking” independent counsel. Michigan Rule 1.8(g), regarding aggregate settlements, lacks the ABA requirement that the client’s consent be “in a writing signed by the client.” Michigan retains the language of deleted ABA Model Rule 1.8(i) verbatim.

Minnesota: Rule 1.8(e)(3) allows a lawyer to guarantee a loan necessary for a client to withstand litigation delay. Rule 1.8(k)’s provision on sexual relationships with clients prohibits a lawyer from having sexual relations with a client unless a consensual relationship existed between the lawyer and client when the client-lawyer relationship commenced. The rule also defines “sexual relations” and adds the following Rules 1.8(k)(2)-(3) to explain the meaning of sex with a “client” when a lawyer represents an organization:

(2) if the client is an organization, any individual who oversees the representation and gives instructions to the lawyer on behalf of the organization shall be deemed to be the client . . .

(3) this paragraph does not prohibit a lawyer from engaging in sexual relations with a client of the lawyer’s firm provided that the lawyer has no involvement in the performance of the legal work for the client . . .

Mississippi: Rule 1.8(e)(2) permits a lawyer to advance medical and living expenses to a client under certain narrowly defined circumstances.

New Hampshire: The New Hampshire rules include a Rule 1.19 (Disclosure of Information to the Client), which requires a lawyer (other than a government or in-house lawyer) to inform a client at the time of engagement if “the lawyer does not maintain professional liability insurance” of at least $100,000 per occurrence and $300,000 in the aggregate “or if the lawyer’s professional liability insurance ceases to be in effect.”

New Jersey: Rule 1.8(e)(3) creates an exception allowing financial assistance by a “non-profit organization authorized under [other law]” if the organization is representing the indigent client without a fee. Rule 1.8(h)(1), while forbidding agreements prospectively limiting liability to a client, contains an exception if “the client fails to act in accordance with the lawyer’s advice and the lawyer nevertheless continues to represent the client at the client’s request.” New Jersey Rule 1.8(k) and (l) provide as follows:

(k) A lawyer employed by a public entity, either as a lawyer or in some other role, shall not undertake the

representation of another client if the representation presents a substantial risk that the lawyer’s responsibilities to the public entity would limit the lawyer’s ability to provide independent advice or diligent and competent representation to either the public entity or the client.

(l) A public entity cannot consent to a representation otherwise prohibited by this Rule.

New York: In the rules effective April 1, 2009, Rule 1.8(a) deletes the language “knowingly acquire an ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client” and adds language from DR 5-104(A) of the old Model Code: “if they have differing interests therein and if the client expects the lawyer to exercise professional judgment therein for the protection of the client....” Comments 3A and 4A-4F, which have no Model Rule equivalents, describe in considerable detail the problem of business transactions with clients, including (in Comments 4D-4F) issues related to a lawyer’s receipt of a client’s securities. New York omits Comment 5.

Rule 1.8(d) draws, in part, on DR 5-104(B) of the old Model Code, and Comment 9 provides more guidance than the equivalent Model Rule provisions concerning a lawyer's acquisition of media or literary rights that relate to a client matter.

Finally, Rule 1.8(j) and (k) as well as Comments 17, 17A, 17B, and 18-20, all address sexual relationships with clients and provide significantly more guidance in this regard than the equivalent Model Rule provision. Comment 17B concludes that "[a] law firm's failure to educate lawyers about the restrictions on sexual relations — or a firm's failure to enforce those restrictions against lawyers who violate them — may constitute a violation of Rule 5.1, which obligates a law firm to make reasonable efforts to ensure that all lawyers in the firm conform to these Rules."

North Dakota: Rule 1.8(g), regarding aggregate settlements, applies "other than in class actions." North Dakota adds Rule 1.8(k), which restricts the practice of law by a part-time prosecutor or judge in certain circumstances.

Ohio: Rule 1.8(c) forbids a lawyer to solicit "any substantial gift from a client" and forbids a lawyer to "prepare on behalf of a client an instrument giving the lawyer, the lawyer's partner, associate, paralegal, law clerk or other employee of the lawyer's firm, a lawyer acting 'of counsel' in the lawyer's firm, or a person related to the lawyer any gift unless the lawyer or other recipient of the gift is related to the client." "Gift" is defined to include "a testamentary gift." Ohio Rule 1.8(f)(4) provides a detailed "statement of insured client's rights" that a lawyer "selected and paid by an insurer to represent an insured" must give to the client.

In July 2009, an Ohio statute (R.C. §1349.55) took effect to regulate companies that make cash advances to plaintiffs in pending civil cases in exchange for the right to receive part of the proceeds of any settlement, award, or judgment. Paragraph (C) of the statute provides that if a plaintiff gets into a dispute concerning the contract for the cash advance, "the responsibilities of the attorney representing the consumer [the plaintiff] in the civil action or claim shall be no greater than the attorney's responsibilities under the Ohio Rules of Professional Conduct."

Oregon: Rule 1.8(b) permits a lawyer to use confidential information to a client's disadvantage only if the client's consent is "confirmed in writing" (except as otherwise permitted or required by the Rules). Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to advance litigation expenses only if "the client remains ultimately liable for such expenses to the extent of the client's ability to pay." Finally, Oregon's rule governing sexual relations with clients contains a detailed description of "sexual relations," providing that it includes "sexual intercourse or any touching of the sexual or other intimate parts of a person or causing such person to touch the sexual or other intimate parts of the lawyer for the purpose of arousing or gratifying the sexual desire of either party."

Pennsylvania: Rule 1.8(g) does not require that client consent be “confirmed in writing.”

Texas: Rule 1.08(c) provides that prior to the conclusion of “all aspects of the matter giving rise to the lawyer’s employment,” a lawyer shall not make or negotiate an agreement “with a client, prospective client, or former client” giving the lawyer literary or media rights to a portrayal or account based in substantial part on information relating to the representation. Rule 1.08(d) provides as follows:

(d) A lawyer shall not provide financial assistance to a client in connection with pending or contemplated litigation or administrative proceedings, except that:

(1) a lawyer may advance or guarantee court costs, expenses of litigation or administrative proceedings, and reasonably necessary medical and living expenses, the repayment of which may be contingent on the outcome of the matter; and

(2) a lawyer representing an indigent client may pay court costs and expenses of litigation on behalf of the client.

Virginia: Rule 1.8(b) forbids the use of information “for the advantage of the lawyer or of a third person or to the disadvantage of the client.” Rule 1.8(e)(1) requires a client ultimately to be liable for court costs and expenses. Rule 1.8(h) contains an exception where the lawyer is “an employee” of the client “as long as the client is independently represented in making the agreement” prospectively limiting the lawyer’s liability for malpractice.

Washington: Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to (1) advance or guarantee the expenses of litigation “provided the client remains ultimately liable for such expenses; and (2) in matters maintained as class actions only, repayment of expenses of litigation may be contingent on the outcome of the matter.” Washington deletes ABA Model Rule 1.8(e)(2) (permitting lawyers to pay litigation costs for indigent clients).

Wisconsin: Rule 1.8(c) creates an exception to testamentary gifts where:

(1) the client is related to the donee, (2) the donee is a natural object of the bounty of the client, (3) there is no reasonable ground to anticipate a contest, or a claim of undue influence or for the public to lose confidence in the integrity of the bar, and (4) the amount of the gift or bequest is reasonable and natural under the circumstances.

Proposed Rule 1.8.10 [RPC 3-120]

“Sexual Relations With Client”

(XDraft #7, 09/12/09)

Summary: Proposed Rule 1.8.10 substantially adopts ABA Model Rule 1.8(j), which prohibits a lawyer from having sexual relations with a client unless a consensual sexual relationship pre-dated the lawyer-client relationship. The proposed Rule differs from the Model Rule in adding a definition of “sexual relations” in paragraph (b), which is imported verbatim from existing California Rule of Professional Conduct 3-120.

Comparison with ABA Counterpart

Rule

Comment

- ☒ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
- ☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
- ☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
- ☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

- ☒ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
- ☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
- ☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
- ☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
- ☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

Primary Factors Considered

- ☒ Existing California Law

Rule

RPC 3-120

Statute

Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 6106.8 & 6106.9

Case law

- ☐ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

- ☐ Other Primary Factor(s)

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(13 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 13s due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Fewer than Six Members Opposing Adoption ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 6
Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 5
Abstain 1

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by Consensus ☐

Minority/Dissenting Position Included on Model Rule Comparison Chart ☒ Yes ☐ No

Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

☒ No Known Stakeholders

☐ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

☒ Very Controversial – Explanation:

See Introduction.

☐ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

☐ Not Controversial

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.8.10* Sexual Relations With Client

June 2010

(Proposed rule following June 15, 2010 public comment deadline.)

INTRODUCTION:

1. Proposed Rule 1.8.10 substantially adopts Model Rule 1.8(j), which prohibits a lawyer from having sexual relations with a client unless a consensual sexual relationship pre-dated the lawyer-client relationship. As the comparison chart illustrates, unlike current California rule 3-120, the Commission has proposed a rule that follows Model Rule 1.8(j) which effectively bans, rather than limits, sexual relations between lawyers and their clients.
2. The version of the Rule that was initially circulated for public comment closely followed current California rule 3-120 in that it limited, but did not ban, virtually all sexual relationships. The Commission originally passed this version of the rule by a vote of 8 to 1.
3. In response to the initial public comment distribution, the Commission received four written public comments in favor of a broad Model Rule-type ban and two written comments in favor of the narrower limitation in the current California rule. Also, an attendee at the public hearing spoke in favor of the direction of the Model Rule. After reviewing the public comment, the Commission voted 7 to 6 not to retain the Rule as sent out for public comment. Instead, the Commission voted 8 to 6 to adopt a rule that is identical to Model Rule 1.8(j) in prohibiting all sexual relationships between lawyer and client except for consensual relationships that predate the lawyer-client relationship. At its September 2009 meeting, the Commission confirmed this decision by a 7 to 6 vote. In response to the subsequent public comment distribution, seven comments were received with: 2 comments favoring the broad Model Rule-type ban (including a comment letter from HALT, a law reform organization); 3 comments opposed; and 2 comments suggesting modifications. After considering these comments, the Commission voted 6 to 5 (with one abstention) to retain the broad rule approach.

* Proposed Rule, XDraft 7 (9/12/09).

INTRODUCTION (Continued):

4. In considering the alternatives, the Commission observed that the professions of medicine and psychology have absolute bans similar to the Model Rule, and there is no suggestion that these bans have caused any of the personal or constitutional problems raised by the minority. There also is no suggestion of any such problem in any of the other jurisdictions that have adopted the Model Rule ban. The proponents of the Model Rule ban also argued that a ban would foster public trust in the legal system and that, whether or not one can fairly say that the lawyer-client relationship almost always is unequal, the public naturally will assume the worst about the lawyer's conduct whenever a lawyer engages in a sexual relationship that would be banned by the Model Rule.

5. The Commission also notes that the minority's reliance on the argument that the proposed Rule will conflict with Business and Professions Code § 6106.9 and thus is "a denigration of the legislative process," is misplaced. The Supreme Court can impose a higher standard on lawyers than the legislature has done. Thus, there is no "conflict" with section 6106.9 merely because the proposed Rule and the statute would impose different standards of conduct. There is no need, as the minority asserts, to go to the Legislature to "fix" the statute.

6. Those members of the Commission who adhered to its original 8-1 recommendation to retain the concepts underlying current rule 3-120 argued that a virtual ban like that in Model Rule 1.8(j) conflicted with Business and Professions Code § 6106.9, which limits, but does not ban, sexual relations between lawyers and clients. Current rule 3-120 is consistent with section 6106.9. At the public hearing, it was suggested by a member of the public that the Legislature "does not really understand how the rule works," and that it can "fix" the statute to conform to the rule. The Commission minority disagrees and considers this a denigration of the legislative process. However, the fact remains that adoption of 1.8(j) would expand on, and in the view of some members of the Commission, conflict with existing state law.

7. The minority also noted the paucity of empirical evidence suggesting that the current rule is not working in the sense that clients are complaining about improper sexual relationships with their lawyers but not receiving support from State Bar prosecutors, or failing to complain because of enforcement concerns. Therefore, it is highly questionable that enacting a virtual ban on such relationships would provide further protection to the public.

INTRODUCTION (Continued):

8. The minority also notes that the proper focus of the ethical rules is the regulation of conduct of individuals as lawyers. The present Rule quite properly prohibits the abuse of a lawyer's "power position" over a client by demanding or obtaining sexual favors; but not every lawyer-client relationship is of such a nature. For example, if an actuary working on employee benefits becomes romantically involved with a lawyer working for the same company on like matters, the power relationship is likely to be equal; or if the chief executive and the chief counsel of a public corporation become romantically involved before their eventual marriage, how is that the business of the Bar? But unlike the present rule, the proposed rule would ban both of these – and many other – relationships, which are clearly not the business of the Bar. We are not the bedroom police. Outside the context of having a deleterious effect on a lawyer-client relationship, the social habits of lawyers that do not reach the level of moral turpitude should not be the subject of disciplinary action by the State Bar. Concern properly arises where such a relationship occurs under circumstances where the professional relationship is compromised. Current rule 3-120 addresses this problem.

9. The minority notes the same criticism can be leveled at the unsupported claim by the State Bar's Committee on Professional Responsibility and Conduct ("COPRAC") that making it easier to prove a violation would also have a salutary effect by inhibiting attorneys from entering into such relations. Apparently, the thinking is that making enforcement incrementally more difficult encourages lawyers to have sexual relations with clients. However, inhibiting lawyers and clients from exercising the right to choose their personal and sexual partners is not necessarily a good thing. There is more than a trivial public interest furthered in not over-regulating consenting sexual relationships between attorneys and clients. For every non-coerced sexual relationship that does not produce a deleterious effect on the attorney's representation, a client is making a choice that presumably is enhancing his or her life. In some cases it may turn out that the personal relationship that develops ultimately between client and attorney transcends in importance the professional relationship. To the extent clients benefit from having the freedom to choose to engage in a sexual relationship with an attorney that does not result in actual harm to their legal matter, a bright-line ban similar to that in Model Rule 1.8(j) will have a chilling effect on that freedom.

10. Additionally, the minority argues that merely banning sexual relations without requiring some nexus to a lawyer's professional duties could encourage personally dissatisfied clients to use the existence of a sexual relationship with a lawyer as retaliation against the attorney for some perceived personal slight or offense. They pointed out that the State Bar disciplinary system should not be a venue in which jealous romantic partners seek vengeance.

INTRODUCTION (Continued):

11. As noted, the COPRAC letter concludes with approving references to ABA commentary developed during the discussion concerning Model Rule 1.8(j). Comments such as “the attorney-client relationship is almost always unequal,” and that “it is unlikely a client can provide informed consent due to the ‘client’s own emotional involvement,’” appear to some Commission members to be hyperbolic, overly simplistic conclusions offered to explain complex social interactions, as well as being unduly paternalistic. To the extent these conditions exist in a given relationship resulting from the use of coercion, quid pro quo demands, or causing harm to the attorney-client relationship, current rule 3-120 bans the conduct.

12. The minority also argues that the purported reasons for the new prohibition of sexual relations between lawyer and client are inconsistent with the only exception to the proposed Rule. If it is adopted, a lawyer may represent a client with whom she or he has an existing sexual relationship, regardless of whether the lawyer’s performance of legal services will adversely be affected by that relationship. Conversely, if the proposed Rule is adopted, and a lawyer and client become romantically involved but comply with the Rule by remaining chaste until they marry or become domestic partners, the literal wording of the rule will prohibit them from consummating their otherwise legitimate relationship.

13. Last but perhaps most importantly, the proposed Rule following Model Rule 1.8(j) implicates both the federal and California constitutional rights of sexual privacy. It has long been settled that there is a federal and state constitutional right to sexual privacy. In fact, this penumbra right is one of individual autonomy thereby requiring the existence of a compelling state interest before it can be abridged. (Griswold v. Connecticut (1965) 381 U.S. 479) One prong of the “compelling state interest test” is whether the law is narrowly tailored to meet the needs of the public. The U.S. Supreme Court has recently affirmed this tenet of constitutional law, in striking down Texas’ sodomy law. (Lawrence v. Texas (2003) 539 U.S. 558) Our state supreme court follows this same analytical path when scrutinizing laws affecting sexual privacy under the California constitution. (In re Marriage Cases (2008) 43 Cal.4th 757; see also Mischler, Reconciling Rapture, Representation, and Responsibility: An Argument Against Per Se Bans on Attorney-Client Sex, Geo. J. Legal Ethics (Winter 1997).)

INTRODUCTION (Continued):

14. A Note on the Rule Number. As noted, the Rule appears in the Model Rules numbered as 1.8(j). The Commission has not proposed that California follow the Model Rules construct of amalgamating in a single rule, numbered 1.8, all personal conflicts rules, regardless of their relationship, that do not fit neatly within current client, former client, or government lawyer conflict situations addressed in Rules 1.7, 1.9 and 1.11, respectively. Instead, to facilitate indexing and make these various provisions easier to locate and use, the Commission has recommended that each rule in the 1.8 series be given a separate number. Thus, the Commission's proposed sex with a client rule appears as a stand-alone rule, numbered 1.8.10, to correspond to Model Rule 1.8(j).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(j) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.10 Sexual Relations With Client	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(j) A lawyer shall not have sexual relations with a client unless a consensual sexual relationship existed between them when the client-lawyer relationship commenced.	(ja) A lawyer shall not ~~have~~engage in sexual relations with a client unless a consensual sexual relationship existed between them when the ~~client~~lawyer-client relationship commenced.	Paragraph (a) is nearly identical to MR 1.8(j). The only changes are 1) to substitute "lawyer-client" for the Model Rules' "client-lawyer" rubric to conform the phrase to the style used in California statutes, e.g., "Lawyer-Client Privilege," Evid. Code §§ 950-962, and in typical judicial opinions; and 2) to change "have" to "engage in" so that, when considered in conjunction with Comment [1], the Rule will apply to sexual relations that are initiated by the lawyer or the client and that are an exploitation by the lawyer in the course of a professional representation. The change from "have" to "engage in", together with the sentence at the end of Comment [1], was added in response to the Board Committee on Regulation and Admissions' consideration of 1.8.10 on November 12, 2009.

* Proposed Rule 1.8.10, XDraft 8 (11/30/09).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(j) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.10 Sexual Relations With Client	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	(b) For purposes of this Rule, "sexual relations" means sexual intercourse or the touching of an intimate part of another person for the purpose of sexual arousal, gratification, or abuse.	The Model Rule does not define "sexual relations." Paragraph (b) adds a definition of "sexual relations" imported verbatim from California rule 3-120(A) and Bus. & Prof. Code § 6106.9(d). Following the Board Committee on Regulation and Admissions' review of proposed rule 1.8.10 in November 2009, the existing definition of "sexual relations" in rule 3-120(A) was reconsidered by the Commission, along with a broader definition and no definition at all. A broader definition that applies equally (whether the lawyer initiates the sexual relations or is the recipient of advances from the client) runs the risk of subjecting a lawyer to discipline for being the recipient of client conduct that is for the client's sexual arousal, gratification, or abuse. No definition would be consistent with Model rule 1.8(j), but would cause uncertainty as to what definition to apply to rule 1.8.10 cases. The Commission stayed with recommending Bus. & Prof. Code § 6106.9(d) the existing definition in rule 3-120(A), which is consistent with the statutory definition in Bus. & Prof. Code § 6106.9(d).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(j) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comments	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.10 Sexual Relations With Client Comments	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Client-Lawyer Sexual Relationships [17] The relationship between lawyer and client is a fiduciary one in which the lawyer occupies the highest position of trust and confidence. The relationship is almost always unequal; thus, a sexual relationship between lawyer and client can involve unfair exploitation of the lawyer's fiduciary role, in violation of the lawyer's basic ethical obligation not to use the trust of the client to the client's disadvantage. In addition, such a relationship presents a significant danger that, because of the lawyer's emotional involvement, the lawyer will be unable to represent the client without impairment of the exercise of independent professional judgment. Moreover, a blurred line between the professional and personal relationships may make it difficult to predict to what extent client confidences will be protected by the attorney-client evidentiary privilege, since client confidences are protected by privilege only when they are imparted in the context of the client-lawyer relationship. Because of the significant danger of harm to client interests and because the client's own emotional involvement renders it unlikely that the client could give adequate informed consent, this Rule prohibits the lawyer from having sexual relations with a client regardless of whether the relationship is consensual and regardless of the absence of prejudice to the client.	~~Client-Lawyer Sexual Relationships~~ ~~[17] The relationship between lawyer and client is a fiduciary one in which the lawyer occupies the highest position of trust and confidence. The relationship is almost always unequal; thus, a sexual relationship between lawyer and client can involve unfair exploitation of the lawyer's fiduciary role, in violation of the lawyer's basic ethical obligation not to use the trust of the client to the client's disadvantage. In addition, such a relationship presents a significant danger that, because of the lawyer's emotional involvement, the lawyer will be unable to represent the client without impairment of the exercise of independent professional judgment. Moreover, a blurred line between the professional and personal relationships may make it difficult to predict to what extent client confidences will be protected by the attorney-client evidentiary privilege, since client confidences are protected by privilege only when they are imparted in the context of the client-lawyer relationship. Because of the significant danger of harm to client interests and because the client's own emotional involvement renders it unlikely that the client could give adequate informed consent, this Rule prohibits the lawyer from having sexual relations with a client regardless of whether the relationship is consensual and regardless of the absence of prejudice to the client.~~	See Explanation of Changes for Comment [1].

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(j) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comments	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.10 Sexual Relations With Client Comments	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	[1] This Rule prohibits sexual exploitation by a lawyer in the course of a professional representation. Often, based upon the nature of the underlying representation, a client exhibits great emotional vulnerability and dependence upon the advice and guidance of counsel. Attorneys owe the utmost duty of good faith and fidelity to clients. See, e.g., Greenbaum v. State Bar (1976) 15 Cal.3d 893, 903 [126 Cal.Rptr. 785]; Alkow v. State Bar (1971) 3 Cal.3d 924, 935 [92 Cal.Rptr. 278]; Cutler v. State Bar (1969) 71 Cal.2d 241, 251 [78 Cal.Rptr. 172]; Clancy v. State Bar (1969) 71 Cal.2d 140, 146 [77 Cal.Rptr. 657]. The relationship between an attorney and client is a fiduciary relationship of the very highest character, and all dealings between an attorney and client that are beneficial to the attorney will be closely scrutinized with the utmost strictness for unfairness. See, e.g., Giovanazzi v. State Bar (1980) 28 Cal.3d 465, 472 [169 Cal Rptr. 581]; Benson v. State Bar (1975) 13 Cal.3d 581, 586 [119 Cal.Rptr. 297]; Lee v. State Bar (1970) 2 Cal.3d 927, 939 [88 Cal.Rptr. 361]; Clancy v. State Bar (1969) 71 Cal.2d 140, 146 [77 Cal.Rptr. 657]. Where attorneys exercise undue influence over clients or take unfair advantage of clients, discipline is appropriate. See, e.g., Magee v. State Bar (1962) 58 Cal.2d 423 [24 Cal.Rptr. 839]; Lantz v. State Bar (1931) 212 Cal. 213 [298 P. 497]. In all client matters, a lawyer must keep clients' interests paramount in the course of the lawyer's representation. The paragraph (a) prohibition applies equally whether the lawyer is the	Comment [1] replaces Model Rule 1.8, cmt. [17]. While repeating some of the core ethical principles that inform the proposed Rule, Comment [1] cites to California case law supporting the referenced principles. In response to the Board Committee on Regulation and Admissions' consideration of 1.8.10 on November 12, 2009, a sentence is added at the end of Comment [1] stating that the prohibition in this Rule applies whether it is the client or the lawyer who initiates the sexual relations.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(j) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comments	Commission's Proposed Rule Rule 1.8.10 Sexual Relations With Client Comments	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule moving force in causing the sexual relations to take place or the client encourages or begins the sexual relations.
[18] Sexual relationships that predate the client-lawyer relationship are not prohibited. Issues relating to the exploitation of the fiduciary relationship and client dependency are diminished when the sexual relationship existed prior to the commencement of the client-lawyer relationship. However, before proceeding with the representation in these circumstances, the lawyer should consider whether the lawyer's ability to represent the client will be materially limited by the relationship. See Rule 1.7(a)(2).	~~[182] Sexual relationships that~~ This Rule is not applicable to ongoing consensual sexual relations which predate the client-lawyer-client relationship ~~are not prohibited. Issues~~ because issues relating to the exploitation of the fiduciary relationship and client dependency are diminished when the sexual relationship existed prior to the commencement of the ~~client-lawyer-client~~ relationship. However, before proceeding with the representation in these circumstances, the lawyer should consider whether the lawyer's ability to represent the client will be ~~materially limited~~ adversely affected by the relationship. See ~~Rule~~ Rule 1.7(a)(2) (conflicts of interest), 1.1 (competence) and 2.1 (independent judgment).	Comment [2] is based on Model Rule 1.8, cmt. [18]. The active voice replaces the passive in the first sentence to conform to California rule drafting convention. The term "adversely affected" has been substituted for the Model Rule's "materially limited" because the Commission has not adopted that term in its proposed Rule 1.7.
[19] When the client is an organization, paragraph (j) of this Rule prohibits a lawyer for the organization (whether inside counsel or outside counsel) from having a sexual relationship with a constituent of the organization who supervises, directs or regularly consults with that lawyer concerning the organization's legal matters.	~~[193] When the client is an organization, paragraph (j) of this Rule prohibits~~ is applicable to a lawyer for the organization (whether inside counsel or outside counsel) ~~from having a who has~~ sexual relationship ~~relations~~ with a constituent of the organization who supervises, directs or regularly consults with that lawyer concerning the organization's legal matters. See Rule 1.13.	Comment [3] is based on Model Rule 1.8, cmt. [19]. No change in meaning is intended by the changes. The cross-reference to Rule 1.13, concerning the organization as client, refers the lawyer to that Rule for further guidance on the intricacies of representing an organization. The minority argues that the proposed Comment contradicts the rationale underlying the Rule. See Introduction, ¶. 12.

Rule 1.8.10 Sexual Relations With Client

(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to the Public Comment Draft)

- (a) A lawyer shall not engage in sexual relations with a client unless a consensual sexual relationship existed between them when the lawyer-client relationship commenced.
- (b) For purposes of this Rule, “sexual relations” means sexual intercourse or the touching of an intimate part of another person for the purpose of sexual arousal, gratification, or abuse.

COMMENT

- [1] This Rule prohibits sexual exploitation by a lawyer in the course of a professional representation. Often, based upon the nature of the underlying representation, a client exhibits great emotional vulnerability and dependence upon the advice and guidance of counsel. Attorneys owe the utmost duty of good faith and fidelity to clients. ~~(See, e.g.,~~ Greenbaum v. State Bar (1976) 15 Cal.3d 893, 903 [126 Cal.Rptr. 785]; Alkow v. State Bar (1971) 3 Cal.3d 924, 935 [92 Cal.Rptr. 278]; Cutler v. State Bar (1969) 71 Cal.2d 241, 251 [78 Cal.Rptr. 172]; Clancy v. State Bar (1969) 71 Cal.2d 140, 146 [77 Cal.Rptr. 657].) The relationship between an attorney and client is a fiduciary relationship of the very highest character, and all dealings between an attorney and client that are beneficial to the attorney will be closely scrutinized with the utmost strictness for unfairness. ~~(See, e.g.,~~ Giovanazzi v. State Bar (1980) 28 Cal.3d 465, 472 [169 Cal.Rptr. 581]; Benson v. State Bar (1975) 13 Cal.3d 581, 586 [119 Cal.Rptr. 297]; Lee v. State Bar (1970) 2 Cal.3d 927, 939 [88 Cal.Rptr. 361]; Clancy v. State Bar (1969) 71 Cal.2d 140, 146 [77 Cal.Rptr. 657].) ~~Where attorneys exercise undue influence over clients or take unfair advantage of clients, discipline is appropriate. (See, e.g.,~~ Magee v. State Bar (1962) 58 Cal.2d 423 [24

Cal.Rptr. 839]; Lantz v. State Bar (1931) 212 Cal. 213 [298 P. 497].) In all client matters, a lawyer must keep clients' interests paramount in the course of the lawyer's representation. The paragraph (a) prohibition applies equally whether the lawyer is the moving force in causing the sexual relations to take place or the client encourages or begins the sexual relations.

- [2] This Rule is not applicable to ongoing consensual sexual relations which predate the initiation of the lawyer client relationship because issues relating to the exploitation of the fiduciary relationship and client dependency are diminished when the sexual relationship existed prior to the commencement of the lawyer-client relationship. However, before proceeding with the representation in these circumstances, the lawyer should consider whether the lawyer's ability to represent the client will be adversely affected by the relationship. See Rules ~~{1.7(d)~~ 1.7(a)(2) (conflicts of interest)], 1.1 (competence) and 2.1 (independent judgment).
- [3] When the client is an organization, this Rule is applicable to a lawyer for the organization (whether inside counsel or outside counsel) who has sexual relations with a constituent of the organization who supervises, directs or regularly consults with that lawyer concerning the organization's legal matters. See Rule ~~{1.13}~~.

Rule ~~3-120~~1.8.10 Sexual Relations With Client
(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to Current California Rule)

- (a) A lawyer shall not engage in sexual relations with a client unless a consensual sexual relationship existed between them when the lawyer-client relationship commenced.
- (Ab) For purposes of this ~~rule~~Rule, “sexual relations” means sexual intercourse or the touching of an intimate part of another person for the purpose of sexual arousal, gratification, or abuse.
- (B) ~~A member shall not:~~
- (1) ~~Require or demand sexual relations with a client incident to or as a condition of any professional representation; or~~
 - (2) ~~Employ coercion, intimidation, or undue influence in entering into sexual relations with a client; or~~
 - (3) ~~Continue representation of a client with whom the member has sexual relations if such sexual relations cause the member to perform legal services incompetently in violation of rule 3-110.~~
- (C) ~~Paragraph (B) shall not apply to sexual relations between members and their spouses or to ongoing consensual sexual relationships which predate the initiation of the lawyer-client relationship.~~
- (D) ~~Where a lawyer in a firm has sexual relations with a client but does not participate in the representation of that client, the lawyers in the firm shall not be subject to discipline under this rule solely because of the occurrence of such sexual relations.~~

Discussion: COMMENT

- [1] This Rule ~~3-120~~ is ~~intended to prohibit~~prohibits sexual exploitation by a lawyer in the course of a professional representation. Often, based upon the nature of the underlying representation, a client exhibits great emotional vulnerability and dependence upon the advice and guidance of counsel. Attorneys owe the utmost duty of good faith and fidelity to clients. (See, e.g., Greenbaum v. State Bar (1976) 15 Cal.3d 893, 903 [126 Cal.Rptr. 785]; Alkow v. State Bar (1971) 3 Cal.3d 924, 935 [92 Cal.Rptr. 278]; Cutler v. State Bar (1969) 71 Cal.2d 241, 251 [78 Cal.Rptr. 172]; Clancy v. State Bar (1969) 71 Cal.2d 140, 146 [77 Cal.Rptr. 657].) The relationship between an attorney and client is a fiduciary relationship of the very highest character, and all dealings between an attorney and client that are beneficial to the attorney will be closely scrutinized with the utmost strictness for unfairness. (See, e.g., Giovanazzi v. State Bar (1980) 28 Cal.3d 465, 472 [169 Cal.Rptr. 581]; Benson v. State Bar (1975) 13 Cal.3d 581, 586 [119 Cal.Rptr. 297]; Lee v. State Bar (1970) 2 Cal.3d 927, 939 [88 Cal.Rptr. 361]; Clancy v. State Bar (1969) 71 Cal.2d 140, 146 [77 Cal.Rptr. 657].) Where attorneys exercise undue influence over clients or take unfair advantage of clients, discipline is appropriate. (See, e.g., Magee v. State Bar (1962) 58 Cal.2d 423 [24 Cal.Rptr. 839]; Lantz v. State Bar (1931) 212 Cal. 213 [298 P. 497].) In all client matters, a ~~member is~~ advised to lawyer must keep clients' interests paramount in the course of the ~~member's~~ lawyer's representation. The paragraph (a) prohibition applies equally whether the lawyer is the moving force in causing the sexual relations to take place or the client encourages or begins the sexual relations.

~~For purposes of this rule, if the client is an organization, any individual overseeing the representation shall be deemed to be the client. (See rule 3-600.)~~

~~Although paragraph (C) excludes representation of certain clients from the scope of rule 3-120, such exclusion is not intended to preclude the applicability of other Rules of Professional Conduct, including rule 3-110.~~

- [2] This Rule is not applicable to ongoing consensual sexual relations which predate the initiation of the lawyer client relationship because issues relating to the exploitation of the fiduciary relationship and client dependency are diminished when the sexual relationship existed prior to the commencement of the lawyer-client relationship. However, before proceeding with the representation in these circumstances, the lawyer should consider whether the lawyer's ability to represent the client will be adversely affected by the relationship. See Rules 1.7(a)(2) (conflicts of interest), 1.1 (competence) and 2.1 (independent judgment).
- [3] When the client is an organization, this Rule is applicable to a lawyer for the organization (whether inside counsel or outside counsel) who has sexual relations with a constituent of the organization who supervises, directs or regularly consults with that lawyer concerning the organization's legal matters. See Rule 1.13.

Rule 1.8.10 Sexual Relations With Client (Commission's Proposed Rule – Clean Version)

- (a) A lawyer shall not engage in sexual relations with a client unless a consensual sexual relationship existed between them when the lawyer-client relationship commenced.
- (b) For purposes of this Rule, "sexual relations" means sexual intercourse or the touching of an intimate part of another person for the purpose of sexual arousal, gratification, or abuse.

COMMENT

- [1] This Rule prohibits sexual exploitation by a lawyer in the course of a professional representation. Often, based upon the nature of the underlying representation, a client exhibits great emotional vulnerability and dependence upon the advice and guidance of counsel. Attorneys owe the utmost duty of good faith and fidelity to clients. See, e.g., Greenbaum v. State Bar (1976) 15 Cal.3d 893, 903 [126 Cal.Rptr. 785]; Alkow v. State Bar (1971) 3 Cal.3d 924, 935 [92 Cal.Rptr. 278]; Cutler v. State Bar (1969) 71 Cal.2d 241, 251 [78 Cal.Rptr. 172]; Clancy v. State Bar (1969) 71 Cal.2d 140, 146 [77 Cal.Rptr. 657]. The relationship between an attorney and client is a fiduciary relationship of the very highest character, and all dealings between an attorney and client that are beneficial to the attorney will be closely scrutinized with the utmost strictness for unfairness. See, e.g., Giovanazzi v. State Bar (1980) 28 Cal.3d 465, 472 [169 Cal.Rptr. 581]; Benson v. State Bar (1975) 13 Cal.3d 581, 586 [119 Cal.Rptr. 297]; Lee v. State Bar (1970) 2 Cal.3d 927, 939 [88 Cal.Rptr. 361]; Clancy v. State Bar (1969) 71 Cal.2d 140, 146 [77 Cal.Rptr. 657]. Where attorneys exercise undue influence over clients or take unfair advantage of clients, discipline is appropriate. See, e.g., Magee v. State Bar (1962) 58 Cal.2d 423 [24

Cal.Rptr. 839]; Lantz v. State Bar (1931) 212 Cal. 213 [298 P. 497]. In all client matters, a lawyer must keep clients' interests paramount in the course of the lawyer's representation. The paragraph (a) prohibition applies equally whether the lawyer is the moving force in causing the sexual relations to take place or the client encourages or begins the sexual relations.

- [2] This Rule is not applicable to ongoing consensual sexual relations which predate the initiation of the lawyer client relationship because issues relating to the exploitation of the fiduciary relationship and client dependency are diminished when the sexual relationship existed prior to the commencement of the lawyer-client relationship. However, before proceeding with the representation in these circumstances, the lawyer should consider whether the lawyer's ability to represent the client will be adversely affected by the relationship. See Rules 1.7(a)(2) (conflicts of interest), 1.1 (competence) and 2.1 (independent judgment).
- [3] When the client is an organization, this Rule is applicable to a lawyer for the organization (whether inside counsel or outside counsel) who has sexual relations with a constituent of the organization who supervises, directs or regularly consults with that lawyer concerning the organization's legal matters. See Rule 1.13.

Rule 1.8.10 Sexual Relations With Client.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 7 Agree = 2
Disagree = 3
Modify = 2
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
1	Anastasi, Pascal	D	No		The existing rule and prohibition has legitimacy because it is effective when circumstances exist that are likely to cause adverse effects in the representation in the representation of the attorney's client. This makes perfect sense as the rules should be formed to protect the clients. The prohibitions pertain in situations when sex is: (1) required as a condition of a representation; (2) obtained by coercion, intimidation or undue influence; or (3) cause the lawyer to perform services incompetently. The latter is obviously the core issue ... causing poor representation. But a complete ban on all sex in every situation is improper. I may not approve, you may not approve, but the question should be has any harm been incurred. Please adopt rules that have a legitimate purpose, not just a "politically correct" or other "holier than thou" purpose.	This comment reflects the minority position which has been rejected by a majority of the Commission.
2	COPRAC	A	Yes	Comment [2]	Comment [2] uses the term "adversely affected" which language derived from a prior draft of Rule 1.7. Now that the current draft of Rule 1.7 uses the "materially limited" test, the phrase "adversely affected" should be	The Commission agrees with this comment and is recommending the suggested change to conform this rule to the latest draft of rule 1.7.

¹ A = AGREE with proposed Rule D = DISAGREE with proposed Rule M = AGREE ONLY IF MODIFIED NI = NOT INDICATED

Rule 1.8.10 Sexual Relations With Client. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 7 Agree = 2 Disagree = 3 Modify = 2 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comment [3]	replaced with “materially limited.” This would be consistent with the ABA Model Rule. Also, in Comment [2], the reference to 1.7(d) should be changed as the current version of 1.7 no longer has a subsection (d). Comment [3] contains a reference to Rule 1.13. COPRAC does not see the point of this reference, and believes that it could be confusing. Accordingly, we propose to delete it.	The cross-reference to Rule 1.13, refers the lawyer to that Rule for further guidance on the intricacies of representing an organization, to assist the lawyer in complying with this rule.
3	Eggleston, Janis E.	M	No		Rule 1.8.10 is ambiguous in that it does not identify whether lawyers will be prevented from having sexual relations with a client after the representation has concluded. Given that our duty of loyalty and confidentiality continue to exist after the conclusion of the representation, those same continuing duties might apply to sexual relations. The rule should clarify if, or under what terms, sexual relations with clients could exist after the representation has concluded.	The Commission considered this change, including a possible new comment definitively resolving the issue raised by the commenter. However, the Commission ultimately decided that the facts of a particular situation might make a difference in whether the rule is found to be applicable. By analogy, the Commission considered a Supreme Court case which concluded that a conflicts rule applicable to a current client relationship can, under certain facts, apply to a former client relationship. See Hunnicutt v. State Bar (1988) 44 Cal.3d 363.
4	HALT, Inc. – An Organization of Americans for Legal Reform	A	Yes		There is an unfortunate history of abuses by attorneys who have taken sexual advantage of vulnerable clients. HALT strongly supports the clear prohibition of such lawyer misconduct by both the RRC and the ABA. Proposed Rule 1.8.10 is a substantial improvement over current CRPC 3-120.	No response required.

Rule 1.8.10 Sexual Relations With Client. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 7 Agree = 2 Disagree = 3 Modify = 2 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
5	Office of Chief Trial Counsel	M	Yes	Comment [1]	Comment [1] is too long and seems more appropriate for a treatise, law review or ethics opinion. The Commission, however, might want to advise attorneys in a Comment of B&P Code section 6106.9, which also covers sexual relations between attorneys and clients.	As the Commission has noted with respect to other Rules, the comments are an important part of the Rules modeled on the ABA Model Rules, providing clarification of the black letter and guidance to lawyers on how to be in compliance with their professional obligations. The Commission disagrees that a cross reference to section 6106.9 would be appropriate. The Board's desired policy, which reflects the ABA's absolute ban approach) is inconsistent with the policy in the B&P code provision, and a cross-reference would cause unnecessary confusion. Ultimately, Board implementation of this Rule will entail coordination with the Legislature, the Governor and the Supreme Court to resolve the inconsistency.
6	Rogers, Robert K.	D	No		I believe the current rule adequately covers the areas of real concern regarding sexual relations with clients. I disagree with government (i.e. State Bar) involvement in personal morals and social norms, and I believe the Proposed Rule crosses that line. The current rule prohibits conduct that is coercive and addresses the potential for the relationship to interfere with the attorney's ability to perform to the best of his or her ability. This would prohibit a relationship from developing in, for example, a situation in which the attorney and client are involved in real estate or other purely financial	The Commission and the Board of Governors disagree that the current rule either appropriately recognizes the fiduciary duties of the highest nature owed by a lawyer to a client or provides for effective enforcement.

Rule 1.8.10 Sexual Relations With Client. [Sorted by Commenter]						TOTAL = 7 Agree = 2 Disagree = 3 Modify = 2 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					transactions or disputes. I see nothing wrong, generally, in two people developing a personal relationship that arises out of a professional one, and I think that the State Bar should limit itself to situations in which there is a real danger that the attorney/client relationship will be harmed. This Proposed Rule is too broad in its scope, and too confining in its proscription.
7	Rose, Stephen Kent	D	No		Sexual relationships should not be the Bar's business. Given that anybody who asks for or receives any legal information is potentially a client this would seriously limit either sex or conversation.	The Commission and the Board of Governors disagree that the current rule either appropriately recognizes the fiduciary duties of the highest nature owed by a lawyer to a client or provides for effective enforcement.

Rule 1.8: Conflict of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules

STATE VARIATIONS

(The following is an excerpt from Regulation of Lawyers: Statutes and Standards (2010 Ed.)
by Steven Gillers, Roy D. Simon and Andrew M. Perlman.)

Alabama. Alabama's Rule 1.8(e)(3) provides as follows:

(3) a lawyer may advance or guarantee emergency financial assistance to the client, the repayment of which may not be contingent on the outcome of the matter, provided that no promise or assurance of financial assistance was made to the client by the lawyer, or on the lawyer's behalf, prior to the employment of the lawyer.

Alabama also adds Rule 1.8(k), which identifies when a lawyer can represent both parties to an uncontested divorce or domestic relations proceeding. Relating to Rule 1.8(h), the Alabama Legal Services Liability Act, Ala. Code §§6-5-570 et seq., provides as follows: "There shall be only one form and cause of action against legal service providers in courts in the State of Alabama and it shall be known as the legal service liability action." Finally, Rules 1.8(l) and (m) describe prohibitions on sexual relations between lawyers and clients. Notably,

Rule 1.8(m) states that "except for a spousal relationship or a relationship that existed at the commencement of the lawyer-client relationship, sexual relations between the lawyer and the client shall be presumed to be exploitative [and thus violate Rule 1.8(l)]. This presumption is rebuttable."

Arizona: Rule 1.8(h)(2) adds a clause forbidding a lawyer to "make an agreement prospectively limiting the client's right to report the lawyer to appropriate professional authorities." Rule 1.8(l), which retains the 1983 version of ABA Model Rule 1.8(i), provides: "A lawyer related to another lawyer as parent, child, sibling, spouse or cohabitant shall not represent a client in a representation directly adverse to a person who the lawyer knows is represented by the other lawyer except upon consent by the client after consultation regarding the relationship."

California: California's rules are generally equivalent to Model Rule 1.8, but two exceptions deserve attention. Rule 3-320 provides as follows:

A member shall not represent a client in a matter in which another party's lawyer is a spouse, parent, child, or sibling of the member, lives with the member, is a client of the member, or has an intimate personal relationship with the member, unless the member informs the client in writing of the relationship.

And Rule 4-210 provides in part as follows:

(A) A member shall not directly or indirectly pay or agree to pay, guarantee, represent, or sanction a representation that the member or member's law firm will pay the personal or business expenses of a prospective or existing client, except that this rule shall not prohibit a member: . . . (2) After employment, from lending money to the client upon the client's promise in writing to repay such loan.

Connecticut adds the following language to Rule 1.8(a), providing that lawyers can enter into business transactions with clients under the following circumstances:

(4) With regard to a business transaction, the lawyer advises the client or former client in writing either (A) that the lawyer will provide legal services to the client or former client concerning the transaction, or (B) that the lawyer will not provide legal services to the client or former client and that the lawyer is involved as a business person only and not as a lawyer representing the client or former client and that the lawyer is not one to whom the client or former client can turn for legal advice concerning the transaction.

(5) With regard to the providing of investment services, the lawyer advises the client or former client in writing (A) whether such services are covered by legal liability insurance or other insurance, and [makes either disclosure set out in paragraph (a)(4)]. Investment services shall only apply where the lawyer has either a direct or indirect control over the invested funds and a direct or indirect interest in the underlying investment.

For purposes of subsection (a)(1) through (a)(5), the phrase "former client" shall mean a client for whom the two year period starting from the conclusion of representation has not expired.

District of Columbia: D.C. Rule 1.8(d) permits lawyers to advance "financial assistance which is reasonably necessary to permit the client to institute or maintain the litigation or administrative proceeding.” Rule 1.8(i) provides as follows:

A lawyer may acquire and enforce a lien granted by law to secure the lawyer's fees or expenses, but a lawyer shall not impose a lien upon any part of a client's files, except upon the lawyer's own work product, and then only to the extent that the work product has not been paid for. This work product exception shall not apply when the client has become unable to pay, or when withholding the lawyer's work product would present a significant risk to the client of irreparable harm.

Florida adds Rule 4-8.4(i), which provides that a lawyer shall not engage in sexual conduct with a client “or a representative of a client” that:

exploits or adversely affects the interests of the client or the lawyer-client relationship including, but not limited to:

(1) requiring or demanding sexual relations with a client or a representative of a client incident to or as a condition of a legal representation;

(2) employing coercion, intimidation, or undue influence in entering into sexual relations with a client or a representative of a client; or

(3) continuing to represent a client if the lawyer's sexual relations with the client or a representative of the client cause the lawyer to render incompetent representation.

In 2004, the Florida Supreme Court deleted language from the comment to Rule 8.4, which had stated that lawyer-client sexual relations do not violate the rule if a sexual relationship existed between the lawyer and client before commencement of the lawyer-client relationship.

Georgia: Rule 1.8(a), drawing on DR 5-104 of the ABA Code of Professional Responsibility, applies “if the client expects the lawyer to exercise the lawyer's professional judgment therein for the protection of the client.” Georgia retains the language of deleted ABA Model Rule 1.8(i) but adds that the disqualification of a lawyer due to a parent, child, sibling, or spousal relationship “is personal and is not imputed to members of firms with whom the lawyers are associated.” Georgia adds that the maximum penalty for violating Rule 1.8(b) (which relates to confidentiality) is disbarment, but the maximum penalty for violating any other provision of Rule 1.8 is only a public reprimand.

Illinois: In the rules effective January 1, 2010, Rule 1.8(a)(2) omits the phrase “desirability of seeking.”

Louisiana: Rule 1.8(g) permits an aggregate settlement if “a court approves the settlement in a certified class action.” Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to “provide financial assistance to a client who is in necessitous circumstances” subject to strict controls, including:

(ii) The advance or loan guarantee, or the offer thereof, shall not be used as an inducement by the lawyer, or anyone acting on the lawyer’s behalf, to secure employment.

(iii) Neither the lawyer nor anyone acting on the lawyer’s behalf may offer to make advances or loan guarantees prior to being hired by a client, and the lawyer shall not publicize nor advertise a willingness to make advances or loan guarantees to clients.

Massachusetts: Rule 1.8(b) forbids a lawyer to use confidential information “for the lawyer’s advantage or the advantage of a third person” without consent.

Michigan: Rules 1.8(a)(2) and 1.8(h)(2) (regarding business transactions with clients and settlement of legal malpractice claims) both require that the client be given a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of independent counsel but lack the ABA requirement that the client be “advised in writing of the desirability of seeking” independent counsel. Michigan Rule 1.8(g), regarding aggregate settlements, lacks the ABA requirement that the client’s consent be “in a writing signed by the client.” Michigan retains the language of deleted ABA Model Rule 1.8(i) verbatim.

Minnesota: Rule 1.8(e)(3) allows a lawyer to guarantee a loan necessary for a client to withstand litigation delay. Rule 1.8(k)’s provision on sexual relationships with clients prohibits a lawyer from having sexual relations with a client unless a consensual relationship existed between the lawyer and client when the client-lawyer relationship commenced. The rule also defines “sexual relations” and adds the following Rules 1.8(k)(2)-(3) to explain the meaning of sex with a “client” when a lawyer represents an organization:

(2) if the client is an organization, any individual who oversees the representation and gives instructions to the lawyer on behalf of the organization shall be deemed to be the client . . .

(3) this paragraph does not prohibit a lawyer from engaging in sexual relations with a client of the lawyer’s firm provided that the lawyer has no involvement in the performance of the legal work for the client . . .

Mississippi: Rule 1.8(e)(2) permits a lawyer to advance medical and living expenses to a client under certain narrowly defined circumstances.

New Hampshire: The New Hampshire rules include a Rule 1.19 (Disclosure of Information to the Client), which requires a lawyer (other than a government or in-house lawyer) to inform a client at the time of engagement if “the lawyer does not maintain professional liability insurance” of at least $100,000 per occurrence and $300,000 in the aggregate “or if the lawyer’s professional liability insurance ceases to be in effect.”

New Jersey: Rule 1.8(e)(3) creates an exception allowing financial assistance by a “non-profit organization authorized under [other law]” if the organization is representing the indigent client without a fee. Rule 1.8(h)(1), while forbidding agreements prospectively limiting liability to a client, contains an exception if “the client fails to act in accordance with the lawyer’s advice and the lawyer nevertheless continues to represent the client at the client’s request.” New Jersey Rule 1.8(k) and (l) provide as follows:

(k) A lawyer employed by a public entity, either as a lawyer or in some other role, shall not undertake the

representation of another client if the representation presents a substantial risk that the lawyer’s responsibilities to the public entity would limit the lawyer’s ability to provide independent advice or diligent and competent representation to either the public entity or the client.

(l) A public entity cannot consent to a representation otherwise prohibited by this Rule.

New York: In the rules effective April 1, 2009, Rule 1.8(a) deletes the language “knowingly acquire an ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client” and adds language from DR 5-104(A) of the old Model Code: “if they have differing interests therein and if the client expects the lawyer to exercise professional judgment therein for the protection of the client....” Comments 3A and 4A-4F, which have no Model Rule equivalents, describe in considerable detail the problem of business transactions with clients, including (in Comments 4D-4F) issues related to a lawyer’s receipt of a client’s securities. New York omits Comment 5.

Rule 1.8(d) draws, in part, on DR 5-104(B) of the old Model Code, and Comment 9 provides more guidance than the equivalent Model Rule provisions concerning a lawyer's acquisition of media or literary rights that relate to a client matter.

Finally, Rule 1.8(j) and (k) as well as Comments 17, 17A, 17B, and 18-20, all address sexual relationships with clients and provide significantly more guidance in this regard than the equivalent Model Rule provision. Comment 17B concludes that “[a] law firm’s failure to educate lawyers about the restrictions on sexual relations — or a firm’s failure to enforce those restrictions against lawyers who violate them — may constitute a violation of Rule 5.1, which obligates a law firm to make reasonable efforts to ensure that all lawyers in the firm conform to these Rules.”

North Dakota: Rule 1.8(g), regarding aggregate settlements, applies “other than in class actions.” North Dakota adds Rule 1.8(k), which restricts the practice of law by a part-time prosecutor or judge in certain circumstances.

Ohio: Rule 1.8(c) forbids a lawyer to solicit “any substantial gift from a client” and forbids a lawyer to “prepare on behalf of a client an instrument giving the lawyer, the lawyer’s partner, associate, paralegal, law clerk or other employee of the lawyer’s firm, a lawyer acting ‘of counsel’ in the lawyer’s firm, or a person related to the lawyer any gift unless the lawyer or other recipient of the gift is related to the client.” “Gift” is defined to include “a testamentary gift.” Ohio Rule 1.8(f)(4) provides a detailed “statement of insured client’s rights” that a lawyer “selected and paid by an insurer to represent an insured” must give to the client.

In July 2009, an Ohio statute (R.C. §1349.55) took effect to regulate companies that make cash advances to plaintiffs in pending civil cases in exchange for the right to receive part of the proceeds of any settlement, award, or judgment. Paragraph (C) of the statute provides that if a plaintiff gets into a dispute concerning the contract for the cash advance, “the responsibilities of the attorney representing the consumer [the plaintiff] in the civil action or claim shall be no greater than the attorney’s responsibilities under the Ohio Rules of Professional Conduct.”

Oregon: Rule 1.8(b) permits a lawyer to use confidential information to a client’s disadvantage only if the client’s consent is “confirmed in writing” (except as otherwise permitted or required by the Rules). Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to advance litigation expenses only if “the client remains ultimately liable for such expenses to the extent of the client’s ability to pay.” Finally, Oregon’s rule governing sexual relations with clients contains a detailed description of “sexual relations,” providing that it includes “sexual intercourse or any touching of the sexual or other intimate parts of a person or causing such person to touch the sexual or other intimate parts of the lawyer for the purpose of arousing or gratifying the sexual desire of either party.”

Pennsylvania: Rule 1.8(g) does not require that client consent be “confirmed in writing.”

Texas: Rule 1.08(c) provides that prior to the conclusion of “all aspects of the matter giving rise to the lawyer’s employment,” a lawyer shall not make or negotiate an agreement “with a client, prospective client, or former client” giving the lawyer literary or media rights to a portrayal or account based in substantial part on information relating to the representation. Rule 1.08(d) provides as follows:

(d) A lawyer shall not provide financial assistance to a client in connection with pending or contemplated litigation or administrative proceedings, except that:

(1) a lawyer may advance or guarantee court costs, expenses of litigation or administrative proceedings, and reasonably necessary medical and living expenses, the repayment of which may be contingent on the outcome of the matter; and

(2) a lawyer representing an indigent client may pay court costs and expenses of litigation on behalf of the client.

Virginia: Rule 1.8(b) forbids the use of information “for the advantage of the lawyer or of a third person or to the disadvantage of the client.” Rule 1.8(e)(1) requires a client ultimately to be liable for court costs and expenses. Rule 1.8(h) contains an exception where the lawyer is “an employee” of the client “as long as the client is independently represented in making the agreement” prospectively limiting the lawyer’s liability for malpractice.

Washington: Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to (1) advance or guarantee the expenses of litigation “provided the client remains ultimately liable for such expenses; and (2) in matters maintained as class actions only, repayment of expenses of litigation may be contingent on the outcome of the matter.” Washington deletes ABA Model Rule 1.8(e)(2) (permitting lawyers to pay litigation costs for indigent clients).

Wisconsin: Rule 1.8(c) creates an exception to testamentary gifts where:

(1) the client is related to the donee, (2) the donee is a natural object of the bounty of the client, (3) there is no reasonable ground to anticipate a contest, or a claim of undue influence or for the public to lose confidence in the integrity of the bar, and (4) the amount of the gift or bequest is reasonable and natural under the circumstances.

Proposed Rule 1.8.11 [n/a] “Imputation of Prohibitions Under Rules 1.8.1 through 1.8.9”

(XDraft #2.2, 01/06/10)

Summary: This new rule addresses the imputation of a lawyer’s conduct prohibited by rules in the 1.8 series of specific prohibitions (such as the prohibition against a lawyer entering into a business transaction with a client) to other lawyers associated with the prohibited lawyer.

Comparison with ABA Counterpart

Rule	Comment
☒ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted	☒ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
☐ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule	☐ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule	☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart	☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

Primary Factors Considered

- ☐ Existing California Law

Rule

Statute

Case law

- ☐ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

- ☐ Other Primary Factor(s)

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(13 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 13 due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Less than Six Members Opposing Adoption ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 11

Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 1

Abstain 0

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by Consensus ☐

Commission Minority Position, Known Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

Minority Position Included on Model Rule Comparison Chart: ☐ Yes ☒ No

☒ No Known Stakeholders

☐ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

☐ Very Controversial – Explanation:

☐ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

☒ Not Controversial

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.8.11* Imputation of Prohibitions Under Rules 1.8.1 through 1.8.9

June 2010

(Proposed rule following June 15, 2010 public comment deadline.)

INTRODUCTION:

Proposed Rule 1.8.11, which governs the imputation of conduct prohibited in the 1.8 series of Rules to lawyers associated in law firms, is based on Model Rule 1.8(k). Changes to the language in Model Rule 1.8(k) are primarily intended to conform the Rule to the Commission's numbering convention for the proposed rule counterparts to Model Rule 1.8. Rather than follow the ABA in placing a group of largely unrelated conflict concepts in a single rule, for ease of reference the Commission has assigned each concept in Model Rule 1.8 its own separate rule number.

Please note that this Rule went out for public comment as Rule 1.8.13, and as a result there are references to the earlier numbering in the public comment.

* Proposed Rule, XDraft 2.2 (1/6/10). [Formerly proposed Rule 1.8.13]

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(k) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.11 Imputation of Prohibitions Under Rules 1.8.1 through 1.8.9	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(k) While lawyers are associated in a firm, a prohibition in the foregoing paragraphs (a) through (i) that applies to any one of them shall apply to all of them.	(~~k~~) While lawyers are associated in a law firm, a prohibition in ~~the foregoing paragraphs~~ (~~a~~)Rules 1.8.1 through (~~i~~)Rule 1.8.9 that applies to any one of them shall apply to all of them.	Rule 1.8.11 is based on Model Rule 1.8(k). The changes made to the Model Rule conform the proposed Rule to the Commission's numbering convention in the 1.8 series of Rules. See Introduction.

* Proposed Rule, XDraft 2.2 (1/6/09). Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.8(k) Conflict Of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.8.11 Imputation of Prohibitions Under Rules 1.8.1 through 1.8.8 Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[20] Under paragraph (k), a prohibition on conduct by an individual lawyer in paragraphs (a) through (i) also applies to all lawyers associated in a firm with the personally prohibited lawyer. For example, one lawyer in a firm may not enter into a business transaction with a client of another member of the firm without complying with paragraph (a), even if the first lawyer is not personally involved in the representation of the client. The prohibition set forth in paragraph (j) is personal and is not applied to associated lawyers.	~~[20]~~ ~~Under paragraph (k), a~~ prohibition on conduct by an individual lawyer in ~~paragraphs (a)~~ Rules 1.8.1 through ~~(j)~~ 1.8.8 also applies to all lawyers associated in a law firm with the personally prohibited lawyer. For example, one lawyer in a law firm may not enter into a business transaction with a client of another ~~member of~~ lawyer associated in the law firm without complying with ~~paragraph (a)~~ Rule 1.8.1, even if the first lawyer is not personally involved in the representation of the client. ~~The~~ This Rule does not apply to Rules 1.8.9 and 1.8.10 since the prohibition ~~set forth in paragraph (j)~~ those Rules is personal and is not applied to associated lawyers.	Comment [1] to proposed Rule 1.8.11 is based on Model Rule 1.8, Comment [20]. As with the Rule itself, the changes made to the Model Rule conform the proposed Rule to the Commission's numbering convention in the 1.8 series of Rules. See Introduction.

* Proposed Rule, XDraft 2.1 (1/5/09). Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule

Rule 1.8.11 Imputation of Prohibitions Under Rules 1.8.1 through ~~1.8.8~~1.8.9

(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to the Public Comment Draft)

While lawyers are associated in a law firm, a prohibition in Rules 1.8.1 through ~~Rule 1.8.8~~1.8.9 that applies to any one of them shall apply to all of them.

Comment

- [1] A prohibition on conduct by an individual lawyer in Rules 1.8.1 through ~~1.8.8~~1.8.9 also applies to all lawyers associated in a law firm with the personally prohibited lawyer. For example, one lawyer in a law firm may not enter into a business transaction with a client of another lawyer associated in the law firm without complying with Rule 1.8.1, even if the first lawyer is not personally involved in the representation of the client. This Rule does not apply to ~~Rules 1.8.9 and~~Rule 1.8.10 since the prohibition in ~~those Rules~~that Rule is personal and is not applied to associated lawyers.

Rule 1.8.11 Imputation of Prohibitions Under Rules 1.8.1 through 1.8.9

(Commission's Proposed Rule – Clean Version)

While lawyers are associated in a law firm, a prohibition in Rules 1.8.1 through 1.8.9 that applies to any one of them shall apply to all of them.

Comment

- [1] A prohibition on conduct by an individual lawyer in Rules 1.8.1 through 1.8.9 also applies to all lawyers associated in a law firm with the personally prohibited lawyer. For example, one lawyer in a law firm may not enter into a business transaction with a client of another lawyer associated in the law firm without complying with Rule 1.8.1, even if the first lawyer is not personally involved in the representation of the client. This Rule does not apply to Rule 1.8.10 since the prohibition in that Rule is personal and is not applied to associated lawyers.

Rule 1.8.11 Imputation of Personal Conflicts.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 4 Agree = 3
Disagree = 0
Modify = 1
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
1	COPRAC	A	Yes		Support as drafted.	No response required.
2	Office of Chief Trial Counsel	A	Yes	Comment [1]	Except for the last sentence of Comment [1], the Comment should be stricken.	The Commission disagrees. The first sentence is a necessary introduction to the helpful example in the second sentence.
3	San Diego County Bar Association Legal Ethics Committee	A	Yes		Support as drafted.	No response required.
4	Santa Clara County Bar Association	M	Yes		We recommend that the 2009 amended version of ABA Model Rule 1.10 be adopted. The amended version recognizes the reality of modern day law practice, which involves the mobility of attorneys, the lateral movement of attorneys among firms and the practical reality that if certain parameters can be met, attorneys can be screened effectively and timely so that a conflict of interest is not created for the attorney's new firm or legal organization.	The commenter has confused proposed Rule 1.8.11 with proposed Rule 1.10. Rule 1.8.11 is the counterpart to Model Rule 1.8(k), and provides for imputation of a lawyer's personal interest conflicts that arise from the 1.8 series of rules to other lawyers in the firm. Screening is not permitted for such conflicts. The Commission, however, agrees with the commenter that screening should be permitted in the Rules for conflicts imputed under Rule 1.10 and is requesting that the Board of Governors reconsider its decision to reject screening in proposed Rule 1.10.

¹ A = AGREE with proposed Rule D = DISAGREE with proposed Rule M = AGREE ONLY IF MODIFIED NI = NOT INDICATED

Rule 1.8: Conflict of Interest: Current Clients: Specific Rules

STATE VARIATIONS

(The following is an excerpt from Regulation of Lawyers: Statutes and Standards (2010 Ed.)
by Steven Gillers, Roy D. Simon and Andrew M. Perlman.)

Alabama. Alabama's Rule 1.8(e)(3) provides as follows:

(3) a lawyer may advance or guarantee emergency financial assistance to the client, the repayment of which may not be contingent on the outcome of the matter, provided that no promise or assurance of financial assistance was made to the client by the lawyer, or on the lawyer's behalf, prior to the employment of the lawyer.

Alabama also adds Rule 1.8(k), which identifies when a lawyer can represent both parties to an uncontested divorce or domestic relations proceeding. Relating to Rule 1.8(h), the Alabama Legal Services Liability Act, Ala. Code §§6-5-570 et seq., provides as follows: "There shall be only one form and cause of action against legal service providers in courts in the State of Alabama and it shall be known as the legal service liability action." Finally, Rules 1.8(l) and (m) describe prohibitions on sexual relations between lawyers and clients. Notably,

Rule 1.8(m) states that "except for a spousal relationship or a relationship that existed at the commencement of the lawyer-client relationship, sexual relations between the lawyer and the client shall be presumed to be exploitative [and thus violate Rule 1.8(l)]. This presumption is rebuttable."

Arizona: Rule 1.8(h)(2) adds a clause forbidding a lawyer to "make an agreement prospectively limiting the client's right to report the lawyer to appropriate professional authorities." Rule 1.8(l), which retains the 1983 version of ABA Model Rule 1.8(i), provides: "A lawyer related to another lawyer as parent, child, sibling, spouse or cohabitant shall not represent a client in a representation directly adverse to a person who the lawyer knows is represented by the other lawyer except upon consent by the client after consultation regarding the relationship."

California: California's rules are generally equivalent to Model Rule 1.8, but two exceptions deserve attention. Rule 3-320 provides as follows:

A member shall not represent a client in a matter in which another party's lawyer is a spouse, parent, child, or sibling of the member, lives with the member, is a client of the member, or has an intimate personal relationship with the member, unless the member informs the client in writing of the relationship.

And Rule 4-210 provides in part as follows:

(A) A member shall not directly or indirectly pay or agree to pay, guarantee, represent, or sanction a representation that the member or member's law firm will pay the personal or business expenses of a prospective or existing client, except that this rule shall not prohibit a member: . . . (2) After employment, from lending money to the client upon the client's promise in writing to repay such loan.

Connecticut adds the following language to Rule 1.8(a), providing that lawyers can enter into business transactions with clients under the following circumstances:

(4) With regard to a business transaction, the lawyer advises the client or former client in writing either (A) that the lawyer will provide legal services to the client or former client concerning the transaction, or (B) that the lawyer will not provide legal services to the client or former client and that the lawyer is involved as a business person only and not as a lawyer representing the client or former client and that the lawyer is not one to whom the client or former client can turn for legal advice concerning the transaction.

(5) With regard to the providing of investment services, the lawyer advises the client or former client in writing (A) whether such services are covered by legal liability insurance or other insurance, and [makes either disclosure set out in paragraph (a)(4)]. Investment services shall only apply where the lawyer has either a direct or indirect control over the invested funds and a direct or indirect interest in the underlying investment.

For purposes of subsection (a)(1) through (a)(5), the phrase "former client" shall mean a client for whom the two year period starting from the conclusion of representation has not expired.

District of Columbia: D.C. Rule 1.8(d) permits lawyers to advance "financial assistance which is reasonably necessary to permit the client to institute or maintain the litigation or administrative proceeding.” Rule 1.8(i) provides as follows:

A lawyer may acquire and enforce a lien granted by law to secure the lawyer's fees or expenses, but a lawyer shall not impose a lien upon any part of a client's files, except upon the lawyer's own work product, and then only to the extent that the work product has not been paid for. This work product exception shall not apply when the client has become unable to pay, or when withholding the lawyer's work product would present a significant risk to the client of irreparable harm.

Florida adds Rule 4-8.4(i), which provides that a lawyer shall not engage in sexual conduct with a client “or a representative of a client” that:

exploits or adversely affects the interests of the client or the lawyer-client relationship including, but not limited to:

(1) requiring or demanding sexual relations with a client or a representative of a client incident to or as a condition of a legal representation;

(2) employing coercion, intimidation, or undue influence in entering into sexual relations with a client or a representative of a client; or

(3) continuing to represent a client if the lawyer's sexual relations with the client or a representative of the client cause the lawyer to render incompetent representation.

In 2004, the Florida Supreme Court deleted language from the comment to Rule 8.4, which had stated that lawyer-client sexual relations do not violate the rule if a sexual relationship existed between the lawyer and client before commencement of the lawyer-client relationship.

Georgia: Rule 1.8(a), drawing on DR 5-104 of the ABA Code of Professional Responsibility, applies “if the client expects the lawyer to exercise the lawyer's professional judgment therein for the protection of the client.” Georgia retains the language of deleted ABA Model Rule 1.8(i) but adds that the disqualification of a lawyer due to a parent, child, sibling, or spousal relationship “is personal and is not imputed to members of firms with whom the lawyers are associated.” Georgia adds that the maximum penalty for violating Rule 1.8(b) (which relates to confidentiality) is disbarment, but the maximum penalty for violating any other provision of Rule 1.8 is only a public reprimand.

Illinois: In the rules effective January 1, 2010, Rule 1.8(a)(2) omits the phrase “desirability of seeking.”

Louisiana: Rule 1.8(g) permits an aggregate settlement if “a court approves the settlement in a certified class action.” Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to “provide financial assistance to a client who is in necessitous circumstances” subject to strict controls, including:

(ii) The advance or loan guarantee, or the offer thereof, shall not be used as an inducement by the lawyer, or anyone acting on the lawyer’s behalf, to secure employment.

(iii) Neither the lawyer nor anyone acting on the lawyer’s behalf may offer to make advances or loan guarantees prior to being hired by a client, and the lawyer shall not publicize nor advertise a willingness to make advances or loan guarantees to clients.

Massachusetts: Rule 1.8(b) forbids a lawyer to use confidential information “for the lawyer’s advantage or the advantage of a third person” without consent.

Michigan: Rules 1.8(a)(2) and 1.8(h)(2) (regarding business transactions with clients and settlement of legal malpractice claims) both require that the client be given a reasonable opportunity to seek the advice of independent counsel but lack the ABA requirement that the client be “advised in writing of the desirability of seeking” independent counsel. Michigan Rule 1.8(g), regarding aggregate settlements, lacks the ABA requirement that the client’s consent be “in a writing signed by the client.” Michigan retains the language of deleted ABA Model Rule 1.8(i) verbatim.

Minnesota: Rule 1.8(e)(3) allows a lawyer to guarantee a loan necessary for a client to withstand litigation delay. Rule 1.8(k)’s provision on sexual relationships with clients prohibits a lawyer from having sexual relations with a client unless a consensual relationship existed between the lawyer and client when the client-lawyer relationship commenced. The rule also defines “sexual relations” and adds the following Rules 1.8(k)(2)-(3) to explain the meaning of sex with a “client” when a lawyer represents an organization:

(2) if the client is an organization, any individual who oversees the representation and gives instructions to the lawyer on behalf of the organization shall be deemed to be the client . . .

(3) this paragraph does not prohibit a lawyer from engaging in sexual relations with a client of the lawyer’s firm provided that the lawyer has no involvement in the performance of the legal work for the client . . .

Mississippi: Rule 1.8(e)(2) permits a lawyer to advance medical and living expenses to a client under certain narrowly defined circumstances.

New Hampshire: The New Hampshire rules include a Rule 1.19 (Disclosure of Information to the Client), which requires a lawyer (other than a government or in-house lawyer) to inform a client at the time of engagement if “the lawyer does not maintain professional liability insurance” of at least $100,000 per occurrence and $300,000 in the aggregate “or if the lawyer’s professional liability insurance ceases to be in effect.”

New Jersey: Rule 1.8(e)(3) creates an exception allowing financial assistance by a “non-profit organization authorized under [other law]” if the organization is representing the indigent client without a fee. Rule 1.8(h)(1), while forbidding agreements prospectively limiting liability to a client, contains an exception if “the client fails to act in accordance with the lawyer’s advice and the lawyer nevertheless continues to represent the client at the client’s request.” New Jersey Rule 1.8(k) and (l) provide as follows:

(k) A lawyer employed by a public entity, either as a lawyer or in some other role, shall not undertake the

representation of another client if the representation presents a substantial risk that the lawyer’s responsibilities to the public entity would limit the lawyer’s ability to provide independent advice or diligent and competent representation to either the public entity or the client.

(l) A public entity cannot consent to a representation otherwise prohibited by this Rule.

New York: In the rules effective April 1, 2009, Rule 1.8(a) deletes the language “knowingly acquire an ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client” and adds language from DR 5-104(A) of the old Model Code: “if they have differing interests therein and if the client expects the lawyer to exercise professional judgment therein for the protection of the client....” Comments 3A and 4A-4F, which have no Model Rule equivalents, describe in considerable detail the problem of business transactions with clients, including (in Comments 4D-4F) issues related to a lawyer’s receipt of a client’s securities. New York omits Comment 5.

Rule 1.8(d) draws, in part, on DR 5-104(B) of the old Model Code, and Comment 9 provides more guidance than the equivalent Model Rule provisions concerning a lawyer's acquisition of media or literary rights that relate to a client matter.

Finally, Rule 1.8(j) and (k) as well as Comments 17, 17A, 17B, and 18-20, all address sexual relationships with clients and provide significantly more guidance in this regard than the equivalent Model Rule provision. Comment 17B concludes that “[a] law firm’s failure to educate lawyers about the restrictions on sexual relations — or a firm’s failure to enforce those restrictions against lawyers who violate them — may constitute a violation of Rule 5.1, which obligates a law firm to make reasonable efforts to ensure that all lawyers in the firm conform to these Rules.”

North Dakota: Rule 1.8(g), regarding aggregate settlements, applies “other than in class actions.” North Dakota adds Rule 1.8(k), which restricts the practice of law by a part-time prosecutor or judge in certain circumstances.

Ohio: Rule 1.8(c) forbids a lawyer to solicit “any substantial gift from a client” and forbids a lawyer to “prepare on behalf of a client an instrument giving the lawyer, the lawyer’s partner, associate, paralegal, law clerk or other employee of the lawyer’s firm, a lawyer acting ‘of counsel’ in the lawyer’s firm, or a person related to the lawyer any gift unless the lawyer or other recipient of the gift is related to the client.” “Gift” is defined to include “a testamentary gift.” Ohio Rule 1.8(f)(4) provides a detailed “statement of insured client’s rights” that a lawyer “selected and paid by an insurer to represent an insured” must give to the client.

In July 2009, an Ohio statute (R.C. §1349.55) took effect to regulate companies that make cash advances to plaintiffs in pending civil cases in exchange for the right to receive part of the proceeds of any settlement, award, or judgment. Paragraph (C) of the statute provides that if a plaintiff gets into a dispute concerning the contract for the cash advance, “the responsibilities of the attorney representing the consumer [the plaintiff] in the civil action or claim shall be no greater than the attorney’s responsibilities under the Ohio Rules of Professional Conduct.”

Oregon: Rule 1.8(b) permits a lawyer to use confidential information to a client’s disadvantage only if the client’s consent is “confirmed in writing” (except as otherwise permitted or required by the Rules). Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to advance litigation expenses only if “the client remains ultimately liable for such expenses to the extent of the client’s ability to pay.” Finally, Oregon’s rule governing sexual relations with clients contains a detailed description of “sexual relations,” providing that it includes “sexual intercourse or any touching of the sexual or other intimate parts of a person or causing such person to touch the sexual or other intimate parts of the lawyer for the purpose of arousing or gratifying the sexual desire of either party.”

Pennsylvania: Rule 1.8(g) does not require that client consent be “confirmed in writing.”

Texas: Rule 1.08(c) provides that prior to the conclusion of “all aspects of the matter giving rise to the lawyer’s employment,” a lawyer shall not make or negotiate an agreement “with a client, prospective client, or former client” giving the lawyer literary or media rights to a portrayal or account based in substantial part on information relating to the representation. Rule 1.08(d) provides as follows:

(d) A lawyer shall not provide financial assistance to a client in connection with pending or contemplated litigation or administrative proceedings, except that:

(1) a lawyer may advance or guarantee court costs, expenses of litigation or administrative proceedings, and reasonably necessary medical and living expenses, the repayment of which may be contingent on the outcome of the matter; and

(2) a lawyer representing an indigent client may pay court costs and expenses of litigation on behalf of the client.

Virginia: Rule 1.8(b) forbids the use of information “for the advantage of the lawyer or of a third person or to the disadvantage of the client.” Rule 1.8(e)(1) requires a client ultimately to be liable for court costs and expenses. Rule 1.8(h) contains an exception where the lawyer is “an employee” of the client “as long as the client is independently represented in making the agreement” prospectively limiting the lawyer’s liability for malpractice.

Washington: Rule 1.8(e) permits a lawyer to (1) advance or guarantee the expenses of litigation “provided the client remains ultimately liable for such expenses; and (2) in matters maintained as class actions only, repayment of expenses of litigation may be contingent on the outcome of the matter.” Washington deletes ABA Model Rule 1.8(e)(2) (permitting lawyers to pay litigation costs for indigent clients).

Wisconsin: Rule 1.8(c) creates an exception to testamentary gifts where:

(1) the client is related to the donee, (2) the donee is a natural object of the bounty of the client, (3) there is no reasonable ground to anticipate a contest, or a claim of undue influence or for the public to lose confidence in the integrity of the bar, and (4) the amount of the gift or bequest is reasonable and natural under the circumstances.

Proposed Rule 1.9 [RPC 3-310(E)]

“Duties to Former Clients”

(XDraft #7, 2/9/10)

Summary: This Rule addresses conflicts of interest that arise when a lawyer's current representation is adverse to a client that the lawyer or the lawyer's firm (while the lawyer was still at the firm) formerly represented in the same or a substantially related matter. The black letter substantially follows the Model Rule but the Rule's comment is modified to address California case law. See Introduction & Explanation of Changes to the Comments.

Comparison with ABA Counterpart

Rule	Comment
☒ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
☐ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule	☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
☐ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule	☒ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart	☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

Primary Factors Considered

- ☒ Existing California Law

Rule

RPC 3-310(E)

Statute

Bus. & Prof. Code §6068(e)

Case law

Wutchumna Water Co. v. Bailey (1932) 216 Cal. 564; In re Matter of Lane (Rev.Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735

- ☐ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

New Jersey Rule 1.9.

- ☐ Other Primary Factor(s)

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(13 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 13 due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Less than Six Members Opposing Adoption ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 8

Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 3

Abstain 0

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by Consensus ☐

Commission Minority Position, Known Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

Minority Position Included on Model Rule Comparison Chart: ☒ Yes ☐ No
(See the introduction.)

☒ No Known Stakeholders

☐ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

☐ Very Controversial – Explanation:

☒ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

See the introduction and the Explanation of Changes for paragraph (b) of the proposed Rule and Comment [5] to the proposed Rule in the comparison chart.

☐ Not Controversial

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.9* Duties to Former Clients

June 2010

(Proposed rule following June 15, 2010 public comment deadline.)

INTRODUCTION:

Proposed Rule 1.9, which governs a lawyer's duty to former clients, is substantially the same as Model Rule 1.9. The minor changes to the language in the black letter of Model Rule 1.9 are for clarity and to include the same reference to the California State Bar Act that has been made in a number of other Rules. The Comments to proposed Rule 1.9 contain substantive additions and deletions to the Model Rule counterparts that, in part, explain relevant California case law and elaborate on the meaning of the phrase "substantially related" as used in the rule. Of particular note is Comment [5], in which the Commission recommends that the Supreme Court reject the position taken by the Review Department in In re Matter of Lane (1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735, that the substantial relationship test, which provides an irrebuttable presumption in civil disqualification matters, is also applicable to disciplinary proceedings. See Explanation of Changes for Comment [5].

Minority. A minority of the Commission objects to Comment [5] to the rule on the ground that it reverses settled law concerning the application of the substantial relationship test to disciplinary and malpractice actions. The minority contends that the test is a substantive rule of law, not a rule of evidence that is rebuttable. The minority also takes the position that, even if it were a rule of evidence, then its application should be left to the courts. Finally, the minority objects to the differential application of the test in civil disqualification proceedings on the one hand, and disciplinary and malpractice actions on the other. The minority thus urges the deletion of Comment [5]. See Full Minority Dissent. below.

* Proposed Rule 1.9, XDraft 7 (2/9/10).

Proposed Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients

Minority Dissent

Comment 5 proposes to change the time-honored “substantial relationship” test to preclude its application in disciplinary proceedings and legal malpractice actions. The substantial relationship test provides that when a substantial relationship exists between the former representation and the current representation, the attorney’s knowledge of confidential information is conclusively presumed. (See Global Van Lines, Inc. v. Superior Court (1983) 144 Cal.App.3d 483, 489.) Comment 5 changes this rule by making the presumption rebuttable in disciplinary proceedings and legal malpractice actions. The Commission reasons that Evidence Code section 958 is an exception to the lawyer-client privilege and that the lawyer therefore can and should be allowed to prove that he or she did not actually receive confidential information. There are several problems with altering the application of the substantial evidence in some proceeding, but not others.

First, the substantial relationship test is not a rule of evidence at all, but a substantive rule of law. A conclusive or irrebuttable presumption differs from a rebuttable presumption in that only the latter is considered a rule of evidence. (See People v. McCall (2004) 32 Cal.4th 175, 184-185 “[A] distinction must be drawn between mandatory rebuttable presumptions, which operate as evidentiary devices, and mandatory conclusive presumptions, which operate as rules of substantive law.”].)

Because it is a substantive, prophylactic rule -- a “rule by necessity, for it is not within the power of the former client to prove what is in the mind of the attorney” (Global, supra, at p. 489.) -- the question is not whether or not the lawyer can disprove receipt of confidential information. Based on ethical policy, not evidence, the substantial evidence test presumes conclusively that the lawyer received confidential information from the former client. The presumption is conclusive, rather than rebuttable, because the very probe into whether the attorney actually gained access to confidential information would itself destroy the values sought to be protected. (Conflicts of Interest in the Legal Profession (1981) 94 Harv. L. Rev. 1244, 1329.) “The presumption also stems from a recognition of how difficult it is for the former client to prove that confidential information was given to the attorney.” (Id.) “By forcing a client to prove receipt of information, the cloak of secrecy would be torn from the attorney-client communications. As one court has stated, ‘[t]hat kind of Hobson’s Choice is not one to which the legal profession ought to submit its clients.’” (Ibid.) The fact that the presumption might be rebuttable does not alter the client’s dilemma.

Second, because it is a prophylactic rule and not a rule of evidence, a lawyer’s denial that he or she received confidential information misses the point. “The interest to be preserved by preventing attorneys from accepting representation adverse to a former client is the protection and enhancement of the professional relationship in all its dimensions.” (City National Bank v. Adams (2002) 96 Cal.App.4th 315 , 325.) The question is not whether confidential information was actually exchanged between the lawyer and the client, but whether it normally would have been exchanged. (Id. at p. 327.) While a limited exception exists where the lawyer can show that there was no opportunity to receive confidential information, there is no exception that allows a lawyer to discuss what confidential information the lawyer did or did not receive.

Third, if, as the Commission maintains, this is indeed a rule of evidence, then the application of the substantial relationship test should be left to the courts. In disciplinary proceedings the State Bar Court should determine under its own rules of evidence and procedure how the test should be applied in those proceedings. (See, e.g., Rules of Practice of the State Bar Court and Bus & Prof Code § 6086.5.) It is beyond the purview of the Commission to draft rules of evidence or procedure for the State Bar Court.

Finally, the notion that this--or any other rule--will apply differently depending on whether the proceeding involves disqualification, on one hand, or discipline or malpractice, on the other, is unprecedented. We should not have rules that have such differential application. Comment 5 should be deleted.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(a) A lawyer who has formerly represented a client in a matter shall not thereafter represent another person in the same or a substantially related matter in which that person's interests are materially adverse to the interests of the former client unless the former client gives informed consent, confirmed in writing.	(a) A lawyer who has formerly represented a client in a matter shall not thereafter represent another person in the same or a substantially related matter in which that person's interests are materially adverse to the interests of the former client unless the former client gives informed written consent, ~~confirmed in writing~~.	The Commission proposes the adoption of Model Rule paragraph (a) except for the substitution of the more client-protective requirement that the lawyer obtain the client's written consent to the lawyer's adverse representation. This change affords more client protection and is consistent with California's requirement of written consent in other conflict situations.
(b) A lawyer shall not knowingly represent a person in the same or a substantially related matter in which a firm with which the lawyer formerly was associated had previously represented a client (1) whose interests are materially adverse to that person; and (2) about whom the lawyer had acquired information protected by Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c) that is material to the matter; unless the former client gives informed consent, confirmed in writing.	(b) A lawyer shall not knowingly represent a person in the same or a substantially related matter in which a law firm with which the lawyer formerly was associated had previously represented a client (1) whose interests are materially adverse to that person; and (2) about whom the lawyer, while at the former law firm, had acquired information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c) that is material to the matter; unless the former client gives informed written consent, ~~confirmed in writing~~.	Proposed paragraph (b) is substantially the same as the corresponding Model Rule paragraph. The addition of "law" to modify "firm" conforms to the Rules style. The first change in (b)(2) is non-substantive; it clarifies that paragraph (b) applies when a lawyer learned information about a former client while in an earlier law firm association. The purpose of paragraph (b) is to describe the application of Rule 1.9 when the lawyer has departed that earlier law firm; the additional phrase in subparagraph (2) clarifies this connection. The addition of the reference to Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(e) was made in response to public comment expressing concerns over the scope of protection afforded by proposed Rule 1.6. Although the Commission does not agree with the expressed concern, it has added the reference. Proposed paragraph (b) also substitutes the requirement of written consent in place of the MR's laxer "confirmed in writing" standard.

* Rule 1.9, XDraft 7 (2/9/10). Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(c) A lawyer who has formerly represented a client in a matter or whose present or former firm has formerly represented a client in a matter shall not thereafter:	(c) A lawyer who ~~has~~ formerly represented a client in a matter or whose present or former law firm has formerly represented a client in a matter shall not thereafter:	Proposed paragraph (c) is identical to the Model Rule paragraph, except for the elimination of one unnecessary word and the addition of "law" to modify "firm" to conform to the Rules style.
(1) use information relating to the representation to the disadvantage of the former client except as these Rules would permit or require with respect to a client, or when the information has become generally known; or	(1) use information relating to ~~the representation—a~~ former client to the disadvantage of the former client except as these Rules or the State Bar Act would permit ~~or require~~ with respect to a current client, or when the information has become generally known; or	The use of 'relating to a former client' in place of the Model Rule's 'relating to the representation of a former client' is intended to eliminate the possibility of a narrow reading that the duty applies only to information that relates to the subject matter of a former representation. A lawyer's continuing duty of confidentiality under section 6068(e) and Rule 1.6 applies to all information obtained by a lawyer by virtue of a lawyer-client relationship if the use or disclosure of the information likely would be harmful or embarrassing to the client or if the client has directed the lawyer to not use or disclose the information. This paragraph also adds a reference to the State Bar Act. It also has another substantive change, which is the removal of the concept that a lawyer might be required to disclose a client's confidential information. That might be possible under Model Rule 1.6, but there is no such requirement either in the California Rules or in the State Bar Act. Finally, this adds the clarifying adjective "current". The Model Rules apparently only once refer to a current client as "current client", but they otherwise use the unmodified word "client" to refer to a current client. Because this Rule is concerned with duties owed to former client, the Commission recommends adding "current" in all places in the rule that the reference is to a "current client.". The Commission believes this should avoid misunderstanding by making immediately clear the meaning of provisions that otherwise might be more difficult to read.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(2) reveal information relating to the representation except as these Rules would permit or require with respect to a client.	(2) reveal information relating to ~~the representation~~ a former client except as these Rules or the State Bar Act would permit ~~or require~~ with respect to a current client.	The proposed changes in (c)(2) track those proposed for (c)(1).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[1] After termination of a client-lawyer relationship, a lawyer has certain continuing duties with respect to confidentiality and conflicts of interest and thus may not represent another client except in conformity with this Rule. Under this Rule, for example, a lawyer could not properly seek to rescind on behalf of a new client a contract drafted on behalf of the former client. So also a lawyer who has prosecuted an accused person could not properly represent the accused in a subsequent civil action against the government concerning the same transaction. Nor could a lawyer who has represented multiple clients in a matter represent one of the clients against the others in the same or a substantially related matter after a dispute arose among the clients in that matter, unless all affected clients give informed consent. See Comment [9]. Current and former government lawyers must comply with this Rule to the extent required by Rule 1.11.	[1] After termination of a lawyer-client relationship, the lawyer ~~has certain continuing~~ owes two duties to the former client. The lawyer may not (i) do anything that creates a substantial risk that it will injuriously affect his or her former client in any matter in which the lawyer represented the former client, or (ii) at any time use against his or her former client knowledge or information acquired by virtue of the previous relationship. (Wutchumna Water Co. v. Bailey (1932) 216 Cal. 564) These duties exist to preserve a client's trust in the lawyer and to encourage the client's candor in communications with the lawyer by assuring that the client can entrust the client's matter to the lawyer and can confide to the lawyer information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rule 1.6 without fear that any such information later will be used against the client. ~~[2]~~ Paragraph (a) addresses both of these duties. It first addresses the situation in which there is a substantial risk that a lawyer's representation of another client would result in the lawyer doing work that would injuriously affect the former client with respect to confidentiality and conflicts of interest and thus may not represent another client except a matter in conformity with this Rule which the lawyer represented the former client. Under this Rule, for	Proposed Comments [1] and [2] materially revise Model Rule Comment [1] in order to more fully explain how and why Rule 1.9 protects former clients, and to avoid any suggestion that proposed Rule 1.9 modifies long-standing California authority regarding a lawyer's duties to former clients. The Supreme Court's opinion in Wutchumna Water Co. v. Bailey (1932) 216 Cal. 564 (cited in proposed Comment [1]) and other authority such as People ex rel. Deukmejian v. Brown (1981) 29 Cal.3d 159, emphasize that a lawyer has two duties to former clients. Both of these duties are described and explained in these proposed Comment paragraphs. The Commission believes that it is essential to preserve this case law, and it further believes that Model Rule 1.9 is consistent with these California principles. However, adopting the Model Rule Comment risked obscuring these points and thus causing misunderstanding of the Rule's extremely important restrictions on lawyer conduct.

* Proposed Rule 1.9, Draft 5.3 (9/1/09). Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	For example, a lawyer could not properly seek to rescind on behalf of a new client a contract the lawyer drafted on behalf of the former client. ~~So also~~ a A lawyer who has prosecuted an accused person could not ~~properly~~ represent the accused in a subsequent civil action against the government concerning the same ~~transaction. Nor could a lawyer who has represented multiple clients in a matter represent one of the clients against the others in the same or a substantially related matter after a dispute arose among the clients in that matter, unless all affected clients give informed consent. See Comment [9].~~ Current and former government lawyers must comply with this Rule to the extent required by Rule 1.11.
[2] The scope of a "matter" for purposes of this Rule depends on the facts of a particular situation or transaction. The lawyer's involvement in a matter can also be a question of degree. When a lawyer has been directly involved in a specific transaction, subsequent representation of other clients with materially adverse interests in that transaction clearly is prohibited. On the other hand, a lawyer who recurrently handled a type of problem for a former client is not precluded from later representing another client in a factually distinct problem of that type even though the subsequent representation involves a position adverse to the prior client. Similar considerations can apply to the reassignment of military lawyers between defense and prosecution	~~{2} The scope of a "matter" for purposes of this Rule depends on the facts of a particular situation or transaction. The lawyer's involvement in a matter can also be a question of degree. When a lawyer has been directly involved in a specific transaction, subsequent representation of other clients with materially adverse interests in that transaction clearly is prohibited. On the other hand, a lawyer who recurrently handled a type of problem for a former client is not precluded from later representing another client in a factually distinct problem of that type even though the subsequent representation involves a position adverse to the prior client. Similar considerations can apply to the reassignment of military lawyers between defense and prosecution~~	Because proposed Comments [1] and [2] replace Model Rule Comments [1], the balance of the proposed Comment is renumbered.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
functions within the same military jurisdictions. The underlying question is whether the lawyer was so involved in the matter that the subsequent representation can be justly regarded as a changing of sides in the matter in question.	~~functions within the same military jurisdictions. The underlying question is whether the lawyer was so involved in the matter that the subsequent representation can be justly regarded as a changing of sides in the matter in question.~~
[3] Matters are "substantially related" for purposes of this Rule if they involve the same transaction or legal dispute or if there otherwise is a substantial risk that confidential factual information as would normally have been obtained in the prior representation would materially advance the client's position in the subsequent matter. For example, a lawyer who has represented a businessperson and learned extensive private financial information about that person may not then represent that person's spouse in seeking a divorce. Similarly, a lawyer who has previously represented a client in securing environmental permits to build a shopping center would be precluded from representing neighbors seeking to oppose rezoning of the property on the basis of environmental considerations; however, the lawyer would not be precluded, on the grounds of substantial relationship, from defending a tenant of the completed shopping center in resisting eviction for nonpayment of rent. Information that has been disclosed to the public or to other parties adverse to the former client ordinarily will not be disqualifying. Information acquired in a prior representation may have been rendered obsolete by the passage of time, a circumstance that may be relevant in	[3] ~~Matters are "substantially related" for purposes of this Rule if they involve Paragraph (a) also addresses the same transaction or legal dispute or~~ second of the two duties owed to a former client. It applies when there ~~otherwise~~ is a substantial risk that ~~confidential factual information as would normally have been~~ protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rule 1.6 that was obtained in the prior representation would materially advance the client's position be used or disclosed in thea subsequent matterrepresentation in a manner that is contrary to the former client's interests and without the former client's informed written consent. For example, a lawyer who has represented a businessperson and learned extensive private financial information about that person ordinarily may not ~~then~~ later represent that person's spouse in seeking a divorce. Similarly, a lawyer who has previously represented a client in securingconnection with the environmental permitsreview associated with the land use approvals to build a shopping center ordinarily would be precluded from later representing neighbors seeking to oppose rezoning of the property on the basis of environmental considerations that existed	The Model Rule Comment discusses in its paragraphs [2] and [3] the vital question of when a lawyer's retention is "substantially related" to a former matter as to which the lawyer owes continuing duties to the former client under this Rule. Proposed Comments [3], [4], [5], and [6] substantially expand on the Model Rule discussion in order to provide a fuller explanation and context for this topic. Also, proposed Comment [3] revises the Model Rule Comment's reference to "environmental permits" in order to conform the terminology to California law.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
determining whether two representations are substantially related. In the case of an organizational client, general knowledge of the client's policies and practices ordinarily will not preclude a subsequent representation; on the other hand, knowledge of specific facts gained in a prior representation that are relevant to the matter in question ordinarily will preclude such a representation. A former client is not required to reveal the confidential information learned by the lawyer in order to establish a substantial risk that the lawyer has confidential information to use in the subsequent matter. A conclusion about the possession of such information may be based on the nature of the services the lawyer provided the former client and information that would in ordinary practice be learned by a lawyer providing such services.	when the lawyer represented the client; however, ~~the lawyer~~paragraph (a) would not ~~be precluded, on apply if~~ the ~~grounds of substantial relationship, from defending~~lawyer later defends a tenant of the completed shopping center in resisting eviction for nonpayment of rent. ~~Information that has been disclosed to the public or to other parties adverse to the former client ordinarily will not be disqualifying. Information acquired in a prior representation may have been rendered obsolete by the passage of time, a circumstance that may be relevant in determining whether two representations are substantially related. In the case of an organizational client, general knowledge of the client's policies and practices ordinarily will not preclude a subsequent representation; on the other hand, knowledge of specific facts gained in a prior representation that are relevant to the matter in question ordinarily will preclude such a representation. A former client if there is not required to reveal the confidential information learned by the lawyer in order to establish a no~~ substantial risk ~~that~~relationship between the lawyer has confidential information to use in the subsequent matter. A conclusion about the possession of such information may be based on the nature of the services the lawyer provided the former clientand use and information that would in ordinary practice be learned by a lawyer providing such serviceseviction matters.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	[4] Paragraph (a) applies when the lawyer's representation is in the same matter as, or in a matter substantially related to, the lawyer's representation of the former client. The term "matter" for purposes of this Rule includes civil and criminal litigation, transactions of every kind, and all other types of legal representations. The scope of a "matter" for purposes of this Rule depends on the facts of a particular situation or transaction. The lawyer's involvement in a matter can also be a question of degree. An underlying question is whether the lawyer was so involved in the earlier matter that the subsequent representation justly can be regarded as changing of sides in the matter in question. A lawyer might avoid the application of this Rule by limiting the scope of a representation so as to exclude matters on which the lawyer has a conflict of interest. See Rule 1.2(c) (limiting the scope of representation).	Proposed Comment [4] has no direct corollary in the Model Rule Comment. It is part of the expanded explanation of what a "matter" is. Also, it includes a reminder of the important concept that a lawyer sometimes can avoid the violation of duties owed to a former client, just as a lawyer sometimes can avoid the violation of duties owed to a current client, by limiting the scope of a new representation. This reminder includes cross-references to Rule 1.2(c) (limiting the scope of a representation) and to Rule 1.7, Comment [15] (discussing the same point in the context of a lawyer's duties to a current client).
	[5] The term "substantially related matter" as used in this Rule is not applied identically in all types of proceedings. In a disqualification proceeding, a court will presume conclusively that a lawyer has obtained confidential information material to the adverse engagement when it appears by virtue of the nature of the former representation or the relationship of the attorney to the former client that confidential information material to the current dispute normally would have been imparted to the	Proposed Comment [5] has no direct corollary in the Model Rule Comment. It also is part of the expanded explanation of what a "matter" is and includes citations to pertinent California appellate opinions. In addition, the Commission is recommending that Review Department's opinion in In re Matter of Lane (1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735, be rejected. In that opinion, the Review Department suggested that the substantial relationship test, which provides an irrebuttable presumption in civil disqualification

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	attorney. (H.F. Ahmanson & Co. v. Salomon Brothers, Inc. (1991) 229 Cal.App.3d 1445, 1454) This disqualification application exists, at least in part, to protect the former client by avoiding an inquiry into the substance of the information that the former client is entitled to keep from being imparted to the lawyer's current client. (See In re Complex Asbestos Litigation, (1991) 232 Cal.App.3d at p. 592; Woods v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal.App.3d 931, 934.) In disciplinary proceedings, and in civil litigation between a lawyer and a former client, where the lawyer's new client is not present, the evidentiary presumption created for disqualification purposes does not apply and the lawyer can provide evidence concerning the information actually received in the prior representation.	matters, was also applicable to disciplinary proceedings. The Commission determined that the Review Department's conclusion is ill-advised in those situations where the lawyer's new client is not present and the lawyer will be afforded an opportunity to provide direct evidence of what information the lawyer actually obtained in the prior representation.
	[6] Two matters are "the same or substantially related" for purposes of this Rule if they involve a substantial risk of a violation of one of the two duties to a former client described above in Comment [1]. This will occur: (i) if the matters involve the same transaction or legal dispute or other work performed by the lawyer for the former client; or (ii) if the lawyer normally would have obtained information in the prior representation that is protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rule 1.6, and the lawyer would be expected to use or disclose that information in the subsequent representation because it is material to the subsequent representation.	Proposed Comment [6] has no direct corollary in the Model Rule Comment. It is part of the expanded explanation of what a "matter" is and is intended to underline that the concept of a "matter" should be understood within the context of the purposes of Rule 1.9 as they are explained in Comment [1].

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	[7] Paragraph (a) applies when the new client's interests are materially adverse to the former client's interests. In light of the overall purpose of the Rule to protect candor and trust during the lawyer-client relationship, the term "materially adverse" should be applied with that purpose in mind. Accordingly, a client's interests are materially adverse to the former client if the lawyer's representation of the new client creates a substantial risk that the lawyer either (i) would perform work for the new client that would injuriously affect the former client in any manner in which the lawyer represented the former client, or (ii) would use or reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rule 1.6 that the former client would not want disclosed or in a manner that would be to the disadvantage of the former client.	Proposed Comment [7] has no direct corollary in the Model Rule Comment. It supplements proposed Comment [6].
Lawyers Moving Between Firms [4] When lawyers have been associated within a firm but then end their association, the question of whether a lawyer should undertake representation is more complicated. There are several competing considerations. First, the client previously represented by the former firm must be reasonably assured that the principle of loyalty to the client is not compromised. Second, the rule should not be so broadly cast as to preclude other persons from having reasonable choice of legal counsel. Third, the	Lawyers Moving Between Firms ~~[4] When lawyers have been associated within a firm but then end their association, the question of whether a lawyer should undertake representation is more complicated. There are several competing considerations. First, the client previously represented by the former firm must be reasonably assured that the principle of loyalty to the client is not compromised. Second, the rule should not be so broadly cast as to preclude other persons from having reasonable choice of legal counsel. Third, the~~	The Commission proposes to remove all of Model Rule Comment [4] as being discursive and not helpful to understanding the Rule.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
rule should not unreasonably hamper lawyers from forming new associations and taking on new clients after having left a previous association. In this connection, it should be recognized that today many lawyers practice in firms, that many lawyers to some degree limit their practice to one field or another, and that many move from one association to another several times in their careers. If the concept of imputation were applied with unqualified rigor, the result would be radical curtailment of the opportunity of lawyers to move from one practice setting to another and of the opportunity of clients to change counsel.	~~rule should not unreasonably hamper lawyers from forming new associations and taking on new clients after having left a previous association. In this connection, it should be recognized that today many lawyers practice in firms, that many lawyers to some degree limit their practice to one field or another, and that many move from one association to another several times in their careers. If the concept of imputation were applied with unqualified rigor, the result would be radical curtailment of the opportunity of lawyers to move from one practice setting to another and of the opportunity of clients to change counsel.~~
[5] Paragraph (b) operates to disqualify the lawyer only when the lawyer involved has actual knowledge of information protected by Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c). Thus, if a lawyer while with one firm acquired no knowledge or information relating to a particular client of the firm, and that lawyer later joined another firm, neither the lawyer individually nor the second firm is disqualified from representing another client in the same or a related matter even though the interests of the two clients conflict. See Rule 1.10(b) for the restrictions on a firm once a lawyer has terminated association with the firm.	~~[5]~~ Paragraph (b) ~~operates~~addresses a lawyer's duties to disqualify a client who has become a former client because the lawyer no longer is associated with the law firm that represents or represented the client. In that situation, the lawyer has a conflict of interest only when the lawyer ~~involved~~ has actual knowledge of information protected by Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c). Thus, if a lawyer while with one firm acquired no knowledge or information relating to a particular client of the firm, and that lawyer later joined another firm, neither the lawyer individually nor the second firm ~~is disqualified from~~would violate this Rule by representing another client in the same or a related matter even though the interests of the two clients conflict. See Rule 1.10(b) for the restrictions on a firm once a lawyer has terminated association with the firm.	Proposed Comment [8] is substantially the same as Model Rule Comment [5]. The wording change is intended to avoid a possible misreading of Rule 1.9(b), which as written might be seen as referring only to former clients of a lawyer's former firm, while it should also include current clients of a lawyer's former firm. Rather than attempting to revise paragraph (b), which would have caused considerable drafting difficulties, the Commission chose to clarify through this Comment. As has been done throughout, the Commission has removed the reference to disqualification, these being disciplinary rules and disqualification being a matter within the authority of a court in the exercise of its responsibility to control the proceedings.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[6] Application of paragraph (b) depends on a situation's particular facts, aided by inferences, deductions or working presumptions that reasonably may be made about the way in which lawyers work together. A lawyer may have general access to files of all clients of a law firm and may regularly participate in discussions of their affairs; it should be inferred that such a lawyer in fact is privy to all information about all the firm's clients. In contrast, another lawyer may have access to the files of only a limited number of clients and participate in discussions of the affairs of no other clients; in the absence of information to the contrary, it should be inferred that such a lawyer in fact is privy to information about the clients actually served but not those of other clients. In such an inquiry, the burden of proof should rest upon the firm whose disqualification is sought.	[69] Application of paragraph (b) depends on a situation's particular facts, aided by inferences, deductions or working presumptions that reasonably may be made about the way in which lawyers work together. A lawyer may have general access to files of all clients of a law firm and may regularly participate in discussions of their affairs; it should be inferred that such a lawyer in fact is privy to all information about all the firm's clients. In contrast, another lawyer may have access to the files of only a limited number of clients and participate in discussions of the affairs of no other clients; in the absence of information to the contrary, it should be inferred that such a lawyer in fact is privy to information about the clients actually served but not those of other clients. In such an inquiry, the burden of proof should rest upon the firm ~~whose disqualification is sought~~to which this Rule applies.	Proposed Comment [9] is nearly identical to Model Rule Comment [6], but removes the reference to disqualification in the last sentence.
[7] Independent of the question of disqualification of a firm, a lawyer changing professional association has a continuing duty to preserve confidentiality of information about a client formerly represented. See Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c).	~~[710] Independent of the question of disqualification of a firm, a~~A lawyer changing professional association has a continuing duty to preserve confidentiality of information about a client formerly represented. See Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c).	Proposed Comment [10] is substantially the same as Model Rule Comment [7]. However, the proposed Comment removes the reference to lawyer disqualification. Although the Commission understands that Rule 1.9 will be cited when disqualification issues are raised, it has written the Rule primarily for disciplinary purposes and does not want to suggest that it presumes to dictate to courts how to exercise their authority, for example, under C.C.P. § 128(a)(5). In addition, a reference to Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(e) has been added. See Explanation of Changes for paragraph (b)(2), above.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients Comment	Commission's Proposed Rule* Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[8] Paragraph (c) provides that information acquired by the lawyer in the course of representing a client may not subsequently be used or revealed by the lawyer to the disadvantage of the client. However, the fact that a lawyer has once served a client does not preclude the lawyer from using generally known information about that client when later representing another client.	[8~~11~~] Paragraph (c) provides that confidential information acquired by ~~the~~a lawyer in the course of representing a client may not subsequently be used or revealed by the lawyer to the disadvantage of the former client. ~~However,~~See Rule 1.6(a) with respect to the confidential information of a client the lawyer is obligated to protect, and Rule 1.6(b) for situations where the lawyer is permitted to reveal such information. The fact that a lawyer has once served a client does not preclude the lawyer from using generally known information about that client when later representing another client. However, the fact that information can be discovered in a public record does not, by itself, render that information generally known. (See In the Matter of Johnson (Rev. Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.)	Proposed Comment [11] is based on Model Rule Comment [8]. The first set of changes clarify that it (and Rule 1.9) speak only of confidential information that is protected by Rule 1.6, not to non-confidential information that a lawyer might have learned in the course of representing a former client. The addition of the last sentence was made in response to public comment received on this Rule and proposed Rule 1.6 expressing the incorrect view that Matter of Johnson prohibits a lawyer from using to the disadvantage of a former client or disclosing information that is generally known. That opinion holds that a lawyer has obligations with respect to information that is in a public record, and therefore potentially available to others, but that is not generally known..
[9] The provisions of this Rule are for the protection of former clients and can be waived if the client gives informed consent, which consent must be confirmed in writing under paragraphs (a) and (b). See Rule 1.0(e). With regard to the effectiveness of an advance waiver, see Comment [22] to Rule 1.7. With regard to disqualification of a firm with which a lawyer is or was formerly associated, see Rule 1.10.	Client Consent [9~~12~~] The provisions of this Rule are for the protection of former clients and can be waived if the former client gives informed written consent, ~~which consent must be confirmed in writing under paragraphs (a) and (b).~~ See Rule 1.0(e). With regard to the effectiveness of an advance ~~waiver~~consent, see Comment [22] to Rule 1.7. With regard to ~~disqualification~~the application of a lawyer's conflict to a firm with which a lawyer is or was formerly associated, see Rule 1.10.	Proposed Comment [12] is much the same as Model Rule Comment [9]. There are two substantive changes. First, the proposed Comment substitutes California's more client-protective requirement of "informed written consent" in place of the Model Rule's requirement of "consent confirmed in writing" (this change can be seen in paragraphs (a) and (b) of the proposed Rule, and is consistent with the same change made in other proposed conflicts Rules). Second, as explained with respect to Comment [10], this removes the reference to disqualification.

Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients

(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule to the Public Comment Draft)

- (a) A lawyer who has formerly represented a client in a matter shall not thereafter represent another person in the same or a substantially related matter in which that person's interests are materially adverse to the interests of the former client unless the former client gives informed written consent.
- (b) A lawyer shall not knowingly represent a person in the same or a substantially related matter in which a law firm with which the lawyer formerly was associated had previously represented a client
 - (1) whose interests are materially adverse to that person; and
 - (2) about whom the lawyer, while at the former law firm, had acquired information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c) that is material to the matter;unless the former client gives informed written consent.
- (c) A lawyer who formerly represented a client in a matter or whose present or former law firm has formerly represented a client in a matter shall not thereafter:
 - (1) use information relating to a former client to the disadvantage of the former client except as these Rules or the State Bar Act would permit with respect to a current client, or when the information has become generally known; or

- (2) reveal information relating to a former client except as these Rules or the State Bar Act would permit with respect to a current client.

COMMENT

- [1] After termination of a lawyer-client relationship, the lawyer owes two duties to the former client. The lawyer may not (i) do anything that creates a substantial risk that it will injuriously affect his or her former client in any matter in which the lawyer represented the former client, or (ii) at any time use against his or her former client knowledge or information acquired by virtue of the previous relationship. ~~(Wutchumna Water Co. v. Bailey (1932) 216 Cal. 564 [15 P.2d 505])~~ These duties exist to preserve a client's trust in the lawyer and to encourage the client's candor in communications with the lawyer by assuring that the client can entrust the client's matter to the lawyer and can confide to the lawyer information ~~to the lawyer that will be~~ protected ~~as required by Rule 1.6 and~~ Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rule 1.6 without fear that any such information later will be used against the client. Current and former government lawyers must comply with this Rule to the extent required by Rule 1.11.
- [2] Paragraph (a) addresses both of these duties. It first addresses the situation in which there is a substantial risk that a lawyer's representation of another client would result in the lawyer doing work that would injuriously affect the former client with respect to a matter in which the lawyer represented the former client. For example, a lawyer could not properly seek to rescind on behalf of a new client a contract the lawyer drafted on behalf of the former client. A lawyer who has prosecuted an accused person could not represent the accused in a subsequent civil action against the government concerning the same matter.

- [3] Paragraph (a) also addresses the second of the two duties owed to a former client. It applies when there is a substantial risk that information protected by ~~Rule 1.6 and~~ Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rule 1.6 that was obtained in the prior representation would be used or disclosed in a subsequent representation in a manner that is contrary to the former client's interests and without the former client's informed written consent. For example, a lawyer who has represented a businessperson and learned extensive private financial information about that person ordinarily may not later represent that person's spouse in seeking a divorce. Similarly, a lawyer who has previously represented a client in connection with the environmental review associated with the land use approvals to build a shopping center ordinarily would be precluded from later representing neighbors seeking to oppose rezoning of the property on the basis of environmental considerations that existed when the lawyer represented the client; however, paragraph (a) would not apply if the lawyer later defends a tenant of the completed shopping center in resisting eviction for nonpayment of rent if there is no substantial relationship between the land use and eviction matters.
- [4] Paragraph (a) applies when the lawyer's representation is in the same matter as, or in a matter substantially related to, the lawyer's representation of the former client. The term "matter" for purposes of this Rule includes civil and criminal litigation, transactions of every kind, and all other types of legal representations. The scope of a "matter" for purposes of this Rule depends on the facts of a particular situation or transaction. The lawyer's involvement in a matter can also be a question of degree. An underlying question is whether the lawyer was so involved in the earlier matter that the subsequent representation justly can be regarded as changing of sides in the matter in question. A lawyer might avoid the application of this Rule by limiting the scope of a representation so as to exclude matters on which the lawyer has a conflict of interest. See Rule 1.2(c) (limiting the scope of representation) ~~and Rule 1.7, Comment [15]~~.

- [5] The term "substantially related matter" as used in this Rule is not applied identically in all types of proceedings. In a disqualification proceeding, a court will presume conclusively that a lawyer has obtained confidential information material to the adverse engagement when it appears by virtue of the nature of the former representation or the relationship of the attorney to the former client that confidential information material to the current dispute normally would have been imparted to the attorney. ~~(H.F. Ahmanson & Co. v. Salomon Brothers, Inc. (1991) 229 Cal.App.3d 1445, 1454 [280 Cal.Rptr. 614].)~~ This disqualification application exists, at least in part, to protect the former client by avoiding an inquiry into the substance of the information that the former client is entitled to keep from being imparted to the lawyer's current client. ~~(See In re Complex Asbestos Litigation (1991) 232 Cal.App.3d 572, 592 [283 Cal.Rptr. 732]; Woods v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal.App.3d 931, 934 [197 Cal.Rptr. 185].)~~ In disciplinary proceedings, and in civil litigation between a lawyer and a former client, where the lawyer's new client is not present, the evidentiary presumption created for disqualification purposes does not apply and the lawyer can provide evidence concerning the information actually received in the prior representation.
- [6] Two matters are "the same or substantially related" for purposes of this Rule if they involve a substantial risk of a violation of one of the two duties to a former client described above in Comment [1]. This will occur: (i) if the matters involve the same transaction or legal dispute or other work performed by the lawyer for the former client; or (ii) if the lawyer normally would have obtained information in the prior representation that is protected by ~~Rule 1.6 and~~ Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rule 1.6, and the lawyer would be expected to use or disclose that information in the subsequent representation because it is material to the subsequent representation.

- [7] Paragraph (a) applies when the new client's interests are materially adverse to the former client's interests. In light of the overall purpose of the Rule to protect candor and trust during the lawyer-client relationship, the term "materially adverse" should be applied with that purpose in mind. Accordingly, a client's interests are materially adverse to the former client if the lawyer's representation of the new client creates a substantial risk that the lawyer either (i) would perform work for the new client that would injuriously affect the former client in any manner in which the lawyer represented the former client, or (ii) would use or reveal information protected by ~~Rule 1.6 and~~ Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rule 1.6 that the former client would not want disclosed or in a manner that would be to the disadvantage of the former client.

Lawyers Moving Between Firms

- [8] Paragraph (b) addresses a lawyer's duties to a client who has become a former client because the lawyer no longer is associated with the law firm that represents or represented the client. In that situation, the lawyer has a conflict of interest only when the lawyer has actual knowledge of information protected by Rules 1.6, 1.9(c), and Business and Profession Code 6068(e). Thus, if a lawyer while with one firm acquired no knowledge or information relating to a particular client of the firm, and that lawyer later joined another firm, neither the lawyer individually nor the second firm would violate this Rule by representing another client in the same or a related matter even though the interests of the two clients conflict. See Rule 1.10(b) for the restrictions on a firm once a lawyer has terminated association with the firm.

- [9] Application of paragraph (b) depends on a situation's particular facts, aided by inferences, deductions or working presumptions that reasonably may be made about the way in which lawyers work together. A lawyer may have general access to files of all clients of a law firm and may regularly participate in discussions of their affairs; it should be inferred that such a lawyer in fact is privy to all information about all the firm's clients. In contrast, another lawyer may have access to the files of only a limited number of clients and participate in discussions of the affairs of no other clients; in the absence of information to the contrary, it should be inferred that such a lawyer in fact is privy to information about the clients actually served but not those of other clients. In such an inquiry, the burden of proof should rest upon the firm to which this Rule applies.

- [10] A lawyer changing professional association has a continuing duty to preserve confidentiality of information about a client formerly represented. See Rules 1.6, 1.9(c), and Business and Professions Code section 6068(e).

- [11] Paragraph (c) provides that confidential information acquired by a lawyer in the course of representing a client may not subsequently be used or revealed by the lawyer to the disadvantage of the former client. See Rule 1.6(a) with respect to the confidential information of a client the lawyer is obligated to protect, and Rule 1.6(b) for situations where the lawyer is permitted to reveal such information. The fact that a lawyer has once served a client does not preclude the lawyer from using generally known information about that client when later representing another client. However, the fact that information can be discovered in a public record does not, by itself, render that information generally known. (See In the Matter of Johnson (Rev. Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.)

Client Consent

- [12] The provisions of this Rule are for the protection of former clients and can be waived if the former client gives informed written consent. See Rule 1.0.1(e-1). With regard to the effectiveness of an advance consent, see Comment [22] to Rule 1.7. With regard to the application of a lawyer's conflict to a firm with which a lawyer is or was formerly associated, see Rule 1.10.

Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients
(Commission's Proposed Rule –Clean Version)

- (a) A lawyer who has formerly represented a client in a matter shall not thereafter represent another person in the same or a substantially related matter in which that person's interests are materially adverse to the interests of the former client unless the former client gives informed written consent.
- (b) A lawyer shall not knowingly represent a person in the same or a substantially related matter in which a law firm with which the lawyer formerly was associated had previously represented a client
 - (1) whose interests are materially adverse to that person; and
 - (2) about whom the lawyer, while at the former law firm, had acquired information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c) that is material to the matter;unless the former client gives informed written consent.
- (c) A lawyer who formerly represented a client in a matter or whose present or former law firm has formerly represented a client in a matter shall not thereafter:
 - (1) use information relating to a former client to the disadvantage of the former client except as these Rules or the State Bar Act would permit with respect to a current client, or when the information has become generally known; or

- (2) reveal information relating to a former client except as these Rules or the State Bar Act would permit with respect to a current client.

COMMENT

- [1] After termination of a lawyer-client relationship, the lawyer owes two duties to the former client. The lawyer may not (i) do anything that creates a substantial risk that it will injuriously affect his or her former client in any matter in which the lawyer represented the former client, or (ii) at any time use against his or her former client knowledge or information acquired by virtue of the previous relationship. Wutchumna Water Co. v. Bailey (1932) 216 Cal. 564 [15 P.2d 505] These duties exist to preserve a client's trust in the lawyer and to encourage the client's candor in communications with the lawyer by assuring that the client can entrust the client's matter to the lawyer and can confide to the lawyer information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rule 1.6 without fear that any such information later will be used against the client. Current and former government lawyers must comply with this Rule to the extent required by Rule 1.11.
- [2] Paragraph (a) addresses both of these duties. It first addresses the situation in which there is a substantial risk that a lawyer's representation of another client would result in the lawyer doing work that would injuriously affect the former client with respect to a matter in which the lawyer represented the former client. For example, a lawyer could not properly seek to rescind on behalf of a new client a contract the lawyer drafted on behalf of the former client. A lawyer who has prosecuted an accused person could not represent the accused in a subsequent civil action against the government concerning the same matter.

- [3] Paragraph (a) also addresses the second of the two duties owed to a former client. It applies when there is a substantial risk that information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rule 1.6 that was obtained in the prior representation would be used or disclosed in a subsequent representation in a manner that is contrary to the former client's interests and without the former client's informed written consent. For example, a lawyer who has represented a businessperson and learned extensive private financial information about that person ordinarily may not later represent that person's spouse in seeking a divorce. Similarly, a lawyer who has previously represented a client in connection with the environmental review associated with the land use approvals to build a shopping center ordinarily would be precluded from later representing neighbors seeking to oppose rezoning of the property on the basis of environmental considerations that existed when the lawyer represented the client; however, paragraph (a) would not apply if the lawyer later defends a tenant of the completed shopping center in resisting eviction for nonpayment of rent if there is no substantial relationship between the land use and eviction matters.
- [4] Paragraph (a) applies when the lawyer's representation is in the same matter as, or in a matter substantially related to, the lawyer's representation of the former client. The term "matter" for purposes of this Rule includes civil and criminal litigation, transactions of every kind, and all other types of legal representations. The scope of a "matter" for purposes of this Rule depends on the facts of a particular situation or transaction. The lawyer's involvement in a matter can also be a question of degree. An underlying question is whether the lawyer was so involved in the earlier matter that the subsequent representation justly can be regarded as changing of sides in the matter in question. A lawyer might avoid the application of this Rule by limiting the scope of a representation so as to exclude matters on which the lawyer has a conflict of interest. See Rule 1.2(c) (limiting the scope of representation).

- [5] The term "substantially related matter" as used in this Rule is not applied identically in all types of proceedings. In a disqualification proceeding, a court will presume conclusively that a lawyer has obtained confidential information material to the adverse engagement when it appears by virtue of the nature of the former representation or the relationship of the attorney to the former client that confidential information material to the current dispute normally would have been imparted to the attorney. H.F. Ahmanson & Co. v. Salomon Brothers, Inc. (1991) 229 Cal.App.3d 1445, 1454 [280 Cal.Rptr. 614]. This disqualification application exists, at least in part, to protect the former client by avoiding an inquiry into the substance of the information that the former client is entitled to keep from being imparted to the lawyer's current client. See In re Complex Asbestos Litigation (1991) 232 Cal.App.3d 572, 592 [283 Cal.Rptr. 732]; Woods v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal.App.3d 931, 934 [197 Cal.Rptr. 185]. In disciplinary proceedings, and in civil litigation between a lawyer and a former client, where the lawyer's new client is not present, the evidentiary presumption created for disqualification purposes does not apply and the lawyer can provide evidence concerning the information actually received in the prior representation.
- [6] Two matters are "the same or substantially related" for purposes of this Rule if they involve a substantial risk of a violation of one of the two duties to a former client described above in Comment [1]. This will occur: (i) if the matters involve the same transaction or legal dispute or other work performed by the lawyer for the former client; or (ii) if the lawyer normally would have obtained information in the prior representation that is protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rule 1.6, and the lawyer would be expected to use or disclose that information in the subsequent representation because it is material to the subsequent representation.

- [7] Paragraph (a) applies when the new client's interests are materially adverse to the former client's interests. In light of the overall purpose of the Rule to protect candor and trust during the lawyer-client relationship, the term "materially adverse" should be applied with that purpose in mind. Accordingly, a client's interests are materially adverse to the former client if the lawyer's representation of the new client creates a substantial risk that the lawyer either (i) would perform work for the new client that would injuriously affect the former client in any manner in which the lawyer represented the former client, or (ii) would use or reveal information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rule 1.6 that the former client would not want disclosed or in a manner that would be to the disadvantage of the former client.

Lawyers Moving Between Firms

- [8] Paragraph (b) addresses a lawyer's duties to a client who has become a former client because the lawyer no longer is associated with the law firm that represents or represented the client. In that situation, the lawyer has a conflict of interest only when the lawyer has actual knowledge of information protected by Rules 1.6, 1.9(c), and Business and Profession Code 6068(e). Thus, if a lawyer while with one firm acquired no knowledge or information relating to a particular client of the firm, and that lawyer later joined another firm, neither the lawyer individually nor the second firm would violate this Rule by representing another client in the same or a related matter even though the interests of the two clients conflict. See Rule 1.10(b) for the restrictions on a firm once a lawyer has terminated association with the firm.

- [9] Application of paragraph (b) depends on a situation's particular facts, aided by inferences, deductions or working presumptions that reasonably may be made about the way in which lawyers work together. A lawyer may have general access to files of all clients of a law firm and may regularly participate in discussions of their affairs; it should be inferred that such a lawyer in fact is privy to all information about all the firm's clients. In contrast, another lawyer may have access to the files of only a limited number of clients and participate in discussions of the affairs of no other clients; in the absence of information to the contrary, it should be inferred that such a lawyer in fact is privy to information about the clients actually served but not those of other clients. In such an inquiry, the burden of proof should rest upon the firm to which this Rule applies.

- [10] A lawyer changing professional association has a continuing duty to preserve confidentiality of information about a client formerly represented. See Rules 1.6, 1.9(c), and Business and Professions Code section 6068(e).

- [11] Paragraph (c) provides that confidential information acquired by a lawyer in the course of representing a client may not subsequently be used or revealed by the lawyer to the disadvantage of the former client. See Rule 1.6(a) with respect to the confidential information of a client the lawyer is obligated to protect, and Rule 1.6(b) for situations where the lawyer is permitted to reveal such information. The fact that a lawyer has once served a client does not preclude the lawyer from using generally known information about that client when later representing another client. However, the fact that information can be discovered in a public record does not, by itself, render that information generally known. See In the Matter of Johnson (Rev. Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179.

Client Consent

- [12] The provisions of this Rule are for the protection of former clients and can be waived if the former client gives informed written consent. See Rule 1.0.1(e-1). With regard to the effectiveness of an advance consent, see Comment [22] to Rule 1.7. With regard to the application of a lawyer's conflict to a firm with which a lawyer is or was formerly associated, see Rule 1.10.

Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients. [Sorted by Commenter]
TOTAL = 2 Agree = 1 Disagree = 0 Modify = 1 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
1	Office of Chief Trial Counsel ("OCTC")	M	Yes	1.9(a) & (b)	1. OCTC is concerned with subparagraphs (a) and (b) of proposed Rule 1.9 because the Commission has added the requirement that the matter be materially adverse while the Current Rule only requires that it be adverse. This would appear to be a significant change in the law. Moreover, while the term "materially adverse" is in the Model Rules neither the subparagraph nor Proposed Rule 1.0 clarifies what that means and why the lawyer, not the client, should decide whether it is material. Further, it creates uncertainty for lawyers and makes it more difficult to prosecute a violation.	1. The Commission disagrees and has not made the requested change. It is correct that current rule 3-310(E) uses "adverse" rather than "materially adverse", but it does so with respect the lawyer's position vis-à-vis the lawyer's former client. Proposed 1.9(a) and (b)(1) change the format by instead focusing on two things. The first of these is whether the two representations are in the same or substantially related matters. If so, the new representation is deemed to be adverse to the former client (the proposed rule does not use "adverse" in this part of the analysis but nevertheless arrives at that conclusion). The second is whether the information is "material to the employment", which is the phrase contained in 3-310(E). Thus, the proposed rule in this regard arrives at the same place as the current rule while being more detailed and complete than is the current rule.
				1.9(b)(2)	2. OCTC supports the Commission's inclusion of Business & Professions Code section 6068(e) in subparagraph (b)(2) and thanks them for making that change.	2. No Response needed.
				1.9(b)	3. OCTC is concerned with the use of the term "knowingly" in subparagraph (b). This appears	3. The Commission disagrees and has not made the requested change. The "knowingly" standard

¹ A = AGREE with proposed Rule D = DISAGREE with proposed Rule M = AGREE ONLY IF MODIFIED NI = NOT INDICATED

Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 2 Agree = 1
Disagree = 0
Modify = 1
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				1.9(c)(1)	to sanction a lack of conflict procedures regarding an attorney's former clients at another firm and is inconsistent with Comment [4] of Proposed Rule 1.7, which states: "Ignorance caused by a failure to institute such procedures [referring to conflict detection procedures] will not excuse a lawyer's violation of this Rule." Although negligence is not a basis for discipline, gross negligence or recklessness is. OCTC recognizes that conflict procedures may be more difficult when they involve clients from a former law firm, but that should be taken into account in determining if the conflict is the result of excusable negligence or gross negligence. Further, by using the term "knowingly" the Commission may inadvertently also affect disqualification rulings in civil and criminal cases. 4. OCTC is concerned about the phrase "except as these Rules or the State Bar Act would permit...or when the information has become generally known" in subparagraph (c)(1). This concern goes back to our concern whether the confidentiality rules should require some disclosures, such as when the court or law requires them. Further, it is unclear what is meant by "information generally known." Business & Professions Code section 6068(e) has traditionally been understood to preclude	appears in the part of the proposed Rule that concerns a lawyer who has changed firms and is involved in a matter substantially related to a matter handled by the prior firm. A knowledge standard is appropriate here and is consistent with current law. A conflicts check in the new firm's system is unlikely to reveal the conflict, and the lawyer's new firm normally will have no ability to do a conflict check in the prior firm's system. 4. The Commission disagrees and has not made the requested change. OCTC misunderstands the Johnson decision and misreads the proposed Rule. It does not say that a lawyer never can disclose public information but rather that a lawyer is not free to disclose information simply because it can be found among public records; information might be in a public record but not generally known. See also Comment [11], the last sentence of which draws a distinction between "generally known" information and "information in the public record," but does not

Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 2 Agree = 1
Disagree = 0
Modify = 1
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				1.9(c)(2)	attorneys from disclosing information they obtained from the client that might be of public record. (See In the Matter of Johnson (Review Dept. 2000) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 179, 189-190.) Is California now going to allow lawyers to use that information against the former client even though they learned of it during or because of the representation? OCTC does not think California should. OCTC opposes any change in the law that allows lawyers to use information obtained from the client as a result of a representation, even if it is already in the public record. Further, the paragraph would make the disclosures prohibited by the rule more difficult to prosecute as OCTC would have to prove the information was not "generally known." 5. Paragraph (c)(2) applies some exceptions to revealing information of former clients "with respect to current clients." Like paragraph (c)(1), paragraph (c)(2) has the issue of whether the confidentiality rules should require some disclosures, such as when the court or law requires them. Unlike paragraph (c)(1), paragraph (c)(2) does not include the language "or when the information is generally known." Although this proposed language is also in the Model Rules version, OCTC is not sure when subparagraph (c)(1) applies or	absolutely prohibit the disclosure of public record information. 5. The Commission disagrees and has not made the requested change. OCTC is correct that paragraph (c)(2) does not express an exception for information that is generally known. However, that paragraph prohibits the disclosure of confidential information, and the Commission does not see how a lawyer could be considered to have "disclosed" information that already is generally known.

Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 2 Agree = 1
Disagree = 0
Modify = 1
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comment [5]	when subparagraph(c)(2) applies. 6. OCTC has problems with some of the Comments to this proposed rule, particularly Comment [5]. Comment [5] states that the substantial relationship test applies in disqualification cases, but “might not be necessary” in disciplinary proceedings or civil litigation. However, the statement in Comment [5] that the presumption might not be necessary in disciplinary proceedings or civil litigation is contrary to established State Bar decisional law. In In the Matter of Lane (Review Dept. 1994) 2 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 735, 747, the court held that the substantial relationship test applies in attorney discipline cases. It wrote: “Actual possession of confidential information need not be demonstrated; it is enough to show a substantial relationship between representations to establish a conclusive presumption that the attorney possesses confidential information adverse to a client. (Citation omitted.) ” (Id at 747.) If there is to be a change in the law, it should be in the rule, not a comment. The Comment does not even advise or address the Lane decision. Further, OCTC disagrees with the analysis in Comment [5]. Comment [5] states that the reason for this suggested difference is that in	6. Comment [5] describes a distinction between the application of the substantial relationship test in disqualification and in other contexts. After lengthy deliberations, the Commission concluded that the Lane case's reliance on the substantial relationship test in the disciplinary context is misplaced, and has revised Comment [5] to reflect that position. The substantial relationship test is a rule of necessity in disqualification cases because a party cannot prove what confidential information a lawyer has disclosed to an adversary. The Rule should not prohibit such proof in a disciplinary matter where the applicable procedures and the circumstances permit proof.

Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients.
[Sorted by Commenter]

TOTAL = 2 Agree = 1
Disagree = 0
Modify = 1
NI = 0

No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
					a disciplinary proceeding or civil litigation the new client may not be present and so the attorney can provide the evidence concerning information actually received. However, these are public proceedings; and so the new client can learn of them even if not present. Further, nothing prevents the new client from being present or reading the pleadings or a transcript. Most importantly, without the conclusive presumption, OCTC would be forced to require from the client or the attorney in a public forum the very disclosure the rule is intended to protect. The courts have held that it is the possibility of the breach of confidence, not the fact of the breach, which triggers the conflict rule. (See Woods v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal.App.3d 931, 934.) While Woods addresses a disqualification motion, its holding is equally applicable in discipline and civil cases. Further, as previously discussed, the presumption is already in the disciplinary case law. OCTC requests that that portion of Comment [5] implying that the presumption does not apply to discipline cases be stricken. Comments [8] & [9] 7. If the Commission adopts OCTC's position that "knowingly" should be stricken from subparagraph (b) then Comment [8] and [9] should be stricken.	7. The Commission has retained "knowingly" and therefore has not removed Comments [8] and [9].

Rule 1.9 Duties to Former Clients. [Sorted by Commenter] TOTAL = 2 Agree = 1 Disagree = 0 Modify = 1 NI = 0
No.	Commenter	Position ¹	Comment on Behalf of Group?	Rule Paragraph	Comment	RRC Response
				Comments [1] – [4], [7] Comment [10] Comment [11]	8. Comments [1] – [4], and [7], are more appropriate for treatises, law review articles, and ethics opinions. Comment [10] belongs in Proposed Rule 1.6, not this rule. The first sentence of Comment [11] is unnecessary. Comment [11] refers to subparagraph (c) of Proposed Rule 1.9. OCTC is concerned that, like in proposed subparagraph (c) itself, what is meant by “generally known information” and this Comment appears inconsistent with the established law that B&P Code section 6068(e) is broader than the attorney-client privilege. OCTC opposes any change to the requirement that precludes an attorney from disclosing or using information provided by a client to the attorney that might be in the public record.	8. The Commission has considered each of the questioned Comment paragraphs and believes that each serves an important purpose in guiding lawyers with respect to the new rule.
				Comment [12]	9. As previously discussed regarding conflict rules, OCTC opposed advanced waivers. (See OCTC’s discussion to Proposed Rule 1.7.) It recommends that the second sentence of this Comment be stricken. The Commission should also consider whether the rest of the Comment is necessary in light of the rules cited in the Comment. (NOTE: no specific Comment was listed, but staff assumes OCTC is referring to Comment [12]).	9. The Commission’s views on advance conflict consents are stated in the Rule 1.7 commenter chart.
2	San Diego County Bar Association, Legal Ethics Committee	A	Yes		Support as drafted.	No response required.

Rule 1.9: Duties to Former Clients

STATE VARIATIONS

(The following is an excerpt from Regulation of Lawyers: Statutes and Standards (2010 Ed.)
by Steven Gillers, Roy D. Simon and Andrew M. Perlman.)

California: Rule 3-310(E) forbids representation adverse to a client or former client if a lawyer “by reason of the representation of the client or former client . . . has obtained confidential information material to the employment.”

District of Columbia: Rule 1.9 contains only the language of ABA Model Rule 1.9(a), but does not require that consent be in writing or confirmed in writing. D.C.’s version of Rule 1.9(b), which appears in Rule 1.10(b), is substantially similar to 1.9(b) but provides an exception when “the lawyer participated in a previous representation or acquired information under the circumstances covered by Rule 1.6(h) or Rule 1.18.”

Illinois: In the rules effective January 1, 2010, Illinois deletes the requirement that a client’s consent to a conflict of interest be confirmed in writing.

Massachusetts: Rule 1.9(c), which draws on DR 4-101(B)(3) of the ABA Model Code of Professional Responsibility, adds that a lawyer may not use confidential information “to the lawyer’s advantage, or to the advantage of a third person” unless permitted or required by other rules, without the client’s consent.

Nebraska adds Rules 1.9(d)-(f) to govern conflicts arising from the past work of law clerks, paralegals, secretaries, messengers, and any other “support person.” Notably, Rule 1.9(d) parallels ABA Model Rule 1.9(b), but Nebraska Rule 1.9(e) does not impute support person conflicts to other lawyers at the firm if the former client consents or the conflicted support person is screened to protect the former client’s confidential information.

New York: In the rules effective April 1, 2009, Rule 1.9 is substantially similar to the Model Rule, except that New York uses the term “confidential” information in Rule 1.9(c) instead of the phrase “information related to the representation.” New York moves Comments 4-6 to the comments following Rule 1.10.

Pennsylvania: Rule 1.9 tracks ABA Model Rule 1.9, except Pennsylvania Rule 1.9(a) and Rule 1.9(b)(2) do not require that client consent be “confirmed in writing.”

Texas: Rule 1.09(a) provides that without prior consent, a lawyer who “personally” has formerly represented a client in a matter shall not thereafter represent another person in a matter adverse to the former client:

(1) in which such other person questions the validity of the lawyer’s services or work product for the former client;

(2) if the representation in reasonable probability will involve a violation of Rule 1.05 [the Texas confidentiality rule]; or

(3) if it is the same or a substantially related matter.

Virginia: Rule 1.9(a) requires the consent of both the present and former client.

Proposed Rule 1.10 [n/a]

“Imputation of Conflicts: General Rule”

(ALT1, XDraft 8, 6/28/10, and ALT2, XDraft #7.1, 7/2/10)

Summary: This new rule addresses situations where an individual lawyer's conflict of interest may prohibit other associated lawyers from undertaking or continuing the conflicting representation. Following the Supreme Court's disposition of the petition for review and requests for depublishation in Kirk v. First American Title, and further public comment, the Commission requests that the Board of Governors reconsider its decision on Rule 1.10 (see version ALT1, attached) and adopt a provision permitting unconsented screening in limited circumstances, as set forth in attached version ALT2. In the alternative, the Commission requests that the Board forward to the Supreme Court both versions of the Rule to permit the Court to make an informed decision on this issue. See Introduction.

Comparison with ABA Counterpart

Rule	Comment
☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially adopted
☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected	☐ ABA Model Rule substantially rejected
☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule	☒ Some material additions to ABA Model Rule
☒ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule	☒ Some material deletions from ABA Model Rule
☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart	☐ No ABA Model Rule counterpart

Primary Factors Considered

☒ Existing California Law

Rule

RPC 3-310

Statute

Case law

Kirk v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2010) 183 Cal.App.4th 776. 108 Cal.Rptr.3d 620.

☐ State Rule(s) Variations (In addition, see provided excerpt of selected state variations.)

☒ Other Primary Factor(s)

See the introduction in the Model Rule comparison chart.

Rule Revision Commission Action/Vote to Recommend Rule Adoption

(13 Members Total – votes recorded may be less than 13 due to member absences)

Approved on 10-day Ballot, Less than Six Members Opposing Adoption ☐

Vote (see tally below) ☒

Favor Rule as Recommended for Adoption 6

Opposed Rule as Recommended for Adoption 3

Abstain 2

Approved on Consent Calendar ☐

Approved by Consensus ☐

Commission Minority Position, Known Stakeholders and Level of Controversy

Minority Position Included on Model Rule Comparison Chart: ☒ Yes ☐ No

☒ No Known Stakeholders

☐ The Following Stakeholders Are Known:

☒ Very Controversial – Explanation:

See the Introduction.

☐ Moderately Controversial – Explanation:

☐ Not Controversial

COMMISSION FOR THE REVISION OF THE RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT

Proposed Rule 1.10* Imputation of Conflicts: General Rule

July 2010

(Draft rule following consideration of second round of public comment and the California Supreme Court's disposition of Kirk v. First American Title)

INTRODUCTION & EXPLANATION OF REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF BOARD'S DECISION NOT TO INCLUDE A PROVISION PERMITTING UNCONSENTED ETHICAL SCREENING IN LIMITED SITUATIONS IN PROPOSED RULE 1.10:

Summary of the Commission's Request. The Commission believes that the Supreme Court's disposition of the Kirk case, Kirk v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2010) 183 Cal.App.4th 776, 108 Cal.Rptr.3d 620, as well as comments received during both rounds of public comment, have created changed circumstances that warrant the Commission's return to the Board to seek reconsideration of the Board's previous votes on proposed Rule 1.10, and to request that the Board adopt that version of Rule 1.10, attached, that permits unconsented ethical screening in limited situations in the private firm-to-private firm context. This version of the Rule is denominated as "ALT2". The version of Rule 1.10 approved by the Board at its May 2010 meeting is also attached (denominated as "ALT1" in these materials)

Procedural History of the Board's Consideration of Rule 1.10 and Kirk. At its March 7, 2010 meeting, the Regulation and Admissions Committee of the Board of Governors voted against adoption of proposed Rule 1.10. On March 9, 2010, the Board of Governors affirmed the vote of the Board Committee. At its March 26-27, 2010 meeting, the Commission considered the Board's decision, reviewed an alternative version of proposed Rule 1.10 that did not contain a provision permitting screening of a tainted lawyer to avoid the application of the Rule, and voted to request that the Board reconsider its position on a Rule of Professional Conduct that addresses the concept of the imputation of a conflict of interest. The Board agreed with the Commission and, at its May 2010 meeting, adopted a version of Rule 1.10 that addressed imputation but contained no express rule provision concerning ethical screening. However, the Rule did contain two comments expressing the Board's belief that the issue of ethical screening should be left to resolution by case law.

* Proposed Rule 1.10, ALT1, XDraft 8 (6/21/10) and ALT2, XDraft 7.1 (7/2/10).

Contemporaneously with the Board's action, a petition for review of the Court of Appeals decision in Kirk was filed with the Supreme Court, together with several requests to depublish the decision. On June 23, 2010, the Supreme Court denied review and also denied all requests that the Court of Appeal decision be depublished.

Significance of the Supreme Court's Actions in Kirk. The Commission believes that the Supreme Court's actions in the Kirk case warrant the Board reversing itself and adopting a version of Rule 1.10 that permits unconsented ethical screening in limited circumstances as approved by the Court of Appeals. In Kirk, the Supreme Court denied both the petition for review and numerous requests that the Court of Appeal decision be depublished. The Supreme Court was squarely presented with addressing the issue of screening in limited circumstances. The Court of Appeals had concluded that screening in the private lawyer context in limited circumstances was warranted. In reaching that decision, the court found it "significant" that "a majority of the Commission for the Revision of the Rules of Professional Conduct believed that screening should be ethically permissible in limited circumstances." 183 Cal.App.4th at 805 (emphasis in original). The same court questioned the rationale that permitted screening of a lawyer who has moved into government service from a private firm, but not the same lawyer who had moved from one private firm to another. Id. at 806 n. 25 ("The law cannot possibly be that [a law firm] could effectively screen [the lawyer] if he was tainted from information obtained when he worked for the [government], but cannot effectively screen him if he was tainted from information obtained when he worked for [a private client]. The court also noted that the policy rationales traditionally used by courts to distinguish between screening in a government context and screening in the private context were not compelling and, for the most part, applied equally in the private firm context. Id. at 805 n. 24. Some have argued that much the Court of Appeal's opinion was dicta and should not be relied upon as sign post for the direction the Supreme Court would take as to screening in the private context. If that were true, then surely the Supreme Court would have granted the petition for review to set the record straight or, failing that, would at least have depublished the opinion to remove the inference that judges and lawyers should look to it for guidance. The Supreme Court, however, did neither, suggesting it was satisfied not only with the Court of Appeal's conclusion on the specific issue before it (screening in the prospective client context), but also its arguably broader pronouncements on screening in the limited situations presented in the Commission's proposed Rule.

Commission Request. Accordingly, the Commission requests that the Board reconsider its decision not to address unconsented screening directly in Rule 1.10 and adopt the Commission's proposed Rule, ALT2, that permits such screening only in limited circumstances. The Commission urges the Board not to continue to pursue the piecemeal, case-by-case approach that is sanctioned in the rule draft it approved at its May 2010 meeting. In this respect, the Commission agrees fully with the comment submitted by the State Bar's Committee on Professional Responsibility and Conduct ("COPRAC") during the second public comment period:

“COPRAC believes that implementation of screening through a piecemeal, case-by-case approach works to the detriment of the profession. Rather than having the screening doctrine worked out over a period of years through a series of cases, which leaves lawyers uncertain of the application of precedent to their particular situations, better guidance to the profession would be available through an explicit rule, which could be referenced easily, and uniformly applied. We strongly believe that this would provide superior guidance and clarity to the professional seeking to comply with their ethical duties.” See June 14, 2010 Letter from COPRAC to Harry B. Sondheim, Commission Chair (in complete public comment, provided with this submission).

Alternatively, the Commission requests that the Board of Governors forward to the Supreme Court the attached ALT2 version of the Rule that the Commission has approved, in addition to the version of the Rule that the Board approved at its May 2010 meeting (“ALT1”). The Commission believes the Supreme Court should have the benefit of having an alternative in making its decision to approve a Rule counterpart to Model Rule 1.10 that permits screening, but not broadly as does the Model Rule.

Public Comment and effect on the Commission’s decision to recommend unconsensual screening in limited situations. Initially, the Commission was equally divided on the issue of permitting screening in limited situations to facilitate the mobility of lawyers who were only peripherally involved in the matter. Therefore, during the initial public comment period, the Commission expressly solicited input from the public and the profession on the issue of whether California should sanction any kind of unconsensual ethical screening. Several commenters, including COPRAC and the legal ethics committees from the Orange County Bar, the San Diego Bar, and the Santa Clara Bar, recommended that a broad screening provision, similar to the ABA provision, be adopted. See Initial Public Comment Chart. In light of this public comment, the Commission revisited the issue of unconsensual screening in a private firm and voted to adopt a provision that would permit such screening only in the limited situation where the prohibited lawyer “did not substantially participate in the prior representation.” See subparagraph (a)(2)(i). Notwithstanding the views of COPRAC and the local bar committees, the Commission determined that the first step to permit screening by private firms in California should be a modest one. There is precedent for this approach in other jurisdictions; there are twelve such jurisdictions that permit screening in limited situations: Arizona, Colorado, Indiana, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, North Dakota, Ohio, Tennessee, and Wisconsin. Although a federal court had predicted that under appropriate circumstances, California would permit unconsensual screening, see In re County of Los Angeles (2000) 223 F.3d 990, until the Court of Appeal decision in Kirk, no California state court had sanctioned unconsensual screening for a lawyer who moves from one private firm to another. Given Kirk’s acceptance of limited screening and further support for the concept during the second public comment period, the Commission has concluded that a limited screening provision would be appropriate to “test the waters” in California. Paragraph (a)(2)(i) accomplishes this by limiting the availability of screening to only those lawyers who “did not substantially participate in the prior representation.” Comment [7] explains what is meant by “substantially participate.”

Commentary to the Rule. The Comment to the Rule is based on the Comment to Model Rule 1.10, but the Commission made some substantive additions and deletions. The additions, in part, identify California's emphasis on the duty of confidentiality as it relates to imputation of conflicts. The deletions, in part, implement the Commission's view that the Rule is intended as a disciplinary rule rather than a rule that establishes a standard of civil disqualification. See Explanation of Changes to the Comment.

Minority: A minority of the Commission maintains that there is no reason for the Board to reconsider its decision. The Board repeatedly has decided on multiple occasions that screening is a matter with sufficient uncertainty that it should be left to the court to resolve. Kirk v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2010) 183 Cal.App.4th 776, does not change that conclusion.

Kirk created a highly circumstantial standard that will require further applications in the courts before any general conclusions regarding the scope of the standard can be drawn. Kirk endorsed the Board's decision not to provide for screening in Rule 1.10, stating, "We agree with the Board of Governors that the issue of whether attorney screening can overcome vicarious disqualification in the context of an attorney moving between private law firms is not clearly settled in California." (Slip Opn at p. 35.) The highly circumstantial test which Kirk announced leaves the law unsettled and should be left to evolve in the courts. The Supreme Court's decision to not decertify the opinion and to decline review of the Court of Appeal decision does not mean the Court endorsed the decision. (See e.g. Cal Rule of Ct, Rule 8.1125(d).) Nor does it make the law any more settled in light of Kirk's highly circumstantial test.

The screening rule the majority asks the Board to reconsider has nothing to do with either the facts or the test in Kirk. The proposed screening rule would allow any lawyer who is not a lead attorney to be screened if that lawyer did not "substantially participate" in the client's matter. A majority of the Commission decided that the "substantially participate" standard does not exclude the possibility that the lawyer actually obtained a client's confidential information. In other words, the Rule would allow screening even if the lawyer acquired confidential information that could be used against the client. The Rule would permit screening without any of the balancing of interests the Kirk standard requires. The Rule would allow screening in a side-switching situation that Kirk held was not appropriate for screening.

Furthermore, the proposed screening rule still suffers from the fundamental problem that a client has no means to assure that information in the possession of a firm representing the client's adversary will not be shared and used or disclosed against the client's interests. The proposed screening rule contains provisions allowing the client to know the basic terms of the screen and providing for assurances of compliance, but it does not and cannot overcome the fact that the affected client is prevented by law firm's duties of confidentiality and the lawyer-client privilege from knowing whether there is actual compliance. The legal profession cannot engender client trust by imposing screens on a wary public. The comments the Commission received do not address that screening comes at the expense of client trust and client protection, which are more important values than finding a way to more predictably impose a screen without client consent. [See full Dissent, below.]

Variations in Other Jurisdictions. Every jurisdiction has adopted some version of Model Rule 1.10. Approximately half of the jurisdictions have adopted a provision that explicitly permits screening to rebut the presumption of shared confidences among members and employees of a firm. Thirteen jurisdictions have adopted a provision that broadly permits screening (Delaware, Illinois, Kentucky, Maryland, Michigan, Montana, North Carolina, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Utah and Washington). “Broadly permits screening” means that the jurisdiction’s provision permits screening of any lawyer who has acquired (or is presumed to have acquired) confidential information of the former client, regardless of the degree of involvement of that lawyer in the former client’s representation. Another eleven jurisdictions permit screening in limited situations (Arizona, Colorado, Indiana, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, North Dakota, Ohio, and Wisconsin). “Permits screening in limited situations” means that a jurisdiction’s provision permits screening only of a lawyer who did not “substantially participate,” or was not “substantially involved,” did not have a “substantial role,” did not have “primary responsibility,” etc., in the former client’s matter, or when any confidential information that the lawyer might have obtained is deemed not material to the current representation (e.g., Mass.) or “is not likely to be significant” (e.g., Minn.) See Selected State Variations, below.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule	ALT1 [NO SCREEN] – Board’s Proposed Rule* Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(a) While lawyers are associated in a firm, none of them shall knowingly represent a client when any one of them practicing alone would be prohibited from doing so by Rules 1.7 or 1.9, unless	(a) While lawyers are associated in a firm, none of them shall knowingly represent a client when any one of them practicing alone would be prohibited from doing so by Rules 1.7 or 1.9, unless the prohibition is based on a personal interest of the disqualified lawyer and does not present a significant risk of materially limiting the representation of the client by the remaining lawyers in the firm.	Paragraph (a) is nearly identical to the introduction to paragraph (a) and subparagraph (a)(1) of Model Rule 1.10. Because the Commission is not recommending a screening provision as is found in Model Rule 1.10(a)(2), there is no reason for a separate subparagraph (a)(1). The only other change is the substitution of “prohibited” for “disqualified” to reflect that this Rule is primarily intended as a rule of discipline.
(1) the prohibition is based on a personal interest of the disqualified lawyer and does not present a significant risk of materially limiting the representation of the client by the remaining lawyers in the firm; or	~~(1) the prohibition is based on a personal interest of the disqualified lawyer and does not present a significant risk of materially limiting the representation of the client by the remaining lawyers in the firm; or~~	See Explanation of Changes for paragraph (a).
(2) the prohibition is based upon Rule 1.9(a) or (b), and arises out of the disqualified lawyer’s association with a prior firm, and	~~(2) the prohibition is based upon Rule 1.9(a) or (b), and arises out of the disqualified lawyer’s association with a prior firm, and~~	In deference to the Board’s decision not to adopt a counterpart to Model Rule 1.10, in part to permit the development of the law concerning ethical screens through court decisions, the Commission does not recommend adoption of Model Rule 1.10(a)(2) or its subparagraphs. These provisions, adopted by the ABA in February 2009, broadly permits screening of lawyers who move from one private firm to another.

* Proposed Rule 1.10, ALT1 [NO SCREEN], XDraft 8 (6/28/10). Redline/strikeout showing changes to the ABA Model Rule

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule	ALT1 [NO SCREEN] – Board’s Proposed Rule* Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(i) the disqualified lawyer is timely screened from any participation in the matter and is apportioned no part of the fee therefrom;	~~(i) the disqualified lawyer is timely screened from any participation in the matter and is apportioned no part of the fee therefrom;~~	See Explanation of Changes for paragraph (a)(2).
(ii) written notice is promptly given to any affected former client to enable the former client to ascertain compliance with the provisions of this Rule, which shall include a description of the screening procedures employed; a statement of the firm's and of the screened lawyer's compliance with these Rules; a statement that review may be available before a tribunal; and an agreement by the firm to respond promptly to any written inquiries or objections by the former client about the screening procedures; and	~~(ii) written notice is promptly given to any affected former client to enable the former client to ascertain compliance with the provisions of this Rule, which shall include a description of the screening procedures employed; a statement of the firm's and of the screened lawyer's compliance with these Rules; a statement that review may be available before a tribunal; and an agreement by the firm to respond promptly to any written inquiries or objections by the former client about the screening procedures; and~~	See Explanation of Changes for paragraph (a)(2).
(iii) certifications of compliance with these Rules and with the screening procedures are provided to the former client by the screened lawyer and by a partner of the firm, at reasonable intervals upon the former client's written request and upon termination of the screening procedures.	~~(iii) certifications of compliance with these Rules and with the screening procedures are provided to the former client by the screened lawyer and by a partner of the firm, at reasonable intervals upon the former client's written request and upon termination of the screening procedures.~~	See Explanation of Changes for paragraph (a)(2).

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule	ALT1 [NO SCREEN] – Board’s Proposed Rule* Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(b) When a lawyer has terminated an association with a firm, the firm is not prohibited from thereafter representing a person with interests materially adverse to those of a client represented by the formerly associated lawyer and not currently represented by the firm, unless	(b) When a lawyer has terminated an association with a firm, the firm is not prohibited from thereafter representing a person with interests materially adverse to those of a client represented by the formerly associated lawyer and not currently represented by the firm, unless	Paragraph (b) is identical to Model Rule 1.10(b), which is consistent with California law. See Goldberg v. Warner-Chappell (2005) 125 Cal.App.4th 752, 23 Cal.Rptr.3d 116. See also Novo Therapeutisk Laboratorium A/S v. Baxter Travenol Laboratories, Inc., 607 F.2d 186 (7th Cir. 1979).
(1) the matter is the same or substantially related to that in which the formerly associated lawyer represented the client; and	(1) the matter is the same as or substantially related to that in which the formerly associated lawyer represented the client; and	Subparagraph (a)(1) is identical to Model Rule 1.10(a)(1), except for the addition of the word “as.” No change in meaning in intended.
(2) any lawyer remaining in the firm has information protected by Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c) that is material to the matter.	(2) any lawyer remaining in the firm has information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c) that is material to the matter.	Subparagraph (a)(2) is nearly identical to Model Rule 1.10(a)(2), but a reference to B&P Code § 6068(e), which states a lawyer’s duty of confidentiality, has been added because the term “information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e)” is a defined term in the Rules. See proposed Rule 1.0.1(e-2).
(c) A disqualification prescribed by this rule may be waived by the affected client under the conditions stated in Rule 1.7.	(c) A ~~disqualification prescribed by~~ prohibition under this ~~rule~~ Rule may be waived by ~~the~~ each affected client under the conditions stated in Rule 1.7.	Paragraph (c) is identical to Model Rule 1.10(c), except that the phrase “prohibition under” has been substituted for “disqualification prescribed by” because the Rule is intended as a disciplinary rule, not as a civil standard. The word “each” has been substituted for “the” to make clear that both affected clients of the firm must waive any prohibitions under the Rule.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule	ALT1 [NO SCREEN] – Board’s Proposed Rule* Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
(d) The disqualification of lawyers associated in a firm with former or current government lawyers is governed by Rule 1.11.	(d) The ~~disqualification~~imputation of a conflict of interest to lawyers associated in a firm with former or current government lawyers is governed by Rule 1.11.	Paragraph (d) is identical to Model Rule 1.10(d), except that the phrase “imputation of a conflict of interest to” has been substituted for “disqualification of” because the Rule is intended as a disciplinary rule, not as a civil standard.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule Comment	ALT1 [NO SCREEN] – Board’s Proposed Rule Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Definition of “Firm” [1] For purposes of the Rules of Professional Conduct, the term “firm” denotes lawyers in a law partnership, professional corporation, sole proprietorship or other association authorized to practice law; or lawyers employed in a legal services organization or the legal department of a corporation or other organization. See Rule 1.0(c). Whether two or more lawyers constitute a firm within this definition can depend on the specific facts. See Rule 1.0, Comments [2] – [4].	Definition of “Firm” [1] ~~For purposes of the Rules of Professional Conduct, the term “firm” denotes lawyers in a law partnership, professional corporation, sole proprietorship or other association authorized to practice law; or lawyers employed in a legal services organization or the legal department of a corporation or other organization. See Rule 1.0(c).~~ Whether two or more lawyers constitute a firm ~~within~~for purposes of this definitionRule can depend on the specific facts. See Rule ~~1.0~~1.0.1(c), Comments [2] - [4].	Comment [1] is based on Model Rule 1.10, cmt. [1]. The deleted language is redundant because it already appears in the global definition of “‘firm’ or ‘law firm’,” which the Commission intends to include in the global definition section. The phrase “for purposes of this Rule” has been substituted for “within this definition” for clarity, the predicate for this sentence – the definition of law firm in the first sentence – having been deleted. Minority. A minority of the Commission believes there is insufficient reason for proposed Comment [1] to diverge from the Model Rule.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule Comment	ALT1 [NO SCREEN] – Board’s Proposed Rule Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
Principles of Imputed Disqualification [2] The rule of imputed disqualification stated in paragraph (a) gives effect to the principle of loyalty to the client as it applies to lawyers who practice in a law firm. Such situations can be considered from the premise that a firm of lawyers is essentially one lawyer for purposes of the rules governing loyalty to the client, or from the premise that each lawyer is vicariously bound by the obligation of loyalty owed by each lawyer with whom the lawyer is associated. Paragraph (a)(1) operates only among the lawyers currently associated in a firm. When a lawyer moves from one firm to another, the situation is governed by Rules 1.9(b) and 1.10(a)(2) and 1.10 (b).	Principles of Imputed ~~Disqualification~~ Conflicts of Interest [2] The rule of imputed disqualification stated in paragraph (a) gives effect to the ~~principle~~duties of loyalty and confidentiality owed to the client as ~~it applies~~they apply to lawyers who practice in a law firm. Such situations can be considered from the premise that a firm of lawyers is essentially one lawyer for purposes of the rules governing the duties of loyalty and confidentiality owed to the client, or from the premise that each lawyer is vicariously bound by the obligation of loyalty and confidentiality owed by each lawyer with whom the lawyer is associated. Paragraph (a)~~(1)~~ operates only among the lawyers currently associated in a firm. When a lawyer moves from one firm to another, the situation is governed by Rules 1.9(b) and 1.10~~(a)(2) and 1.10 (b)~~.	The heading has been changed to reflect that the Rule is intended as a disciplinary rule, not as a rule creating a civil standard of disqualification. Comment [2] is based on Model Rule 1.10, cmt. [2], except that the concept of the duty of confidentiality has been added because of that duty’s importance as an underlying rationale for an imputation rule.
[3] The rule in paragraph (a) does not prohibit representation where neither questions of client loyalty nor protection of confidential information are presented. Where one lawyer in a firm could not effectively represent a given client because of strong political beliefs, for example, but that lawyer will do no work on the case and the personal beliefs of the lawyer will not materially limit the representation by others in the firm, the firm should not be disqualified. On the other hand, if an opposing party in a case	[3] The rule in paragraph (a) does not prohibit representation where neither questions of client loyalty nor protection of confidential information are presented. Where one lawyer in a firm could not effectively represent a given client because of strong political beliefs, for example, but that lawyer will do no work on the case and the personal beliefs of the lawyer will not materially limit the representation by others in the firm, the firm should not be ~~disqualified~~prohibited from further representation.	Comment [3] is based on Model Rule 1.10, cmt. [3], but “prohibited from further representation” and “prohibition” have been substituted for variants of “disqualified” to reflect that this Rule is intended primarily as a rule of discipline.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule Comment	ALT1 [NO SCREEN] – Board’s Proposed Rule Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
were owned by a lawyer in the law firm, and others in the firm would be materially limited in pursuing the matter because of loyalty to that lawyer, the personal disqualification of the lawyer would be imputed to all others in the firm.	On the other hand, if an opposing party in a case were owned by a lawyer in the law firm, and others in the firm would be materially limited in pursuing the matter because of loyalty to that lawyer, the personal ~~disqualification~~ prohibition of the lawyer would be imputed to all others in the firm.
[4] The rule in paragraph (a) also does not prohibit representation by others in the law firm where the person prohibited from involvement in a matter is a nonlawyer, such as a paralegal or legal secretary. Nor does paragraph (a) prohibit representation if the lawyer is prohibited from acting because of events before the person became a lawyer, for example, work that the person did while a law student. Such persons, however, ordinarily must be screened from any personal participation in the matter to avoid communication to others in the firm of confidential information that both the nonlawyers and the firm have a legal duty to protect. See Rules 1.0(k) and 5.3.	[4] The rule in paragraph (a) also does not prohibit representation by others in the law firm where the person prohibited from involvement in a matter is a nonlawyer, such as a paralegal or legal secretary. Nor does paragraph (a) prohibit representation by others in the law firm if the lawyer is prohibited from acting because of events that occurred before the person became a lawyer, for example, work that the person did while a law student. ~~Such persons~~ In both situations, however, ~~ordinarily~~ such persons must be screened from any personal participation in the matter to avoid communication to others in the firm of confidential information that both the nonlawyers and the firm have a legal duty to protect. See Rules ~~1.0~~ 1.0.1 (k) and 5.3. See also Comment [9].	Comment [4] is based on Model Rule 1.10, cmt. [4]. Language has been added to the second sentence for clarity. Minority. A minority of the Commission believes that the second sentence misstates California law, at least where the lawyer acted in a fiduciary capacity in the previous employment. The substitution of “in both situations” for “such persons” is intended to clarify that screening should be implemented in the event of either situation described in the first two sentences. The word “ordinarily” has been deleted because it is unclear under what circumstances such a person who was substantially involved in the matter on the other side should be permitted to participate in the matter. The reference to Rule 1.0.1 is to the number the Commission has assigned to the proposed terminology section. The reference to Comment [9] has been included to direct lawyers to that Comment, which addresses the relation of this Rule to disqualification motions.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule Comment	ALT1 [NO SCREEN] – Board’s Proposed Rule Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[5] Rule 1.10(b) operates to permit a law firm, under certain circumstances, to represent a person with interests directly adverse to those of a client represented by a lawyer who formerly was associated with the firm. The Rule applies regardless of when the formerly associated lawyer represented the client. However, the law firm may not represent a person with interests adverse to those of a present client of the firm, which would violate Rule 1.7. Moreover, the firm may not represent the person where the matter is the same or substantially related to that in which the formerly associated lawyer represented the client and any other lawyer currently in the firm has material information protected by Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c).	[5] Rule 1.10(b) operates to permit a law firm, under certain circumstances, to represent a person with interests directly adverse to those of a client represented by a lawyer who formerly was associated with the firm. The Rule applies regardless of when the formerly associated lawyer represented the client. However, the law firm may not represent a person with interests adverse to those of a ~~present~~current client of the firm, which would violate Rule 1.7. Moreover, the firm may not represent the person where the matter is the same or substantially related to that in which the formerly associated lawyer represented the client and any other lawyer currently in the firm has material information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c).	Comment [5] is identical to Model Rule 1.10, cmt. [5], except that the word “current” is substituted for “present” to conform to the usage throughout the Rules, and a citation to B&P Code § 6068(e) has been added. See Explanation of Changes for subparagraph (b)(2).
[6] Rule 1.10(c) removes imputation with the informed consent of the affected client or former client under the conditions stated in Rule 1.7. The conditions stated in Rule 1.7 require the lawyer to determine that the representation is not prohibited by Rule 1.7(b) and that each affected client or former client has given informed consent to the representation, confirmed in writing. In some cases, the risk may be so severe that the conflict may not be cured by client consent. For a discussion of the effectiveness of client waivers of conflicts that might arise in the future, see Rule 1.7, Comment [22]. For a definition of informed consent, see Rule 1.0(e).	[6] Rule 1.10(c) removes imputation with the informed consent of ~~the~~each affected client or former client under the conditions stated in Rule 1.7. The conditions stated in Rule 1.7 require the lawyer to determine that the representation is not prohibited by Rule 1.7(b) and Comments [14A] to [17A], and that each affected client or former client has given informed written consent to the representation, ~~confirmed in writing~~. In some cases, the risk may be so severe that the conflict may not be cured by client consent. For a discussion of the effectiveness of client waivers of conflicts that might arise in the future, see Rule 1.7, Comment [22]. For a definition of informed consent, see Rule ~~1.0~~1.0.1(e).	Comment [6] is based on Model Rule 1.10, cmt. [6]. The changes to the Model Rule comment either reflect (i) the revisions the Commission has made in the black letter of this Rule (i.e., “each” for “the” in paragraph (c), and requiring “informed written consent” instead of the Model Rule’s “informed consent, confirmed in writing”); or (ii) the changes the Commission has recommended for the basic conflicts rules, proposed Rule 1.7.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule Comment	ALT1 [NO SCREEN] – Board’s Proposed Rule Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[7] Rule 1.10(a)(2) similarly removes the imputation otherwise required by Rule 1.10(a), but unlike section (c), it does so without requiring that there be informed consent by the former client. Instead, it requires that the procedures laid out in sections (a)(2)(i)-(iii) be followed. A description of effective screening mechanisms appears in Rule 1.0(k). Lawyers should be aware, however, that, even where screening mechanisms have been adopted, tribunals may consider additional factors in ruling upon motions to disqualify a lawyer from pending litigation.	~~[7] Rule 1.10(a)(2) similarly removes the imputation otherwise required by Rule 1.10(a), but unlike section (c), it does so without requiring that there be informed consent by the former client. Instead, it requires that the procedures laid out in sections (a)(2)(i)-(iii) be followed. A description of effective screening mechanisms appears in Rule 1.0(k). Lawyers should be aware, however, that, even where screening mechanisms have been adopted, tribunals may consider additional factors in ruling upon motions to disqualify a lawyer from pending litigation.~~	Comments [7] through [10] of Model Rule 1.10 all relate to Model Rule 1.10(a)(2), which broadly permits screening and which the Commission has recommended not be adopted. See Explanation of Changes for paragraph (a)(2).
[8] Paragraph (a)(2)(i) does not prohibit the screened lawyer from receiving a salary or partnership share established by prior independent agreement, but that lawyer may not receive compensation directly related to the matter in which the lawyer is disqualified.	~~[8] Paragraph (a)(2)(i) does not prohibit the screened lawyer from receiving a salary or partnership share established by prior independent agreement, but that lawyer may not receive compensation directly related to the matter in which the lawyer is disqualified.~~	See Explanation of Changes for Comment [7].
[9] The notice required by paragraph (a)(2)(ii) generally should include a description of the screened lawyer’s prior representation and be given as soon as practicable after the need for screening becomes apparent. It also should include a statement by the screened lawyer and the firm that the client’s material confidential information has not been disclosed or used in violation of the Rules. The notice is intended to enable the former client to	~~[9] The notice required by paragraph (a)(2)(ii) generally should include a description of the screened lawyer’s prior representation and be given as soon as practicable after the need for screening becomes apparent. It also should include a statement by the screened lawyer and the firm that the client’s material confidential information has not been disclosed or used in violation of the Rules. The notice is intended to enable the former client to~~	See Explanation of Changes for Comment [7].

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule Comment	ALT1 [NO SCREEN] – Board’s Proposed Rule Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
evaluate and comment upon the effectiveness of the screening procedures.	~~evaluate and comment upon the effectiveness of the screening procedures.~~
[10]The certifications required by paragraph (a)(2)(iii) give the former client assurance that the client’s material confidential information has not been disclosed or used inappropriately, either prior to timely implementation of a screen or thereafter. If compliance cannot be certified, the certificate must describe the failure to comply.	~~[10]The certifications required by paragraph (a)(2)(iii) give the former client assurance that the client’s material confidential information has not been disclosed or used inappropriately, either prior to timely implementation of a screen or thereafter. If compliance cannot be certified, the certificate must describe the failure to comply.~~	See Explanation of Changes for Comment [7].
[11]Where a lawyer has joined a private firm after having represented the government, imputation is governed by Rule 1.11(b) and (c), not this Rule. Under Rule 1.11(d), where a lawyer represents the government after having served clients in private practice, nongovernmental employment or in another government agency, former client conflicts are not imputed to government lawyers associated with the individually disqualified lawyer.	~~[11]~~[7-ALT1] Where a lawyer has joined a private firm or a government agency after having represented the government or another government agency, imputation is governed ~~under~~by Rule 1.11(b) and (c), not this Rule. ~~Under Rule 1.11(d), where~~ Where a lawyer ~~represents the~~has become employed by a government agency after having served clients in private practice, or other nongovernmental employment ~~or, the questions of whether, in another government agency a particular matter, former client conflicts are not a lawyer’s conflict under paragraph (d) will be~~ imputed to ~~government other~~ lawyers associated with serving in the ~~individually disqualified lawyers~~same governmental agency; and (2) whether the use of a timely screen will avoid that imputation are matters of case law. See Rule 1.11, Comments [9B] and [9C].	Comment [7-ALT1] is based on Model Rule 1.10, cmt. [11]. There are two versions of the Rule that are proposed: ALT-1 reflects the Board’s vote that the issue of screening when a government lawyer moves from private practice to government employment should be left to the case law. The ALT-1 version should be included if BOG disagrees with the Commission that paragraph (e) should be restored to Rule 1.11. This Comment corrects an error in the final public comment draft.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule Comment	ALT1 [NO SCREEN] – Board’s Proposed Rule Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
[11]Where a lawyer has joined a private firm after having represented the government, imputation is governed by Rule 1.11(b) and (c), not this Rule. Under Rule 1.11(d), where a lawyer represents the government after having served clients in private practice, nongovernmental employment or in another government agency, former client conflicts are not imputed to government lawyers associated with the individually disqualified lawyer.	[7-ALT2] Where a lawyer has joined a private firm or a government agency after having represented the government or another government agency, imputation is governed by Rule 1.11(b) and (c), not this Rule. Where a lawyer has become employed by a government agency after having served clients in private practice or other nongovernmental employment, imputation is governed by Rule 1.11(e).	Comment [7-ALT2] is based on Model Rule 1.10, cmt. [11]. There are two versions of the Rule that are proposed: ALT-2 reflects the Commission’s conclusion that the issue of screening when a government lawyer moves from private practice to government employment should be addressed in Rule 1.11, specifically in proposed Rule 1.11(e). The ALT-2 version should be included if BOG agrees with the Commission that paragraph (e) should be restored to Rule 1.11. This Comment corrects an error in the final public comment draft.
[12]Where a lawyer is prohibited from engaging in certain transactions under Rule 1.8, paragraph (k) of that Rule, and not this Rule, determines whether that prohibition also applies to other lawyers associated in a firm with the personally prohibited lawyer.	~~[128]~~ Where a lawyer is prohibited from engaging in certain transactions under Rules 1.8.1 through Rule 1.81.8.9, paragraph (k) of that Rule 1.8.11, and not this Rule, determines whether that prohibition also applies to other lawyers associated in a firm with the personally prohibited lawyer.	Comment [8] is based on Model Rule 1.10, cmt. [12]. Any changes to the comment merely reflect the rule numbering convention the Commission has adopted for the 1.8 series of rules.
	Rule Not Determinative of Disqualification Motions [9] This Rule does not limit or alter the power of a court of this State to control the conduct of lawyers and other persons connected in any manner with judicial proceedings before it, including matter pertaining to disqualification. See Code of Civil Procedure section 128(a)(5); Penal Code section 1424; In re Charlissee C. (2008) 45 Cal.4th 145; Rhaburn v. Superior Court (2006) 140 Cal.App.4th 1566.	Comment [9] has no counterpart in the Model Rules. It has been added to signal that the Rule, which in effect has codified the court-created doctrine of imputation, is not intended to override a court’s inherent authority to monitor and control the conduct of persons before it. Citations to relevant California authority have been added.

ABA Model Rule Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule Comment	ALT1 [NO SCREEN] – Board’s Proposed Rule Rule 1.10 Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule Comment	Explanation of Changes to the ABA Model Rule
	[10] Rule 1.10 leaves open the issue of whether, in a particular matter, use of a timely screen will avoid the imputation of a conflict of interest under paragraph (a) or (b). Whether timely implementation of a screen will avoid imputation of a conflict of interest in litigation, transactional, or other contexts is a matter of case law.	Comment [10] has no counterpart in the Model Rules. It has been added to effectuate the Board’s intent that the law of screening be developed through court decisions. The Comment is intended to assuage concerns that the implementation of an ethical screen would necessarily subject a lawyer or group of lawyers to discipline because this Rule does not expressly provide for screening.

Rule 1.10: Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule

(Redline Comparison of the Proposed Rule ALT1 to the Public Comment Draft)

- (a) While lawyers are associated in a firm, none of them shall knowingly represent a client when any one of them practicing alone would be prohibited from doing so by Rules 1.7 or 1.9, unless the prohibition is based on a personal interest of the prohibited lawyer and does not present a significant risk of materially limiting the representation of the client by the remaining lawyers in the firm.
- (b) When a lawyer has terminated an association with a firm, the firm is not prohibited from thereafter representing a person with interests materially adverse to those of a client represented by the formerly associated lawyer and not currently represented by the firm, unless
 - (1) the matter is the same as or substantially related to that in which the formerly associated lawyer represented the client; and
 - (2) any lawyer remaining in the firm has information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c) that is material to the matter.
- (c) A prohibition under this Rule may be waived by each affected client under the conditions stated in Rule 1.7.
- (d) The imputation of a conflict of interest to lawyers associated in a firm with former or current government lawyers is governed by Rule 1.11.

COMMENT

Definition of "Firm"

- [1] Whether two or more lawyers constitute a firm for purposes of this Rule can depend on the specific facts. See Rule 1.0.1(c), Comments [2] - [4].

Principles of Imputed Conflicts of Interest

- [2] The rule of imputed disqualification stated in paragraph (a) gives effect to the duties of loyalty and confidentiality owed to the client as they apply to lawyers who practice in a law firm. Such situations can be considered from the premise that a firm of lawyers is essentially one lawyer for purposes of the rules governing the duties of loyalty and confidentiality owed to the client, or from the premise that each lawyer is vicariously bound by the obligation of loyalty and confidentiality owed by each lawyer with whom the lawyer is associated. Paragraph (a) operates only among the lawyers currently associated in a firm. When a lawyer moves from one firm to another, the situation is governed by Rules 1.9(b) and 1.10(b).
- [3] The rule in paragraph (a) does not prohibit representation where neither questions of client loyalty nor protection of confidential information are presented. Where one lawyer in a firm could not effectively represent a given client because of strong political beliefs, for example, but that lawyer will do no work on the case and the personal beliefs of the lawyer will not materially limit the representation by others in the firm, the firm should not be prohibited from further representation. On the other hand, if an opposing party in a case were owned by a lawyer in the law firm, and others in the firm would be materially limited in pursuing the matter because of loyalty to that lawyer, the personal prohibition of the lawyer would be imputed to all others in the firm.

- [4] The rule in paragraph (a) also does not prohibit representation by others in the law firm where the person prohibited from involvement in a matter is a nonlawyer, such as a paralegal or legal secretary. Nor does paragraph (a) prohibit representation by others in the law firm if the lawyer is prohibited from acting because of events that occurred before the person became a lawyer, for example, work that the person did while a law student. In both situations, however, such persons must be screened from any personal participation in the matter to avoid communication to others in the firm of confidential information that both the nonlawyers and the firm have a legal duty to protect. See Rules 1.0.1(k) and 5.3. See also Comment [9].
- [5] Rule 1.10(b) operates to permit a law firm, under certain circumstances, to represent a person with interests directly adverse to those of a client represented by a lawyer who formerly was associated with the firm. The Rule applies regardless of when the formerly associated lawyer represented the client. However, the law firm may not represent a person with interests adverse to those of a current client of the firm, which would violate Rule 1.7. Moreover, the firm may not represent the person where the matter is the same or substantially related to that in which the formerly associated lawyer represented the client and any other lawyer currently in the firm has material information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c), .

- [6] Rule 1.10(c) removes imputation with the informed consent of each affected client or former client under the conditions stated in Rule 1.7. The conditions stated in Rule 1.7 require the lawyer to determine that the representation is not prohibited by Rule 1.7(b) and Comments [14A] to [17A], and that each affected client or former client has given informed written consent to the representation. In some cases, the risk may be so severe that the conflict may not be cured by client consent. For a discussion of the effectiveness of client waivers of conflicts that might arise in the future, see Rule 1.7, Comment [22]. For a definition of informed consent, see Rule 1.0.1(e).

- 7-[ALT1] Where a lawyer has joined a private firm or a government agency after having represented the government or another government agency, imputation is governed by Rule 1.11(b) and (c), not this Rule. Where a lawyer has become employed by a government agency after having served clients in private practice or other nongovernmental employment, ~~imputation is governed by Rule 1.11(e)~~ the questions of whether, in a particular matter, a lawyer's conflict under paragraph (d) will be imputed to other lawyers serving in the same governmental agency; and (2) whether the use of a timely screen will avoid that imputation are matters of case law. See Rule 1.11, Comments [9B] and [9C].

- 7-[ALT2] Where a lawyer has joined a private firm or a government agency after having represented the government or another government agency, imputation is governed by Rule 1.11(b) and (c), not this Rule. Where a lawyer has become employed by a government agency after having served clients in private practice or other nongovernmental employment, imputation is governed by Rule 1.11(e).

- [8] Where a lawyer is prohibited from engaging in certain transactions under Rules 1.8.1 through Rule 1.8.9, Rule 1.8.11, and not this Rule, determines whether that prohibition also applies to other lawyers associated in a firm with the personally prohibited lawyer.

Rule Not Determinative of Disqualification Motions

- [9] This Rule does not limit or alter the power of a court of this State to control the conduct of lawyers and other persons connected in any manner with judicial proceedings before it, including matter pertaining to disqualification. See Code of Civil Procedure section 128(a)(5); Penal Code section 1424; In re Charlisse C. (2008) 45 Cal.4th 145; Rhaburn v. Superior Court (2006) 140 Cal.App.4th 1566.
- [10] Rule 1.10 leaves open the issue of whether, in a particular matter, use of a timely screen will avoid the imputation of a conflict of interest under paragraph (a) or (b). Whether timely implementation of a screen will avoid imputation of a conflict of interest in litigation, transactional, or other contexts is a matter of case law.

Rule 1.10: Imputation Of Conflicts Of Interest: General Rule (Commission's Proposed Rule ALT1 – Clean Version)

- (a) While lawyers are associated in a firm, none of them shall knowingly represent a client when any one of them practicing alone would be prohibited from doing so by Rules 1.7 or 1.9, unless the prohibition is based on a personal interest of the prohibited lawyer and does not present a significant risk of materially limiting the representation of the client by the remaining lawyers in the firm.
- (b) When a lawyer has terminated an association with a firm, the firm is not prohibited from thereafter representing a person with interests materially adverse to those of a client represented by the formerly associated lawyer and not currently represented by the firm, unless
 - (1) the matter is the same as or substantially related to that in which the formerly associated lawyer represented the client; and
 - (2) any lawyer remaining in the firm has information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c) that is material to the matter.
- (c) A prohibition under this Rule may be waived by each affected client under the conditions stated in Rule 1.7.
- (d) The imputation of a conflict of interest to lawyers associated in a firm with former or current government lawyers is governed by Rule 1.11.

COMMENT

Definition of “Firm”

- [1] Whether two or more lawyers constitute a firm for purposes of this Rule can depend on the specific facts. See Rule 1.0.1(c), Comments [2] - [4].

Principles of Imputed Conflicts of Interest

- [2] The rule of imputed disqualification stated in paragraph (a) gives effect to the duties of loyalty and confidentiality owed to the client as they apply to lawyers who practice in a law firm. Such situations can be considered from the premise that a firm of lawyers is essentially one lawyer for purposes of the rules governing the duties of loyalty and confidentiality owed to the client, or from the premise that each lawyer is vicariously bound by the obligation of loyalty and confidentiality owed by each lawyer with whom the lawyer is associated. Paragraph (a) operates only among the lawyers currently associated in a firm. When a lawyer moves from one firm to another, the situation is governed by Rules 1.9(b) and 1.10(b).
- [3] The rule in paragraph (a) does not prohibit representation where neither questions of client loyalty nor protection of confidential information are presented. Where one lawyer in a firm could not effectively represent a given client because of strong political beliefs, for example, but that lawyer will do no work on the case and the personal beliefs of the lawyer will not materially limit the representation by others in the firm, the firm should not be prohibited from further representation. On the other hand, if an opposing party in a case were owned by a lawyer in the law firm, and others in the firm would be materially limited in pursuing the matter because of loyalty to that lawyer, the personal prohibition of the lawyer would be imputed to all others in the firm.

- [4] The rule in paragraph (a) also does not prohibit representation by others in the law firm where the person prohibited from involvement in a matter is a nonlawyer, such as a paralegal or legal secretary. Nor does paragraph (a) prohibit representation by others in the law firm if the lawyer is prohibited from acting because of events that occurred before the person became a lawyer, for example, work that the person did while a law student. In both situations, however, such persons must be screened from any personal participation in the matter to avoid communication to others in the firm of confidential information that both the nonlawyers and the firm have a legal duty to protect. See Rules 1.0.1(k) and 5.3. See also Comment [9].
- [5] Rule 1.10(b) operates to permit a law firm, under certain circumstances, to represent a person with interests directly adverse to those of a client represented by a lawyer who formerly was associated with the firm. The Rule applies regardless of when the formerly associated lawyer represented the client. However, the law firm may not represent a person with interests adverse to those of a current client of the firm, which would violate Rule 1.7. Moreover, the firm may not represent the person where the matter is the same or substantially related to that in which the formerly associated lawyer represented the client and any other lawyer currently in the firm has material information protected by Business and Professions Code section 6068(e) and Rules 1.6 and 1.9(c), .

- [6] Rule 1.10(c) removes imputation with the informed consent of each affected client or former client under the conditions stated in Rule 1.7. The conditions stated in Rule 1.7 require the lawyer to determine that the representation is not prohibited by Rule 1.7(b) and Comments [14A] to [17A], and that each affected client or former client has given informed written consent to the representation. In some cases, the risk may be so severe that the conflict may not be cured by client consent. For a discussion of the effectiveness of client waivers of conflicts that might arise in the future, see Rule 1.7, Comment [22]. For a definition of informed consent, see Rule 1.0.1(e).

- [7-ALT1] Where a lawyer has joined a private firm or a government agency after having represented the government or another government agency, imputation is governed by Rule 1.11(b) and (c), not this Rule. Where a lawyer has become employed by a government agency after having served clients in private practice or other nongovernmental employment, the questions of whether, in a particular matter, a lawyer's conflict under paragraph (d) will be imputed to other lawyers serving in the same governmental agency; and (2) whether the use of a timely screen will avoid that imputation are matters of case law. See Rule 1.11, Comments [9B] and [9C].

